Raising Thorough-bred Pigs.

It may be thought there is no difference in the management of thoroughbred and ordinary pigs: and to a certain extent this is true. But we all know that, as ordinarily managed, a very large number of young pigs die every year. How often do we hear farmers say, "My sow had a litter of ten pigs, but the brute killed half of them." In many cases the loss is even greater than this. Sometimes sows will eat their own pigs, but the greatest loss occurs from the sow, unintentionably, lying down on the little pigs and crushing them to death. In the ordinary pigs the loss is sufficiently aggravating, but with thorough-bred pigs of great value, the loss is peculiarly vexatious and discouraging.

There is no way of preventing a sow from lying on her pigs. There is nothing for it but watchfulness and care. All mechanical contrivances are useless. It is generally recommended to place a rail horizontally all round the inside of the pen, about a foot distant from the sides and some eight or ten inches from the door of the pen. The object of this is to prevent the sow from crushing her little pigs against the sides of the pen. It was thought that the little ones could run under the rail and escape. Nearly all pens are so constructed, but I can see no advantage in the plan. We all want to provide a farrowing sow with straw or leaves enough to keep her comfortable. Sometimes we use straw that has been run through a straw-box, and sometimes we make use of the full length. I do not know that it makes much difference which is used, though I formerly thought the chaffed straw better. One thing I know—no matter whether you use long straw, or short straw, allow about to have pigs will push the straw under the rail, until it is as firm and compact as the sides of the pen would be if no rail were there. A little pig, if caught against a compact mass of straw, would be as certainly killed as if the sow lay against the side of the pen. You cannot cure a sow of this habit. She knows what she is about. She wants her little pigs to get to the door; and the only way she has of accomplishing this object is to prevent them from getting on the wrong side of her, by placing herself back firmly against the sides of the pen. If necessary, she will use every bit of room there is in the pen for filling up the space under the rail where she makes her entry. If you give her straw enough, there is an advantage, for the compact straw under the rail makes a warmer nest, but it is otherwise useless.

The great point in the management of farrowing sows is to make them as quiet and gentle as possible. If you are raising thorough-bred pigs, make pets of them. The sow, when about to have pigs, should be placed in a separate pen for several days in advance, so that she shall become quiet and accustomed to the pen. Her food should consist principally of warm water with a little grease in it, with say a quart of meal to a ten quart pail of water. There is nothing better for her, after she has had her pigs, than this same warm water and grease, gradually made richer by the use of more grease and of meal. A few hours before farrowing the milk always comes into the teats. It is a good plan, especially in the case of thorough-bred sows, to accustom them to the presence of some one in the pen before there is nothing a sow so well likes as to have her teats rubbed or milked. By a little gentleness, and by rubbing and milking her teats, it is an easy matter to make the sow lie down.

In the summer-time, I frequently let my sow farrow in the field, and almost invariably without loss. The sow makes her own nest in a fence corner, and manage the whole matter quite as well as if the best of men were present to direct the operation. Do not conclude from this, however, that the less you look after your breeding sows the better. The weather is warm, the sow is living on succulent grass, and everything is favorable. More pigs are lost from cold than from all other causes combined. It is useless to try to make the pens warm by artificial means, for in this case you are almost certain to get bad ventilation and to do more harm than good.—American Agriculturist.

Does Farming Pay?

The proceeds of the Stratton farm, consisting 320 acres, situated two miles northwest of Lincoln, Nebraska, will sum up about as follows for the year 1882:

Grains—Five thousand bushels of corn, 1,000 bushels of oats, some sugar cane; vegetables, 250 bushels of potatoes, 10 tons of turnips, 3 tons of beets, 13 waggon loads of pumpkins and squashes, and an abundance of garden vegetables of the finest varieties.

Hay and Pasture—Two hundred tons of hay. On the farm are two fenced pastures, with wire, that kept eight head of cows, young cattle, and would have supplied many more: the other of board fence, in which run 20 head of horses.

Fruits.—There was an abundance of fruit, also good variety of small fruits; a few peaches, the first bearing of three years trees: a few apples gathered from an orchard planted four years ago, consisting of 2,000 trees.

Stock.—There were fed hogs, of which over 1,000 were sold early in the fall at $7 per 100 lbs, live weight.

Weeds.—None were allowed to grow on the farm. All the drives and avenues, as well as highways bordering on the farm, of which there are two miles and a half, planted with maples, were kept mowed and free from weeds; also a well-kept lawn with a great variety of evergreens and shrubbery.

Besides all this, the rise in value of the land would be about equal to 40 per cent. on investments.

Does farming pay?

Hot Water for Insects.

A writer in Gardening Illustrated says that hot water may be employed to great advantage in destroying the green fly (and other insects) on pot plants, and for those who have but a few plants it will prove more convenient than fumigating. There is a margin of many degrees between the highest temperature that will destroy the insect and the highest the plant will bear without injury, but 130° is a good medium, as hot as the hand can be held in two minutes. In some experiments recently made and reported elsewhere, it has been found that 150° is about as high as any common plant will endure, and some insects may require as great a heat, while on others it may have little effect. The temperature should be such, in using the water for the small pot plants, that they may be plunged in it and withdrawn immediately. It is well to experiment on the plants of less value, and observe the effect on the following day.

Save your Melon Seeds.

When one meets with an especially fine melon upon the table, he is desirous of securing the seeds. Indeed, the only way in which a strain of melon can be kept up to its standard or improved, is to select seeds from the best specimens. In raising melon seed for the market, the growers allow the fruit to get much riper than is desirable for eating; this gives a great yield of plump seeds, which are more perfect than if the fruit were taken in its best condition for eating. In the operations of the kitchen, the contents of the melons are sure to be thrown away, and whoever would save seeds from them, must attend to the opening of the fruit himself. Place the contents of the best melons in a bowl or other convenient vessel, cover them with water, and allow them to stand for a few days to ferment. They should be looked to and stirred every day, and when it is found that the seeds fall from their attachments to the bottom of the vessel, the refuse is to be removed, the seeds washed, and spread out to dry upon boards or a cloth. The seeds of water-melons are much less likely than those of melons to be perfect at the time the fruit is in eating condition; hence seed-growers allow watermelons to get dead-ripe, or rotten-ripe, before they separate the seeds. Of the seeds separated when the fruit is eaten, a share will grow. Such seeds should be collected, washed, and dried. In sowing watermelon seeds of any kind, it is well to recollect that a large majority are worthless, and to be liberal accordingly. With cucumbers, allow a few of the earliest and best shaped to ripen on the vines for seed. All others, if not wanted for use, should be removed, and not allowed to exhaust the vines uselessly. When thoroughly ripe, gather the cucumbers and cut them lengthwise scrape out the contents into a vessel, and allow them to ferment until the seeds are freed from mucilage which surrounds them, and can be washed and dried.

Cut grass or clover for the hogs that are confined. Parsley, a very succulent weed, is greedily devoured by them. Green food keeps them healthy and makes them fatten faster. A diet solely of corn is too heating and predisposes them to disease.

MORSELS FOR SUNDAY CONTEMPLATION.

To rule one's anger is well; to prevent it is better.

He who foresees calamities suffers them twice over.

Rest satisfied with doing well, and leave others to talk of you as they please.

Disparage and depreciate no one; an insect has feeling and an atom a shadow.

He is the best accountant who can cast up correctly the sum of his own errors.

The man who is generous to a fault is usually the one who is the owner of the fault.

Anyone may do a casual act of good nature, but a continuation of them shows it is a part of the temperament.

Never be above your calling, or be afraid to appear dressed in accordance with the business you are performing.

We should never make enemies, if for no other reason, because it is so hard to behave towards them as we ought.

Singular that the word miser, so often expressive of one who is rich, should, in its origin, signify one that is miserable.

There is nothing so universally commended than a fine day; the reason is that people can commend it without envy.

Receive no satisfaction for premeditated impertinence; forget, forgive it, but keep him inexorably at a distance who offered it.

Emotions are stars that guide only when the heavens are clear; but reason is the magnetic needle that directs when stars are hidden and shine no more.

There can be live a more unhappy creature than an ill-natured old man, who is neither capable of receiving pleasures nor sensible of doing them to others.

Affectation in any part of our carriage is lighting up a candle to our defects, and never fails to make us taken notice of, either as wanting sense or sincerity.

It is doing some service to humanity to amuse innocently; and they know very little of society who thinks he can bear to be always employed either in duties or meditations without any relaxation.

Sat Upon by a Wasp.

A party of picnickers were enjoying themselves at High Bridge, They were a party of ever so nice girls and ever such gallant fellows. They had everything in the way of edibles that heart could wish for, and they were having a right royal time. The girls talked with their months full of pickles and pie, and the fellows made jokes about the ham sandwiches and the other fruit.

Suddenly a huge wasp entered the meeting and became one of the party. He alighted on a buxom girl's shoulder. One of her companions saw it and shrieked:

"There's a great big bug on your shoulder!"

"It's a wasp! Sit perfectly still or it'll sting you!" screamed another girl.

"Oh, Charley I do come and take it off," pleaded the girl, as she turned red, white and blue.

Charley had evidently been sat upon by a wasp, for he remarked that "it wasn't his wasp," and went up into the woods to have a smoke. The wasp finally flew away, but the subsequent silence between the erstwhile lovers was so dense that they might have heard their hair grow, and Charley paid his own fare home and one fellow had to pay for two girls.

WITTY AND OTHERWISE.

Ranks high—Old butter.

Always on foot—The ankle.

Not by a jug-ful—The teetotaler.

A man of wide views—The sailor.

The salesman's mission—Commission.

Coming to a head—A flying brickbat.

Devoured by inches—The bologna sausage.

A hard nut to crack—A restaurant doughnut.

Bathers who sit in the sun become blistered. It is a rash act.

The power behind the throne: The muscle of a ball-tosser's arm.

Puns on that new nihilistic, unrealistic play are considered "Vera" dizzy.

"For whiskey" and "Against whiskey" are the coming issues in Georgia.—The man who runs against whiskey will be apt to get floored.

"No," said the college man, "I don't care a coupon whether I get a degree or not; I've got my skull and cross-bones pin, and that's a passport into any society.

Eve must have had a good deal more time in which to do her housework than the modern woman. She had no looking-glass to be running to every half hour.

The Governor-General.

The Governor-General certainly deserves credit for the loyal manner in which he has attempted to discharge the duties of his position, and he will leave the Dominion with the respect of all parties for the impartial manner in which he has invariably conducted himself in connection with the many delicate duties he has been called upon to perform. If Canadian life and society has been as unpleasant to him as to his royal wife he certainly had the good sense to conceal his feelings in the matter. The general impression is that he has rather enjoyed his reign in Canada, and he would have cheerfully extended the term had it been the desire of the Imperial Government for him to do so.

The fact that another member of the Queen's family has expressed a willingness, if not a desire, to become the successor of Lord Lorne, gives strong indications that the office has been rather a pleasant one to its present occupant. It was probably a wise decision, however, of Mr. Gladstone not to make another appointment just now from the Royal household. The experiment was rather a venturesome one in the outset, and now that it has proved fairly successful it may be just as well not to venture on it too soon again. The novelty of the situation is now gone, and at least such an appointment is attended with a good deal of embarrassment all round, even when the political waters are flowing smoothly on both sides of the Atlantic. Should a storm occur from other causes, or should any misdeed or mistake of judgement of the person appointed create a storm, the result would be most unfortunate. Probably had Gladstone been at the helm of affairs instead of Disraeli seven years ago the venture would not have been made at all. As it is few have any reasonable grounds to regret it, but it may be better just now to let well enough alone.

The Salvation Army.

The Salvation Army recently had a great display in Toronto. It was their first anniversary, and quite a large number from the localities west of here came by trains to take part in the demonstration. There were street parades, bands of music, the hallalujah lasses, the shouting men, and the other displays common to the "Army." In the evening it was announced that "An exhibition of living wonders" would take place in Shaftesbury Hall, and an admission fee of 10 cents was charged to witness it. These "living wonders" consisted of the "saved" members of the Army, who gave their testimonies. There can be no doubt many of them are wonders to themselves, and to others as well, compared with what they were a year or so ago, before the Army found them out, and the moral results in this connection with such a class of people, as many of them were, are certainly creditable to those concerned. It seems a pity, however, that the over zeal of so many prompt them to make exhibitions of themselves as are calculated rather to bring the whole work into ridicule than to favorably impress the people in its favor. At Shaftesbury Hall hundreds of spectators sat by the hour amused, and sometimes convulsed with laughter, the wild speeches, and sometimes wilder antics of the liveliest of the "living wonders." Few, if any, went away with increased respect for the Army there as a religious movement. We regret it much on that account, for any movement tending to reform drunkards, and restore to decency the debased, is a movement in the right direction. It is just possible that some persons whom the churches have not reached, can only be reached by appealing to their highly emotional nature, but surely it is hardly necessary to run the whole thing so deeply into the ground.

It is probable that similar exhibitions were made by some of the men in by-gone days in the saloons and barrooms, stimulated by a very different kind of "spirit;" and from that stand point it is more desirable to witness them jumping, shouting, swinging chairs, or rubbing each others heads, than after the old fashion, but if it must be done at all the great unsaved bad better be spared the sight; it does them more harm than good to witness it. Can it be that it was any thing so wild in appearance as this that caused some in other days to believe that these men were filled with wine?

Maryland to the Front.

The Hon. Oden Bowie, Ex-Governor of Maryland, President of the Baltimore City Passenger Railway Co., also President of the Maryland Jockey Club says: Both in my family, and in my private stables, as well as those of the City Passenger Railway Co., I have for several years used St. Jacobs Oil most satisfactorily." Such a statement ought to convince every reader of this paper.

Mrs. Stowe has it in mind to write a new novel, the scene laid in Florida, and the title Orange Blossoms, purposing to illustrate it herself. She hopes never to be too old to write love stories. She reads none of the modern novels, because the romance is eliminated.

A BONANZA MINE

of health is to be found in Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," to the merits of which as a remedy for female weakness and kindred affections thousands testify.

It is as easy to improve five talents as one.

If you experience bad tastes in mouth, sallowness or yellow color of skin, feel stupid and drowsy, appetite unsteady, frequent headache or dizziness, you are "bilious" and nothing will arouse your liver to action and strengthen up your system equal to Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." By druggists.

Time is the most precious of all possessions.

"ENJOY YOUR LIFE"

is good philosophy, but to do so you must have health. If bilious and constipated, or blood is out of order, use Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," which are mild, yet certain in their operation. Of all druggists.

Kind words produce their own image in men's souls, and a beautiful one it is.

Private opinion is weak, but public opinion is almost omnipoteht, and the public opinion is that there is no Hair Dressing like Carboline the only true Petroleum extract.

Of all the evil spirits abroad at this hour in the world, insincerity is the most dangerous.

For beauty and durability of color the Triangle Package Dyes "beat the world." If you never used dyes before, do so now and be convinced. 10 cents.

It has done me good to be somewhat parched by the heat and drenched by the rain of life.

Of all the sweets of which mortals can dream,
There is naught to excel strawberries and cream.

Neither is there any remedy known to mortals that can excel Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry as a cure for Chol a Morbus, Cholera Infantum and all Bo el Complaints. (29)

To make life's harmony complete,
Both joy and sorrow in the strain must meet,
In the summer and the fall, the urchin climbs the garden wall,
For green apples, in his frolic:
He will eat his fill, till, very ill,
He's doubled up with Colic.
The antidote is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry—an unfailing remedy for Colic, Cholera Morbus, Cholera Infantum and all Summer Complaints. (30)

Trials and sufferings are only to be regretted when they have proved too severe to be borne.

The well-known drug firm of Ormand & Walsh, Peterboro, writes that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is one of their "standard summer medicines, and has a good sale." An unfailing remedy for all forms of Bowel Complaint. (26)

He that seeketh liberty and ease shall ever live in disquiet; for one thing or other shall displease him.

Mrs. Partington declared the Neuralgia to be worse than the old Rheumatism; but however bad either may be, Burdock Blood Bitters will conquer it. It also makes pure blood, regulating the Liver, Kidneys and Bowels, and eradicating scrofulous humor from the system. 25,000 bottles sold in the last three months. (25)

The more we drink we still desire the more. So, if we indulge our passions, they become daily more violent.

The fruit merchants strawberries may not fill the measure; but Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry fills the measure every time in the people's requirements for an unfailing remedy for all forms of Summer Complaints. (27)

Silence never shows itself to so great an advantage as when it is made the reply to calumny and defamation.

Mr. W. J. Guppy, of Newbury, informs us that he has used Burdock Blood Bitters in his family with good effect, and adds that the Rev. J. R. Smith has used it and speaks of it in high terms of praise. It is the great system-renovating tonic that cures all diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys, acting harmoniously with Nature's laws. 25,000 bottles sold during the last three months. (28)

A firm faith is the best divinity; a good life the best philosophy; a clear conscience the best law; honesty the best policy, and temperance the best physic.

From Mr. EDWARD MITCHELL, Manager of the Bank of Commerce, Hamilton, Ont.

Hamilton, January 18th, 1883.

J. N. SUTHERLAND, St. Catharines.

My Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your favor of yesterday's date, asking my experience with regard to RHEUMATINE, and I have no hesitation whatever in pronouncing it a success in my case, and in heartily recommending the remedy to those suffering from Rheumatism. I suffered for months with that trouble in my right arm and shoulder, and often was unable to use my hand, and at night the pain was frequently so great as to render sleep an impossibility. I must confess that I entertained a repugnance to "patent" medicines, but some of my friends persuaded me to try "Rheumatine," and although it may be true that I might have got well without it, one thing I do know, that after taking four bottles the pain took its departure, and I have now the full use of my arm. I heartily wish you unbounded success, as I fully believe your remedy is all that you advertise it to be.

I am, my dear sir, yours most truly,
E. MITCHELL.

The great simplicity of the hats of the Princess of Wales has enraged the London milliners.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-St. West, Toronto, Canada.

Theatrical item: The "Black Crook" ought to run better than any other piece on the stage. It has more legs.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

What is Catarrh?

Catarrh is a muco-purulent discharge caused by the presence and development of the vegetable parasite amœba in the internal lining membrane of the nose. This parasite is only developed under favourable circumstances, and these are: Morbid state of the blood, as the blighted corpuscle or tubercle, the germ poison of syphilis, mercury, toxœmea, from the retention of the effeted matter of the skin, suppressed perspiration, badly ventilated sleeping apartments, and other poisons that are germinated in the blood. These poisons keep the internal lining membrane of the nose in a constant state of irritation, ever ready for the deposit of the seeds of these germs, which spread up the nostrils and down the fauces or back of the throat, causing ulceration of the throat; up the eustachian tubes, causing deafness; burrowing in the vocal cords, causing hoarseness; usurping the proper structure of the bronchial tubes, ending in pulmonary consumption and death.

Many attempts have been made to discover a cure for this distressing disease by the use of inhalents and other ingenious devices, but none of these treatments can do a particle of good until the amœba are either destroyed or removed from the mucous tissue.

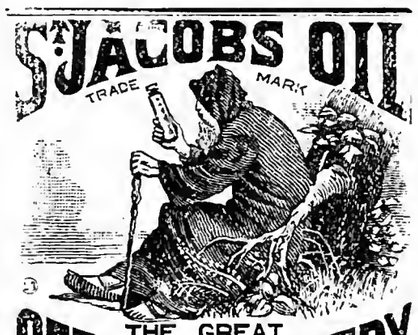
Some time since a well-known physician of forty years' standing after much experimenting, succeeded in discovering the necessary combination of ingredients, which never fails in absolutely and permanently eradicating this horrible disease whether standing for one year or forty years. Those who may be suffering from the above disease should, without delay, communicate with the business managers, Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King Street West, Toronto, and get full particulars and treatise free by enclosing stamp.

What the Rev. E. B. Stevenson, B.A., a Clergyman of the London Conference of the Methodist Church of Canada, has to say in regard to A. H. Dixon & Son's New Treatment of Catarrh.

"OAKLAND, ONT., CANADA, March 17, 1883.
"MESSRS. A. H. DIXON & SON.

"DEAR SIRS,—Yours of the 13th instant to hand. It seems almost too good to be true that I am cured of Catarrh, but I know that I am. I have had no return of the disease and never felt better in my life. I have tried so many things for catarrh, suffered so much and for so many years, that it is hard for me to realize that I am really better.

"I consider that mine was a very bad case; it was aggravated and chronic, involving the throat as well as the nasal passages, and I thought I would require the three treatments, but I feel fully cured by the two you sent me, and I am thankful that I was ever induced to send to you.



"You are at liberty to use this letter stating that I have been cured at two treatments, and I shall gladly recommend your remedy to some of my friends who are sufferers.

"Yours with many thanks,
"E. B. STEVENSON."

The Princess Louise has telepraphed, "What day should pictures be in Boston for exhibition?"

PAINLESS AND PROMPT.—Putnam Painless Corn Extractor, the great remedy for corns, is absolutely safe and painless, does its work promptly, without in the least interfering with the comfort of the patients, and is absolutely alone as a safe, painless remedy for corns. Do not be imposed upon by dangerous counterfeits. Use only Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. Beware of base substitutes. Sold everywhere by druggists and dealers in medicine. Take only Putnam's Painless Extractor. N. C. Polson & Co., Props., Kingston.

"A. P." 142

BUILDERS AND PERSONS BUILDING should not fail to use the Gonne Patent Door Knob. The most durable and best Door Knob ever made. If your hardware dealer will not supply you send postal card for catalogue and price list of the different styles and prices. W. H. GONNE, Chatham, Ont. Drawer 298.

DO NOT ALLOW YOUR CHILDREN TO grow up deformed or crippled, but call and examine our appliances for the treatment of Club Feet, and Diseases of the Spine, Hips, Knee and Ankle. Remember the world is progressing, and more can be done to-day than at any former period. We also manufacture Artificial Limbs, Trusses, and appliances for the relief and cure of all kinds of deformities. Will show at Toronto, Guelph and London Exhibitions. AUTHORS & COX, 91 Church street, Toronto.

CONFIDENTIAL.

THOUSANDS of young Men and Women—married and single—through the effects of vicious youthful habits, or excessive indulgence in later years, have so undermined their general systems as to induce almost every other disease, and the real cause of these troubles being scarcely ever suspected, they are drugged and doctored for everything but the right one. THE JERUBEBIN COMBINATION REMEDY is offered as a speedy and certain cure, as hundreds afflicted with every form of disease have been restored to complete health by its use, after all other remedies failed. The recuperative powers of this medicine are truly astonishing, and, in troubles arising from imprudence, its continued use for a short time changes the languid, debilitated condition, to one of renewed life and vigour. Forwarded to any address, on receipt of price, Two Dollars per package—sufficient for one month's treatment.
M. FINDLAY & CO., Box 497 Toronto.

AMBER SUGAR CANE MACHINERY.

New Paragon School Desks.

M. BEATTY & SONS, Welland, Ont.

Early Amber Cane Seed Imported from the Southern States. Send for catalogues and prices.

THE GREAT CURE FOR

RHEUMATISM

And all complaints of a Rheumatic nature,

RHEUMATINE is not a sovereign remedy for "all the ills that flesh is heir to," but for NEURALGIA, SCIATICA, RHEUMATISM, and complaints of Rheumatic nature.

IT IS A SURE CURE

Sold by all druggists. The Rheumatine Manufacturing Co., Niagara Falls, Ont. Messrs Northrop & Lyman, Wholesale Agts., Toronto

MISCELLANEOUS.

WORTHY OF PRAISE.

As a rule we do not recommend Patent Medicines, but when we know of one that really is a public benefactor, and does positively cure, then we consider it our duty to impart that information to all. Electric Bitters are truely a most valuable medicine, and will surely cure Billiousness, Feyer and Ague, Stomach, Liver and Kidney Complaints, even when all other remedies fail. We know whereof we speak, and can freely recommend them to all.—Ezch.—Sold at fifty cents a bottle, by A. Turner & Co.

The largest man in the British service is Lieutenant Southerland, of the fifty-sixth regiment. He is eight feet four inches high and weighs 364 pounds.

FREE OF COST.

All persons wishing to test the merits of a great remedy—one that will positively cure Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, or any affection of the Throat and Lungs—are requested to call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption free of cost, which will show you what a regular dollar-size bottle will do.

A little girl, the Chicago Tribune says, unconsciously and touchingly testified to the excessive drudgery of her mother's life when, on being asked. "Is your mother's hair grey?" she replied: "I don't know; she's too tall for me to see the top of her heed, and she never sits down."

GIVEN AWAY.

We cannot help noticing the liberal offer made to all invalids and suff rers by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. You are requsted to call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store, and get a Trial Bottle free of cost, if you are suffering with Consumption, Severe Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Loss of Voice, Hoarseness, or any affection of the Throat or Lungs. It will positively cure you.

"It won't always do for a compositor to follow copy," says an observing editor, "for some of it blew out of our composing room window yesterday, and the compositor would have broken his neck had he followed it."

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

A friend of W. H. Vanderbilt says that gentleman has given away $3,000,000 in charities that the world knows nothing about, and that he observes the Scripture rule about not letting the left hand know when the right is giving away money.

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND

Is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate. It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

The joint exhibit of the Dominion Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at the north Lancashire Agricultural Show at Liverpool was awarded a silver medal.

Our correspondents will do well to bear in mind that their copy will require to reach us on Tuesday, to insure an insertion the same week.

The cattle plague is spreading very rapidly in England, and is causing great uneasiness.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

A rumour comes from Kingston that the Canada Pacific Railway Company have leased the Kingston and Pembroke Railway for 99 years.

Wm. Lucas & Co, bankers, Markdale, have $200,000.00 to loan on real estate. Straight loan system. No fines. Low interest; moderate charges.

Rev. Dr. Rice and Bishop Carman were elected General Superintendents of the United Methodist Church by the General Conference at Belleville, the former for eight years and the latter for four years.

THE QUESTION HAS OFTEN BEEN ASKED.

Can—Rupture—(abdominal hernia) be cured? We most emphatically say, YES. That this part of the body offers no exception to those physiological laws which govern the whole physical economy and it makes not a particle of difference whether the age of the Rupture is one year or a hundred years. For proof of this send for a Free Book on Rupture to The Excelsior Rupture Cure M'f'g Co., Prescott, Ont. 132-84.

Are you insured? if not you should be; the sure way is always the best. Mr. W. L. Young is agent for the British America, Lancashire, and Fire Insurance Association of London, England. These are good strong companies, and Mr. Young is a reliable agent, and does his work in a prompt and business like manner, give him a call.

Markdale monthly Cattle FAIR.

A regular Monthly Cattle Fair will be held in the Agricultural Grounds, Markdale, as follows:

—1883—

SATURDAY	.....	Aug. 4
Do.	.....	Sept.
Do.	.....	Oct. 6
Do.	.....	Nov. 3
Do.	.....	Dec. 8

MARKDALE Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats!

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and delivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23. 1882. 80-1y

Health is Wealth!

Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment, a guaranteed specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Fits, Nervous Neuralgia, Headache, Nervous Prostration caused by the use of alcohol or tobacco, Wakefulness, Mental Depression, Softening of the Brain, resulting in Insanity and leading to misery, decay and death, Premature Old Age, Barrenness, Loss of Power in either sex, Involuntary losses and Spermatorrhœa, caused by over-exertion of the brain, self-abuse or over-indulgence. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser a written guarantee to refund the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by A. Turner &Co., ole authorized Agent for Markdale Ont. John C. West &Co. sole proprietor Toronto.Ont.

FARMERS!

LOOK TO YOUR INTERESTS AND GET

SARGENT'S

PATENT LOAD LIFTING MACHINE

THIS SEASON.

It will save you one or more hands every day you are drawing in, as you don't need a man at the front of the mow to pitch it back. You can pitch from the load as you are pitching down instead of up. You can unload in half the time, and with greater ease than in the old way.

Agents wanted in every county. Wm. SARGENT, Berkeley P. O.

THE BEST PLACE TO GET A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery.

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Wilson Benson

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

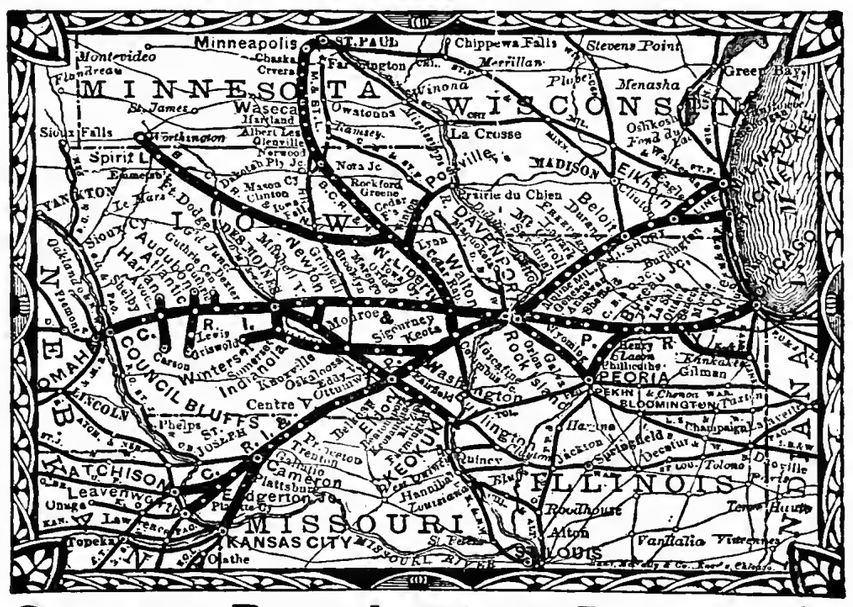
BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.
DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.



In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

WILSON BENSON.

July 6, 1882.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Callatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

ARTEMESIA WAREHOUSE

FLESHERTON STATION.

Dry Goods, Hardware, Crockery, Boots and Shoes

Groceries, Provisions, &c. Stock kept full and well assorted with goods received every week.

MY BRANCH STORE AT EUGENIA

replenished with new goods every week. For sale cheap for cash or produce.

My Saw mill, Shingle Factoty, and Lime Kiln

AT LITTLE FALLS, ARE IN OPERATION.

All kinds Saw ogs bought at the Mill or sawn on shares.

Lumber, Lath, Broom Handles, Shingles and Lime for sale.

W. M. HOGG.

GROCERIES

A. M'INTYRE

TEA! TEA! TEA!

A. M'INTYRE

Flour, Flour, Flour.

McINTYRE'S
LIQUORS! LIQUORS
McINTYRE'S
Cigars, Cigars.
McINTYRE'S
Coffee, Coffee.

McINTYRE'S
MEAL! MEAL! MEAL!
McINTYRE'S
Pork, Pork, Pork.
McINTYRE'S
Teas, Teas.

And everything kept in a first-class Grocery and Liquor Store, always on hand, CHEAP FOR CASH.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

—AT—

Bulmers Photograph Gallery

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we are not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON

PLOW POINTS.

ALL KINDS AT REDUCED RATES,

Made of Special Iron,

The Cheapest and Best.

Support Home industry and procure your Plow Points

—— AT THE ——

Markdale Foundry.

Plow Points, 3 for $1.

Old Iron taken in Exchange.

PLOW POINTS.

Robt. S. Rae,

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

W. J. BELLAMY

Insurance Agent Flesherton

Will be at the Markdale House Markdale

Every THURSDAY

First Class Companies only represented

Money to loan on good farms at 7 per. cent.

134-60

$500 Reward!

We will pay the above reward for any case of Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Constipation or Costiveness we cannot cure with West's Vegetable Liver Pills, when the directions are strictly complied with. They are purely Vegetable, and never fail to give satisfaction. Sugar Coated, Large Boxes, containing 30 Pills, 25 cts. For sale by all Druggists. Beware of counterfeits and immitations. The genuine manufactured only by JOHN C. WEST & CO., "The Pill Makers," 81 & 83 King St. East, Toronto, Ont. Free trial package sent by mail prepaid on receipt of a 3 cent stamp. For sale at Turner & Co. Drug Store.

MONTHLY FAIRS.

Markdale—Saturday before Flesherton.
Chatsworth—Monday before Durham.
Dundalk—Tuesday before Orangeville.
Flesherton—Monday before Orangeville.
Shelburne—Wednesday before Orangeville.
Orangeville—The second Thursday in each month.
Mount Forest—Third Wednesday in each month.
Priceville—Monday before Durham.
Durham—Third Tuesday in each month.
Hanover—Monday before Durham.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 2. MARKDALE, ONT., SEPT. 20. 1883. No. 158.

The Markdale Standard
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY THURSDAY EVENING,
At Markdale Ontario.
$1 Per Anumn
IN ADVANCE.
C. W. RUTLEDGE.
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,
WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O. Physician and Surgeon, Priceville, Graduate of University. Vict. College. " " " New York, and Hon. Graduate, of the same, " " Ayleth Medical Institute. " " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y. Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J.P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST,
GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,
BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B. County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,
BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.
A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS. CONVEYANCERS, &c. &c.
Offices in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in
MARKDALE;
over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
Funds to lend on reasonable terms.
JOHN CREASOR, Q. C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.
ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Tenants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,
ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate secured.

W. C. RICHARDS,
BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

MISS. GREEN,
DRESS AND MANTLE
PARLOR.
Dunlop's building Markdale.
All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.
Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

ROYAL MARKDALE LODGE,
I. O. O. F. No. 78, will meet in their hall Monday evening. Sept. 17th at eight o'clock p. m.
198 A. Turner, Sec'y.

JOHN NOBLE,
MARKDALE.
GENER'L BLACKSMITH
HORSE SHOEING
A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.
THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large ommercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.
The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.
Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,
CONTRACTORS.
Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.
Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

J. W. FORD
Is giving splendid satisfaction in
CRISTING,
By the New Process at the
Markdale Flouring Mills.
Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

ALEX KAY
BOOT & SHOE
MAKER,
MILL STREET
MARKDALE.

GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail

{BUTCHER!}
BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.
FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON
Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call at No. 3 Burns' Block, opposite the new Union Block.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

STARTLING DISCOVERY!
LOST MANHOOD RESTORED.
A victim of youthful imprudence causing Premature Decay, Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, etc., having tried in vain every known remedy, has discovered a simple self-cure, which he will send FREE to his fellow-sufferers, address J. H. REEVES, 43 Chatham St., N. Y.

Dundalk.

Work on the drains has commenced.

The second story of McCulloch's hotel is up.

Mrs, J. Rundle has recovered from her illness.

Miss Campbell left on Tuesday on a visit to friends in Markham.

Some drunken immigrants put in an appearance here on Monday.

Mrs. Hall returned from her visit in Bruce county, on Monday last.

The Industrial exhibition is not without attractions for our citizens.

Dull as are the times, A. G. Hunter continues to make sales of real estate through the medium of his agency.

A vigorous effort is being made to have the addition to the Agricultural Hall built yet, before the 4th prox.

The frost wrought immense damage in the surrounding country. Wheat and oats, being nearly ripe, suffered very severely. A large quantity of of oats will only be fit for feed, and a great deal of the wheat is not worth threshing.

Durham.

The new Lambton Street bridge was completed last week, also the side walk approaching it.

The Flesherton Band has been engaged to play on Fair day. They are excellent musicians.—Chronicle.

The Model School for South Grey opened here last week. There is a much larger attendance than last year.

We see by the Review that the congregation of Knox Church has engaged a continuance of the services of their Pastor, Rev. Mr. Forrest, for another year. They also presented him with a purse of $50.

BRIDGE REPAIRING.—A number of men were repairing the railway bridge close to town, last week, by driving in piles of additional support. The repairs were made none to soon, as the butments, the filling up of which was done by contract were filled with dirt at the bottom instead of stone; and the span being too great the bridge also sagged in the middle.—Chronicle.

The Methodist Conference.

Belleville, Sep 18—An unsuccessful attempt was made to-day toextend the limit of a minister's stay in a circuit from three to four or five years. No minister can return to a circuit after less than six years absence. A resolution was adopted to make circulating of methodist literature by ministers obligatory. The conference special committee is to make the needful arrangements for the celebration of the centenary of the establishment of methodism in America. It was resolved that each annual conference shall have a contingent fund of its own to relieve cases of special afflictibn and assist poor circuits. A long conversation ensued on the subject of ministers being connected with trading companies or boards for the investment of funds, which ended in a resolution being adopted prohibiting all ministers being so employed. The temperance report adopted, recommends every encouragement to temperance organizations.

AGRICULTURAL EHIBITIONS

SOUTH GREY. At Durham, Tuesday and Wednesday, Sept. 25th and 26th.

PROVINCIAL. At Guelph, from September 24th to Sept 29th.

INDUSTRIAL.—At Toronto, from the 11th Sept. to the 22nd Sept.

EAST GREY.—At Flesherton. Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 2nd and 3rd.

GLENELG.—At Markdale, on Thursday and Friday. Sept. 27th and 28th.

ARTEMESIA.—At Priceville, on the 9th October.

PROTON.—At Dundalk, Oct. 4th and 5th.

HOLLAND.—At, Chatsworth, on the 5th of October.

EUPHRASIA.—At Rocklyn, on the 10th of October.

MELANCTHON.—at Shelburne, Oct 4 and 5th.

NORTHERN.--At Walkerton, Oct. 10 to 13.

GREY, NORTH.—Owen Sound, Sept. 26 and 27.

HOLLAND CENTRE.—4th October.

OSPREY.—At Singhampton on the 9th October.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,
BANKERS,
Money Loaned
IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.
INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.
Allowed on Savings Deposits.
Drafts issued and Collections made on points, at lowest rates.
W.M. LUCAS, Manager.
September 23, 1880. 2-ly

ROBT. ASKIN,
MARKDALE,
Has opened out a First-Class
Furniture!
—AND—
UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,
And therefore has supplied a want long felt, especially in the Undertaking Line.
COFFINS,
CASKETS, SHROUDS,
and all
FUNERAL FURNISHINGS
supplied on the shortes notice.
A Splendid Hearse
for hire at moderate rates.
—All kinds of—
PICTURE FRAMING
Done on short notice.
ROBT. ASKIN.

SUBSCRIBE FOR THE "STANDARD."

SEEING IS BELIEVING.
GENTLEMEN,—
If you want a first-class
Buggie or Wagon
call at
MCKENNA & MASON'S
CARRIAGE WORKS
MARKDALE.
They can supply you with anything from a
Lumber Wagon
up to
Extension Top Phæton.
To buy from them is o
SAVE MONEY!
They are both practical workmen, and employ none but
PRACTICAL WORKMEN
They guarantee their work
Second to none for Lightness of Draught and Superiority of Finish.
They use nothing but First-class White Oak for Wagons, and thrice Extra Second Growth Hickory for light work.
The immense amount of work turned out of McKenna & Mason's shop is sufficien proof of the wide reputation they enjoy for doing good work.
THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END
Poor cheap work we positively will not take.
Special attention given to Re-Trimming and Repainting all classes of Carriage Work.
Satisfaction guaranteed (or No Pay) in ORSESHOEING
SHOP—On Mill Street opposite to Sproule's Hotel.
McKENNA & MASON.

Division Court No. 5, will meet at Flesherton on the 24th October.

THOS. MATHEWS,
HarnesS EstablishmenT
MARKDALE.
EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.
LIVERY!
IN CONNECTION.

EUGENIA
Grist, Saw and Lath Mills
Having made eqtensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.
GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND
Chopping Done Every Day.
Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.
LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.
Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted
69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

CALCINED PLASTER,
—OR—
Plaster Paris,
One car of Nova Scotia, all best and cheapest in the market.
Machine Oils and Paint
OILS AT CLOSE PRICES.
H. PARKER'S
Drugstore - DURHAM.

J.G.IRVING,
MARKDALE,
Manufacturer of all Kinds of
PUMPS.
Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.
All kinds of
IRON - PUMPS
SUPPLIED.

MATRIMONY
is an interesting subject. Economy is equally important to business men who will find to it their interest to have Bill Heads Letter Heads, Envelopes and all such printed, giving them a business like appearance. All kinds of plain and fancy work from a tiny visiting card to the largest posters done at the Standard Office.

STELLA;
OR, AT CROSS PURPOSES.

CHAPTER XXII. (CONTINUED.)

Walter stood by the billiard-table idly knocking the balls about with his hand, and yawning at intervals as though he was bored beyond description.

"Walter," said his brother, suddenly stopping short before him, "I hope you are going to behave well to that poor little thing."

"What poor litlte thing, Edgar?" was the listless reply.

"You know very well who I mean—Miss Finch."

"What has Miss Finch to do with me? She is probably going to die—such a nuisance a death in a house is!"

Sir Edgar winced.

"I cannot believe you to be so heartless and so unfeeling as you make yourself out," he said, indignantly. "The very fact of your remaining here proves that you are not insensible to the danger she is in."

"Does it?" he said, carelessly.

"Walter, I do hope and trust if—if—when she gets well, you mean to marry the poor girl. Do, pray, be open with me about it. I am only anxious that you should do what is right, and I will make you an allowance; it will not be very much, but it will be as much as I can afford, to enable you to marry her and live quietly."

"My dear fellow," said Walter. with a lazy laugh, "you are really very good, but I haven't the slightest intention of marrying the children's governess!"

"You have allowed her to love you; you have caressed her, and you have not offered to marry her!" cried Sir Edgar, hotly and indignantly. "I cannot believe you to be so unmanly."

Walter laughed again.

"Do you suppose I have offered to marry every woman I have kissed in my life? I should have had enough to do if I had!" with a sneer. "Girls should be able to take care of themselves, and not allow themselves to be kissed."

"But she is so young, and timid, and weak!" said Edgar; "she does not understand how to take care of herself; surely Walter, you will not be so base as to take advantage of her youth and inexperience?"

"Really, Edgar, you seem to take a remarkable interest in Miss Finch and her doings. I am sure, my dear fellow, I did not know I was poaching in your preserves."

Sir Edgar colored deeply.

"You know very well that I am engaged to Lady Honoria," he said, gravely.

"Yes, of course, and that being the case, suppose we leave little Lily Finch alone—I'll look after her if I can. I'm sorry she is ill, and still more so if I should be the cause of her illness; but these sort of girls don't die of a broken heart; and as to marrying her, why, there are many good reasons against it. I dare say the mother will look after her; and if I were you, I wouldn't risk Lady Honoria's displeasure by displaying your interest in her quite so plainly."

He laughed good-naturedly and rather scornfully, and Sir Edgar turned away, feeling that there was little that he could say in answer to him, and hoping in his heart that Walter made himself out to be worse than he really was.

CHAPTER XXIII.

A WHITE HYACINTH.

But Lily did not die; she battled through her disease with all the strength of her healthy constitution and her twenty summers, and came back again, poor child, to all the vexed questions and the unspeakable sorrows of her life.

Lady Dyson had made her plans: she had not been idle whilst she had been waiting upon her, and now, when Lily was strong enough to bear it, she proceeded to unfold to her what she had determined upon doing with her.

The first time that Lily sat up, pale, and thin, and weak, in a big arm-chair, drawn up before the fire, Lady Dyson came into her room and took her kindly by the hand.

"Dear me! this is famous to see you up—how do you feel, my dear!"

Lily smiled gently and gratefully.

"Very much better! Oh! Lady Dyson, how can I ever thank you enough for all your goodness to me!" and her eyes filled with tears.

"Oh! never mind that, Lily—of course I have done what I could—and now you must be a good girl, and do what I tell you without any fuss."

"I will do anything you wish, Lady Dyson."

"That is right, my dear. Well, Lily, I have determined to send you away to the seaside."

The look of startled dismay in Lily's face told Lady Dyson instantly how distasteful the idea was to her. She went on, hurriedly:

"Yes, I think an immediate change will be a great thing for you. You would not, of course, be able to resume your studies for a long time, probably not for three months, Dr. Graham says; but I have determined that I will engage somebody temporarily to teach the children, so that you may be able to return to me when you are well enough."

"You are very, very kind," murmured Lily.

"What I have settled to do is to send you to an old nurse of mine, who is married and settled at Sandyport in Essex—she keeps lodgings—it is a quiet little place, but very healthy, and I hope you will soon pick up your health and strength there. I shall send Barnes down with you, and shall pay for you all the time you are there; you shall have no expenses and no worries—nothing, in fact, to do but to get strong."

"How very good you are," said Lily, and yet the poor child looked up at her wistfully and longingly; there was something terrible to her in this sentence of exile from Barfield. "And you will let me come back here afterwards, Lady Dyson?" she asked, timidly.

Lady Dyson smiled, and smoothed down the folds of her rich silk dress.

"Well,' she answered, "not exactly here, my dear, because there are to be some changes in the family. I and the children are going to live at a smaller house in the neighboring county, Sutley Manor—you must have heard us mention it; it belongs to me, but it has been let of late years, but now I am going to live there; it is there you will come back to us."

Lily, pale and weak as she was, sat up in her arm-chair, clasping her hands nervously together,

"What!" she cried, tremblingly, and her eyes were full of startled dismay. "Oh! what do you mean, Lady Dyson?"

"My dear, do not be excited," answered the elder lady, laying her hand gently upon her shoulder; "it is nothing to make you look so frightened, child. You must be told sooner or later, my dear—Sir Edgar is going to be married," and in spite of herself, Lady Dyson felt that her heart filled with pity and compassion as she spoke the fatal words.

Lily sank back, white and trembling, among her pillows; for an instant Lady Dyson thought she was going to faint, and she reached out her hand for the salts-bottle, but Lily pushed back her hand gently, and a sudden crimson glow flooded her thin face.

"No, thank you, I don't feel ill—I—I hope he will be very happy, Lady Dyson."

"Yes, my dear, I hope so too," she answered, infinitely relieved by the girl's quiet voice and manner. She had dreaded a scene, but evidently Lily was going to take the news well and bravely.

"Is it Lady Honoria?" said Lily presently.

"Yes, it is Lady Honoria; I think she will made him a good wife, and it is a most suitable marriage in every way."

"I think she loves him," said Lily, slowly, "and I am very glad it is her."

Then there was a long silence. Lily rested her cheek upon her hand, and gazed long and abstractedly into the fire; Lady Dyson sat by her, watching her somewhat apprehensively. It was strange how much her heart had become drawn towards the poor, little despised governess whom she had nursed through her illness, and how sorry she felt for her. Lady Dyson could not help acknowledging to herself that Lily was behaving wonderfully well, and she felt so grateful to her for not fainting or going into hysterics, or behaving generally like a love-sick maiden, that she even leaned forward and kissed her.

Lily drew a long shivering sigh, and turned to her.

"And he will be married when I come back to you, Lady Dyson?" she asked.

"Yes, my dear. It is better so, don't you think so?"

"Very likely—oh! yes; it is far better, Lady Dyson," with a slight flush—"may I see him once before I go?"

"No, my dear, I think not."

"There is something I would like to say—only a few words."

"I don't think it would be wise, Lily; I am afraid I cannot allow it."

Her head sank back with a little sigh, and her eyes closed. She said nothing more, and Lady Dyson, after sitting quietly by her side for some minutes, fancied she must have dropped off to sleep. So she crept slowly away on tiptoe out of the room, and left her alone.

When she was gone Lily eyes opened once more, and fixed themselves again with a cold, miserable stare upon the flames.

"Never to see him again," she murmured, "never to tell him that he was mistaken—that I was not false or untrue to him. Oh! it is hard! but perhaps it is better for me; I must learn to live without him—it will be better to begin at once."

Meanwhile, Lady Dyson had found her son below in his library; an open letter was in his hand. He turned quickly to his mother as she entered.

"How is she—how has she borne the move to the armchair?" he asked, eagerly.

"Oh! very well, indeed; I think she is in a fair way to get well now. Dr. Graham recommends her going to the seaside."

"Of course, that will be the best thing for her. I have had a letter from Lord Alchester, mother, and one from Honoria, too, they want me to go over for a few days; I suppose I had better go"

"Certainly, you had better go. You ought to have gone before, Edgar."

"Yes, perhaps. Mother, when will Miss Finch go to the sea, do you think?"

"Oh! not before Saturday. To-day is Monday. She will not be strong enough to move till the end of the week."

"Very well, then, I will go to Alchester Towers to-morrow, and be back on Friday. The fact is, I want to see Miss Finch before she goes away."

"My dear boy, you cannot possibly do her any good. I do not see the object of it."

"I mean to see her," he answered so decidedly that Lady Dyson knew he was determined to have his own way. She was dreadfully afraid of that interview. Good and docile as Lily was, who could tell what she might not say or do to upset Sir Edgar's engagement were she to be alone with him?

"I do not see what good you can do her," she repeated. "It will only be making her ill again for nothing She is very weak still."

"She will be stronger by Friday," answered Sir Edgar quietly.

And Lady Dyson was clever enough to raise no further objection.

Sir Edgar went away on the morrow. What he intended to have said to Lily on his return he probably hardly knew himself. Before he went away he was weak enough to go into the empty school-room, where he had so often spoken words of love to her, and where his last sight of her had been, alas! encircled by the arms of his own brother.

His heart smote him as he stood once more in the dingy, deserted little room. All the children had been sent away, as a matter of precaution, directly their governess had been taken ill. The chairs were ranged against the wall, the books were all packed away upon the shelves; there was no pleasant litter of copy-books and slates upon the table.

Edward Dyson turned away sadly and mournfully from the familiar room. Would he ever see her again, he wondered, the poor little girl whom he had loved so fatally, and whose weakness and frivolity had prevented her from being true to him? Poor little thing! she loved him, doubtless a little. She was sorry, very likely, by this time for what she had done; but it was too late now.

He sighed deeply. The brougham stood at the door to take him to the station; his mother was in the hall to wish him good-bye.

He kissed her, and listened to her parting words absently and not very attentively, and stood for a minute at the open door putting on his gloves.

It was a balmy April day. Outside along along the house wall was a long, close-set row of white hyacinths just in bloom. The warm, heavy scent came up in a delicious whiff of fragrance to where he stood. He glanced up at a certain closed window at the farther corner of the house. Did any breath of spring flowers creep into that sick room he wondered?

"You will be late, Edgar," said his mother.

He stooped down suddenly, and gathered one of the delicate waxen blossoms, and stepped back hurriedly into the house.

"Mother," he said. in a low voice, so that the servants might not hear them, "give her this, and tell her that I shall see her when I come home."

He thrust the flower into her hand, and turning hastily ran away, sprang into the carriage, and in another instant was gone.

As to Lady Dyson, she stood for some minutes alone in the hall, contemplating the white blossom in her hand. She turned it slowly over and over, as though she expected to find out some hidden meaning in its pure and stainless petals.

"The height of folly!" she said to herself, at last. "But I don't suppose it can do much harm."

And then she took the hyacinth up-stairs, and laid it upon Lily's lap.

"Sir Edgar has gone away, and he has sent you this," she said to her.

But she spoke no words about his intending to see her when he came back. That was not at all in the programme that Lady Dyson had laid out for the disposal of Lily Finch and her love troubles.

After she had given her the flower she was charitable enough to leave her alone; and when she was gone, Lily lifted the little peace-offering to her lips, and burst into a flood of tears as she pressed it to her face.

"It was to wish me good-bye," she said to herself, brokenly. "And he had forgiven me; but he will never see me again!"

And, like a tired child, poor Lily sobbed herself to sleep.

CHAPTER XXIV.

AN EVENING MEETING.

There was a ferment of unwonted excitement at Wrexham Hall. There were people coming and going, boxes and parcels arriving from London, a perpetual chattering amongst the women-folk of the establishment, for the wedding preparations for the 1st of May were in full swing. Mr. King had been liberal to his granddaughter in the matter of trousseau, and there came down from London many beautiful and costly garments for the bride-elect.

Cecily was not at all above being genuinely delighted and interested by this part of the proceedings.

"I wonder whether any woman ever got a trousseau for her marriage in such a queer way before?" she said to herself more than once, with a keen sense of the ludicrous, which no stings from her slumbering conscience could serve to stifle, as she bent over the rich satin which Stella was unpacking, and echoed her own warm admiration of its delicate beauties.

Poor Stella! she tried hard to be pleased and happy, but it was dreadful work going about with a smiling face with that never-cessing pain at her heart.

"I shall get used to it in time," she would say to herself, "and dearly as I love them both, it ought to be easy enough. I must be very wicked not to rejoice more in my only sister's happiness!"

And then, with a pang, she remembered that, but for that foolish, childish freak long ago at Valency, when she had deceived her mother for the sake of an hour of stolen and doubtful pleasure, she, Stella, might have been in Cecily's place to-day.

"He took a disgust to me then, and no wonder: and then my dreadful temper did the rest. But for that, he might have cared for me."

And the sting of it all was the knowledge that her own folly had cost her her life's happiness.

Surely no silly, unreasoning escapade of early girlhood had ever been more dearly paid for!

During these days Noman went and came between London and Wrexham, and saw but little of the two sisters; for when he was at home he was closeted chiefly in Mr. King's library, where there was a great overhauling of family deeds and papers, and where the great question of settlements was supposed to be under discussion..

How painfully and terribly anxious Cecily felt during these conferences, and how intensely she longed to know how things were being arranged, no one could ever say. So great was her anxiety, indeed upon the subject, that, clever actress as she was, she could not quite succeed in hiding it from Stella's notice.

"I would not think about it, Cecily, if I were you," her sister could not help saying to her once, after Cecily's impatience concerning the settlements had betrayed itself almost too plainly. "I don't think it looks very well for a girl to think so much about the money when she is just going to be married."

"Do you suppose he is making his will?" was Cecily's only rejoinder.

"I dare say, dear. But what does it matter? You know very well that grandpa will behave well to you. You and Norman will be very well off. I don't think the details can matter very much."

"You know nothing about it!" she cried, impatiently; and then, with a nervous laugh, she added: "He might leave everything to Norman and nothing to me!"

"Well," replied Stella, smiling, "since Norman is to be your husband, that would not matter much. Of course everything that is his is yours also."

"That might not always be the case. Suppose we were to separate?"

"To separate! Good heavens! Cecily," cried Stella, aghast. "Fancy talking about separation, when you are only to be married in a week?"

"Oh! I was only joking, of course."

But she sighed, and looked so thoroughly worried, that Stella felt quite uneasy about her, not knowing what to make of her.

Far away, among the green slopes of the park, was an ancient and ruined tower. No one quite knew what had been its original purpose, nor who, in the generations that were passed away, had built it there. It was just a round stone tower, with a low doorway, and no remains of windows. The roof had long fallen in, but thick bushes and a young mountain-ash had planted their roots in the scanty dust of the crumbling walls, and had roofed it in with greenery from the rain and the sun. A small coppice surrounded it, and there was no pathway through the tangled nettles and briars that had grown up in wild disorder on every side of it.

It was within the shelter of this desolate building that a man stood waiting one evening, just after dusk, with his hands in his pockets, and a short black pipe in his mouth.

Every now and then he stooped down and looked out of the low doorway, and then he knocked out the ashes of his pipe against the rough stone wall, and replaced it between his lips.

"She can't even be punctual now," he muttered, angrily, to himself; "it's too bad having to hang about in a damp, beastly hole like this, in the dark. I shan't stand more of it, so I can tell her. Hallo! here you are at last! I'm so sick of waiting for you!"

The tall dark figure of a woman, wrapped in a long cloak, came towards him, brushing through the undergrowth of the wood.

"I am sorry, Walter, I could not get away! Norman——"

"Yes—yes; always the cousin, I know," he interrupted roughly. "I'll tell you what, I am dead sick of the whole thing! I hate all this maneuvring and plotting, and I am bored to death with hanging about this country doing nothing. Money or no money, I shall cut it and go back to Paris; if you don't like to come, you may stop here by yourself."

Unseen in the darkness, Cecily's eyes filled with tears. She had no great power of loving anybody, but such heart as she had to give, certainly belonged to this man who, alas! for her, had neither truth nor honor, nor any single high principle in his worthless character.

"I don't think you are very kind," she said, reproachfully, "when you know how hard I am working for your future welfare and benefit."

He laughed roughly.

"Yes, you are getting a fine trousseau for yourself, and a handsome lover into the bargain!"

"Why, I do believe you are jealous, Walter!"

"Not I; but the farce is a little too good. How long, pray, is it going to last?"

"Only a few days longer."

"And how, pray, are you going to end it?"

"I will tell you," she said; "listen."

She drew his face down to hers, and whispered something in his ear.

Walter Dyson stepped back a pace or two.

"Upon my word, you are a bold woman!" he said, and there was a tone of startled and not very flattering admiration in his voice. "I suppose you know you might deserve some very ugly names if any one knew——"

"No one is ever likely to know but you; and you are not likely to betry me."

"And if it fails?"

"I don't think it will; if it does, of course I must come to you all the same, and the game will be lost."

"And the will?"

"The will is all right; the money is left to me in my own name absolutely; the house to Norman. I have only found it out to-night—Norman has just told me; it is all drawn up ready: it is only waiting to be signed."

"It is not signed, then? Why not?"

"It is a fancy of the old man's; he will not sign it till the evening before the wedding. There is an old cousin coming down from town, and Norman tells me he has a fancy that he should witness the will, so it will not be signed till then; that is why I can do nothing till the very day. But it will only make the shock the greater. Whatever happens, do not forget; eight o'clock in the morning with your dog-cart in the road behind the wall of the orchard; wet or fine, I will be there."

"And glad enough I shall be to be off," said the young man.

He was slightly mollified by this time, and had passed his arm round her waist; he bent down and kissed her carelessly. He was selfish and heartless and unprincipled, but after all he admired her, and her pluck and daring filled him with a certain amount of respect for her cleverness and cunning.

Cecily went home with a heightened color and a beating heart.

Meanwhile, all unknown to her, within this very hour the fates had already decided against her. Whilst she had been speeding noiselessly and swiftly to her tryst with Walter Dyson in the deserted tower, Dr. Graham's gig had almost by accident turned in at the Wrexham Gates.

The doctor was a privileged and valued friend. As he entered unannounced into Mr. King's private room, Stella rose from her knees by the old man's side, and slipped quietly from the room.

"That is my granddaughter, doctor," said Mr. King, in explanation.

"She is very pretty—prettier than her sister, I think. Is she the one who is going to be married next week?"

"No, it is the younger one."

"Ah! yes," said Dr. Graham, almost involuntarily; "the one who called upon me, I remember now."

Mr. King looked at him in surprise.

"Called upon you, did she? What was that for? Was she ill?"

"No; she was not ill; she called to ask me about you—about your health. I thought she seemed very fond of you, and very anxious—affectionate sort of girl, I should say. It was one evening late, about a month ago she came. I could not think who she was at first. I suppose the girl is very fond of you, Mr. King?"

"Umph!" said Mr. King, and looked straight in front of him for some minutes without speaking; then he roused himself with an effort, and spoke to the doctor about some change in his medicine. There were a few commonplace words between them, and then Dr. Graham rose to go.

"Can I do anything for you, Mr. King?" he inquired, cheerily, as he stood buttoning up his coat.

"You are going back to Loughton, Graham?"

"Yes, instantly."

"Then would you please tell Norris, as you go by, to jump on his horse and come over here to me at once; he is to come instantly, remember—not to lose a moment's time."

Now, Mr. Norris was the solicitor who had drawn up Mr. King's will.

He sat for some time after the doctor's departure plunged in thought.

"I will make things safe," he said to himself. "The money shall be all left to Stella in trust, until Cecily has been married to Norman three months; to revert to Stella entirely if Cecily does not fulfill her engagement, the little cat! She has been ferreting about to find out how long I was likely to live! but I'll be even with her yet." And the old man chuckled maliciously to himself.

And then came Mr. Norris, the attorney. "Good-evening, Norris," said Mr. King, turning to him as he entered. "A little matter of business, I won't detain you long. I am going to add a codicil to my will."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Cholera in Egypt.

A letter from Cairo to the London Standard says: Dr. Schaffey Bey, who was dispatched by the Egyptian government to report on the origin of the outbreak of cholera at Damietta, has issued his report. It is giving an account of the almost incredible unsanitary state of the town and of the mode of life of the inhabitants, Schaffey Bey finally concludes that the theory of the importation of the diseases from India is altogether untenable, and he draws up his conclusions as follows:

"We find that, besides the points already noted, which stamp Damietta as the type of an unclean town, there are the following circumstances to be considered:

"1. The mouth of a river dried up by prolonged drought, with its banks and part of its muddy bed fermented under the sun's action, exposed.

"2. The river carrying along with it, and depositing them at the bend formed by Damietta) thousands of carcasses of animals which it throws up at its edges, to putrefy under the damp heat.

"3. It is at this place that the river receives the outcome of the drains, animal and vegetable refuse, and all sorts of filth which the current can not carry off, being beaten back by the waves of the sea.

"4. The miasmata generated by all this putrefying matter here mixes with the vegetable effluvia rising from the marshes from a soil full of organisms, and from the wide rice-fields which surround the town.

"5. It is the water of this river which supplied all the needs of most of the inhabitants and of more than fifteen thousand persons from various parts of Egypt who assembled at Damietta for eight consecutive days at the fair of Shelkh Abou el Mar. An analysis of this water by the government expert proves it to teem with impurities.

"6. During the eight days of the fair regular orgies were held, exclusively on the flesh of animals who died of bovine typhus and whose skins now fill the store-houses of the town.

"7. It was immediately after the fair that the disease broke out.

"8. The 19th, 20th, and 21st of June were marked here by a sudden rise of temperature.

"9. The epidemic broke out chiefly in the most unhealthy and thickly populated quarter, inhabited by the poor, who drank only the water of the river and canal.

"10. The disease remained for some time localized at Damietta before spreading further, and its spread was invariably in the towns on the river, or carried by sick emigrants from Damietta, as proved by the towns of Port Said, Alexandria, Ismailia and Suez.

"These facts seem to prove that the same conditions, cosmic and hydrotelluric, which are present at the genesis of cholera germs in the Indian delta and on the banks of the Ganges, were accidentally observable this year in the Egyptian delta and on the banks of the Nile."

There is much more of interest in the report, but the above extracts give the pith of it. From personal knowledge of the town of Damietta I am able to vouch for the accuracy of the description of it. As to the remarks on the water supply, they hold good more or less in regard to any town in Egypt. It is probable that Dr. Hunter, on his return from the inspection he is now making, will be able to add further to our knowledge of the cradle from which cholera sprang this year.

A parliamentary paper has been issued containing a report from Surgeon General Hunter to Sir Edward Malet on the cholera epidemic in Egypt. The report, which is dated Cairo, Aug. 6, states that "it is simply an abuse of words to talk of sanitation in connection with Cairo, every sanitary law being grossly set at defiance;" and adds that "conditions for the development and spread of disease in almost every form, epidemic or otherwise, abound. They are here, there, and everywhere present to the sight, smell, and taste." After expressing the opinion that in all essential features the type of the epidemic does not differ from cholera as it is experienced in India, Surgeon General Hunter proceeds:

"It is gratifying to be able to state that the epidemic is on the wane, although still widespread over the country; and the type, as usual in declining epidemics, is much less severe. The number of deaths from this disease reported up to the 31st of July is said to be 12,600. Registration is, however, so defective that this statement must be taken with much reservation. I am inclined to think that it is nearly double this total. The organization of the medical department is in a most primitive condition, and many of its officers are quite incompetent. The latter are broadly accused of being ignorant, and of neglecting their duty through personal fear. That there are many honorable exceptions to this rule I believe; nevertheless the allegations preferred have come to my personal knowledge. In pleasant contrast to this I would observe that the Egyptian soldiers are loud in their gratitude for the devotion displayed by their English officers to their necessities during the present crisis." Dr. Hunter suggests the thorough reorganization of the medical department and the establishment of a sanitary department.

A fashion item says that "swallows now decorate many articles of feminine attire. They appear painted or embroidered on dresses, enamelled on buttons and jewellery, and the real article is seen on bonnets." Heretofore "swallows" have principally decorated the masculine nose, and in some cases have garnished the windows of homes with old hats. The new uses to which they are devoted is a gratifying change.—Norristown Herald.

THE DESIGNS OF FRANCE.

What She has Undertaken.

It must be becoming evident to the French themselves that they have undertaken something more than a promenade, observes the London Times, in a leading editorial, regarding the Tonquin expedition. They were very angry when we warned them that their task would prove troublesome, and tried to persuade them from gratuitously involving themselves in a war which can in no case bring honor or substantial advantage. We venture to think that the more sober and serious among them are already asking themselves whether the game is worth the candle. With a sufficient expenditure of men and money—an expenditure, however, which will probably greatly exceed the original estimates—there is no doubt that France can reduce the Anamese towns one after the other. She will find it, however, a good deal more difficult to break down Anamese opposition in the swamps and temples. Marching through rice swamps within twenty degrees of the equator is work which tells very rapidly on Europeans, not which the Anamese can impose to any extent if they understand their own strength. In spite of the diplomatic explanations in Europe, there seems to be every reason to suppose that they are covertly supported and assisted by the Chinese, and the prevailing temper at Pekin is in favor of even more decided action. If the French ignore the officious Chinese war, they will find their difficulties in Tonquin very seriously increased and prolonged by the material and moral countenance given to their enemies. If, on the other hand, they recognize and openly resent Chinese meddling in the affairs of Tonquin, they would find their present enterprise the mere prelude to a more formidable one. In a war with China, France would no doubt be victorious, but the victory itself would be substantially a defeat. For what are our neighbors running all these risks? Suppose them to have chased the Anamese to their hearts' content and made themselves masters of all these pagoda-breaks and paddy-fields, what are they going to do next? No one even in France can seriously suppose that Frenchmen will go and live in that delectable region. The French do not colonize even when the conditions are much more favorable. They have no aptitude for the work and no pressure at home to force them to undertake it. If Tonquin were as much at their disposal as Algiers they would never have more than official possession. They would send out a staff of officials, who would be followed by sufficient tradesmen to supply them with the nearest attainable imitation Parisian shops, but there the thing would end. Is it worth while for such a result to go through what has already been done, let alone the much greater labors that are probably in store?

The feverish restlessness which the French government has recently displayed can not be limited and guarded exactly as it might wish. To get up a quarrel with the Anamese about some old treaty may be a trifle, but it leads to difficulties with China, and China has so many commercial ties to Europe that any disturbance of her tranquility reacts upon every European exchange. Nothing is more clear than that. If the present quarrel goes beyond a certain not very distant point, our own commercial interests will be seriously menaced. When important affairs are at stake the people of this country know how to submit with as good grace as others to resulting inconvenienced, but they will scarcely regard with patience the disturbance of the east for a mere caprice. Nor does the mischief terminate even with the substantial secondary inconveniences it occasions. Conduct is not exclusively judged in detail; on the contrary, men look for its general tendency and inspiration, which largely modify the view taken of particular acts. The Tonquin expedition does not stand alone, and in dealing with it the world does not forget that it illustrates the recent drift of French policy. It connects itself with the incessant attacks upon this country for no other offence than protecting its obvious interests in Egypt, with the Madagascar expedition with French pretensions on the west coast of Africa, and with the various little asperities of the French Foreign office since the death of Gambetta. The North American Gazette, has just administered a severe and unlooked-for rebuke to the French which has depressed prices upon almost every European bourse. The irritation to which it bears witness can not be explained by the reason assigned, since the French press has upon the whole observed for many years past remarkable moderation in regard to Germany. It is rather the expression of a general impatience of French conduct, which seems to justify itself by alleging an ill-feeling toward Germany, of which there has been no particular manifestation. But there is a yet more important lesson to be drawn from that rather remarkable admonition. It ought to convince the French people that their little expeditions up and down the world do not add in the smallest degree to their consideration and influence in Europe. It is not necessary to adopt any particulary theory of the origin of the remarks of the German semi-official journal. It is sufficient that they have been made, and are of a kind which would hardly be addressed, even under the influence of irritation, to a power regarded as formidable. That is the point which it seems to us Frenchmen should consider. They may make what expeditions they please, but so long as the semi-official German press is permitted to address them in such terms they are widely reminded that they count for very little in Europe. Having reached this point, they may profitably go on to consider whether the best way to regain their position be not to abandon all enterprises that scatter away their strength, and to adopt a policy of reticence and recuiellement.

"Yes," said Fogg, "Dr. Pillroller is a brave man, no doubt, but he carries his bravery too far. He is foolhardy, sir; never saw so rash a man; called him to see Mrs. F. to day, and he actually asked her to let him see her tongue! Fact, sir. I wouldn't have believed any living man would have had courage to meet that tongue of hers."

The original publisher of Uncle Tom's Cabin, Mr. John P. Jewett, believes he could have bought the story for twenty-five dollars, as, while negotiating with Professor Stowe and his wife, the Professor said, "I tell wife that if she can get a good black silk gown, or fifty dollars in money, she had better take it."

PER. CAUSE HOPELESS.

An Interesting Interview with ex-President Prado—He Advises His Countrymen to Fight to the Last.

"The situation is fatal," was Gen. Mariano Ignacio Prado's brief summing up of the condition of affairs in Peru, a country of which he was twice elected president, and from which for the last three years he has been an exile and a wanderer. He is passing a few days in New York on his way to Europe. He has just arrived here from visits to several of the South American states. He was seen at the Sturtevant House by a New York Herald reporter. The general's stock of English is extremely limited, though the few words that escaped him were spoken with excellent accent. The conversation which follows was had in Spanish.

Gen. Prado is a man of medium height, of courteous yet stately presence. He does not look his 57 years. His voice and address are very pleasing, his face is intellectual, his eyes are dark with a settled sadness in them, yet they can gleam and light up with humor. His hair is black, as is his beard, save for a fringe of the frost of time. His manner of speaking is very deliberate, and without that excess of gesture that often characterizes the men of the Latin races. When Chili declared war against Peru Gen. Prado was the Peruvian president. What he thought of the war, what he thinks of Chili, and what of the present situation and prospects of peace will be found in the interview published below. His views are in many respects opposed to those that would pass current here from the news received from time to time. He is, however, for some weeks without mail or private advices, and confessed that he could only pronounce upon the situation from previous knowledge.

"The situation is fatal," was his response to the first question.

"Then there is no hope for Peru?"

"Apparently not."

"No hope of peace?"

"Chili is too exacting. She asks more of Peru than Germany asked of France after the Franco-German war. It is impossible to make peace on such terms."

"What can Peru do?"

"Go on as she has been going—keeping up a desultory warfare."

"Did you hear of the Iglesias treaty?"

"Yes; and he may sign the treaty; but Iglesias is not Peru. He represents nothing but the Chilian interests. He is the creature of Chili, and has no following among the Peruvians. He may construct his cabinets and all the rest of it, but that means nothing. The Peruvians would never accept the terms of such a treaty. Besides indemnity in money, Chili wants Tarapaca, Arica, Tacna, and Moquegua. These provinces represent the wealth and commerce of Peru. Take them away and Peru dies of hunger."

"Has Peru no resources outside of those provinces?"

"None to speak of. To take them is to take all, and Peru can not consent to give them up. It would be equivilent to signing away her life."

"Do you think Chili will be content with no less?"

"It seems not."

"You were present when war was declared?"

"Yes."

"Did you not anticipate war?"

"Never. We were at peace. We were friends, friends—Chili and Peru. The war was a complete surprise to the Peruvians. We had no armies and no armaments. But Chili was prepared for war and had been preparing for years."

"Had been preparing for years, and yet you suspected nothing?"

"Nothing."

"What was Chili's purpose?"

"Just what she accomplished—to crush Peru and seize upon its wealthiest provinces."

"Who was the Chilian Bismarck to conceive this policy?"

"No one man. It was a traditional policy handed down from president to president."

"How and why did you leave Peru, general?"

"After our first disasters I left, with the consent of congress, to come here and go to London, in order to raise resources with which to carry on the war. I was deputed by congress to do this. Behind me I left an established government, with Gen. La Puerta, the vice president in charge. In my absence Pierola created a revolution against me, seized the dictatorship, and the result you see."

"Where is Pierola now?"

"In Paris. But I have no relations of any kind with him."

"Is not Chili anxious to make peace to relieve her armies and evacuate the soil?"

"Yes she is anxious to evacuate, but with Peru in her pocket, by taking off the richest provinces."

"Has Peru any chief at all?"

"She has two—Iglesias, who represents the Chilian interest, and through whom the Chilians treat, and Calderon, who represents the feelings of the people of Peru."

"Calderon is a prisoner in Chili, is he not?"

"Yes, but Monter, the vice president, is left. His headquarters are at Arequipa, whither the Chilians have not yet reached. Montero represents the popular interests."

"And Caceres?"

"Caceres is a good general, but he is without proper equipments and resources. Yes, he was beaten at Huamachuco, but not so hopelessly as has been represented. He retreated, and has gathered his forces around him again.

"A Herald dispatch repeats a story current in Lima that Admiral Lynch has offered a safe conduct to Caceres."

"Ah, indeed. Well, Lynch may have done so; but one thing is very certain, Caceres will not accept his safe conduct."

"What of Bolivia?"

"Bolivia sides with Peru, but not actively. It does nothing."

"Does Peru look anywhere for aid?"

"Nowhere. There was a time when she looked for and expected aid from the United States, and when she was given to understand that such aid would be forthcoming, at least to procure more favorable conditions of peace."

"You allude to the Blair-Hurlbut policy?"

"Yes. That hope failed at a time when better conditions of peace could have been obtained. But now Peru can obtain no conditions at all. She is absolutely at the mercy of Chili."

"Are not the Europeans the chief holders of Peruvian bonds?"

"Yes; the English, the French, the Belgians, and a few in Germany and Spain. But the powers do not care to interfere and mix themselves up with matters on this continent. The policy of the United States stands in the way of such interference."

"Chili collects the revenue, does she not?"

"Everything is in her hands. The commerce, business, and whole life of the country have suffered terribly. And yet the people continue to work and to live when and where they can."

"Would it not be better for them to make peace at any price?"

"They can not make it at the price Chili sets. That means death."

"Suppose peace were made even on the worst conditions, has Peru any statesmen who could help to build her up again?"

"She has men of capacity, but there would be nothing left for them to build up. The people could not live."

"Then what advice do you give your countrymen under the circumstances, general?"

"This," was the reply, with an emphasis approaching solemnity, "if die they must, let them die fighting to the last. It is better to die fighting than to starve. Chili presents no other alternative."

"Are they all good republicans in South America, general?"

"Republicans, yes."

"Then why can't they live at peace together as we do up here? Why are they always fighting?"

The general laughed and shrugged his shoulders.

"Ah! that is their misfortune," he said.

"What causes the constant revolutions?"

"Who can say?"

"Do you think they may possibly have too many generals?"

Gen. Prado threw a keen glance at the reporter, smiled again, nodded his head, and said: "Perhaps so; too many generals."

GARNERED WITTICISMS.

Early English—baby talk.

Brothers-in-law: Lawyers.

The mosquito must quit, oh!

The mosquitoes generally leave summer resorts at the same time the guests do. The 'skeeter is the bird that can keep up with hot procession every time.

An awning over the doorway of a Brooklyn saloon has the word "Fresh" painted on it. At any time during the day may be seen a dude standing under it.

A little girl at Newport, seeing the willow phaetons for the first time, exclaimed: "Why, mamma, everybody rides out in their clothes-baskets here!"

"Yes," said the druggist, "I'm very sorry I gave Mr. Snagg the wrong dose by mistake and he died. He's the second good customer I've robbed myself of in that way this year."

In front of a colored woman's cottage in Hackensack stands a pear tree on which is nailed a shingle bearing the following legend written in pencil: "Fife dollus fine, whoevur shalks dis tree."

"Don't you forget," exclaimed a man arising during a discussion, "that I lay over he deck." "Do you mean that you can whip me?" replied a long-haired Arkansas man, also arising. "No, sir," said the first speaker. "Then what do you mean when you say you lay over the deck?" "I mean that I am a steamboatman, and sleep in the pilot-house."

Chorus of excited boys: "Then the lightning struck you?" Skipper (indifferently): "Oh, yes, I was leanin' again the mainmast when it struck it." Excited boys: "Didn't it kill you?" Skipper (more indifferently): "Wal, no; it all ran down my back." Excited boys: "And what did you do then?" Skipper (most indifferently): "I had to haul off my boots and pour the lightning out on the deck."

"I brought my aunt inter the city to-day to show 'er round," said a rustic to a Boston police officer, "and she's got kinder tired walkin', so I wanter find some place where she kin sit down an' rest a bit and have a bite of suthing to eat. Kin yer direct me to any place?" "Certainly," responded the representative of Boston's æsthetic and literary police force. "What you want is a rest your aunt. Go right into that eating-saloon." The pair went in.

When the stranger remarked that he was from Arkansas, one of the passengers suddenly turned and asked: "You are, eh? maybe you are from Crittenden county?" "I am that." "Perhaps from James' Landing?" That's it, exactly." "Then maybe you know my brother, William Henry Jones, from Penn Yang, this State?" "Stranger, put it thar!" exclaimed the Arkansas traveller, as he extended his hand and smiled all over. "Bust my buttons if I didn't help hang your brother for cattle-stealing just before I left home."

Anecdote of Napoleon Bonaparte.

When this daring and ambitious soldier was about to invade Russia, a person who had endeavored to dissuade him from his purpose, finding he could not prevail, quoted to him the proverb, "Man proposes, but God disposes," to which he indignantly replied, "I dispose as well as propose." A Christian woman, on hearing the impious boast, remarked, "I set that down as the turning point of Bonaparte's fortunes. God will not suffer a creature with impunity thus to usurp his prerogative." It happened to Bonaparte just as it was predicted. His invasion of Russia was the commencement of his downfall.

A Good Friend to the Chinese.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Consul A. F. Bee, of the Chinese Consulate Office, expresses himself clearly in saying that he, as well as his family have suffered severely from rheumatism and neuralgia, and that medicines were used in vain. At last St. Jacobs Oil was tried, which effected immediate cures in every case. The Consul regards the Oil as the greatest pain curing remedy in existence.

An English gentleman named Preston has marked his gratitude for rescue from wreck in his yacht by giving a lifeboat to a Cornish town.

"Golden Medical Discovery" is not only a sovereign remedy for consumption, but also for consumptive night-sweats, bronchitis, coughs, influenza, spitting of blood, weak lungs, shortness of breath, and kindred affections of the throat and chest. By druggists.

A high-toned affair: The dinner bell at a mountain hotel.

BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

are made pallid and unattractive by functional irregularities, which Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" will infallibly cure. Thousands of testimonials. By druggists.

Young Fastboy says the first girl he ever waltzed with was all the whirled to him.

Dr. Pierce's "Pellets"—little liver pills (sugar-coated)—purify the blood, speedily correct all disorders of the liver, stomach, and bowels. By druggists.

One reason why more people don't go to the Yellowstone is because it takes too many yellow stones to get there.

The Triangle Package Dyes have won their way to public favor, solely on their own merits, and are now to be found in every section of the country. 30 colors. All perfect. 10 cents.

New York clubs are famous all over the world.—New York Exchange. More especially those in the hands of the police.

From Mr. EDWARD MITCHELL, Manager of the Bank of Commerce, Hamilton, Ont.

Hamilton, January 18th, 1883.

J. N. SUTHERLAND, St. Catharines.

My Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your favor of yesterday's date, asking my experience with regard to RHEUMATINE and I have no hesitation whatever in pronouncing it a success in my case, and in heartily recommending the remedy to those suffering from Rheumatism. I suffered for months with that trouble in my right arm and shoulder, and often was unable to use my hand, and at night the pain was frequently so great as to render sleep an impossibility. I must confess that I entertained a repugnance to "patent" medicines, but some of my friends persuaded me to try "Rheumatine," and although it may be true that I might have got well without it, one thing I do know, that after taking four bottles the pain took its departure, and I have now the full use of my arm. I heartily wish you unbounded success, as I fully believe your remedy is all that you advertise it to be.

I am, my dear sir, yours most truly,

E. MITCHELL.

A Philadelphia girl dropped her shoe out of a window and killed a mule.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

Fashionable ladies like to get a "new wrinkle," but they don't want to show it on the forehead.

True merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increasing sales; as a prominent druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits." It is the grand specific for diseases of Blood, Liver and Kidneys. 25,000 bottles have been sold, during the last three months. (34)

Boston girls never giggle. They merely express their delight by a dreamy, far away, north-pole smile.

There is no remedy known to medical science that is more positive in its effect, to cure Cholera Morbus, Colic, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cholera Infantum, and all Bowel Complaints than Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. (35)

The Vassar girls talk of getting up a rowing club. Vassarty eight would prove an attractive feature of a college boat-race.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-st. West, Toronto, Canada.

Nitro-glycerine is now frequently used as a medicine, under the name of glonoine.

C. S. Judson, Wallaceburg, says Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, for Summer Complaints is a splendid preparation, and I do not know of a single case in which it has not given satisfaction, but on the contrary have had many testimonials to its efficacy. (32)

Matrimony is said to be a lottery, but to the hour of going to press no law has been enacted prohibiting the use of the males.

It is a fact that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has more well-earned testimonials of praise for its virtues in curing Cholera, Colic, Cholera Infantum, Dysentery, etc., than all other remedies of that class combined. It will stand investigation. (36)

An excited crean of the cremationists declares that the Undertakers' union has been running the thing into the ground long enough.

Age should always command respect. In the case of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry it certainly does, for 25 years that has been the standard remedy with the people, for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Colic and all Bowel Complaints. (33)

A fashion item says that "$300 worth of lace can be put on a flimy dress without looking loaded." It is to be presumed they go off easily.

HOW THEY DO IT.—So-called respectable people would hesitate considerably before pilfering your pockets in a crowded thoroughfare. That would be too too. The same discrimination is not indicated by the so-called respectable druggist when that wonderful corn cure, PUTNAM'S CORN EXTRACTOR, is asked for. Watch for these gentlemen, and take none other than Putnam's Corn Extractor. Sold by druggists everywhere. N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, proprietors.

J. E. Kennedy, dispensing chemist, Cobourg, says that no blood purifier that he has ever handled has had such a large sale as Burdock Blood Bitters, and adds, "in no case have I heard a customer say ought but words of highest praise for its remedial qualities. (31)

A Maine girl didn't want a lover to name a boat after her, because she didn't desire to read in the papers that "Matilda Slocum is up for repairs," "Matilda Slocum is on the dock to be scraped," etc.

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of imposters, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,

Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

A GENEROUS PUBLISHER

A LADY'S FINE HUNTING-CASE SILVER WATCH FREE.

The publisher of TRUTH, the well-known weekly magazine, offers among his other premiums, a Lady's valuable Silver Hunting Case Watch FREE to any one telling him which is the longest verse in the Bible by the 7th of November next. Should more than one correct answer be given, the second in order received will get a handsome solid gold gem ring. Should more than two be given, a neat English neck chain will be presented to the sender of the third correct answer in order received. To the fourth will be given a silver-plated butter knife. Not more than the four prizes are offered. So if you want to secure one of them be as prompt as possible in sending in your answer. The conditions attached are that every competitor must send FIFTY CENTS and this advertisement with their answer, for which they will receive every week for three months Truth, a 28-page WEEKLY Magazine, containing in each issue 2 full size pages of newest music, either vocal or instrumental; two or three very fascinating serial stories; a short story; short, pointed, pithy editorial paragraphs on all the leading events of the week; beautiful illustrations of the latest English and American fashions with full letter press descriptions; a Young Folks' Department; Health Department; Ladies' Department; Temperance Department; Sport Department; besides a lot of Miscellaneous reading, and altogether just the paper to interest every member of the family. To say nothing about the probability of your getting the watch, the gem ring, the neck chain, or the silver-plated butter knife, you will find you have secured a prize in getting Truth for three months. So don't delay sending your answer and half dollar with this advertisement, and secure one of the prizes offered. Address S. FRANK WILSON, publisher Truth, Toronto, Ont.

☞ Sample copies of Truth sent for five cents. In the last issue of Truth for November will be published the names and address of the successful prize winners.

WANTED A FIRST-CLASS BREAD AND Cake Baker with the view of selling or renting to him. A steady young man can do a good business and the rent moderate to the right man. Apply to WILLIAM WALKER Box 171, Lucknow.

DO NOT ALLOW YOUR CHILDREN TO grow up deformed or crippled, but call and examine our appliances for the treatment of Club Feet, and Diseases of the Spine, Hip, Knee and Ankle. Remember the world is progressing, and more can be done to-day than at any former period. We also manufacture Artificial Limbs, Trusses, and appliances for the relief and cure of all kinds of deformities. Will show at Toronto, Guelph and London Exhibitions. AUTHORS & COX, 91 Church St., Toronto.

BLACKSMITHS' BELLOWS, ANVILS, VICES, PORTABLE FORGES, BABBET METAL

The Largest Assortment in the Dominion

WILLIAM DARLING & CO.,

HARDWARE MERCHANTS,

MONTREAL, P. Q.

THE GREAT CURE FOR

RHEUMATISM

And all complaints of a Rheumatic nature,

RHEUMATINE is not a sovereign remedy for "all the ills that flesh is heir to," but for NEURALGIA, SCIATICA, RHEUMATISM, and complaints of Rheumatic nature.

IT IS A SURE CURE

Sold by all druggists. The Rheumatine Manufacturing Co., Niagara Falls, Ont. Messrs. Northrop & Lyman, Wholesale Agts., Toronto.

The STANDARD the balance of the year for 25 cents. All the local show fair prize lists will be given. Send along the quarters at once.

The Standard.

MARKDALE, SEPT. 20TH, 1883.

INCORPORATION.

In reply to progressive citizens letter in another column we beg to say, some of the questions asked will be somewhat difficult to answer, however all we can do is to give such information on the subject as we are in possession of. In reply to questions:

First, the number of population necessary to incorporate a village is 750. Second, The amount of Township rate paid by Markdale village in 1882 was $241.10. Third, the amount paid in licenses, tavern and shop, was $340, of this $140 remains in the municipilaties in which they are situated making a total of $381.10, this of course is independent of County rates, general and special school and other rates which would not be affected by incorporation. Fourth, The amount necessary to carry on municipal government is difficult to estimate, it is not customary to pay a village council for their services, and a small sum would pay for the services of Clerk and Treasurer so that $100 a year would be a liberal estimate for ordinary circumstances leaving a balance of $280 a year in the village treasury, or for improvements. We believe the great drawback to incorporated villages in the past has been due to the ruinous system of giving large bonuses for the establishment of various industries or competing railways, but we are of opinion that the bonus system is to a great extent a thing of the past, so mote it be.

THE BRAKES WANTED.

The Flesherton Advance is creating for itself an unenviable notoriety for personalities and scandalous correspondence. Last week its readers were treated to a most vindicative and uncalled for communication over a fictitious name which has naturally started its respectable readers with surprise and fear at its evil influence in their families. We hope to see our contemporary take a higher moral stand in future.

From the Rockies.

We glean the following from a letter to his wife, dated the 27th of Aug from Mr. John Rowe, of Vandeleur, Artemesia, who is working on the C. P. R., at the Rocky Mountains. We are nearly 40 miles in the Rockies, which are seven thousand feet high at the entrance, and the top always covered with snow the year round. The weather here is very warm during the day time but there is frost every night sufficient to create ice on water in a pail, on the 21st of August when we arose the ground was covered with snow, yet strange to say everything is quite green. Those who have been up here a number of years say grain does not come to maturity more than one year in five. I was much dissapointed in the country, on the way here, there is about four hundred miles of desert, not even a tree to be seen, rolling hills with sage brush and no appearance of animal life, not even a rabbit. Dont sell the farm.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR.—I have been watching each issue of the paper recently expecting to see some of our property holders express their opinion through its columns in reference to incorporation.

For my own part I must plead ignorance in those matters, and will proceed to ask a few questions which if answered by yourself or any other ratepayer who may be in possession of the correct answers. will no doubt be of interest, and enable us more intelligently to consider this very important question.

First, what population is required to incorporate a village? Second, what amount is now paid in taxes, that would remain in our own treasury for municipal purposes, were we incorporated? Third, what amount is there paid in licenses? Fourth, what would be a reasonable appropriation for Municipal Government?

In the event of the amount saved in taxes and licences being sufficient to cover the expenses of municipal government, I would certainly favor incorporation at once, the only fear is the rise in taxes and I would ask the question, what is going to raise them. If we desire any improvements as we are, our trustees have to levy a special rate on the village to pay for it, while the municipalities of which we form a part use our township rate, it may be to our advantage or not, just as they feel disposed. Then there is nothing to fear in the direction of increased taxation except extravagance on the part of the Village Council and I think we have sufficient knowledge of the ratepayers of the village of Markdale to dispel any fear on that point. Hoping I have not trespassed on your valuable space, I wait for further information.

PROGRESSIVE CITIZEN.

Mr. Editor.

I am amazed the Sons of Temperence did not have a membership of three hundred instead of thirty in this village when fictitious names swell the list as it is.

I wish it to be distinctly understood I am no member of that order, and consider it a great piece of presumption to have had my name attached to the list of officers without my consent or knowledge, not being present at the meeting at all

MRS. WM. BROWN.

Sept. 14, 1883.

For the Standard.

Wives, take Warning.

Many a woman has lost her husband's love and all influence over him by trying to rule him, and by showing him, at some incautious moment, that she was endeavouring to do so. a man who is worth anything never allows himself to be commanded or managed, and we might as well make up our minds to do that at once.

It is only a contemptable little sneak who will calmly sit down with a "just as you please, my dear," when he has an opinion of his own.

And when a fine man gives a woman her own way, it is simply because it is his wish to please her and make her happy.

If he is really manly, he has no desire to have everything as he likes. He prefers that the household affairs shall be his wife's business. He believes her judgment excellent in many things, as it often is. Sometimes many of his ideas will change as he lives with a good woman; his moral tone will grow higher; his ideas more delicate. She will get some of his strength; he some of her sweetness; but domineering is a great mistake, and when, with the idea that his adoration of her charms is so great that nothing can weaken them, the newmade wife forbids her husband his accustomed cigar or pipe, commands him not to smoke in the parlor—which is his as well as hers; desires him never to invite that disagreeable young man again, or perhaps orders his mustache off, she has only herself to thank if he adds a bowl to his pipe and smokes it in a bar-room, instead of inviting his friend home, goes out with him and stays until the small hours, and instead of shaving his mustache cultivates a full and bristly beard. Therefore, let wives take warning, play second fiddle meekly, and get their powers by degrees and by gentle means, using smiles instead of frowns, and remembering the fable of the wind, the sun and the traveller's cloak which he only wrapped closer about him when the first blew fierce and cold and bitter, but took off of his own accord when the sun warmed him. So, majestic man, sure that he is doing it of his own accord, drops the mantle of authority from his shoulders to please a gentle, bright faced little woman who never ventures to domineer, while he wraps himself gloomily in its folds when an amazon it commands. Not only is it pleasantest, my dear, not to try to rule, but it is much the best policy.

DUX.

For the Standard.

The Influence of the Temperaments in Education.

In educating children, it is of the utmost importance to take into consideration the influence of the Temperament.

If the nervous temperament predominate, the child is delighted to learn. he will be constantly at his books; he is intelligent and shows such an intensity of feeling that he twines himself round the affections of his parents, who are in raptures at his astonishing progress, and urge him on his course, ignorant of the almost inevitable result. The nervous energies being drawn to the brain, the digestion system suffers most materially, and while by his premature development he stands conspicuously above children of his own age and feeling soon undermines his health, and if not arrested throws him into a premature grave. In such cases, add not to, but keep down the excitement.

When the lungs predominate in a child, and the sanguine temperament, there is a fondness for exercise, the food is heartily eatyn, the sleep sound. Suppose a child of this temperament to be sent to school after a sound sleep and comfortable breakfast. For a time he may be still, but in a while, the craving for muscular exercise will be too strong, he may be pent up but cannot keep quiet, he begins to be fidgety, may receive blows for it, but still he forgets and the blows may be repeated but without effect he continues fidgiting, poking with his elbows, throwing peas, striking his neighbours with his fist and trying in every way to expend this energy. Such children are generally said to be very clever, but to have no liking for books. The usual plan has been to scold such children well and if not quieted by this, as is very unlikely, the scolding is followed by a flogging, which is generally as inefficacious. The object should be to remove the causes of the evil. Let us attend to nature, give such chilan opportunity of expending their muscular energy, and then they will be delighted with mental activity.

The fibrons (generally but improperly termed the bilious) temperament is distinguished by black hair, dark skin, moderate fulness and much firmness of the flesh, with harshly expressed outline of the person. It gives energy and power of continuing long in action to the bodily organs, which extends to the brain. The effects of it are great powers of sustained action, mental or corporal corresponding to the quality expressed by the word "bottom," when applied to hoases.

Some children are of the lymphatic temperament. These are slow to learn and indisposed of activity. The remedial plan has been to flog them continually. A much better plan is to study their constitution, and regulate our treatment accordingly. To give such children a moderate supply of nutritious diet—animal, rather than vegetable—and let them have plenty of muscular excercise in the open air, by this means you diminish the lymphatic, and increase the sanguine and nervous elements of the constitution.

The different temperaments are rarely found pure. The common mixtures are the sanguine-lymphatic, the nervous-lymphatic, and the nervous bilious.

I beg to call the attention of teachers to the fact that, in a great many of our schools the method used to correct the defects of organization and temperament has been to flog and shame the child that needed improvement; one of the most gross instances of the application of brute force for the accomplishment of that in which attention to the laws of the constitution can alone be successful. It follows, from what I have said, that no rule can be laid down applicable to all cases. Speeific differences must be closely attended to in the business of education.

DUX.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.90 to $0.92; Spring $0.98 to $0 98; Barley, 50c; Peas, 65; Oats, 37c Butter, 14c; Eggs, 15c; Potatoes, 45c; Hay, $6 .00; Pork, 7.50 to 7.75; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20.

FLESHERTON MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.90 to $0.93; Spring, $0.95 to $0.97; Barley, 57c; Peas, 69c; Oats, 37c Butter, 14c; Eggs, 14c; Potatoes.40 c; Hay, $6 .00 Pork, $7.45 to $7.60

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $.0.97 to $0.98; Spring, $1.05 to $1.08; Barley, 55c to 73c; Oats, 45c to 50c Peas, 70c to 78c; Hogs, $8.00 to $8.25; Potatoes, per bag, 70c to 75c; Butter, dairy, 17c to 20c; eggs, 20c to 21c.

A CARD.

To all who are suffering from the errors and indiscretions of youth, nervous weakness, early decay, loss of manhood, &c., I will send a receipe that will cure you, FREE OF CHARGE. This great Remedy was discovered by a missionary in South America. Send a self-addressed envelope to REV. JOSEPH T. INMAN, Station D, New York City.

Get your Job Workdone at this office.

MARKDALE EXCITED

THE EXCITEMENT AT THE CORNER OF MILL & ARGYLE STREETS, STILL PREVAILS.

TRIMBLE & WRIGHT having re-leased the premises they now occupy, have just opened the largest assortment of Fall and winter goods ever shown in MARKDALE or vicinity.

LADIES.

For the ladies we have NEW Costume Cloths, all shades, NEW Black Cashmeres, NEW Colored Cashmeres, NEW Dress Goods from 10cts per yard upwards, new fall Prints, new Wincies, new Wraps, new Shrwls, new circulars, new Underwear, new knitted and quilted Skirts, new Hoop Skirts, new Bustles. new Silks, new Satins, new Fringes, new Frills, new Ribbons, new Collars, new Boots, Shoes & Slippers in the half sizes, round and box toes, &c.

GENTS.

For the Gents we have the newest patterns in Scotch, English, American and Canadian Tweeds made to order on the shortest notice by either Tailors. A new and large stock of ready-made clothing, new oil cloth coats, white shirts, colored shirts, hats, caps, cuffs. collars, ties, hose braces boots and shoes, &c.

BOYS.

For the boy's we have the largest assortment of ready-made clothing in the market as well as an endless variety of hats, caps, ties, collars, hose, boots & shoes, underclothing &c.

GIRLS.

For the girls we have anything and everything calculated to make them comfortable, pleasant, happy, and attractive.

BABIES.

Don't forget the babies, we have just opened a large assortment of new Wool Hoods, new Bootees, new Leggins new Infantees, new Hose, new Bibbs, new Waists, new Wool Scarfs, new Boots, New Shoes.

We have added to our immense stock $2,000, two thousand dollars worth of choice Jewellery consisting of Watches, Clocks, Gold and Silver Chains, Lockets ear ring sets, wedding rings and in fact more than is kept in a well regulated Jewellery store and prices that touch the bottom.

Our GROCERIE Department is full to the TOP.

Our dress goods department is above the usual standard and we would advise all lovers of novelties and new things generally, to reserve their purchases until they have visited our store.

We also carry a large and well assorted stock of imported and canadian staples, linnen goods of every description, our stock is all fresh, and on inspecting it we feel sure you will pronounce it all through, Very Choice, good taste and judgment having been displayed in selection as to styles, colours and values.

TRIMBLE & WRIGHT.

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK,

DressStuffsTweeds
Dress stuffs in all the latest ades, varying in price from cents up.
Tweeds in English, Scotch d Canadian, in the newest d most fashionable styles.

Groceries.
Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.
Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.
Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.
Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.
A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN

ssrs. DOLL & BROWN

THE PEOPLES JEWELLERS OF

ARKDALE & CHATSWOSTH,

RE AWAY AHEAD

When in town do not fail to l and see their immense w stock.

THEY have the ONLY OOD stock in this section Country. THEY buy for ASH, IMPORT Direct, d are not FRESH at the siness. Brown's Watch repairing is giving ocal and Other Items.

IRST CLASS SATISFACTION.

tices in these columns intended to benefit individual or Society will be charged ten a line for the first insertion and five a line each subsequent insertion.

on't fail to visit the fair here next ursday and Friday.

We" of the STANDARD, were at the nto Exhibition this week.

Dye Stuffs of all kinds at the ical Hall, A. Turner & Co.

large number from hear visited exhibition this week in Toronto.

e the exhibit of our photographic t, Mr. Jas. Hamilton, at the exhib-

When visiting the exhibition here week, call and subscribe for the ANDARD.

here will be service in Christ n. Markdale, Sunday morning at 10:30.

large assortment of motto and frames just arrived at Hamilton's tograph gallery.

r. G. L. Dodds, of Regina, N. W. will please accept our thanks for y of the Leader from that place.

r. Wm. Sargent's "Patent Load er," is taking immensely at the nto Exhibition. He will exhibit week at the Provincial, Guelph.

e are selling the balance of our mer stock of prints, dress goods, meres, etc., at enormously low es. C. Reynolds & Son.

M LAMBS FOR SALE.—A choice lot uth Down grade ram lambs for at H D Irwin's and Thos. Irwin's rt distance East of Markdale.

ynolds & Son have one of the and largest assortments of boots shoes in Markdale, and at prices astonish the people. Don't fail them.

e regret to learn that the grain in Proton, has been very seriously maged by the recent frost. Melon and Amaranth are said to be e better.

You are sick take Rejuvenator s to make you well, and if you ell take the Bitters to keep you sold by Smith, the barber, and continually selling them.

r subscribers will bear in mind the subscription to the STANDARD 00, only when paid in advance hin the first three months, otherwise $1.25 will be charged.

e entertainment held in the ce Valley school house on Friday ng last, under the auspices of the of Hope Lodge was well attended and an interesting programme gone n, the actors were all amateurs d themselves no discredit. The "The first glass and what it led was well played though somewhat ly. The entertainment was on hole a success.

Rejuviuator is the best bitters known for Foul Stomach, Kidney diseases, Liver and female weekness, only 25cts per package which will make half a gallon of the best bitters known, sold by Smith, the barber.

Shanahan's Carriage works is still improving, he has manufactured and sold more wheel rigs this season than any other one manufacturer in the County, which is a proof that his work gives good satisfaction.

The East Grey Agricultural exhibition takes place at Flesherton on Tuesday and Wednesday Oct. 2nd and 3rd. The society is to be congratulated on the good prizes offered and the handsome bill they have issued.

So far the weather has been exceedingly fine and the railway rates being very reasonable, large numbers have availed themselves of the opportunity of visiting the exhibition at Toronto. Twenty-five thousand are said to have arrived there on Tuesday.

BAZAAR, DINNER AND CONCERT.—The Ladies of Presbyterian Church, will hold a bazaar and dinner at the entrance of the Agricultural grounds on Friday 28th Sept., dinner 20cts. Concert in evening in Presbyterian Church (hall not obtainable,) admission 20cts.

Messrs. Grant & Co. are pushing the work of fitting up their sash, door and furniture factory. A well has been sunk and the engine and boiler placed, and at present the shafting and machinery is being put up. They expect to be running by the first of next week.

Mr. William Shepperdson, of Euphrasia, has been improving his stock by adding ten pure bred Cotswolds and two Oxford Downs, as he intends being in full force at the shows. Farmers wishing to improve their stock will do well to call on him as he is offering them for sale.

JOURNALISTIC CURIOSITY.—We are in receipt of copies of the New York Sun of Sept. 3rd 1883, and Sept. 3rd 1833, being the first copy of the paper which has now attained the ripe age of 50 years. The story of the rise and progress of the Sun from 1833, with a circulation of 500 subscribers, to its present immense circulation of a million copies a week is very interesting, The size of the first issue of the Sun is just about ½ the size of the Standard.

A TRAIN ROBBERY.—When the Toronto Grey, & Bruce cashier attempted to open the box containing the remittance from the way stations last Friday, he found that the lock had been tempered with. An examination proved that thieves had opened the box with a "jimmy" and had stolen $364 therefrom. The box was in charge of the baggageman. who had also to attend to the switching of trains and while he was outside of his car attending to his other duties the thieves are supposed to have opened the box and carried off the money,

A STRIKE.—A number of laborers were employed on Tuesday in loading the propellor Enterprise, getting paid 25c. an hour, but at noon they struck and refused to go on unless they got 35c. Mr. Maughan, the purser, promptly paid them off and engaged a number of colored men to go on with the work. The strikers did not expect to see their places so promptly filled, and came back threatening to prevent the colored men from working; but the Chief coming up with his forces the invaders retreated, leaving the colored men in possession of the ship.—O. S. Times.

Second Fastest Train in the World.

The Canada Atlantic railway is now running from Cotean to Ottawa, the second fastest train in the world, if allowance be made for stops. With allowauce for stops, the rate is 52½ miles per hour without allowance 50 miles per hour. The fastest train in the world is the Flying Dutchman, running from London to Britol, at 59⅛ miles an hour,

Personals.

Mrs. McKenzie, of Kansas, U.S.A., was the guest of Mrs. Turner last week.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. McFarland, and family, left on Friday last for Belleville, where they will spend a few weeks.

Mr. R. H. Byers, Rochester, N.Y., will please accept thanks for remittance of $1, being subscription to the STANDARD for 1884.

Dr. Armstrong returned last week.

Mr. Bowes returned from the General Conference, on Friday last.

Rev. D. C. McDowell, of Flesherton, Chairman of the District, has been seriously ill the past three weeks. We are glad to learn, however, that he is recovering and is now able to be about.

We had a call from the Reeve of Glenelg last Saturday.

Rev. Mr. Ward returned yesterday, from his trip to England.

What They are Saying.

People will talk, you know—Jim.

Who cares?—J. L.

That team takes the bun—Dan.

The old gray nag got left—Jimmy.

The STANDARD is improving—The public.

I'd sooner bake than harvest any day—Jim.

We're going to keep quiet in church, now—The small boys.

We copy the following from one of the many testimonials D. J. Shanahan has secured from his customers.

Sheguendiah, Manitoulin Island Aug. 31, 1883.—Dear Sir—The buggy you shipped me came to hand to-day almost without a scratch. I must say it is much stronger and much better than I expected as for the painting and trimming, and in every particular it displays the finest workmanship that I have seen since I came to this Island, the only fault that we can find with the buggy is that it is altogether too nice for our roads.—M. L. MCGRATH.

BIRTHS.

DOUGLASS—On the 9th inst., the wife of Mr. D. Douglass, Dundalk, of twins both girls.

DIED

FLEMING—In Markdale, on the 16th inst., Laura Edna, infant daughter of Mr. Wm. Fleming, aged 8 months and 10 days.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

STRAYED.

Came to my premises about the 1st Sept., a litter of spring pigs, three black and one white. The owner is requested to prove property, pay expenses and take them away.

DONALD MCDUFFIE.

Glenelg, Sept. 17, 1883. 158-60

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NTH.			GOING SOUTH
Read Down.			Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	TORONTO	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	CARDWELL JUNC.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	ORANGEVILLE...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	MOUNT FOREST..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	TEESWATER	5 00	2 45
11 50	8 30	FLESHERTON	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	MARKDALE,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	OWEN SOUND....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. MCNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE, General Manager

New FALL Importations

——arriving daily at——

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats. Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in a the latest sty es.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

☞ This Lecture should be in the hands o every youth and every man in the land.

Address

The Culverwell Medical Co,.

P.O. box 450 41 Ann St., New York

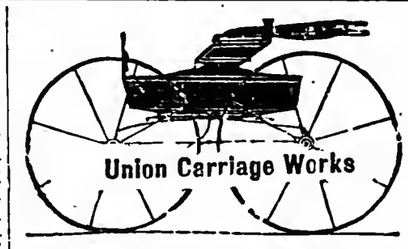
110-62.

FOR SALE.

LOT 3, GEORGE ST. SOUTH, MARKDALE, containing a fifth of an acre. Will be sold at a Bargain. The owner will be at the Markdale House, on the 24 th September. For further particulars apply to WM. MCCUTCHEON, Markdale P. O., or to C. W. RUTLEDGE, at the STANDARD Office.

Farm for Sale.



50 ACRES, being lot 74, 3rd West of T. & S. R, Holland, four miles from Markdale, 20 acres cleared, well fenced and watered, balance good hardwood bush, with sufficient cedar for fencing.

For terms and other particulars apply to

WM. ROWE,

on the Premises.

Berkeley P. O., July 3rd, 1883. *41

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from

FIRST CLASS MATERIAL

In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with

English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs

will receive prompt attention.

All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time consistent with good workmanship.

GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.

Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside.

D. J. SHANAHAN,

Proprietor

Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and Positively cures Piles. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by A. Turner & Co

Advertise in the STANDARD.

EARTHQUAKE HORRORS.

Graphic Story of a Survivor at Casamicciola—Miraculous Escape—A Thrilling Experience.

A Boston woman who escaped as if by miracle from the earthquake at Casamicciola writes the following account to her friends in that city. For personal reason, the name of her husband is changed to John. Parts of the epistle are as follows:

It is more than a week since I wrote my last letter, which has without doubt filled you with sad apprehensions, and I feel that I ought not to leave you longer without news of me. Still, I hardly feel able to write, for I feel stupefied by this dreadful event. I have hardly the courage to revive in my mind its horrors by repeating them, or, rather, by attempting to repeat them. I doubt if I shall ever be able to make you understand how terrible it was till I have seen you, and, perhaps, not then, for an earthquake is one of those things that battle description.

We had been in Casamicciola six days, arriving there on Monday, and on Saturday evening, the 28th of July, at 9.30, was the catastrophe. Saturday morning, when I awoke, I did not feel quite well. I had a nervous headache. The weather was beautiful—so beautiful that everyone remarked it. The air was so clear and transparent and so light that sounds that came up to us from the valley below seemed changed into notes of music. Many times that morning I went to the balcony and looked around on that lovely scene and wished you could see this beautiful place. My head continued to ache, and after breakfast, at 12 o'clock, I had to give up and go to bed. I remained there till 3. Then I got up, but did not dress myself, saying I did not feel able to go to dinner. It was this indisposition of mine which saved our lives. John, who was suffering with toothache, was glad enough to join me in our little parlor that looked over the beautiful valley toward the mountains. We dined at half-past 6. Then I walked up and down the piazza in front of our windows, John reading his papers. Everybody was in the dining-room dining. The dinner was at half-past 7. There was to be music in the parlors, and everyone was gay and gayly dressed. When the first sounds of music came up I felt lonely and wished that I had gone down, notwithstanding my headache. If I had, I should not be writing you this sad story, for all that gay company were killed.

When the night came on, John called me to come in, fearing the evening air. It was then almost 9. I said I felt so ill I should go to bed. He begged me not to go so early, saying the night would be so long and tedious. He said he would play a few games of tricks first. We accordingly sat down on the sofa in front of the chimney, taking the board on our knees, and began the game. We played through the half hour that brought us to the terrible moment, to us, reaching out with his terrible arms towards us, and preparing to fold in his cold embrace almost everybody about us. I can never tell you what followed.

LITTLE THINKING THAT DEATH WAS SO NEAR

It commenced like the most terrible thunder. Then everything swayed backward and forward, as if swayed by the wind. Walls fell in with a crash like ten thousand thunders. The mountains opened, sending forth flames of fire, rolling down with the tumbling houses toward the valley, while the valley in its turn exploded, sending everything into chaos. Not one house was left standing. In the midst of this dreadful noise wild shrieks; then came darkness and the silence of the grave. The noise lasted only a few seconds, and the silence a few more, which seemed an eternity. Then the smoke began to clear away, and the terrible cries of the wounded and dying filled the air as if truly coming from the bowels of the earth. Oh, how little this gives you an idea of what passed. When the sound first began John knew what it was, and said: "Great God, an earthquake." With one bound we reached the window-way, it being considered the safest place, which proved true. Had we remained sitting we should have been instantly killed. A falling wall enveloped the sofa where we sat. The whole world seemed dissolving around me. I had no hope of life from the first sound, and I turned my thoughts heavenward. It was not till I heard the dreadful cries of the wounded and dying that I trembled with fear thinking of the suffering which my poor body might endure before I should reach the other side. But I did not lose courage, and prayed for strength to help me through. Heaven did not seem very far off.

After the shock John said: "We will try and save ourselves out of this rain, before the repetition shall come." (There are always three shocks in an earthquake.)

THE DARKNESS WAS STILL SO GREAT

that we could not see whether the floor had been carried away, or whether the wall where we were standing alone remained. We must find a light. John remembered that there were matches on a little table near, and so, feeling with his feet, he took a few steps into the room and found them, lighted one, and with its flickering light we looked about us. The parlor where we had been was mostly destroyed. The bedroom was still standing, although torn and separating into a thousand pieces. The floor was apparently good. We entered cautiously, took a shawl for me and a coat for him, and a package of candles to give us the light necessary for finding our way out of this destruction. We went out by the window where we had stood on to the piazza, which was also partially destroyed.

This piazza was on the second story with a flight of stairs on each end leading to the piazza below. We turned to the left, it being a little nearer that way, but soon found our way cut off. All was in ruin, and from that ruin came a voice calling to us in English: "Save me; I am dying." It was an American girl, a Miss Van Allen, who was there for treatment of the rheumatism. I had to answer back over that terrible gulf: "We can not reach you." She died. We turned back, passing our windows, then on to the other end of the piazza. There also was ruin, only a portion of the stairs remained standing, and that portion ready to fall. But it was our only way out. We passed; how I can not tell.

HANGING ON THE BROKEN FRAGMENTS

and clinging to each other, we at last reached the floor below, where we found, after much difficulty, the door leading to the road. Feeling that here we should be safe, we hurried on, climbing over mountains of stones, and arrived at last outside the door where the space was just large enough for a small carriage to turn around in. We could go no farther. The narrow little road leading around the mountain side to a small opening called Calvary had been carried away, with all the houses on the side of the mountain higher up down into the valley below.

In the darkness, lighted only by the feeble light of the candle, we could see nothing but a dark gulf filled with fallen houses, trees, and rocks, out of which came cries that broke one's heart. On the other side of this space where we were, was a high wall, twenty feet from the road, filled all full of great openings. Behind us was the angle of the hotel which remained standing. On the fourth side the road had opened wide, and to the bottom of this opening no one had courage to look, for it looked like a great grave, ours perhaps. After a little time five others found their way to this place. Half naked, wounded, and suffering they came, but without murmuring, only too thankful for this comparative safety. Cold and trembling we huddled together, embracing each other who were strangers only an hour before, and silently praying. We remained like this till nearly 3 o'clock, five long hours. Then the angle of the hotel took fire and our position became again very dangerous. John said we must make an effort to get across the space that divided us from the little opening called Calvary, of which I have already spoken, feeling sure that there where we were death awaited us. We decided to make the effort. So we left this place, where we had hoped to remain till daylight should aid us to find our way out. The wounded ones had no alternative but to remain. We started, followed by two ladies and a man-servant who carried a candle. Climbing, slipping, falling, clinging, grasping at stones that did not hold but went rolling into the darkness below, at times buried in the soft earth nearly to our middles, we

STRUGGLED FOR LIFE FOR A HALF HOUR.

We arrived at last at this Calvary; Calvary indeed! What a scene, lighted by a great fire made by the fallen trees and the doors of the ruined houses—their houses! Almost stunned, though wounded and fleeing, were children without parents, parents without children, broken, bruised, and bleeding! Oh, it is not possible to describe it! One only of these many scenes would break one's heart to see. I almost wished for a wound or ache that would absorb my mind and prevent my mental agony. But I was without a scratch.

But one touching incident, only one, I will try to tell, because if I should try to tell you all I saw heartrending I should never finish. There was a handsome young man, about 24 or 25 years of age, a peasant, who, when he heard the shock, got his 3 months' old baby in his arms, and with his young wife tried to escape from a falling house. Buried in the debris, but still protecting his baby, he struggled on, leading his wife. At last she fell. A great stone rolled over and buried her. He struggled on, and faint, bruised, and bleeding, reached the place called Calvary, holding in his arms his baby, unhurt, but crying pitifully. During the long hours of that fearful night he tried to console and hush its crying, not thinking once of himself and his bleeding wounds. When I saw him at 3 o'clock he sat by the great fire with it in his arms, swaying backward and forward, singing softly a singing that was by far sadder than any crying. The baby's dear little face and white nightgown were all bathed in the blood that flowed freely from it father's wounds. Worn out at last, the little one slept. He passed it, without a word, into the arms of a poor woman whose husband and seven children had, in that dreadful moment, passed from this world to the other, and whose tearless eyes alone showed the imensity of her agony. The poor young man could not yet feel his bodily pains, but threw himself on the ground, crying: "My wife, my poor wife."

In the midst of this sad group, also seated on the ground, we awaited daylight. Slowly it came, as if it was afraid to open the windows of light on such a dreadful day. We were still a long way from the sea, and had to cross all the ruined town, but by this way alone could we leave the place. With misgivings we left and began the descent. What we went through during this painful march to the sea is impossible to relate—over mountains of stone, over fallen walls, the way strewn with the wounded, dying, and dead. We were four when we left Calvary. The other two were left behind about half way. I have not heard from them since, and they are probably dead. Arriving at the wharf we took the first boat leaving. It was then 6 in the morning, and we reached Naples at half-past 8.

Had a Weak Point.

One of those good, old-fashioned fathers—born and reared on a farm, but willing to see his children live an easier life—came down to "York" the other day to see about getting his son into a bank. He went to a friend and the friend sent him to the cashier, and the cashier said:

"Is your son quick at figures?'

"Tolerably quick."

"Is he ambitious?"

"Yes; he wants to get on."

"Is he a hard worker?"

"Well, Moses kin mow his three acres of grass per day."

"Why does he prefer a bank to a store?"

"I swan! I never asked him why, but I guess it's because he thinks there's a better chance to climb up. Moses is right on the climb."

"He is perfectly honest of course?"

"Well, now, that's the only weak point Moses has got, and I was going to say to you if you took him in that if you keep a wire fence between Moses and any money lying around loose, and if you have a rule agin hoss-trading, and if you don't allow shaking dice or card-playing, and if he will keep sober, Moses will make one of the most tremendous bankers this country ever saw!"—Wall Street News.

Influenced by a temperance leader, a rich English miller has destroyed a cellar of port wine.

It has been discovered by a Boston man that the human body would float like a duck's, were it not for the legs.

How to Make Ideal Tea.

Having been fortunate enough to secure a pound or two of pure, fragrant, unadulterated tea, we must see that it is kept in an air-tight canister. If it be not so kept the tea will lose its crispness and flavor by absorbing moisture to some extent from the surrounding atmosphere and by yielding up its volatile oil.

The tea-kettle should be kept scrupulously clean, both inside and out. We can not expect to make good tea from water boiled in a kettle that is barked inside with lime or other deposit, and outside with soot. A dirty kettle proves the servant to be a slut, and darkly hints at carelessness in the mistress.

The water should be soft. There is nothing to beat rain water that has been kept under ground in large tanks.

The water should be filtered.

The fire over which a tea-kettle boils ought to be as free from smoke as possible, otherwise it is not impossible that the water may partake of the flavor of peat or burning coals and the tea be spoiled.

Before the water has come to the boil the tea-pot should be well-warmed and the tea put in. It may then stand for a short time on the hob until the water boils, when—

The tea should at once be made. We heat the tea-pot in order to conserve all the caloric in the boiling water. We make the tea as soon as the water comes to the boil because good tea can only be made with freshly-boiling water, not boiling water that has been boiled before or has been kept boiling too long. Boiled water is flat because it is nonaerated, that is the "why and the wherefore." Servants want to be drilled to this, or their heads drilled and the truth rammed into them. A worse fault than even this is making tea with water that has gone off the boil, which servants often do.

Carbonate of soda should never be used to draw the tea.

It is best, we think (but we sit subject to contradiction), to pour on all the water that is wanted, for the first cup at all events, at once, and not to merely wet the tea, as it is popularly called.

It is a mistake to add fresh tea to that which has already been made by way of getting stronger, and yet we constantly hear the remark made, "Put a little more tea in the pot." If more tea or stronger tea is wanted, it ought to be made in another tea-pot, and a spare one often comes in handy.

A teapot ought to contain enough tea to go all round the company once, at least; the habit of half-filling all the cups, then adding boiling water and completing the work, is objectionable, not to say stingy.

Urns may be used, and some of them look very nice on the table; but water should be boiling and the urn itself must previously have been well dusted.

What is the best kind of teapot? There is a difference of opinion about this. For our part we like the old-fashioned brown earthenware one, provided it holds enough. Next comes the silver teapot, which some prefer.

White china teapots are also good. But in whatever teapot the tea is made, it ought to be clean and pretty new; an old teapot gets bad in the enamel, or lined with deposit. An old clay pipe, perhaps, but a new teapot!

How long should tea draw? From three minutes to seven, according to the kind of tea and the character of the water.

Invalids and people with delicate stomachs (and everybody else for that matter) ought to be most careful to obtain tea of a superior excellence and quite free from facing and adulteration, and ought to attend rigidly to the plan of making a cup of good tea which we have just been endeavoring to explain. The invalid should never on any account drink green or scented tea. The tea he is to drink, after having been infused for the proper time, say five minutes, should be poured off the leaves into a well-heated, clean teapot, and served in that, covered by the cozy, if there be one about.

"Is that dog mad?" he asked the boy as the animal dashed by. "I reckon he is," replied the boy "I just see a butcher take a piece o' meat away from him and kick him six feet into the air."

Alaska's Burial Customs.

The dead body is laid on logs or sticks of timber raised a couple of feet from the ground and then covered in with other timber and stones, giving the whole structure somewhat the appearance of a square pen or pile, with upright posts or sticks at the angles. On these funeral piles are placed one or more mementoes of the departed, generally some implement or weapon used by the dead man or woman in lifetime; in the case of a hunter, the weapon in the use of which he excelled. Upon one mausoleum I saw a rifle, bidarka, seine, spears, arrows, darts, etc.; and upon the bier of a female was placed a kantag, a wooden bowl or dish used to contain food. Such articles are religiously devoted to this purpose, even though they are all the property left by the deceased. A widow may be in want and a son without a rifle or a seine with which to procure subsistence, but the burial customs of the tribe must not be neglected. These mementoes are never disturbed by the superstitious natives, but, left to bleach and rust through the Arctic seasons, gradually go to decay.

The wooden parts of the funeral pile rot away, leaving the bones of the dead exposed to view, I saw one such case, where the grinning skull looked out between the cracks of its crumbling prison, seeming to invite raids of the bone-sharp. But the bodies of the dead are not always treated with consideration. Sometimes they are rudely thrown out upon the tundra and left to be destroyed by dogs or wolves. A case of this kind occurred near one of the stations near here. An Indian woman died in a tent, and when the Indians were ordered to take the body away they threw it out upon the adjacent tundra and left it as food for birds of the air and beasts of the field.

A.P 143

St. Jacobs Oil

THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY

FOR PAIN.

Relieves and cures RHEUMATISM, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Lumbago, BACKACHE, HEADACHE, TOOTHACHE, SORE THROAT, QUINSY, SWELLINGS, SPRAINS, Soreness, Cuts, Bruises, FROSTBITES, BURNS, SCALDS, And all other bodily aches and pains.

FIFTY CENTS A BOTTLE.

Sold by all Druggists and Dealers. Directions in 11 languages.

The Charles A. Vogeler Co. (Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.) Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

A. B. FLINT

Sells all kinds of Black Silk at Wholesale price. A good Black Silk, wide width, at $1.25. Send cash with order, and express will be paid to any part of Canada.

35 COLBORNE ST.

A. B. FLINT

Sells Black Cashmere at Wholesale Price. Our 50 cent French Blue-Black Cashmere is worth 67½ cents. Send for 8 or 10 yards as sample, and see for yourself.

35 COLBORNE ST.

A. B. FLINT

Sells all Colors in Velveteens. Our 65 cent Black Louis Velveteen is worth 90 cents a yard. Send for a Dress length, and see for yourself. All kinds of Dress Goods kept in stock. You can save $1 a pair on good Lace Curtains, by sending an order to

35 COLBORNE ST.

A. B. FLINT

is the only wholesale man in Canada selling to consumers direct, and cash will be returned if goods are not as represented.

35 COLBORNE ST.

A. B. FLINT, - TORONTO.

200 ACRES OF LAND FOR SALE. Every man has one chance in his life... here it is for some one. Lot 33, con. 11, ... con. 12, township of Howick, on the town ... between Minto and Howick. Terms $1,000 ... $1,500 cash down, balance at 6 per cent on ... to suit purchaser. This is a genuine ... Apply personally or by letter to F. S. ... Clifford P. O., Ont.

AMBER SUGAR CANE MACHINERY.

New Paragon School Desk.

M. BEATTY & SONS, Welland, Ont.

Early Amber Cane Seed imported from ... Southern States. Send for catalogues and ...

CONFIDENTIAL.

THOUSANDS of young Men and Women—marred through the effects of vicious youthful habits, or excesses dulgence in later years, have so undermined their ... as to induce almost every other disease, and the real ... troubles being scarcely ever suspected, they are ... doctored for everything but the right one. THE JERMON ... BINATION REMEDY is offered as a speedy and ... hundreds afflicted with every form of disease have ... to complete health by its use, after all other remedies ... recuperative powers of this medicine are truly ... troubles arising from imprudence, its continued use ... changes the languid, debilitated condition, to one ... and vigour. Forwarded to any address, on receipt of ... Dollars per package—sufficient for one month's ... M. FINDLAY & CO., Box 49 ...

Professor Lispinard's SKIN BEAUTIFIER.

This elegant Medicated Cream is warranted ... Sure Cure for all Pimples, Black ... Blotches and unsightly Eruptions on the ... neck and arms. It positively removes all ... imperfections in a few days, leaving the ... clear and smooth. It will cure the worst ... though all other means have failed. ... beautifying the complexion it is unrivalled. ... It makes the skin soft and white, and removes ... Tan, Freckles, and Sallowness. This is the ... only preparation recommended by physicians ... warranted perfectly harmless and its use ... not be detected. One package last a month. ... Price, ($1) one dollar. Sold by Druggists, ... sent by mail in plain wrapper, post-paid, on ... receipt of price. Sole proprietors for Canada. ... Address,

THE LISPINARD COMPANY, Box 285, St. Catharines, Ont.

The Bolt & Iron Co. OF TORONTO (LIMITED), have REMOVED to their new works, the largest ... on the Continent, the best equipped with ... chinery, manned with the most experienced ... perts, using high quality iron, tested at ... vals, ensuring guarantees of quality.

They invite and hope to see their patrons ... all whom they solicit orders now for their ... and winter wants in Bolts of every kind, Rivets, ... Nuts, Spikes, and Threshing Machine Teeth.

Immediate specifications are the only ... guards to deliveries in time for due ... ments.

Order now, refer to your price list for ... ferent kinds, state distinctly the kinds ... on each order.

When ordering through merchants ask ... these Bolts; take no others, they are the ... made.

MERCHANTS —VISITING— TORONTO are respectfully invited to call and inspect our complete and extensive stock of Staple and Fancy Dry-Goods.

We are offering special inducements in every department.

Customers will be furnished with certificates for return tickets at reduced fare.

Wm. J. McMASTER & Co. 41 Front St. West, Toronto.

$40,000 IN PRESENTS GIVEN AWAY!

This Offer Good Till Thanksgiving Day Only.

The proprietors of the FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE, being desirous of having their already well-known and popular Agricultural and Family paper more widely circulated and introduced into houses where it is not already known, have determined to throw off all profit this year, and in addition use a portion of their capital for the sole purpose of increasing their circulation to 100,000 copies. Its circulation is now 65,000. Only 35,000 more needed before the distribution takes place. After deciding to more extensively advertise than ever before, the following plan has been adopted by us:

FOR 50 CENTS

We will enter your name on our subscription book and mail the FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE regularly to you for Six Months and immediately send a printed numbered Receipt, which will entitle the holder to one of the following Presents to be given away at our THANKSGIVING FESTIVAL.

Partial List of Presents to Be Given Away.

5 U. S. Government Bonds of $1000	$5000 00
10 U. S. Greenbacks of $500	5000 00
10 U. S. Greenbacks of $100	1000 00
1 Matched pair of Trotting Horses	1000 00
1 Grand Square Piano	800 00
1 Grand Cabinet Organ	200 00
1 Three-seat Rockaway	200 00
1 Silver Dinner Service	100 00
5 Top Buggies	1000 00
20 U. S. Greenbacks of $50 each	1000 00
1000 Photograph Albums $2 each	2000 00
2 Village Carts	200 00
1 Pony Phaeton	100 00
1000 Pocket Silver Fruit Knives	$1000 00
1000 Gents' Pocket Knives	1000 00
1000 U. S. Greenbacks of $1 each	1000 00
10 Gents' Gold Watches, English Movement	800 00
10 Ladies' Gold Watches, English Movem't	600 00
20 Boys' Silver Watches, American Move't	200 00
8 Solitaire Diamond Finger Rings	400 00
3 Patent Harvesters	1000 00
1 Normandy Work Horse	500 00
2500 Elegant Oleograph Pictures	2500 00
5 Raw Silk Parlor Suit Furniture	1000 00
1460 Gold Finger Rings, Ladies' Breast Pins, Gents' Scarf Pins, Locketa, Fans and Chains.

And 92,935 other presents valued from 25 cents to $1.00, which makes a grand aggregation of 100,000 presents, thus guaranteeing a present to each and every new subscriber who sends us 50 Cts. as directed.

All of the above presents will be awarded in a fair and impartial manner by committee chosen at the Festival by the Subscribers; this festival will take place without fail. It will not be necessary for Subscribers to attend the Festival, as presents will be sent to any part of the United States or Canada. Yet it is to be hoped as many will be present as possible. THE 50 CENTS which you send us is the regular price for Six Months' Subscription, and therefore we charge nothing for the presents. OUR PROFIT will be in your future patronage, as we believe you will like our paper so well that you will always remain a subscriber. YOUR SUBSCRIPTION FREE. Get five of your friends to join you by cutting this out and showing it to them. Send us $2.50 and we will send you the FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE for six months, and a numbered receipt for each of your subscribers and one extra for your trouble.

SEND TEN SUBSCRIBERS with $5 and we will send 12 subscriptions and twelve numbered receipts. We shall limit the number of new subscriptions to 100,000, so we would advise all our friends to forward subscriptions early.

THE FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE

is one of the oldest and ablest edited Family and Agricultural papers. It contains twenty large pages (Eighty Columns), including elegant cover, bound, stitched and cut. And now has a circulation of 65,000 copies, and we are sure to reach the 100,000 at the time set, and the distribution of presents will take place on that date. It contains Stories, Sketches, Poetry, Farm, Garden, Household and Fashion Department, Needle and Embroidery Work. Illustrations of different parts of the UNITED STATES and Biographical Sketches of Eminent Men and Women. In short, it contains that which will interest, instruct and amuse the whole family.

THE PROPRIETORS are men of means, who always have done as they agree, and our paper is long established and reliable, with sufficient capital to carry out and fulfil to the letter any offer we may make.

TO THOSE WHO DO NOT ATTEND THE FESTIVAL we will send a printed List of the Awards, and all Presents will be forwarded to Holders of Receipts as they may direct. If you have not seen this elegant and beautiful paper, send for a Sample Copy which will be Sent Free.

ONLY 50 CENTS secures a the FARM, FIELD & FIRESIDE subscription price. As to our reliability we refer those who do not know us to any responsible Publisher in Chicago. Six Months, and a numbered receipt. The paper is worth double the Money in sums of $1.00 or less may be sent in ordinary letter at our risk, larger sums should be sent by Registered Letter, P. O. money order or Express. (Mention This Paper.)

REMEMBER these are Presents to our Subscribers given to them absolutely Free. Cut this out and show to friends, acquaintances and neighbors, as it will not appear again, and is the last opportunity you will have to take advantage of this extraordinary offer. Two-cent Postage Stamps taken in sums less than $1.00.

The FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE, 89 Randolph Street, Chicago, Ill.

Read These Testimonials.

CHICAGO, Aug. 21, 1883. We have furnished the paper for the FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE for several months, and have always found its Proprietors honorable in their dealings, and prompt in their payments. CHICAGO PAPER CO.

CHICAGO, Aug. 21, 1883. The Proprietors of the FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE have paid me several thousand dollars for press-work on their paper. I have always found them prompt in all transactions. A. G. NEWELL.

August 15, 1883. I am highly pleased with your paper. The information concerning Poultry management alone is worth five times the price of your paper, saying nothing about the valuable Farm information and interesting stories, etc. W. R. SIMPSON, SLIPUP, Morgan Co., Ala.

BRAIDWOOD, Ill., Aug. 11, 1883. I am very much pleased with your paper. Every number seems to me to become more attractive and profitable. I have shown it to several of my friends, who were at once delighted with it. Mrs. J. F. EHLE.

WAUSEON, O., Aug. 11, 1883. I received a copy of the FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE some days ago and must say that I was well pleased with it. I find it a first-class journal for the farmers, of whom I am one. With such an agricultural journal every farmer can receive much benefit. M. H. HAYES.

MEXICO, Juniata Co., Pa., July 24, 1883. I herewith send you the names of fifteen subscribers to the FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE, which I secured in less than as many minutes. B. L. SHUMAN.

SOUTH UNION, Ky., July 13, 1883. It is certainly the best paper I ever saw, neat, plain, instructive and beautifully illustrated. L. L. HOTE.

ILDERTON, ONT., Aug. 3, 1883. I have lately been a subscriber to your tasty and profitable paper, and must say I am more than pleased with it. I gave my subscription, in the first place, more to have a chance for one of the many presents than for anything contained in the paper; but I find the paper is worth three or four times the money beside all presents. S. W. PAISLEY.

PORTSMOUTH, VA., July 9, 1883. I received the papers all right and am delighted. My friends and subscribers say they are surprised at its size and beauty. Every person that has seen the paper acknowledges it to be the best paper printed, and say it is worth $2 per year. TIMOTHY MOSELEY.

EWS IN A NUTSHELL

IVE MINUTES SELECT READING.

mary of Foreign, Domestic and War Items—Concise, Pithy, and Pointed.

THE DOMINION.

Sir Hector Langevin is not going to visit e North-west this fall.

The Masonic difficulty in the province of ebec has been settled.

The Moncton, N. B., sugar refinery has clared a dividend of 6 per cent.

There are at present 230 pupils in the nd and dumb institute at Belleville.

The Napanee, Tamworth & Quebec Rail- r track is to be finished by Nov. 15.

Hon Alex. Mackenzie's health has been atly benefitted by his trip to Europe.

The Allans have two new ocean vessels der construction—the Siberian and Nu- dian.

Hamilton has remitted $65 000 to Lon- n, Eng., on account of interest of city de- ntures.

Joseph Marorana, four years old, was tally mangled by a G. T. R train at Lon- n, Ont., recently.

The Kingston and Pembroke Railway mpany intend to prohibit the sale of uor on their road.

Robert McCutcheon, a farmer near rch's Corners, was gored by a bull re- tly.

The Dominion Government has under- ken an annual inspection of children ught to Canada from abroad.

The Cleveland, O., syndicate has purchased immense mining property north of Tren- n, Ont. The syndicate's capital is $2,000,- 00.

Hugh McDowell, a carpenter who had en drinking heavily, was found at Co- urg, fatally stabbed in the abdomen and the neck.

Burlington Canal is to be dredged to a pth of thirteen feet at a low water mark. overnment engineers are now making the cessary soundings.

A deer scared by a ballast train o' the tario and Quebec railroad at Sharbot lake me entangled in the thickets and was ptured by some tourists.

There are indication of a split in the cotton e. The Coaticook, Que., company have ken action adverse to the recently formed mbination.

Theodore H. Rand, M. A., D. C. L., chief perintendent of education in New Bruns- k, has resigned to accept a professorship Acadia college, Nova Scotia.

Two timber limits, one in the county of mac, and one in the Nipissing district, re offered by auction at Ottawa recently withdrawn, the upset price not being ched.

A refractory bride, at Kingston, Ont., s horsewhipped in the public streets by r irate father. She was a gipsy and at altar refused to marry the man of her ice.

The steamer, Queen Victoria, burnt near ham, Ont., recently, was insured r $10,000. The crew lost all their person- property and barely escaped with their es.

Dr. Ryall, medical health officer of Ham- on, has invited the corporation and citi- ns generally to take into consideration e filthy state of the streets, alleys and rd yards.

The Hamilton hackmen are in arms against -laws requiring them always to have their mps burning at night and making it com- sory to fill an engagement made 24 hours advance.

The Princess Louise has presented a gnificent painting four or five feet in gth, at present on exhibition in Boston, ss., to the people of Canada through Sir ctor Langevin.

The committee on temperance reported to e Methodist general conference that the me had come for the forming of a solemn ague and covenant against the sale, use manufacture of intoxicants.

The Methodist Conference at Belleville ruck out the clause in the discipline re- ring young ministers to consult with their der brethren previous to entering into a rriage contract.

Mr. Caldwell, the defendant in McLaren Caldwell, has nearly a million logs lying the Upper Mississippi and its tributaries at he cannot get down to his mill owing to e recent decision against him.

Hess street school, Hamilton, has what is lled the fire discipline down fine. Six ndred children on the watch for an alarm ed out in exactly two minutes. How would e in case of a sudden alarm?

Reverend Rural Dean Bell has given no- e of a motion in the Episcopal Synod at ontreal for a canon discipline for the laity, marking at the time of giving the notice at at the Reformation the clergy lost all wer of discipline over the laity, even in e case of a man living an immoral life.

The Methodist general conference has de- ded in favor of one large university to e established as soon as practicable, in To- nto or elsewhere in Ontario. At present e Church has six or seven educational in- tutions with 101 professors, 5,000 pupils d endowments exceeding $400,000.

UNITED STATES.

Chicago physicians predict a cholera visi- tation next year.

The corn crop was not so badly injured by e recent frosts as reported.

Ninety men are on strike at the Detroit ass works against a proposed reduction of ve per cent. in wages.

Jay Gould is reported to be working his ilway schemes with a view of obtaining a ck board outlet for his railways.

A balloon collapsed at Pittsburgh, Pa., en high in the air, but descended so slow- y as to land its occupant unhurt.

Manager Ledyard, of the Michigan Cen- al, has given notice that no freight trains cept those carrying perishable goods shall n on Sunday.

John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina, testi- ed before the senate labour committee that e negro in the South was indolent and thriftless, and suggested that his interests would be served by the establishment of industrial schools, and by the total elimination from federal politics of the so-called negro question, and by leaving its solution to time and the reduction of taxation.

THE OLD WORLD.

Bismarck is once more seriously ill.

The Franco-Chinese outlook is improving.

Affairs in Croatia are becoming worse and worse. Martial law has been proclaimed.

French Legitimists intend memorialising the Vatican regarding their future course.

Important witnesses against O'Donnell, Carey's assassin, have arrived in England.

The number of visitors at Wittemberg, Germany, attending the Luther celebration, is placed at 50,000.

The powers are not irritated against Russia for her action in Bulgaria, at least so the North German Gazette says.

English detectives have returned to London from America with valuable information regarding the Fenian conspiracy.

An unknown Norwegian vessel was sunk in the English channel by a collision, twelve persons being drowned.

King Alfonso assisted at the laying of the corner stone of the new town hall at Vienna by the Emperor of Austria.

The health of the present members of his African expedition being bad, H. M. Stanley is calling for more European volunteers.

O'Donnell, the slayer of Carey, arrived at Madeira recently. He said he was indifferent as to his fate, but was sure he would not be hanged. Great precautions are maintained for his safety.

At the trades union congress in Birmingham, Joseph Arch gave it as his opinion that radical changes in the English land laws are necessary. A resolution was passed calling upon the Government to confiscate waste land.

British Pacific Colonies.

As for Australia, that great country can now hardly be called a colony, says a correspondent of The London Standard. The different communities there together constitute a vigorous young nation, which from national and patriotic motives remains in strong alliance with the mother country. An Englishman landing for the first time in Australia is bewildered at finding on the other side of the globe an almost exact reproduction of his own country; he sees cities as large and as prosperous as Leeds and Manchester, whose streets are thronged with English crowds, differing in no respect, except perhaps that of a better average physique, from crowds at home. The very vehicles and street cries, the drivers and the newsboys, seem miraculous apparitions of the Strand and Oxford street. It is nonsense to talk of the retention of these provinces of the empire as adding to the responsibilities of the taxpayer in England. There is no nation on the earth that could now venture to attack Australia with impunity. Melbourne is well and scientifically defended. Even a powerful ironclad fleet would run immense risk in venturing an attack. And Sidney, in a month or two, will be one of the strongest naval stations in the world. Twenty-five ton and thirty-one ton guns frown down on the lovely harbor from every available point, and in the forts are a body of regular artillery four hundred strong, recruited in Australia, and paid for by the colony, but in discipline, drill, and appearance undistinguishable from the stalwart gunners of the English Army. Thus do the Australians maintain for England, and free of all expense, stations for her navies as strong practically as Malta or Gibraltar.

Indeed, the authorities at home might well take a lesson from New South Wales and Victoria, and endeavor to arrange that their own crown colonies and important naval centres shall be as effectively protected as are Sydney and Melbourne, A couple of seven-inch guns are deemed sufficient for Port Louis—the Malta of the Indian ocean—and Hong Kong, where any day may be seen in the harbor scores of English steamers and ships, for which, in time of war, the place ought to be a secure refuge, does not possess a single piece of armour-piercing ordnance. Yet Hong Kong boasts of one of the most magnificent harbors in the world, and that could be rendered almost impregnable to a naval attack; but, as a matter of fact, it is at the mercy of any second or third class enemy's iron-clad that might elude the British fleet. It would almost seem to be a pity that some of our strong places can not be make over to the custody of the Australian colonies. Coasting round from Adelaide in the south to Port Darwin on the north of the southern continent is a voyage of over fourteen days' duration. That is longer than from London to Alexandria. And along that great extent of coastline there are over a dozen thriving towns, two of them at least taking rank among the great ports of the world, the others all hoping to do so some no very distant date. A frequent topic of conversation when I passed through Australia was the then recent speech of a well-known statesman at home, wherein was calmly discussed the supposed advantage of a separation between the colonies and the mother country. In Australia, so far, they indignantly refuse to even contemplate such an emergency and, that being the case, there is surely little good, they say, in broaching the subject at home. From Port Darwin to Hong Kong the numerous islands of the East Indian Archipelego are continually in sight, scores of them almost unknown, but far exceeding Mauritius in size and more than equalling it in richness of soil. In British hands these islands would be the seats of flourishing commerce. As they are, their populations produce little, and take less, of the goods of other nations. Those which belong to Spain are as stagnant as is Spain herself, and Java seems to monopolize the energies of the Dutch of the eastern seas. Excepting Java, the possessions of Holland are mostly undeveloped. Not until Singapore and Hong Kong are reached are ports again found with all the signs visible of a great trade. Saigon as already pointed out, is a distinct failure. In short, from Aden to China, along the route I have indicated, the reflection constantly recurs that the colonial policy of France is as far beyond the capacity of her citizens to support as the private enterprise of Englishmen is in front of the ideas of English statesmen.

The Sun.

In any reference to the physical history of the sun, the stupendous magnitude of its sphere must be kept vividly present to the mind. With a diameter one hundred and nine times longer than the earth's, the solar orb looks out into space from a surface that is twelve thousand times larger than the one which the earth enjoys. The bulk of the sun is one million three hundred thousand time that of the earth. If the surface of the sun were a thin, external rind, or shell, and the earth be placed in the middle of this hollow sphere, not only would the moon have space to circle in its usual orbit without ever getting outside of the solar shell, but there would be room also for a second satellite, nearly as far again as the moon, to accomplish a similar course. The weight of the sun is three hundred thousand times the weight of the earth, or, in round numbers, two thousand millions of millions of millions of tons.

The mean distance of the sun from the earth is now as well ascertained, through investigations which have been made in several ways, that there can scarcely be in the estimate an error of five hundred thousand miles. The distance at the present time given, is ninety-two million eight hundred and eighty-five thousand miles. This measure is in itself so vast that, if any traveller were to move at the rate of four miles an hour for ten hours a day, it would take him six thousand three hundred years to reach the sun. Sound would traverse the interval, it there were anything in space capable of transmitting sonorous vibrations, in fourteen years, and a cannon ball, sustaining its initial velocity throughout, would do the same thing in nine years. A curious illustration, attributed to Prof. Mendenhall, is to the effect that an infant, with an arm long enough when reached out from the earth to touch the sun, would die of age before it could become conscious through the transmission of the nervous impression from the hand to the brain, that it had burned its fingers.

In order that the earth, thus moving around the sun with a chasm of twenty-three million miles of intervening space between them, may not be drawn to the sun by the preponderant attraction of its three hundred and thirty times larger mass, it has to shoot forward in its path with a momental velocity fifty times more rapid than the swiftest rifle ball. But, in moving through twenty miles of this onward path, the earth is draw out of a straight line something less than the eight part of an inch. This deviation is properly the source from which the amount of solar attraction has been ascertained. If the earth were suddenly arrested in its onward flight, and its momentum were in that way destroyed, it would be drawn to the sun, by the irresistible force of its attraction, in four months, or in the twenty-seventh part of the time which a cannon ball would take to complete the same journey.

The Truly Honest Juror.

Some difficulty was experienced in obtaining a jury, and the court was getting tired of the tedious proceedings.

"Call the next juror, Mr. Clark," said the solicitor for the hundredth time.

The clerk called out the man, and an old man with an honest face and a suit of blue jean clothes rose up in his place, and the solicitor asked the following customary questions,—

"Have you, from having seen the crime committed, or having heard any of the evidence delivered under oath, formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner at the bar?"

"No, sir."

"Is there any bias or prejudice resting on your mind for or against the prisoner at the bar?"

"None, sir."

"Is your mind perfectly impartial between the State and the accused?"

"It is."

"Are you opposed to capital punishment?"

"I'm not."

All the questions had been answered, and the court was congratulating itself on having another juror, when the solicitor in solemn tones said,—

"Juror, look upon the prisoner—prisoner, look upon the juror."

The old man adjusted his spectacles, and peeringly gazed at the prisoner for full half a minute, when he turned his eyes toward the court and earnestly said,—

"Judge, I'll be condemned if I don't believe he's guilty!"

It is useless to add that the court was considerably exasperated at having lost a juror, but the most humorously inclined had a good laugh out of the old man's premature candor.

Pawning a Girl.

Moses Hamber, of Hamberg and & Co., of No. 1,209 North Tenth street, had a hearing before United States Commissioner Edmunds the other day on the charge of loaning money on pension certificates, in violation of the law. James Lafferty, of Second and Oxford streets, a hunchback and a cripple from rheumatism, said he was in receipt of $24 a month pension and was in the habit of pawning the certificate frequently with Hamberg & Co. He pawned it on June 7, for $2.50, received $10 on June 9, and $5 on Aug. 31, and when he drew his money he was handed $12. This made the interest on the loans, aggregating $17.50, $42 50. On several occasions, when the pawnbroker could not accompany him to the pension office to draw his money, he left his daughter, a girl of 15, as security, and she was released when he brought back the certificate. This fact the witness spoke of as if it were in the usual routine of business. The daughter, Ellen Eugenie Lafferty, a bright girl, said that her father and mother always spent the pension money for drink and she obtained no benefit for it. She had been used as security several times and did not seem to look upon it as a hardship. Once, when her father handed her over to Hamberg to be locked up until he returned, he said, "Now you are in prison, you know."

Hamberg was held in $500 bail to answer at the next term of court, and care will be taken to prevent the disappearance of the witness.—Philadelphia Times.

In the past forty years $4,000,000 has been spent in building and restoring churches in Wales.

FOUR TIMES HANGED.

Mr. James Watts Survives Various Attempts to Dislocate His Vertebræ—His Wonderful Experience.

This is the story told by a man named James Watts to Capt. George Burton, of the steamship British Prince: "I was born in the town of Falmouth, Cornwall. My father was a sail-maker, doing a fair business. I was an only child. My mother I do not remember. I was sent to the grammar school; learned to read, write, arrange books, and other matters in keeping with my station. At 15 my father took me into his store as assistant. The Cornish coast abounds in rocky cliffs, where thousands of gulls build their nests. I often used to go egg-hunting with my boy friends. There was plenty of excitement in it. We used to fix a stick in a knot of rope some twenty feet long. One end would be fastened securely to a stake in the ground, and then we used to let ourselves slowly down over the cliff and swing backward and forward, seated on the stick, along the face of the rocks, frighten the old birds away, and fill our wallets with eggs. It was a little dangerous, as the rope might cut at any time on the rough surface of the rocks, but we were generally in parties of a dozen, and one division of us kept a sharp eye on the ropes while the rest hunted.

"I loved the sea in those days. One morning I started out alone with my coil of rope. I expected to find some comrades by the shore, but none were there. However, thinking they would soon arrive, I let myself down, not on the seat, as usual, but with the rope in a slip-knot beneath my shoulders. Directly my full weight was in the noose, it began to tighten to an uncomfortable extent, so I placed my foot against a small ridge and began to loosen the strain. I got one arm out and was gradually pulling the rope over my body so as to sit in the noose, when a dozen gulls flew out and began to attack me. My foot slipped from its hold as the rope closed rapidly round my neck. I had time to place my right hand to my neck, an act which saved my life, for, although the pain was severe, I could breathe.

I shouted for help, but no help was near. I hung there for hours; to me it seemed years, losing consciousness from time to time, and having the most horrible visions. Finally the agony was so great that with an effort of despair I freed my hand and suffocated. I recovered consciousness to find myself on my back in a fishing tent, with two men bending over me. It seems they had discovered my dilemma and were drawing me up within half a minute after the rope closed round my neck. My windpipe, I have since had reason to discover, is pretty strong—I can take a good deal of hanging. My first experience nevertheless, gave me a bad attack of brain fever, during which I must have acquired the fear and aversion for the sea I have felt ever since.

"When I recovered my health I became wild and disipated, and, although I managed to remain on friendly terms with my father, for the next five years I was regarded in my native town as a quarrelsome fellow, foremost in every row and ready to get drunk whenever I had a chance. Looking back, I believe I suffered in my brain several years after my first hanging. One night in a general row I killed one of my pot-house companions with a blow on the head delivered with a heavy pewter vessel. I was arrested, tried, and condemned to be hanged. The verdict should have been manslaughter, for the deed was done in a free fight; but I had no friends on the jury. The foreman was a near relative of the dead man, and, although the judge charged the twelve good men and true in accordance with the lesser crime, they found me guilty, without even a recommendation to mercy. The judge put on the black cap, and 'hoped God would have mercy on my soul.'

"The day arrived for my execution. Meanwhile I knew my father was making strenuous efforts to have my sentence reversed, but up to the day fixed for my death, without success. My hands were pinioned, I took my last look, as I supposed, at the sun, felt the white cap drawn over my face, and begged the hangman to pull the bolt when I arrived at the supplication in the Lord's prayer, 'forgive me my trespasses.' I had hardly finished the first words of entreaty to heaven when a loud tumult fell on my ears, and the word 'Reprieve'! was shouted from mouth to mouth. The next moment I was unbound and the royal message of mercy read to me. The death penalty was commuted to ten years' penal servitude.

"Never mind how I passed the next ten years. They were not altogether unhappy. The facts of my crime were known in the prison. I was not a thief? and my docility and intelligence gained me favour with the governor. I was made messenger clerk, and the last two years of my confinement schoolmaster to my fellow-convicts. Everything was on the model system then. Transportation had been abolished shortly before I became a convict. Finally I was once more a free man. England, however, is no place for a freshly released jail-bird; he must live things down a year or two, and so my poor old father gave me £200 and his blessing, and I shipped for the Cape of Good Hope and the diamond fields. On the long sea voyage I suffered like a child in a dark room who is afraid of ghosts—an infirmity, of course, and a relic of my first hanging.

"Well," Watts continued, after a drink of whiskey, "I landed in Cape Town and found the city full of excitement. Diamonds had just been discovered afresh in old fields, and untold wealth, so it was supposed, was in the grasp of everybody. To reach my destination, the Kimberley mine, I had to travel a distance of eight hundred miles in a stage drawn by oxen, a journey which took up ten days and which was full of adventure. I arrived at the fields, and, in partnership with an acquaintance I made in the waggon, I purchased a share of a claim for £150. For a few months we found next to nothing, then success crowned our work, and within six months of leaving England, I was worth £2,000. I returned to Cape Town, but could not make up my mind to cross the ocean home, so I took rooms at a crack hotel and began to enjoy myself. Those who find fortune easily spend freely; in a short time gambling and drink left me with just enough to return to the fields. This time I had no money to buy a claim, so I had to work for a percentage. Luck favoured me, and again I was the possessor of several hundreds, sufficient to join a company of ten in the purchase of a large claim.

"There was an old Dutchman at the settlement who sold liquors and mining implements and other things to the diggers. He had a daughter, a handsome girl, the only young woman for hundreds of miles. She and I became intimate. The Dutchman did not approve of my attention to his daughter, and the way in which she favored me roused the jealousy of my companions. The Dutchman determined to get rid of me. One day he accused me of robbing him, and, certainly, a package of loose stones belonging to him, were found in my coat pocket. I had been talking to Gretchen and had thrown off my coat because of the heat, and the devilish Dutchman placed the plant on me.

These is not much justice in a mining camp. As I said, I was disliked because of Gretchen's preference, and my partners, no doubt, were willing to have my share of the claim to divide among them; so I was tried and condemned to be hanged in less than an hour of the old man's accusation, by a lynch jury. I was allowed two hours to prepare for death, and then taken to the nearest tree, where a rope was placed round my neck and I was jerked by a dozen willing hands into the air. But before strangulation ensued I fell to the ground with a thump. Gretchen had not been idle. Her entreaties brought a crowd of opposition diggers to my assistance, and, though they permitted me to be jerked in the air just to see how it looked, they would not allow things to go any further; in fact they squarely expressed their opinion that the Dutchman had lied. The tide turned in my favor, and I believe the old villain would have been burned in his shanty but for my intercession and his daughter's tears. Gretchen jilted me, nevertheless, shortly afterwards, and, as I had next to no luck in my search for diamonds, I left the field for Cape Town, this time with only £200 or £300 in my pocket. I found a letter awaiting me at the postoffice, from a friend in Falmouth, telling me my father was dying.

"After again enduring the miseries of a sea voyage, I arrived in England, only to find my father dead and buried. He left me a small sum of money and his business. There was no peace for me in my native city, however; blood was on my hands, and coldness met me on all sides. I sold my father's effects at public auction, and journeyed to London, where my identity was soon lost among the many millions. But the brand of Cain followed me. I tried several kinds of business and employment, but no luck was mine. I took to drink again, and a fight with a policeman landed me once more in a prison cell. I was committed to hard labor for fourteen days. Despair seized me, I twisted a rope out of the strands I was given to convert into oakum, made a noose for my neck, secured the other end to the bars of the window, kicked away the stool, and lost consciousness. To my dying day I shall remember the sensations of my last hanging. I was transported to a beautiful paradise of meadows and flowers, where lovely forms of children greeted me, and delicious music sounded in my ears. It seemed to last for an age, but it could only have been a lapse of a few moments, for gruff voices succeeded the gentle music and the faces of the angelic children faded into the stern features of a pair of prison warders, who cut me down just in time. I was sentenced to three months longer for the attempt at self-destruction and watched night and day to prevent a repitition. I had, however, no wish to end my life again; on the contrary, the desire for new scenes and fresh adventure were full on me when my release from prison arrived. I still possessed a little money, so I purchased a ticket for Colorado, and I leave England, I suppose, forever to-morrow. The anticipation of the sea voyage tries me terribly this time. I will never make another journey by ocean; of that I am determined. In the far west, with a new name, new associations, and a clean shave, for I am younger than I look, Providence may yet send me happiness and fortune."

ODDS AND ENDS.

"Ma, which milkman gives the most cream, the one that has the best cows?" "Hardly, my child! It is the one who has the best conscience."—Yonkers Gazette.

We saw a specimem of modern politeness, the other day. Two gentleman were going up in an elevator. A lady came aboard, and both men took of their hats, but continued to puff the smoke of their vile cigars into her face.

Longfellow said: "In this world a man must be either anvil or hammer." Longfellow was wrong, however. Lots of men are neither the active hammer nor the sturdy anvil. They are nothing but bellows.—Philadelphia News.

A Peruvian living in Milan has made a clock entirely out of bread. In this country many persons are trying to make bread out of paper, but they have only been partially successful. They complain that subscribers won't pay up.—Norriston Herald.

When the minister is pretty severe upon human shortcomings in the pulpit, every man leans back in his pew, smiles, and says to himself, "Now he's giving it to 'em." Satisfying thought, isn't it, that the minister always has reference to somebody else? Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A piece of lime which a boy carried in his pocket was the cause of his death from blood poisoning. It is the first instance on record of a boy's pant's-pocket going back on him. To think that brass wire, rusty old knife blades, decayed fruit, cobbler's wax, fish hooks, putty, mice, hedgehogs, can be carried with impunity, yet there's all this fuss about a little bit of lime that looked as innocent as a piece of chalk.—Chicago News.

A short, middle-aged colored man can be seen any morning coming out of Steinway Hall, New York, sometimes led by the arm of a kindly old gentleman, and generally grimacing and gesticulating in a strange fashion. This is Blind Tom—once a great phenomenon, and about whom more diverse criticisms have been written than any other musician in the country. Music is still a mania with him, and he has to go up in Steinway Hall and work off his mysterious energy every morning at a concert grand. And it is said that his improvising draws a crowd of curious experts about him yet.—N. Y. Times.

Markdale monthly Cattle FAIR.

A regular Monthly Cattle Fair will be held in the Agricultural Grounds, Markdale, as fo'lows :

—1883—

SATURDAY	.....	Aug. 4
Do.	.....	Sept. 8
Do.	.....	Oct.
Do.	.....	Nov. 3
Do.	.....	Dec. 8

MARKDALE Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats !

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and deliivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23, 1882. 80-1y

Health is Wealth !

Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment, a guaranteed specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Fits, Nervous Neuralgia, Headache, Nervous Prostration caused by the use of alcohol or tobacco, Wakefulness, Mental Depression, Softening of the Brain, resulting in Insanity and leading to misery, decay and death, Premature Old Age, Barrenness, Loss of Power in either sex, Involuntary losses and Spermatorrhœa, caused by over-exertion of the brain, self-abuse or over-indulgence. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser a written guarantee to refund the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by A. Turner &Co., ole authorized Agent for Markdale Ont. John C. West &Co. sole proprietor Toronto.Ont.

FARMERS !

LOOK TO YOUR INTERESTS AND GET

SARGENT'S

PATENT LOAD LIFTING MACHINE

THIS SEASON.

It will save you one or more hands every day you are drawing in, as you don't need a man at the front of the mow to pitch it back. You can pitch from the load as you are pitching down instead of up. You can unload in half the time. and with greater ease than in the old way.

Agents wanted in every county. Wm. SARGENT, Berkeley P. O.

THE BEST PLACE TO GET A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery,

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Wilson Benson

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

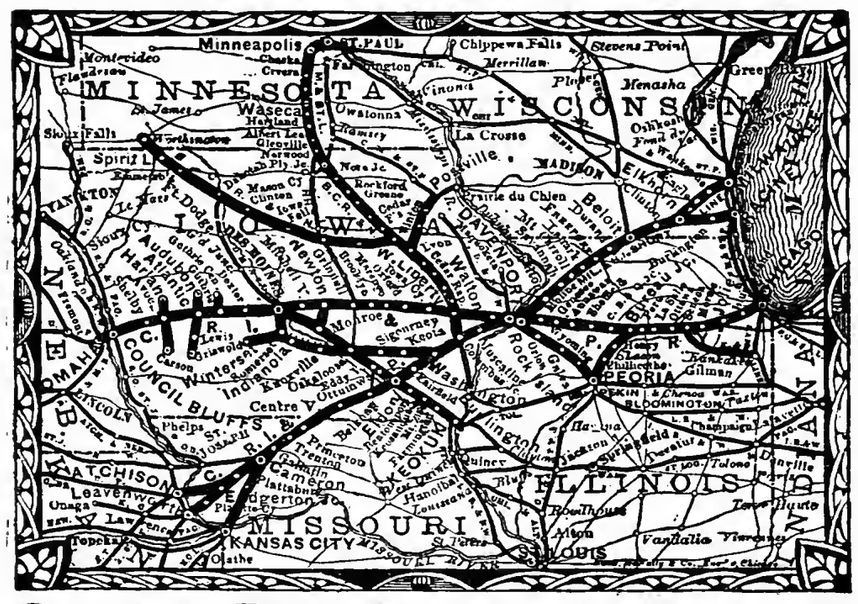
BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.
DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.



In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

WILSON BENSON.

July 6, 1882.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE Minneapolis

ST. PAUL
Chippewa Falls
Stevens Point
MINNESOTA
WISCONSIN
Waseca
Owatonna
La Crosse
Rockford
Freeport
Beloit
Janesville
MADISON
Elkhorn
CHICAGO
Mt. Pleasant
DAVENPORT
Rock Island
Moline
PEORIA Galesburg
Kankakee
Aurora
Joliet
Streator
Ottawa
Lincoln
Bloomington
Decatur
Springfield
Jacksonville
Quincy
Hannibal
Centre Point
Council Bluffs
Omaha
Lincoln
Beatrice
Atchison
Leavenworth
Topeka
Cameron
Edgerton
Plattsburg
Trenton
Princeton
Kirksville
Ottumwa
Washington
Keokuk
Fairfield
Burlington
Mt. Pleasant
Winterset
Indianola
Oskaloosa
Knoxville
Des Moines
Grinnell
Newton
Monroe
Chimney Rock
Altoona
Colfax
Marshalltown
Brooklyn
Grinnell
Tama
Toledo
Iowa City
Davenport
Muscatine
Wilton Jct.
Wilton
Rochester
Austin
Albert Lea
Glenville
Northwood
Clinton
Mason City
Fort Dodge
Webster City
Algona
Spirit L.
Sioux Falls
Worthington
Jackson
Winnebago City
Blue Earth City
Waterville
Owatonna
Faribault
Northfield
Hastings
Red Wing
Wabasha
Winona
La Crosse
Sparta
Tomah
Portage
Wisconsin Dells
Baraboo
Madison
Janesville
Beloit
Rockford
Freeport
Dubuque
Clinton
Fulton
Sterling
Dixon
Amboy
Rock Falls
Sterling
Princeton
Mendota
Aurora
Naperville
Wheaton
Elgin
Chicago
Evanston
Waukegan
Kenosha
Racine
Milwaukee
Oshkosh
Fond du Lac
Ripon
Berlin
Green Bay
Menasha
Neenah
Appleton
Shawano
Wausau
Merrill
Stevens Point
Plover
Chippewa Falls
Eau Claire
Menomonie
Hudson
Stillwater
Minneapolis
Anoka
Elk River
Monticello
Big Lake
St. Cloud
Sauk Centre
Alexandria
Glenwood
Morris
Benson
Willmar Litchfield
Hutchinson
Glencoe
Winthrop
Gaylord
Le Sueur
New Ulm
Mankato
St. Peter
Shakopee
Jordan
Belle Plaine
Montgomery
Lonsdale
Northfield
Faribault
Owatonna
Blooming Prairie
Austin
Rochester
Lanesboro
Preston
Fountain
Harmony
Spring Valley
Caledonia
Houston
La Crescent
Winona
Wabasha
Lake City
Red Wing
Hastings
Prescott
River Falls
New Richmond
Osceola
Amery
Dresser
Hudson
Stillwater
White Bear
Forest Lake
Wyoming
Rush City
Pine City
Hinckley
Sandstone
Moose Lake
Carlton
Duluth
Superior Ashland
Bayfield
Washburn
Iron River
Hurley
Ironwood
Bessemer
Wakefield
Watersmeet
Ontonagon
Houghton
Hancock
Calumet
Lake Linden
Baraga
Marquette
Negaunee
Ishpeming
Escanaba
Gladstone
Menominee
Marinette
Peshtigo
Oconto
Green Bay
Kewaunee
Two Rivers
Manitowoc
Sheboygan
Port Washington
Milwaukee
Racine
Kenosha
Waukegan
Evanston
Chicago
Hyde Park
Englewood
Blue Island
Joliet
Lockport
Plainfield
Aurora
Geneva
St. Charles
Elgin
Dundee
Crystal Lake
Woodstock
Harvard
Belvidere
Rockford
Freeport
Dixon
Sterling
Rock Falls
Amboy
Mendota
Ottawa
Marseilles
Morris
Seneca
Streator
La Salle
Peru

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 3. MARKDALE, ONT., SEPT. 27. 1883. No. 159.

The Markdale Standard
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY THURSDAY EVENING,
At Markdale Ontario.
$1 Per Anumn
IN ADVANCE.
C. W. RUTLEDGE.
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,
WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O. Physician and Surgeon, Priceville, Graduate of University. Vict. College.
" " New York, and
Hon. Graduate, of the same,
" " Ayleth Medical Institute.
" " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y.
Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J.P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST,
GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,
BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton. Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,
BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.
A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison.
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYancers, &c. &c.
OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in
MARKDALE;
over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
Funds to lend on reasonable terms.
JOHN CREASOR, Q. C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown,
ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,
ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N.B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,
BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

MISS. GREEN,
DRESS AND MANTLE
PARLOR.
Dunlop's building Markdale.
All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.
Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

LOYAL MARKDALE LODGE, of C. O. O. F. No. 78, will meet in their hall on Monday evening, Oct. 1st at eight o'clock p. m.
108 A. Turner, Sec'y.

JOHN NOBLE,
MARKDALE,
GENER'L BLACKSMITH
HORSE SHOEING
A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.
THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large ommercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.
The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.
Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,
CONTRACTORS.
Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.
Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

J. W. FORD
Is giving splendid satisfaction in
GRISTING,
By the New Process at the
Markdale Flouring Mills.
Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

ALEX KAY
BOOT & SHOE
MAKER,
MILL STREET
MARKDALE.

GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail

{BUTCHER!}
BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.
FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON
Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call at No. 3 Burns' Block, opposite the new Union Block.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

STARTLING DISCOVERY!
LOST MANHOOD RESTORED.
A victim of youthful imprudence causing Premature Decay, Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, etc., having tried in vain every known remedy, has discovered a simple self-cure, which he will send FREE to his fellow-sufferers, address J. H. REEVES, 43 Chatham St., N. Y.

Williamsford.

Council met in Vogan's new Hall, on Saturday.

Mrs. John Deavitt, has returned from a visit to the North West.

Mr. Hall, the tailor, has left this place, having accepted a situation in Orangeville.

Miss White, daughter of Mr. John White, of Montrose, and late of Holland, is now visiting in this Township.

Mrs. A. G. Hamilton, of Manitoba, formerly of Markdale, and family, are visiting friends in this vicinity at present.

The show fair to be held here on 4th Oct., promises to be a success. The Tp. Council granted $20 to the society.

Mr. C. Price has built a dwelling and post office opposite Mr. Foster's store, and is now residing in his new premises.

Mr. Dickie, station agent, has resigned his position, Mr. F. Hinchy now fills his place, and is quite an improvement on the past.

Mr. Foster has made more room in his store by removing partitions and extending the shop full length of the building, he has it well filled with seasonable goods, and is making quite a stir. He is making preparations to build a grain house which he expects to have ready for grain by the 15th November. Messrs. Armstrong & Hent have the contract. The store house is to have a capacity of 15,000 bushels.

Prepare Winter Clothing Now.

Sudden changes of temperature, and cold, penetrating winds may now be looked for, and it is prudent to be ready to meet them promptly. Strong vigorous persons, in full blood, may resist a fall of twenty or thirty degrees in the thermometer, but none are sure of doing so. A change from 50 to 40 or 30, before the system is inured to cold, is more felt than 0 in December and January. So, good warm under and other clothing should be at hand for instant use when an unexpected northerly blast comes. A cold caught in autumn is apt to last a long time, if it do not change to terminate fatally. Let the winter apparel be looked over at once, mended and remodeled, and new clothing ordered. Tailors and seamstresses, if to be employed, will be over-busy, and less accommodating later on than now, and fabrice are in more variety at tho stores, and cost no more now than later.

To double protect the throat and lungs, line the undershirt inside, both back and front and well down the waist, with warm soft flannel. Give special care also to the feet and limbs. Home-knit stockings of soft wool are by far the best. Line the knees and heels of children's with flannel. —American Agriculturist of October.

Thornbury people expect to have a new skating rink for the coming winter.

Archibald McLellan, formerly of Durham, was tried last week in Toronto for obtaining good under false pretense, has been in prison several months awaiting his trial and another month added to his confinement there as a result of the charge.

The Methodist General Conference has decided that the name of the united churches shall be "The Methodist Church." The United Methodist church will now be the largest Protestant denomination in the dominion. According to the census the four denominations who may now be regarded as followes:

Methodist Church of Canada	582,963
Episcopal Methodist	103,279
Bible Christian	27,236
Primitive Methodist	25,680
Total	739,160.

The Presbyterian Church numbers 629,280, and the church of England 574,818. Before the Union the Presbyterian body was the most numerous of any one denomination of Protestants; by the union the Methodist Church is made to stand first in point of numbers.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,
BANKERS,
Money Loaned
IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.
INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.
Allowed on Savings Deposits.
Drafts issued and Collections made on points, at lowest rates.
W.M. LUCAS,
Manager.
September 23, 1880. 2-ly

ROBT. ASKIN,
MARKDALE,
Has opened out a First-Class
Furniture!
—AND—
UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,
And therefore has supplied a want long felt, especially in the Undertaking Line.
COFFINS,
CASKETS, SHROUDS,
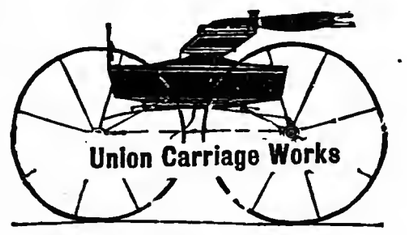
and all
FUNERAL FURNISHINGS
supplied on the shortes notice.
A Splendid Hearse
for hire at moderate rates.
—All kinds of—
PICTURE FRAMING
Done on short notice.
ROBT. ASKIN.



BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.
The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and Positively cures Piles. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by A. Turner & Co

SEEING IS BELIEVING.
GENTLEMEN,—
If you want a first-class
Buggie or Wagon
call at
MCKENNA & MASON'S
CARRIAGE WORKS
MARKDALE.
They can supply you with anything from a
Lumber Wagon
up to
Extension Top Phæton.
To buy from them is o
SAVE MONEY!
They are both practical workmen, and employ none but
PRACTICAL WORKMEN
They guarantee their work
Second to none for Lightness of Draught and Superiority of Finish.
They use nothing but First-class White Oak for Wagons, and thrice Extra Second Growth Hickory for light work.
The immense amount of work turned out of McKenna & Mason's shop is sufficien proof of the wide reputation they enjoy for doing good work.
THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END
Poor cheap work we positively will not take.
Special attention given to Re-Trimming and Repainting all classes of Carriage Work.
Satisfaction guaranteed (or No Pay) in
HORSESHOEING
SHOP—On Mill Street opposite to Sproule's Hotel.
McKENNA & MASON.

THOS. MATHEWS,
HarneSS EstaBlishmenT
MARKDALE.
EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.
LIVERY!
IN CONNECTION.
EUGENIA
Grist, Saw and Lath Mills
Having made eqtensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.
GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND
Chopping Done Every Day.
Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.
LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.
Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted
69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

CALCINED PLASTER,
—OR—
Plaster Paris,
One car of Nova Scotia, all best and cheapest in the market.
Machine Oils and Paint
OILS AT CLOSE PRICES.
H. PARKER'S
Drugstore - DURHAM.

J.G.IRVING,
MARKDALE,
Manufacturer of all Kinds of
PUMPS.
Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.
All kinds of.
IRON - PUMPS
SUPPLIED.

Union Carriage Works.
All work manufactured from
FIRST CLASS MATERIAL
In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with English Varnish.
Painting & Trimming Rigs
will receive prompt attention.
All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time consistent with good workmanship.
GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.
Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside
D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor
Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

A GHASTLY MEMOIR.

England's Common Hangman.

The death of Marwood, the common hangman, which took place recently, terminated a somewhat remarkable career. The deceased's illness was of short duration. It began with an attack of jaundice, and was aggravated by other complications. Marwood assumed the office of executioner on the retirement of Calcraft about ten or a dozen years ago. He had occasionally assisted Calcraft, and showed an expertness in discharging the ghastly duties of his office. Public executions had been abolished when age and increasing infirmity caused the retirement of Calcraft and the appointment of a younger and more active man, Marwood was a shoemaker and saddler by trade, and carried on a small but lucrative business at Horncastle, Lincolnshire. What made him particularly notorious was his introduction of the "long drop," by which he claimed to have dispensed with all unnecessary torture. Calcraft not unfrequently gave his victims a drop of no more than three or four feet, the consequence being that many painful scenes wer eenacted in full view of a horrified public. Marwood's system has been to allow a fall varying from 7½ ft. to 9½ fet., and by a dexterous adjustment of the noose under the chin, has almost invariably managed to secure instantaneous death. Some few mishaps have marked his performance of the repulsive duties of a hangman, but these have arisen from causes over which he had no control. The only conspicuous blunder was, singular to say, in the last execution at which he was called upon to officiate—namely, the sensational case at Durham a few weeks ago.

When Marwood was appointed to the post he was successful for some time in keeping the fact from the knowledge of his neighbors, but when it became known his presence in the little town of Horncastle was not at all appreciated, and he was continually hooted at and hissed. This practice gradually wore off, and when not engaged on his professional duties, or on circuit, as he used to term it, he went in and out as an ordinary mortal, and his spare time was occupied as a cobbler in a little shop close to the parish church. He took much pride in the manner in which he performed his executions, and was never weary of recounting his experiences, and of speaking of the great improvement of the long drop over all other systems previously adopted in this country or elsewhere. Many railway passengers who have met him in a train have heard from his own lips a description of his mode of hurrying criminals out of the world, and to show his peculiar vanity in this respect, it may be remembered that only a few days before his last illness he visited the House of Commons and distributed with evident pleasure a number of his professional cards, also shaking hands with several members of the house and leaving his autograph with them.

The deceased executioner had amassed a fair amount of property, having several cottages of his own besides several other investments, a marked contrast to his former days, when he led a most penurious life. He had for some time past contracted rather dissolute habits, and this circumstance aggravated his illness, and without doubt hastened his death. He leaves a widow but no son, the statements made from time to time that he was accompanied by his son being incorrect. Nothing is known in Horncastle as to Marwood's successor, but the inhabitants unanimously hope he will not reside there. The deceased is said to have been between fifty and sixty years of age.

Marwood's first appearance in Liverpool in an official capacity was on the 31st of August, 1874, at the execution of a young Irishman named Henry Flanagan, for the murder of Mary Flanagan, in that city; and in the same year he executed four other persons at Kirkdale, including the three "cornermen," for the Tithebarn-street murder. His other engagements in Liverpool were not very numerous, and they included Heap, the Gorton abortionist quack doctor, and Fish, the Blackburn barber, who murdered and mutilated a child.

A special correspondent gives the following graphic account of interviews with and and experiences of the deceased executioner:

"Would you like to see Marwood?" I asked a lady at Kirkstead station, the junction of the Horncastle line with the main system of the Great Northern, about a fortnight ago—the day, in fact, on which the executioner was returning from Durham after the scene on the scaffold to which attention was called in the House of Commons. "Certainly I should," was the reply. My old friend was standing on the platform, stick in hand, joking with the porters, and occasionally giving a friendly nod to those who recognised him. "What a benevolent-looking man," was the remark of the lady as soon as he was pointed out to her; and this would probably be the opinion of everybody who saw Marwood unofficially. A man of middle height, with broad, compactly set shoulders, dressed in such a coat as a Lincolnshire farmer would wear, with high black stock and a low felt hat, he looked the very personification of a good-humoured old countryman.

It was not on such an occasion as this, however, that he was seen to the best. His place of business was a little one-storey building close to Horncastle Churchyard. Over the door the words, "Marwood, Crown Office," in large letters, showed that he was not ashamed of his work, and a very short conversation with him was sufficient to show that he looked upon himself as a benefactor of the human race. Someone had taught him the phrase probably, but he said in so many words in my first interview with him that he had "reduced the sum of human suffering," and he held his office in as high esteem as that of the judges of the land. The little shop was filled with implements of his work as a country cobbler, but hanging from the roof there were some curious coils of rope, concerning which he was particularly proud. Somehow or other he had obtained possession of a rope used by Calcraft, with a clumsy slip-knot. This was an ordinary piece of cord. He compared it, with considerable self-exultation, with the ropes hanging from the ceiling of the little shop. These were made to his order, he said, in Government workshops, and there were some sixty good strands in each of them. At one end a spliced loop, at the other a running noose, fashioned with a knot, as was the case aforetime, but with a clean ring of metal, giving a running noose which made one shudder to look at from another portion of the room.

The first time I met him I saw a rope with which he had just executed a sea captain at Hull, who, as he said, went off like a lamb, and the same rope had served for Peace, Lefroy, Dr. Lamson, and Kate Webster. There was no difficulty in getting him to talk about his grim occupation. Until he was executioner he said he had never seen an execution, but for many years he had thought over the subject, and he objected to the way in which Calcraft, as he called it, "choked" his prisoners to death. When it was intimated that Calcraft was about to give up his office, Marwood was one of three who applied from the same neighborhood for the appointment, and he explained how he described to the gentleman who occupied the position of common hangman at Newgate the method of hanging which he proposed to introduce. It will be remembered that about this time a long drop had been attempted by an eminent professor in Dublin with the effect of pulling off the head of the prisoner, and Marwood was exceedingly anxious, as he invariably was to all his visitors, to let us know that his method was based upon scientific principles. With his cobbler's apron on, and standing with one foot on his stall, he showed the cruelty of the French method, and what he called the inhumanity of what had been the practice in England. By carefully ascertaining the weight of the criminal, he reckoned that he produced just—by his long drop—the necessary force to dislocate the vertebræ, and cause instant death.

"Did you never try," said one of my friends, "to hide from the Horncastle people the nature of your new occupation?"

"Why," said Marwood, with a cheery smile and with a peculiar twinkle of the eye, which showed how he realized the joke, "I did, and when they used to ask me where I had been, when I came back from the station with my little black bag, I said, 'On a little private business.'"

"Are you never nervous about this work of yours?" was another question put.

"England," he said, "does not send nervous men out for a job of this kind, and why should I be nervous? There is a judge and the jury, and then the Home Secretary, and, you may depend upon it, when a prisoner comes into my hands, he deserves his fate."

Marwood, be it noted, never talked about "hanging;" he always used the word "execution," and on his cards, which he printed himself from an india-rubber stamp, were the words, "William Marwood, executioner, Church-lane, Horncastle, Lincolnshire, England." The story is a true one that at an important international conference one of these cards was quietly slipped amongst the list of speakers, to the utter discomfiture of the gentlemen who received it. It may be taken for granted that three parts of the newspaper stories that appear about Marwood are untrue. He had a perfect hatred of newspaper men, and I should never have been on terms of intimacy with him had he known that I belonged to the Press." "Lying rascals," he used to term all reporters, and, as an illustration of this, he mentioned an incident in connection with the execution of Lefroy. The newspaper men, he said, thought that when he laid hold of Lefroy, after pinioning him, the prisoner was fainting. "All my eye," said Marwood; "Lefroy meant mischief, and if I had not had him by the belt I believe he would have given me a run round the yard." It was not an unusual thing for Marwood to receive an intimation that prisoners who were committed to his hands had declared that they would be dragged from the cells to the scaffold, and he was often advised to have an assistant, but, said he, "When I tap them on the shoulder they always come with me;" and, accordingly, he gave many prisoners confidence by the words which he whispered in their ears, which were, as he told me, that he would not hurt them, and it would soon be over. By the way, it was noticeable in all conversations I had with him, that he never referred to the execution of Dr. Lamson without making the remark that "the doctor died like a gentleman." Once or twice, persons I introduced to him were anxious to see the process of pinioning, and he would fasten his shop door, and produce his appliances. I have talked to people who have seen him at executions and who could not understand my description of him as a genial, jovial man. The explanation was to be found in the fact that as soon as he had his apparatus in his hand he appeared to become at once, even in his little shop, fiercely interested in his work. All his implements were of his own make; the belt which encircled the waist of the prisoner, and to which were attached the straps for the arms, was of peculiar strength, and where it met the buckle the eyelet holes were so close together that that they almost touched. With an amount of strength which would hardly have been anticipated from a glance at the man, he drew the strap to the very last eyelet, and then fastened the arms. "Now," said a friend, who had had been pinioned in this way, "where do you put the thimble of the rope?" "Well," replied Marwood, "that is one of the points, but if you will allow your head under my hands for a moment I will show you." There was a sudden gasp on the part of the person pinioned, and he asked Marwood not to do it any more.

The executioner was very angry at the attempts that were made by prison authorities generally to obtain from him the ropes with which prisoners were executed. Their object was, he said, to make a sort of museum, but he preferred to keep his own museum, and as has been before mentioned, the same rope served many culprits. Before every execution he had supplied to him very exact information as to the age, size, weight, and occupation of the prisoner with whom he had to deal, and probably he has taken to the grave the principle upon which he calculated the length of the drop, for he never would tell anybody. "They have asked me at the Home Office many a time," he said, "whether I am bringing up anybody else up to follow me, and when I think I am failing it will then be time enough to have an assistant."

There were many attempts to get a portrait of Marwood, but he always refused. An enterprising photographer offered him £50 one day for a sitting, but he declined, his explanation being that one of the things he enjoyed more than anything else was to go to a town by an earlier train than he was expected by and mix in the crowd that was awaiting Marwood. If his correspondence has been preserved it will be very curious. Quite recently he showed me a sword of a Japanese executioner, which had been sent to him by a gentleman from Brighton, and it was certainly of considerable intrinsic value. He had contemplated, he said, putting another storey on to his shop and making a kind of museum, where he could show his friends and neighbors the peculiar things he had collected during his experiences as an executioner. Once only he had an interview with Calcraft, and that was when a party of Americans, I believe, had asked to be allowed to visit old Calcraft. Marwood went with some official to ask Calfcraft if he would receive visitors. "A little wizen old man," was the description Marwood gave of his predecessor, whom I knew well; and when Calcraft was asked whether he would also see Marwood, he replied, not knowing that Marwood was present, that Marwood was the long-drop beggar, with whom he wanted to have nothing to do.

Marwood was a pious man, and there was a curious illustration of this upon one occasion, when he was asked what was the programme at an execution. Be it remembered that, in the opinion of the old hangman, the proceedings of the executioner on the fatal day were always of more importance in his view than were those of the culprit. "Well," said Marwood, "when I get out of bed I do what I don't do every day of my life—I kneel down quietly and ask God's blessing on the work that I have to do, and his mercy for the poor prisoner." Amongst his neighbors he was the mildest of men, and it was his love of company, in my opinion, more than any desire for notoriety that tempted him to make what was called an exhibition of himself at taverns near the gaols to which he had been summoned to do his direful duty. Certainly he was fond of a glass, but he used to declare that previous to the execution in Ireland, where a prisoner's arm caught in the rope, he never had a single slip, and never made the slightest mistake in his work. With regard to the Durham case, concerning which he was summoned to the Home Office immediately after the question had been put in Parliament, he stated that the prisoner fainted at the last moment, and this was the cause of the rope catching in his arm, and he was particularly careful to mention that at the inquest and satisfactorily clear himself. His opinion was in that in all future executions a warder should stand on each side of the prisoners on a plank extending over the drop, and the loose portion of the rope be tied up to the beam by a slight cord, which would give away with the weight of the body; and he declared that he should never undertake an execution again without these precautions being adopted.

Many of his Irish experiences were a source of great amusement to him, and an escort used to meet him at Chester and convey him across the Channel. The story told in the papers that, in answer to an inquiry from a constable, he had stated that if his son were an honest man he would bring him up to succeed his father, but if he were a rogue he would make him a policeman, was a pure fiction, for Marwood had no children. It will be remembered that after some of the early executions connected with the Phœnix Park assassinations Marwood had to proceed to Glasgow, and he related with great glee how an escort which was to accompany him to Glasgow were disappointed when they found that he declined their company, and that he intended to move about England with his little black bag without any protection whatever.

It was at Glasgow, while he was preparing the prisoner on the scaffold, that a letter was received by the governor of the gaol, which might have been a respite. The governor signalled to Marwood whilst he read the letter, and it was characteristic of the executioner's kindness of heart that he was careful not to allow the prisoner, by any cessation of his grim labors, to feel that any delay was taking place. The letter proved to be on other business, and the executioner proceeded. Marwood used to say he never visited a gaol without impressing on the authorities the importance of doing away with the old scaffold with its flight of steps, and substitute the pits, so that the prisoner, until he was under the beam, had no climbing to do. Referring once in a conversation to the arrangements at Kirkdale Gaol, he said with a touch of humor which was never absent from his talk, "Somebody will be killed coming up them stairs if they don't mind." The point of the joke will be appreciated when it is mentioned that the steps were never used but for the purposes of an execution.

The deceased hangman received very few threatening letters. The most remarkable is appended. The others were for the most part hoaxes, but on the original of this letter being sent to the Home Office and compared with other missives of a similar character which were found to have had their source among the Invincibles, the handwriting was said to be identical. It ran thus:—

"Dublin, 19th May, 1882.

"Marwood,—It was decided last night at a meeting of the secret association here to forward this communication to you, to the effect that no doubt you are longing intensely for the job to murder us here by your rope for the wilful murder of Burke and Cavendish. Well, don't be in a hurry, for, although we are all in Dublin, we are not caught yet, and not likely for this paltry ten thousand pounds. Should we be arrested and convicted, on the peril of your life you must not set your foot upon the soil of this city or any part of this country of Ireland; if you do you will never go out of it alive. You very narrowly escaped from Armagh the last time you were there, but you will not escape the next time you come over here, even should you have an escort; we shall manage the whole lot of you about right. We shall have revenge somehow, you may depend upon it, and this I tell you once and for all, so now beware. We know you; there can be no mistake in the carrying out of this resolution, so now you are cautioned. Your movements will be telegraphed here from the time you leave Horncastle until you get here, if you get so far under a false name and false business. We want no hangman in this country to carry out English law. Enough! Beware! From 'Jack of ——,' the murderers of Burke and Cavendish."—Liverpool Post.

A woman is always most busily engaged at packing a trunk when the expressman calls for it.

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,

Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

AMBER SUGAR CANE MACHINERY.

New Paragon School Desks.

M. BEATTY & SONS, Welland, Ont.

Early Amber Cane Seed imported from the Southern States. Send for catalogues and prices.

OAKLAWN FARM,

The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in the World.

Percheron-Norman Horses

WORTH $2,500,000.00

Imported from France and Bred since 1872, by

M. W. DUNHAM,

Wayne, Du Page Co., Illinois,

35 miles West of Chicago, on C. & N.-W. R'y.

Prices low for quality of stock, and EVERY STALLION GUARANTEED A BREEDER.

390 Imported the Past Three Months, consisting of finest animals, with choicest pedigrees, Registered in the Percheron Stud Book of France, and the Percheron-Norman Stud Book of the United States. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue No. 20.

BLACKSMITHS' BELLOWS

ANVILS, VICES

PORTABLE FORGES,

BABBET METAL,

The largest assortment in the Dominion.

William Darling & Co.,

HARDWARE MERCHANTS,

MONTREAL, P.Q.

Wm. J. McMASTER & CO.

Invite the attention of Merchants visiting Toronto, to their large and well-assorted stock of

Staple and Fancy Dry-Goods, now complete in every department.

NEW GOODS JUST ARRIVED.

Black and Colored Silk Velvets—Extra Value.
Black Gros Grain Silks,
Black Ottoman Silks,
Black Duchess Satins.

Large Assortment of Knitted Shawls, Hoods & Clouds.

Gents' Furnishings in Great Variety.

Letter Orders Solicited. Write for Samples.

Wm. J. McMASTER & CO.

41 FRONT ST., WEST, TORONTO.

THE GREAT CURE FOR

RHEUMATISM

And all complaints of a Rheumatic nature.

RHEUMATINE is not a sovereign remedy for "all the ills that flesh is heir to," but for NEURALGIA, SCIATICA, RHEUMATISM, and complaints of Rheumatic nature.

IT IS A SURE CURE

Sold by all druggists. The Rheumatine Manufacturing Co., Niagara Falls, Ont. Messrs. Northrop & Lyman, Wholesale Agts., Toronto.

THE OILOGRAPH!

A Wonderful Triumph of Art and Genius.

OVER 200,000 SOLD BY AGENTS IN ONE YEAR!

A New and Beautiful Process of Portrait Painting. An Oil Painting of Yourself for only $3.00. A New Field of Labor for Clergymen, Ladies, School Teachers, Agents, and in Fact any one of Ability and Energy.

The Oilograph is a Discovery of great importance to the world of art, and by its superior and marvellous cheapness is destined to supersede all other methods of oil painting. No pen can do justice to this beautiful process of reproducing the human face and form in perfection. Neither can we minutely describe the process by which these beautiful portraits are made, but will endeavor to give you a faint idea of the wonderful OILOGRAPHS. An ordinary photograph, tin type, or picture of any kind when first received is enlarged upon a Silver plate by a powerful Camera; it has then a beautiful and delicate background painted in by hand: after this a first class artist paints the Eyes, Hair, Skin, etc., giving to the picture a most beautiful and lifelike appearance, when it is finally finished and toned down and the last softening touches are given. After the artist has finished, it is handed to the framer, who puts on a splendid mat which sets off the picture wonderfully; then an elegant frame with glass and back is put on so that when finished it is as fine a picture as will be found in almost any drawing-room in the land. Do not imagine we have over-drawn the description. We have been very careful to say exactly the truth and no more.

To Agents.—You have a splendid field before you. The rich as well as the poor buy these pictures. They are within the reach of the poor as well as the rich. Every mother will want pictures of her little ones; every husband of his wife; ever wife of her husband; every lover of his sweetheart; and last, but not least, every family will have some beautiful portrait of their dear lost ones. This meets the want long felt and we have agents who send us in as high as 100 pictures at one time. All you need to canvas with is a small original photograph and the splendid Oilograph enlarged from it, handsomely framed. The moment people see the little picture, and the beautiful large Oilograph, they recognize the merit of it at once, and your sale is made.

Directions.—When you order send photograph (the best you have), in a letter, with postage fully prepaid; or, if you wish to commence work canvassing at once we will send you sample all complete, which is the best plan (framed and ready to hang up), of some of our best specimens, for only $3.00.

It always takes a few days to make a nice Oilograph, especially in damp weather, as it takes time to dry the Oil Colors.

Color of Hair and Eyes, when not clearly indicated in the small picture, should be written in your instructions.

Bad Originals, faded, imperfect, or any of the many defects liable, can generally be satisfactorily removed, but remember it is always best to send just as good an original as it is possible to secure.

Deceased People.—We make a specialty of doing everything possible to make a fine Oilograph of people that are dead, and when the original was taken after death, we can make the eyes open in the Oilograph, and many other changes that are required.

Groups.—When two or three are originally taken together, we make them without extra charge. We can also separate any picture from the group, making the Oilograph only from the person you designate.

Separate Originals can, if of the same size, be generally put together in one Oilograph, but this we cannot promise for certain until we see them.

Alterations.—We can generally make any changes required, such as removing a hat (but this is not advisable unless you give full particulars as to style of hair, etc.,) also changing color of dress, etc.

Low Prices.—We employ first class artists, and pay them well to do good work only. Remember, good work cannot be done for less. Imitators may counterfeit our circulars, and offer lower prices, but their patrons sooner or later pay dear for their whistle. We strive to please and know how to do it.

Take Notice.—There are a number of parties in the country who are trying to imitate our Oilographs, and are sending out very inferior goods. Now, we wish it understood that we are the pioneers of this business. Therefore, if you want a business that will pay you from $50.00 to $75.00 per month, take hold of this business in earnest and you will accomplish it. We do not exaggerate when we say that you can make $5.00 per day. Others are doing it, and why not you? If you take hold of this business we want you to give it the whole of your attention and work. If you do this you will thank us for sending you this circular, and we shall have the pleasure of adding you to our large army of active and successful agents. We allow agents to make their own price in taking orders for these pictures, but most of them charge $3.50, all framed, complete.

Testimonials.—There are hundreds of testimonials speaking in highest terms of praise and satisfaction. Some say, "We had not much faith that your Oilographs were really as represented, but we are very happily disappointed." Another says, "I do not see how it is possible for you to do so much for so little money." An agent writes, "The people are delighted. I have over forty orders on hand, all taken this week, and if I only had a little more capital I could make a big thing on them, and am well satisfied as it is." Another agent sent us seventy-one pictures within two weeks.

Prices as follows: Sample Oilographs, size of picture 8x10, in a splendid Black polish and Gold frame, size 14x16, beautifully engraved and decorated with a heavy gold interior to frame, $3.00. After the first order is received, $2.00 each. No discount from above prices. Our work is all done in Oil and no one can do good work cheaper. Splendid watch and chain free when your orders amount to $50.00. No one else offers this.

Special Notice.—Orders for a sample Oilograph must be accompanied with cash, $3.00. After first order we will ship C.O.D., provided one-third the amount is sent.

JAS. LEE & CO., MONTREAL, P.Q.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

FIVE MINUTES SELECT READING.

Summary of Foreign, Domestic, and War Items.—Pithy, Concise and Pointed.

The foot-and-mouth disease is spreading among the cattle in Ireland to an alarming extent.

The Emperor William, the Crown Prince, King Alfonso, and King Milan have arrived at Hamburg.

The cholera victims in Ezypt since the outbreak of the present epidemic, up to Aug. 26th, numbered 26,597.

A terrible hurricane has occurred at Mas- Many houses were blown down. Fifty vessels were wrecked, and sixty lives were lost.

It is stated that Mr. Parnell has selected Mr. Edward McMahon as the candidate of the Home Rulers to contest the election for Parliament for Limerick.

Despatches from Australia exhibit the highest indignation at the conduct of the Government with regard to the New Guinea and Pacific Islands.

Mr. Gladstone's visit to Copenhagen has produced a deep impression at Vienna, and may lead to the modification of certain points of the Austro-German policy.

Efforts are being made to obtain the services of Mr. Charles Russell, M.P., to lead the defence of O'Donnell. A Central Committee is being formed to obtain funds.

A Vienna despatch says the American Minister to China has joined with the English representative in urging China to come to an understanding with France.

A Constantinople despatch says a box of dynamite was recently discovered within the precinct of the Yildzkiosk, the residence of the Sultan. A Circassian has been exiled.

The Italian barque Fratelli Gaggino, from Dunkirk for Darien, has been in collision with an unonowa steamer. Both vessels foundered, but the crews were saved.

A Berlin despatch says Mr. Gladstone's expected meeting with the Czar is regarded as of the first importance. Vienna newspapers attribute political motives to his visit to Copenhagen.

A great struggle between capital and labor in the Lancashire cotton trade is expected. The operatives will resist a reduction of wages, which the masters consider the condition of trade renders necessary.

A Paris despatch says:—It is reported that the memorandum of the French proposals upon the Tonquin question, which the Marquis Tseng telegraphed recently to Pekin, have not proved acceptable to the Chinese Government.

The Duke and Duchess of Teck have left England, and intend to live in retirement in Germany, where they can economise. Their apartment in Kensington Palace have been placed at the disposal of the Marquis of Lorne and the Princess Louise.

A Melbourne despatch says: Kavanagh, Hanlon, Smith, and the other Irish informers in the Phœnix Park murder trials, who arrived here but were not permitted to land, have been reshipped to Europe.

Col. Clibborn, of the Salvation Army, has been expelled from Geneva, and Miss Booth, a member of the Army, is imprisoned at Neufchatel for violating the order prohibiting them from holding meetings.

It is stated that during the bombardment at Tamatave, Missionary Shaw's residence was looted, and he was threatened with punishment by the French officials because he failed to remove the debris caused by ransacking his house.

The British ship Oxford, from New York, with a full cargo of petroleum, has been burned at her dock at Havre. The steward of the vessel was caught in the flames, and his body entirely consumed. The balance of the crew escaped.

The Narodroja Wolja, a Nihilist organ, is being secretly printed in St. Petersburg. Reviewing the work of Count Tolstoi, Minister of the Interior, it says: "The continuance of a similar policy cannot be tolerated. The days of Tolstoi the hangman are numbered.

There are now seven Chinese gunboats moored alongside the English and French men-of-war at Canton. Placards were posted on the walls of Canton recently threatening the destruction of all European property if the Government decides that an indemnity shall be paid for the damage done during the recent riots.

English journals ridicule the idea that the purpose of Mr. Gladstone's visit to Copennagen was to form a coalition against the Austro-German alliance. They declare there is no political purpose to effect, and say that if Mr. Gladstone had any object of this nature it was simply the exercise of a moral influence in favour of peace.

The Association for the Advancement of Science has been discussing the condition of the English cotton trade. The general opinion was that England had nothing to fear from foreign competition. Sir William Wheelpouse ascribed the commercial depression to the operation of free trade laws. He advocated a return to a protective tariff.

A Rome despatch says:—An enormous crowd witnessed the ceremonies attending the commemoration of the entry of the Italian troops into Rome in 1875. The Syndic, alluding to the King's visit to Vienna, said the ancient enmity between Austria and Italy had changed to sincere friendship. The Syndic then placed a wreath on the tomb of Victor Emmanuel.

At Big Cattle ranche, N. M., Joel Fowler met Ponby Forest and Bill Childs, against whom he had a grudge. Forest and Childs commenced firing, and Fowler shot Childs dead. Forest ran into a house occupied by Mr. McGee. McGee asked him to come out, when Forest fired, killing McGee and Fowler. He then set fire to the house and put a ball through his own heart. All three were buried in the same grave.

A Paris despatch says:—The Diplomatic Gazette's London correspondent says the Austro-German alliance is directed against Russia and France. In the event of war between Germany and France, Austria is to maintain an armed neutrality. In the event of war between Austria and Russia, Germany is to do likewise. If a third power attacks Germany or Austria, this armed neutrality will be converted into active co-operation.

At a banquet at Grossardin, Hungary, recently, Herr Tisze, the Hungarian Premier, said the Croatian question would not be solved by street riots. It was necessary first to restore order, and then the Diet would co-operate with the local authorities by adopting equitable and conciliatory measures. Jew-baiting affected the honor of the Fatherland, and the Government was bound to protect the lives and property of all citizens, regardless of class prejudice.

A recent wedding at Erie, Pa., culminated in a probable tragedy. While the marriage service was in progress three brothers, Ferdinand, Charles, and William Weber, entered uncalled for, and grossly insulted the bridal party. Being turned into the street the Webers waited until the newly married couple, Mr. and Mrs. A. Thaler, left for the train on their wedding trip. They stabbed the groom with knives, and beat his wife's face with stones until the young woman was unrecognizable. All three are in gaol awaiting the result of Mr. and Mrs. Thaler's wounds.

OUR WELL-WORN EARTH.

The Never-Ceasing Changes on Land and in the Sea.

That the falling drop will wear away the stone, is a saying which few adult persons have not been able to verify by observation; but it is not so generally understood that falling drops of rain will wear away a mountain or wash away a continent. Rain, frost and ice have ground down the summits of the loftiest mountains: and there are few high peaks now in existence which have not been much higher, and which are not being steadily levelled by atmospheric agencies. In colder climates solid glacier rivers, are also found, which moving imperceptibly, but with irresistible force, hollow out valleys and grind down the superincumbent rocks. The sea also devours the land rapidly. Furthermore, innumerable rivers, streams and springs are perpetually loosening the soil, rasping down the rocks with sand, and bearing off billions of tons of solid matter to the sea bottom, where the whole mass is squeezed by the terrific hydraulic pressure into stone, marble or solid strata of some kind. The Mississippi alone carries annually to the sea 812,500,000,000 pounds of mud. All the habitable land of the globe is being continually ground and washed away—planed down to the ocean-level; while the sea-bottom is being as steadily filled up. The deposit of foraminiferal shells alone—not including other remains—is sufficient aa Huxley has calculated, to create a bed of limestone in the bottom of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans 800 feet thick supposing these oceans to have existed for only 100,000 years.

Were it not for internal forces the time would come when all existing land would be leveled with the ocean, and thereafter planed down still further by the action of the waters, so that the entire globe would be a shoreless ocean. The coral islands would form no exception; for the coral-builders cannot live above water, nor could their islands ever have reached the surface but for subterranean upheavals. Thus the tendency of the world's crust is to become uniformly smooth and level, and to surround itself with an envelope of water. But within the earth enormous forces are constantly at work to counteract this tendency—forces which manifest themselves in volcanic action, seismic action and in other and even more mysterious actions.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Luther as a Preacher.

In the October Century Professor George P. Gisher, of Yale, says: "For moving eloquence in the pulpit no one excelled Luther. He not only knew how to preach, but he could tell the secret to others. One defect, he observes, may eclipse numerous gifts in a preacher. 'Dr. Justus Jonas has all the good virtues and qualities a man may have; yet merely because he hums and spits, the people cannot bear that good and honest man. Let a preacher stick to his text and not ramble: "A preacher that will speak everything that comes in his mind is like a maid that goes to market, and, meeting another maid, makes a stand, and they hold a goose-market.' He despised the hunger for applause: 'Ambition is the rank-poison to the Church, when it possesses preachers.' 'Cursed are all preachers that in the Church aim at high and loud things, and, neglecting the saving health of the poor, unlearned people, seek their own honor and praise, and therewith to please one or two ambitious persons. When I preach, I sink myself deep down. I regard neither doctors nor magistrates, of whom are here in this church above forty; but I have an eye to the multitude of young people, children, and servants, of whom are more than two thousand. I preach to these, directing myself to them that have need thereof. Will not the rest hear me? The door stands open unto them; they may begone.' 'An upright, godly, and true preacher should direct his preaching to the poor, simple sort of people, like a mother that still her child, dandles, and plays with it,' etc. 'When they come to me, to Melanchthon, to Dr. Pommer, etc., let them show their cunning, how learned they be; they shall be well put to their trumps. But to sprinkle out Hebrew, Greek, and Latin in their public sermons savors merely of show,' etc."

Why the Editor Couldn't Write the Truth.

"How is it you can tell such whoppers?" asked a caller addressing the editor of the fish story department.

"Well, you see," replied the editor, "our wife's name is Anna."

"What has that to do with it?"

"A good deal. When we are writing fish stories we usually have Anna nigh us to help us."

The caller was carried to the hospital.—Somerville Journal.

A TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE.

Taking a Team Over the Kinzua Bridge in Utter Darkness.

Mr. William Batterson, a business man of Buffalo, travelling in the Kinzua district of Pennsylvania a few nights since with his family, lost his way in one of the forests of that mountainous region. His story is a remarkable one. The night was very cold, and Mrs. Batterson and the children began to suffer from the chilly air, as they were not clad with the expectation of being out long after nightfall. Mr. Batterson found an old railroad lantern in the carriage, and, lighting it, he prospected through the woods in the hope of finding a road which would lead them out of the woods. There was none to be found. About a hundred yards ahead of where he left the carriage he came out upon a railroad track. This was the track of the Erie Railway's Bradford branch or Johnsonburg extension. Feeling that neither his wife nor children could stand a night of exposure in the mountains he resolved to drive along the railroad track, notwithstanding the great danger that attended such a course, in the hope of coming to some road crossing the track or some station near by. He did not know what railroad it was, nor what the chances were of trains coming along before he might reach a place of safety. His wife was willing to take the risk with him, and he led the horse out upon the track. He then walked ahead with the light, and his wife drove the horse along over the ties after him. On either side were the woods and high banks. There was no way to escape should a train appear. They had proceeded nearly a mile without finding any crossing or place where they might turn out. Then Mr. Batterson took his wife and children from the carriage, so that they might climb the bank or get into the woods away from danger if a train was heard approaching. He led the horse, and they followed on foot by the side of the track. After proceeding in this way for a hundred yards or so, they came to a bridge, on one side of which was a narrow plank walk, the railroad track occupying the remainder of the bridge. This was which spans a ravine at the bottom of which flows the Kinzua Creek. This bridge is the highest in the world, being 303 feet above the creek. It is nearly half a mile long. Mr. Batterson and his family were now in a situation the peril of which was too apparent, and the uncertainty of which filled them with terror. They were entirely ignorant as to where the bridge would lead them if they ventured to cross it, but knew it was madness to remain where they were. Mr. Batterson at last determined to attempt the crossing, trusting to Providence for the result. He succeeded in getting his horse on the footpath. The wheels on one side of the carriage extended over on to the track and bumped on the ties. Mr. Batterson at first suggested abandoning the horse and carriage, but his wife would not hear of it, taking the ground that their presence on the track might lead to a disaster on the railroad. The horse was led slowly forward on the bridge and Mrs. Batterson and the children followed close behind the carriage. A high wind was blowing down the valley, and it was with difficulty that they could keep their feet. They had proceeded on their way only a short distance when a sudden gush of wind extinguished the lantern. It was impossible to relight it in the gale that was blowing, and they were compelled to grope their way onward in the darkness. They crossed the bridge in safety, and, if they had known it, really placed themselves in greater peril, for trains pass over the bridge at a very slow rate of speed, and can be stopped almost immediately.

THE GREAT KINZUA VIADUCT,

When Mr. Batterson and his family left the bridge they entered a deep rock cut made for the track, and were wrapped in still greater darkness. A train coming upon them in the cut would have crushed them all to death, for there would have been no escape. That they were not ground to pieces in that way was owing to the fact that a coal train that was due at the cut at the very time Batterson and his family were stumbling and feeling their way through it was detained a mile below by a hot journal. The party emerged from the cut and discovered the light at Palen's Switch, a small station a short distance below, just as this coal train whistled for the station. The horse and carriage was turned from the track into the road leading alongside of it to the station, and Mrs. Batterson and her children had reached a place of safety just as the train rushed by and thundered into the cut. A delay of one minute in making their way through the passage would have been fatal to the entire party. When the full force of the peril to which they had been exposed and the narrow escape they had made broke upon her, Mrs. Batterson fainted away. Mr. Batterson himself was so unnerved that it was some time before he could summon aid. They found shelter at Sweet's boarding-house at the station, where all were soon revived. They ascertained that Howard's Hill was only four miles from the station. In spite of the terrible experience through which they had passed and the lateness of the hour, Mrs. Batterson was anxious to proceed to their destination, which they did, reaching the settlement safely about midnight.

The Roar of London.

W. J. Stillman says, in the October Century, in his essay on the "Characteristics of London": "As I write, sitting by my study window, full five miles from the city proper, I hear the roar of the traffic like the sea on a rocky shore—the rush of incessant trains along the iron ways, the rumble of myriads of drays along hundreds of miles of stone-paved streets (for which wood is now being in part substituted), each no more to the general symphony than the hum of a gnat in the sounds of a summer day—a volume of sound unintermitting from dawn till dark. Yet I am bowered in green trees, with cowslip and daisy-flecked fields spread out under my eyes—not a spire, not a chimney-stack of the metropolis visible; and the carols of larks and thrushes, the song of the nightingale, run through the web of sounds like gold and silver threads through a dingy fabric, with the twitter of scores of sparrows like tiny spangles thrown on at random. Out of the monotone dashes the individual roar of a nearer train, the scream of a whistle, and the roar dies away again in the sullen monody. This is audible London."

A Red Indian Conquered by Sheep.

"An Apache, in full war paint, stalked into an Indian school at Albuquerque, N. M., one day. The children were immediately terrified, and tremblingly told us he was a 'bad Indian.' They said an uncle of one of the boys had killed his brother and they feared he had come for revenge. As it was dinner-time I saw nothing better to do than have the children marched into the dining room, as usual. We keep open house to Indians at all times and treat them as distinguished guests, so I motioned to our Apache to take a seat at the table. He sat down, terrible in his war paint, and laid two loaded revolvers on the table before him. The children began to tremble. I summoned all my courage and said: 'Put those revolvers on the window.' The Apache never moved. The cook placed before him a cup of coffee and a bowl of soup. 'Take away that coffee and soup,' I commanded, with my heart in my mouth, and adding, to the Indian: 'You shall not have them until you put these revolvers on the window.' Trembling for her life, the cook obeyed. When the Apache saw his dinner removed he deliberately arose, picked up his revolvers and—shall I ever forget that terrible moment?—quietly laid them on the window. His dinner was restored to him; he ate it in silence, and then picked up his property, and walked out without a word.

"I did not see him again for years. But this last time, on my way home, as I was waiting in the train at Santa Fe, my terrible Apache, in all his feathers and war-paint, got into the car and walked its whole length, as if looking for some one. My blood ran cold. He stopped beside me, gave a grunt of satisfaction, and broke into smiles. Then nothing would do but I must vigorously shake hands. He then left the car, and returned with a dozen other braves, as horrible as himself. He introduced them all, and all must shake hands."—Harriet Phillips, in Philadelphia Times.

English and French Women

The French are very fond of decrying the women of our country as a flat chested, long-membered, large-footed race, awkward in gait, ill-dressed or overdressed, unlearned in the elementary rules of that important matter, the dressing of the hair, and incapable of harmonizing colors, says a writer in the London Standard. These criticisms are ill-natured and exaggerated, but nevertheless a good many grains of truth underlie them. Take a London and a Parisian shop-girl as an example. The former has generally the advantage over the latter in clearness of complexion and in comeliness, yet she loses by the comparison. She is neither so becomingly dressed nor so careful to suit the color of her dress to her complexion, nor so neatly shod; and, above all, she seems to be ignorant of the resources an abundant head of hair affords her as a frame to an attractive youthful countenance. The horrible, barbarous fashion of cutting the hair short, which obtains no favour in France, prevails, I observed with real regret, to a considerable extent in London, and, when the scissors have not been ruthlessly applied to masculinize the female head, there seems to be a deplorable want of taste displayed in the arrangement of their tresses by London girls. Those I met out, those I saw behind the counter, appeared to have a peculiar penchant for screwing their hair up into tight, ugly little knots, singularly ungraceful—so I thought, at all events, fresh from the sight of Parisienne heads. The appearance of the London nurse-maid also contrasted unfavorably with that of the French bonne. I do not refer to the elite of the calling in either country, but to the ordinary middle-class nurse-girl or bonne, such as one meets with in Kensington gardens or in the Tuileries. Perhaps the tasty cap worn by the latter, with its meter and a half of broad ribbon streamers behind, gives her an advantage; perhaps she holds herself better, or pays more attention to her general appearance. Whatever may be the cause, the result undoubtedly is that the eye rests with more pleasure upon a group of French nurses gathered together with their charges in a public garden than upon a similar group in a London park. To sum up my impression concerning London women of the middle or lower classes, they seemed, as a Frenchman would put it, vetues, not habillees—clothed, not dressed.

A hardy postboy, with a bare throat, was driving his vehicle along an exposed road in the teeth of a biting wind. A passenger suggested, as the driver had no neckcloth of any sort, that he should at least fasten his shirt at the neck with a pin. "A pin!" was the reply; "sure there's no hate in a pin!"

Lord Chancellor Hadwick's bailiff, having been ordered by his lady to procure a sow of a particular description, came one day into the dining-room when full of company proclaiming, with a burst of joy he could not suppress, "I have been at Royston Fair, my lady, and have got a sow exactly of your ladyship's size."

A young lady who recently started out as a fashion writer has determined to quit journalism. She mentioned in an article on ladies' fashions that "skirts are worn very much shorter this year than usual." The young lady is certainly justified in being angry with the careless compositor who changed the "i" in skirts to an "h."

A travelling man, noticing a pretty girl alone in the car, went over in her direction and smilingly asked:—"Is this seat engaged, miss?" "No, sir; but I am, and he's going to get on at the next station," "Oh—ah—indeed—thanks—beg pardon—" and he picked up his feet after stumbling over them, and went into the smoking car to be alone awhile.

In the great cities of the Western States the gamblers seem to hold sway. It is a notorious fact that the present Mayor of Chicago is a great champion of the gambling interests, and his election was carried in spite of the strongest efforts of the better class of citizens to the contrary. News now comes from St. Louis that the Vice-President of the Police Board has resigned on account of the powerful efforts of the gamblers to get control of the Board and nullify the effect of the new law against gambling. The fact that he has resolved to step down and out is a pretty good indication that he finds resistance to the gamblers too great an effort to persist in. The foreign element constantly being introduced in the United States cities on such a large scale by immigration, is attended with great moral danger to the people.

GENERAL.

The United States official returns show that about one-third of all the immigrants arriving are from Germany, while those from Ireland are much less than from several other trans-Atlantic countries. In several of the western states, or in larger portions of them, the German population is now in a majority over all others, and many of the institutions bear more the complexion of the German than of the American. The Germans do not assimilate as rapidly as some other people. One of the future dangers of the American Republic, as it now stands, probably lies in the fact that there is such a vast German population.

The grave clericals of the Methodist Church now in conference assembled at Belleville have their occasional humors much like other mortals. One day last week Dr. Steuart, of Nova Scotia, moved for an all-night session, and the President took no notice of it. When the President's attention was called to the fact he apologized by saying he supposed the motion was intended as a mere joke. The dignified doctor assured conference that he depreciated the idea of committing a joke on them, whereupon another delegate ventured to blurt out his opinion that it would be no joke to have an all-night session such as was proposed.

An unusual case has just come to light from Kingston. A Forwarding Company of that city, of which Mr. A. Gunn, M. P., is president, was exempt, with some others, from municipal tax by the action of the City Council, and they have actually made the announcement that it is not their intention to accept of any such exemptions, but to pay their fair share of the municipal expenses along with others doing business and making profits in the same city. It is now in order for others to speak, but where are the others to come from? If corporations have not souls to save or bodies to kick, it is evident that some of them have at least a fair sense of business honor about them.

A FALLING OFF.—There seems to be a falling off in the demand for liquors in the United States as well as in England. The Chicago Signal says that a wealthy German business man of that city has just gone out of the liquor business for another branch business. His reasons for doing so are that the business is now "dreadfully demoralized." Many of the Western distillers are running at only one quarter of their capacity, and yet the market is overstocked. Many saloon keepers are ready to sell out, but nobody is willing to buy them out. This, he says, is owing partly to overproduction in Kentucky, and partly to the fact that "the temperance folks have made a big hole in the business."

It is a great thing to be a great man and a self-made one at that. It is fine and consoling to be told that Jay Gould was a rat-catcher, and Wm. Vanderbilt an unsuccessful farmer, with a great many similar facts intended to be stimulating and wonderful. But after all can it be said that any of those whose names are thus trotted out are really great? Not much. There are successful men every where who have started with as little as any of those supposedly big folks, and have made life better and brighter though not so full of gold and silver. How many of the leading people of Toronto were at one time dreadfully poor? Most of them. But their money is not their chief claim and distinction. At least it ought not. It is awfully difficult to make a money grabbing life sublime. Indeed it "can't be did."

In Ottawa an attempt is being made to require the members of the Civil Service to pay their fair share of the city's tax along with the rest of the inhabitants. They are determined to evade any such burdens if at all possible, throwing the entire amount of it on those not so well favored with a good "sit." Last week more than two hundred of these gentry assembled and bound themselves together "to protect their interests," and they are determined to fight it out in the courts. Of course they would be among the first to find fault if the streets and walks are not in the best condition, and the police system the most efficient. All these things cost money and require taxes and why should not Government officials bear their fair share of the burdens if they are to enjoy their full share of their advantage? This question of exemptions must yet be more equitably arranged in some way.

Even in the agricultural districts of the United States immigrants are not now looked upon with anything like the old-time favor. The people begin to feel that the country is so filled up that nearly all really valuable farming lands will be needed by themselves or by their children. Much of the unoccupied lands of the western territories are barren and worthless, and much land now occupied is not worth the cultivation. So soon as it becomes pretty evident that the good lands are all needed by present residents the party platforms will recognize the fact. In addition to the cry "the Chinese must go," will be added that of "other people must not come." That day is evidently hastening. It is many years ago that Thomas Jefferson said: "We shall get along well enough so long as we have plenty of land on which to put the increased population; but when population begins to overflow we shall eat one another as they do in Europe." America will be a much harder country for the poor than Europe as soon as there becomes a surplus population.

JOHN BRIGHT'S POSITION.—The Union says:—"The Hon. John Bright has at last committed himself to the principle of local option and control. In an address at Birmingham, a few weeks since, he gave it as his idea that the public sentiment of a place should have the control of the license question for that particular locality through elective representatives, changeable with the public opinion of the place; and that publicans who obtain licenses are entitled to have their property and their licenses acknowledged and protected, and not subject, ed to the whims of officials appointed stationary in their offices, and having no real local interest in most of the questions of licenses decided by them. The main thought running through the entire address was that local communities should be intrusted, as far as possible with their own local self-government, and should be controlled as little as possible by non-residents, or non-local elective officials."

The Standard.

MARKDALE, SEPT. 27TH, 1883.

THE CROPS.

We met a farmer last week while out from home, and in conversation naturally made enquiries in regard to the damage done by the frost on the night of the 9th Sept. He said every thing was destroyed, the grain is frozen, the potatoes are killed, the garden stuff is ruined; you would imagine that starvation stared him in the face, he could not see how they were going to worry through, didn't understand how it was that farmers had to work so hard the year round and then have all their prospects blighted in one night. A long breath of relief escaped almost unnoticed by us when we quietly slipped away in hopes of encountering a more hopefull person next time. Soon we were in conversation with another farmer, and of course directed our questions towards what we thought would interest him most, but oh! what a difference in his tone, he said in reference to the late frost, that it had no doubt done considerable damage, yet, said he, we have no reason to complain, the hay was an enormous crop and saved in fine condition, the season was favorable for dairying and butter was a fair price, he never saw beef and mutton a better price, eggs were very high this season, potatoes which were planted in anything like good season had come to maturity before the frost and were an excellent crop, and excepting late grain, the damage done by the frost was not serious, and taking the season as a whole farmers had no reason to grumble or complain but rather be thankfull. We have heard it remarked, there is as much difference in some people as there is in anybody. If there is any one to be pitied more than another we think it is the grumbling whining fault finding discontented person; they can never be happy themselves while they make every one miserable around them. We believe the remarks of farmer No. 2 are about right in regard to the general outlook of the season and that the results of the seasons operations will be on the whole satisfactory and fully up to the average.

THE INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.

The Toronto Industrial Exhibition has been a success each year since established, but this year has eclipsed all former ones in number of entries, quality of the exhibits, amount of receipts and in the various attractions. The first week large numbers from far and near made it a point to be present at the formal opening it being the last visit of the Marquis of Lorne and Princess before leaving for England, the day however was the most disagreable during the whole fair owing to the down pour of rain. The second week however was exceedingly favourably the weather was all that could be desired throughout. Many a thousand were hindered from attending on account of the late harvest yet the whole inclosure, being 62 acres, presented a grand appearance and was one moving mass of people, some 140,000 people visited the grounds and the gate receipts were over $30,000,000.

Osprey.

From our own Correspondent.

The Feversham mills are undergoing repairs.

D. C. McFarlane is doing a tremendous business at McIntyre.

The grain here is nearly all cut, and all that is required to have it safely gathered is about a week of fine weather.

The Rev. L. Hall, who was the Primitive Methodist minister at Feversham for the last five years, is giving up the ministry with the view of commencing business as a general store keeper.

It is generally acknowledged that the frost on the 9th of this month destroyed over 70 per cent of the best crop of spring wheat ever seen in the Township and about 20 per. cent of the oat crop.

A Nottawasaga man walked from his own town, last Sabboth morning, to Singhampton a distance of five miles to get a single glass of whiskey, but could not get it. He then walked to McIntyre a distance of four miles but Neil was too well brought up to sell on Sunday, and so the poor man started for Badgeros 6 miles further where he got what he wanted, a long walk for a drink 15 miles.

The arbitrators recently appointed by the County Council to form a new school section in Osprey, were successful as far as the formations of section was concerned, but were very unsuccessful in suiting the majority of those more particularly affected. To form this new S. S. from the Winters S. S. 1,400 acres are taken on the 2nd and 3rd concessions; from the Maxwell S. S. 1,400 are taken on the 4th and 5th cons., and 800 acres on the 6th and 7th cons. from the McIntyre S. S.; 1,000 acres are taken on the 4th and 5th and 200 on the 2nd and 3rd., and from what is knoweh as the Morrison S. S. 800 acres are taken on the 6th and 7th. The new school house will probebly be built 2½ or 3 miles west of McIntyre on the 4th concession.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

FLESHERTON, Sept. 24, 1883.

To Editor STANDARD.

SIR—In looking over Mr. Fawcett's comment upon my last letter in the STANDARD, I was never more forcibly struck with the truth of the old adage "It is easier to argue with a stateman than a fool." It is a wretched fusion of suppositions, hints, insinuatione, misstatements, misrepresentations and silly repetitions in which he has not established a single point, and concludes by saying, "this is all we have to say about W. G. Pickell." Mr. Fawcett persists in saying that I used threats, which I say is utterly false. In the matter of selling stock for more than the price paid, I wish Mr. Fawcett to understand that I don't buy feed and sell stock for amusement, I do it to make money and think ten dollars made on a beast which in the rising market of last spring was nothing unusual; muchmore honorable than serving up scandal once a week for fifty-two consecutive weeks to ten disgusted families for the paltry sum of ten dollars. Furthermore, prices of stock bought in an open market are never supposed to be a secret, as the most casual thinker will readily see, therefore there has been no hidden thing of darkness brought to light through his valuable columns. Mr. Fawcett darkly hints at my business transactions which he calls "getting into scrapes." I challenge him right here to give the facts in detail of any case which he assumes to know about, and not hints, or parts, but a full account of those things, and deduct from them anything mean or dishonorable on my part. I challenge Mr. Fawcett on this ground particularly, and will meet him on any ground for an explanation. Mr. Fawcett claims that he never meddled with my character; he has done so from the very first when he allowed "True Charity" to appear in his columns without a name, and he has continued to do so ever since. I don't think he knows when he does meddle with a man's character. He jealously guards his rights as a journalist of which I think he has a very vague idea. I ask him had he any right to allow anyone under an assumed name to make charges against me before he knew whether a wrong had been done which has never yet been proven nor can be. I ask him further, had he any right when I justly indignant, dropped his paper, to continue to publicly insult me. I also wish to know where "the depth of meanness" lay in my letter in the STANDARD. Mr. Fawcett wants to know how I could afford to treat such charges with contempt as those made by "Grazier." I wish him to know that I am no adventurer in this place, and can well afford to treat such a charge coming from such a source through such a paper, with supreme contempt, and were it not that Mr. Fawcett has hitherto got fools' pardon for his many personal insults given through his paper during his short career as a journalist in Flesherton, I would treat him in like manner. He seems to have yet to learn that other men have rights as well a journalist. My short letter—the only one I ever stooped to make through his paper on the subject of "True Charity," contained all that we meant and we ask his readers if they thought it scurrilous?" Mr. Editor, the people of Flesherton claim at least to be a fairly moral and intelligent community. Our mails come to us daily and weekly laden with the leading papers religious and secular. We read, our families read those papers, not trashy literature, and I take upon me this far to "interfere with Mr. Fawcett's right as a journalist" to say that if he as an editor hopes to succeed amongst us he must understand his position better and raise the moral tone of his paper to a higher standard, not the kind of reading matter that he has given to his readers generally, particularly in the last few weeks. In conclusion, I wish to remind Mr. Fawcett that his readers are waiting patiently for another lengthy editorial which should have appeared after his issue of the 20th ult., when he was waited upon by a number of the leading men of our village, some threatening to withdraw their support others telling him plainly his paper was not fit to come into a family. I think his idea of his rights as a journalist were interfered with on that occasion, and the even tenor of his way he is so determined to pursue was slightly disturbed. Trusting you will bear with me for occupying so much valuable space in your columns.

Yours respectfully,

W. G. PICKELL.

District Dashes.

Mt. Forest is to have a debating society.

A lodge of C. C. O. F. was organized in Holland Centre recently.

Thirty eight students are attending the Mt. Forest Model School.

The corner stone of a new English Church was laid in Mt. Forest recently.

Mr. Thos. Scott, ex-M. P. P., died at his residence Owen sound, on the 17th inst.

Mr. Crane who died last week in Owen Sound was a member of the A. O. U. W. and C. O. O. F.

A $20.00 Bible Reward.

The publishers of Rutledge's Monthly offer twelve valuable rewards in their Monthly for October, amoung which is the following:

We will give $20.00 in gold to the person telling us how many letters there are in the shortest chapter in the New Testament Scriptures by Oct. 10, 1883. Should two or more correct answers be received, the reward will be divided. The money will be forwarded to the winner Oct, 15, 1883. Persons trying for the reward must send 20 cents in silver, or postal note (no postage stamps taken) with their answer, for which they will receive the Nov. Monthly, in which the name and address of the winner of the reward and the correct answer will be published, and in which several more valuable rewards will be offered. Address, RUTLEDGE PUBLISHING COMPANY, Easton, Panna.

ACCIDENT.—We are sorry to have to record an acident to Mr. Henry Tucker of Glenelg. He was working with a reaper cutting some heavy oats, and the oats clogging he endeavored to loosen them, and got the first joint of his front finger taken off, Dr. Jamieson dressed the wound and we hope it may soon be well again.—Chronicle.

Mr. A. McIntyre has got his financial difficulties so arranged as to be able to resume business. His many well wishers will now have an opportunity of expressing their sympathy in a practical manner by giving him a generous support. What is sympathy worth when not put into practice. We would answer precious little.

DIED

STEELE—At Muir, Michigan, on the 15th inst., Jessie Maggie May, twin daughter of Mr. Michael Steele, late of Williamstord, aged 7 months, 14 days.

SCOTT—In Owen Sound, on the 17th Sept. Thomas Scott, aged 54 years.

CRANE—In Owen Sound, on the 19th inst. George J. Crane, aged 41 years.

WANTED.

Three teachers wanted for the Public Schools, Markdale 1884. One male and two female teachers. Male teacher must hold at least second class Provincial. Females3rd class Proviucial. Applications stating salary and grade of certificate received until November 1st, 1883, by the undersigned.

B. COLEMAN.
Sec.-Treasurer.

Markdale, Sept. 22, 1883. 159-61

William McLeod,
BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,
MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Mathews' harness shop.

159-3m

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

STRAYED.

Came to my premises about the 1st Sept., a litter of spring pigs, three black and one white. The owner is requested to prove property, pay expenses and take them away.

DONALD McDUFFIE.

Glenelg, Sept. 17, 1883. 158-60

AGRICULTURAL EHIBITIONS

PROTON.—At Dundalk, Oct. 4th and 5th.

ARTEMESIA.—At Priceville, on the 9th October.

HOLLAND.—At. Chatsworth, on the 5th of October.

EUPHRASIA.—At Rocklyn, on the 10th of October.

EAST GREY.—At Flesherton. Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 2nd and 3rd.

HOLLAND CENTRE.—4th October.

NORTHERN.—At Walkerton, Oct. 10 to 13.

MELANCTHON.—at Shelburne, Oct 4 and 5th.

OSPREY.—At Singhampton on the 9th October.

MARKDALE EXCITED.

THE EXCITEMENT AT THE CORNER OF MILL & ARGYLE STREETS, STILL PREVAILS.

TRIMBLE & WRIGHT having re-leased the premises they now occupy, have just opened the largest assortment of Fall and winter goods ever shown in MARKDALE or vicinity.

LADIES.

For the ladies we have NEW Costume Cloths, all shades, NEW Black Cashmeres, NEW Colored Cashmeres, NEW Dress Goods from 10cts per yard upwards, new fall Prints, new Wincies, new Wraps, new Shrwls, new circulars, new Underwear, new knitted and quilted Skirts, new Hoop Skirts, new Bustles. new Silks, new Satins, new Fringes, new Frills, new Ribbons, new Collars, new Boots, Shoes & Slippers in the half sizes, round and box toes, &c.

GENTS.

For the Gents we have the newest patterns in Scotch, English, American and Canadian Tweeds made to order on the shortest notice by either Tailors. A new and large stock of ready-made clothing, new oil cloth coats, white shirts, colored shirts, hats, caps, cuffs. collars, ties. hose braces boots and shoes, &c.

BOYS.

For the boy's we have the largest assortment of ready-made clothing in the market as well as an endless variety of hats, caps, ties, collars, hose, boots & shoes, undercloth-ing &c.

GIRLS.

For the girls we have anything and everything calculated to make them comfortable, pleasant, happy, and attractive.

BABIES.

Don't forget the babies, we have just opened a large assortment of new Wool Hoods, new Bootees, new Leggins new Infantees, new Hose, new Bibbs, new Waists, new Wool Scarfs, new Boots, New Shoes.

We have added to our immense stock $2,000, two thousand dollars worth of choice Jewellery consisting of Watches, Clocks, Gold and Silver Chains, Lockets ear ring sets, wedding rings and in fact more than is kept in a well regulated Jewellery store and prices that touch the bottom.

Our GROCERIE Department is full to the TOP.

Our dress goods department is above the usual standard and we would advise all lovers of novelties and new things generally, to reserve their purchases until they have visited our store.

We also carry a large and well assorted stock of imported and canadian staples, linnen goods of every description, our stock is all fresh, and on inspecting it we feel sure you will pronounce it all through, Very Choice, good taste and judgment having been displayed in selection as to styles, colours and values.

TRIMBLE & WRIGHT.

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK,

DressStuffsTweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TO ONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN

Messrs. DOLL & BROWN

THE PEOPLES JEWELLERS OF

MARKDALE & CHATSWOSTH,

ARE AWAY AHEAD

When in town do not fail to call and see their immense new stock.

THEY have the ONLY GOOD stock in this section of Country. THEY buy for CASH, IMPORT Direct, and are not FRESH at the Business. Brown's Watch repairing is giving

FIRST CLASS SATISFACTION.

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any society or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line for each subsequent insertion.

Dye Stuffs of all kinds at the Medical Hall. A. Turner & Co.

Division Court No. 5, will meet at Flesherton on the 24th October.

Next week we will give a more extended notice of Markdale at the Industrial Exhibition.

J. P. Marshall, Dentist, will be at the Markdale House the first and third Wednesday of October for the practice of his profession.

Messrs. Rae & Irving of this village were successfull at the Toronto exhibition in taking diploma for their patent pump valve.

RAM LAMBS FOR SALE.—A choice lot of South Down grade ram lambs for sale at F. D Irwin's and Thos. Irwin's a short distance East of Markdale.

On Saturday last a special train passed through to Owen Sound containing 400 navvies en route to Nepigon where they will work on the C. P. R.

If those of our subscribers who promised to bring us wood last winter and failed, will fetch it along now it will be acceptable. Just bring a little more for interest, you know.

If you are sick take Rejuvenator Bitters to make you well, and if you are well take the Bitters to keep you well, sold by Smith, the barber, and he is continually selling them.

Last week the Markdale STANDARD entered upon its fourth year. Our contemporary deserves the large circulation it has built up in that time for its decency in discussion.—Meaford Mirror.

There are several new magnificent Canada Pacific coaches now doing service on the T. G. & B. There was splendid accomodation on this line for the travelling public during the Toronto Exhibition.

BAZAAR, DINNER AND CONCERT.—The Ladies of Presbyterian Church, will hold a bazaar and dinner at the entrance of the Agricultural grounds on Friday 28th Sept., dinner 20cts. Concert in evening in Presbyterian Church (tail not obtainable,) admission 20cts.

CAUGHT IN TIME.—While Mr. Wm. Hill called for his paper at this office recently his horses, started off, they not being tied, Mr. Hill had just entered the door when he noticed them and with rare activity turned on his heel and with a few bounds had the lines before they had gone far. Had the team got away they would doubtless have made a bad smash as they were a fine spirited team. We have since provided a very convenient tie chain to the post in front of our office.

Wm. McLeod has opened in the boot & shoe making business. See his card in this paper.

We notice with pleasure the success our enterprising townsman Mr. J. R. Trimble had at the Toronto Industrial Exhibition with his stallion, "Clear Grit, Jr.," having carried off the first prize, $50, for the best stallion roadster from fifteen competitors, also the Silver Medal for the best roadster any age from about 30 competitors. Mr. Trimble could have taken a good round sum for "Clear Grit, Jr.," had he wished to dispose of him. His colt "Chesnut Jim," was entered in the trotting race, 15¾ hands and under, and was set down for 2nd prize but an accident happened during the race in which the horse ran away, and though no serious damage was done, the animal was somewhat scratched unfitting him to complete the race.

ANOTHER NEW PAPER.— The Economist is the name of a new paper published in Shelburne by Mr. W. L. Smith the first copy of which is before us. It is a seven colum four page, is well printed, has a large advertising patronage, is ably edited and has a hopefull ring, and we are much mistaken in the stuff Shelburne is made of if this concern does not succeed.

THE HIGHEST AUTHORITY.

Upon a Subject of Vital interest, Affecting the Welfare of all.

The following remarkable letter from one of the leading and best known scientific writers of the present day is specially significant, and should be of unusual value to all readers who desire to keep pace with the march of modern discoveries and events :

"A general demand for reformation is one of the most distinctive characteristics of the nineteenth century. The common people, as well as well as the more enlightened and refined, cry out with no uncertain voice to be emancipated from the slavery of conservatism and superstition which has held the masses in gross ignorance during a large portion of the world's history, and in the time of the 'Dark Ages' came near obliteratmg the last glimmer of truth. Dogmatic assertions and blind empiricism are losing caste among all classes of all countries. People are beginning to think for themselves, and to regard authority much less than argument. Men and woman are no longer willing that a few individuals should dictate to them what must be their sentiments and opinions. They claim the right to solve for themselves the great questions of the day and demand that the general good of humanity shall be respected. As the result of this gener awakening, we see, on every hand, unmistakable evidences of reformatoryaction. People who, a few years ago, endured suffering the most intense in the name of duty, now realize the utter foolishness of such a course. Men who were under the bondage of bigoted advisers allowed their health to depart, suffered their constitutions to become undermined and finally died as Martyrs to a false system of treatment. There are millions of people filling untimely graves who might have lived to a green old age had their original troubles been taken in time or properly treated. There are thousands of people to day, thoughtlessly enduring the first symptoms of some serious malady and without the slightest realization of the danger that is before them. They have occasional headaches ; a lack of appetite one day and a ravenous one the next, or unancountable feeling of weariness, sometimes accompanied by nausea and attribute all these troubles to the old idea of 'a slight cold' or malaria. It is high time that people awoke to the knowledge of the seriousness of these matters and emancipated themselves from the professional bigotry which controls them. When this is done and when all classes of physicians become liberal enough to exclude all dogmas, save that it is their duty to cure disease as quickly, and as safely as possible ; to maintain no other position than that of truth honestly ascertained, and to endorse and recommend any remedy that has been found useful, no matter what is origin, there will be no more quarrelling among the doctors, while there will be great rejoicing throughout the world."

I am well aware of the censure that will be meted out to me for writing this letter but I feel that I cannot be true to my honest convictions unless I extend a helping hand and endorse all that I know to be good. The extended publications for the past few years, and graphic descriptions of different diseases of the kidneys and liver have awakened the medical profession to the fact that these diseases are greatly increasing. The treatment of the doctor has been largely experimental and many of their patients have died while they were casting about for a remedy to cure them."

"It is now over two years since my attention was first called to the use of a most wonderful preparation in the treatment of Bright's diseases of the kidneys. Patients had frequently asked me about the remedy and I had heard of remarkable cures effected by it, but like many others I hesitated to recommend its use. A personal friend of mine had been in poor health for some time and his application for insurance on his life had been rejected on account of Bright's diseases. Chemical and microscopical examinations of his urine revealed the presence of large quantities of albumen and granular tube casts, which confirmed the correctness of the diagnosis. After trying all the usual remedies, I directed him to use this preparation and was greatly surprised to observe a decided improvement within a month, and within four months, no tube casts could be discovered. At that time there was present only a trace of albumen, and he felt as he expressed it, 'perfectly well,' and all through the influence of Warner's Safe Cure, the remedy he used."

"After this I prescribed this medicine in full doses in both acute and chronic nephritis. [Bright's Diseases] and with the most satisfactory results My observations were neither small in number nor hastily made. They extended over several months and embraced a large number of cases which have proved so satisfactory to my mind, that I would earnestly urge upon my professional brethren the importance of giving a fair and patient trial to Warner's Safe Cure. In a large class of ailments where the blood is obviously in an unhealthy state, especially where glandular engorgements and inflammatory eruptions exist, indeed in many of those forms of chronic indisposition in which their is no evidence of organic mischief, but where the general health is depleted, the face sallow, the urine colored, constituting the condition in which the patient is said to be 'bilious' the advantage gained by the use of this remedy is remarkable. In Bright's disease it seems to act as a solvent of albumen ; to soothe and heal the inflamed membranes ; to wash out the epithelial debris which blocks up the tubuli uriniferi, and to prevent a destructive metamorphosis of tissue."

"Belonging as I do to a branch of the profession that believes that no one school of medicine knows all the truth regarding the treatment of disease, and being independent enough to select any remedy that will relieve my patients, without reference to the source from whence it comes I am glad to acknowledge and commend the merits of this remedy thus frankly.

Respectfully yours,

R. A. GUNN, M. D.

Dean and Professor of Surgery, United States Medical College of New York ; editor of Medical Tribune ; Author of Gunn's new and Improved Hand-Book of Hygiene and Domestic Medicine, etc., etc.,

Don't forget the concert in the Presbyterian church, Friday evening.

A Deputation is to be sent from Durham to consult the authorities of Meaford in view to encouraging the extension of the G. T. R. to that Port.

Reynolds & Son are doing a rushing business now, especially in BOOTS & SHOES. We have just the kind of a boot the people are after, and at prices that suit the masses. Call and see.

Mrs. Plewes of Carden Tp, Victoria Co is visiting her sister Mrs. George Hutchinson of Euphrasia.

Mrs. McMullen and daughter, of King Tp, are visiting this week at Mr. Wm. Hutchinson's.

Mr and Mrs. John McKenna and child left on Monday to visit friends in London.

Dr. Finney of Kimberly died at his residence on Sunday last of inflamation of the bowels, after an illnes of about ten days. The Dr was an English practitioner of the Homeopathist School of Medicine His wife and relatives are said to be in England. He was about 60 years of age.

Geo. Grant & Co have now their factory in operation, and are prepared to receive orders for all kinds of work in their line. Adv't next week.

Several items crowded out this week for want of space.

A CARD.

To all who are suffering from the errors and indiscretions of youth, nervous weakness, early decay, loss of manhood, &c., I will send a receipe that will cure you, FREE OF CHARGE. This great Remedy was discovered by a missionary in South America. Send a self-addressed envelope to REV. JOSEPH T. INMAN, Station D, New York City.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife ; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

☞This Lecture should be in the hands o every youth and every man in the land.

Address

The Culverwell Medical Co,.

P.O. box 450 41 Ann St., New York

110-62.

FOR SALE.

LOT 3, GEORGE ST. SOUTH, MARKDALE, containing a fifth of an acre. Will be sold at a Bargain. The owner will be at the Markdale House, on the 24 th September. For further particulars apply to WM. McCUTCHEON, Markdale P. O., or to C. W. RUTLEDGE, at the STANDARD Office.

Farm for Sale.

50 ACRES, being lot 74. 3rd West of T. & S. R, Holland, four miles from Markdale, 20 acres cleared, well fenced and watered, balance good hardwood bush, with sufficient cedar for fencing.

For terms and other particulars apply to

WM. ROWE,

on the Premises.

Berkeley P. O., July 3rd, 1883. *41

New FALL Importations

——arriving daily at——

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats. Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in a the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

STELLA;
OR, AT CROSS PURPOSES.

CHAPTER XXV.—Continued.

SANDYPORT.

The little seaside village—for it is little more, of Sandyport, lies upon the flattest and the ugliest portion of the Essex coast. There are neither trees nor hills landwards, neither cliffs nor rocks seaward, to break the dull and bleak monotony of the scene; nothing but sand—sand everywhere, Flat sandy fields, sparsely covered with ragged grass behind, low heaps of sandy hillocks in front, merging into wide yellow stretches of wet, swampy sands at low tide; and between the bare fields at the back and the sandheaps between it and the sea, lies the village itself. One straggling street, a cluster of brown fishermen's huts, a stuccoed Church with a dwarf tower, and a dozen or so of green-shuttered lodging-houses beyond it, which owe their existence to the fact that the healthy air—the one recommendation to Sandyport that any one can urge—induces the people in the neighborhood to send their children to them for sea air. It is healthy and it is cheap—nobody can say anything more in favour of Sandyport.

It was at the door of the very last in the row of these lodging-houses that Lily Finch and her small box were deposited late one afternoon by the one-horsed omnibus, which went backwards and forwards to meet the trains at Sandyport Junction, three miles off.

Mrs. Barnes, a portly and important personage, who patronized her, and called her "my dear" in familiar and motherly manner, gave her her arm to help her out of the vehicle that had brought them, and rang the bell at the green-shuttered abode to which she had brought her charge

The door was instantly opened by a tall and melancholy-faced woman, with whom Mrs. Barnes instantly exchanged friendly greetings.

"You see, I've brought you your lodger, Mrs. Wilson. She isn't good for much yet, but my lady says you are to take good care of her."

"It is very good of her ladyship to have recollected me. I hope"—turning round with a solemn stare at Lily, who was so faint and tired after her journey that she could hardly stand—"I hope, miss, that you mean to get well, and give her ladyship no more trouble."

Poor Lily had not strength to answer her landlday's somewhat alarming welcome. She followed her meekly up-stairs to the room that had been provided for her.

A large airy upper room, overlooking the sandheaps and the sea beyond them, as cheerful a view, probably, as any room in Sandyport could possibly command; and yet, when the two women had gone downstairs to gossip over their tea, and she and her box were left alone together, Lily, although she had food, and clothing, and lodging provided for her by the kindness and charity of others—although she knew that nothing was expected of her but to enjoy the sea air and get strong—felt more unspeakably lonely than she had ever felt in her life before.

It will be easily imagined that there had been no parting scene between herself and Sir Edgar. Lady Dyson had carefully provided against such an alarming and dangerous experiment. No sooner was Sir Edgar's back turned, than superhuman efforts were made to strengthen up poor Lily's frame to enable her to endure a journey. By dint of port wine, and beef tea, and calves'-foot jelly, and with the help of an invalid's carriage, Lady Dyson effected her desire, and sent her safely off out of the house on the very morning of the day on which her son was expected to return. Nobody but herself and Barnes, who was bribed to secrecy, knew the destination of her journey. She was gone "to the seaside," that was all the information bestowed upon the rest of the household. Even Mrs. Finch was kept in the dark, for Lady Dyson was determined that, untill her son was safely married, he should have no chance of hearing of Lily's whereabouts.

So Lily was bundled off, weak and unequal to the move as she certainly was, and was safely landed, as we have seen, the same afternoon, in Mrs. Wilson's clean, but somewhat desolate-looking, domicile.

She felt very lonely in it. She stood by the window, and looked drearily out at the melancholy yellow hillocks of sand beyond the road, and the long line of leaden-colored sea beyond them, and she felr weak and hopeless both in body and mind.

The next day Mrs. Barnes went back to Barfield, and Lily was left alone, in a solitude so utter and so depressing, that she felt at first as if she should die of it.

Mrs. Wilson brought up her little meals to her three times a day, and generally lingered a few minutes to make some kind enquiries about her health, and to give her some not very exhilarating admonitions concerning the trouble she was causing her friends.

Thus, her life went on for a few days of unspeakable monotony and dullness, and Lily felt sometimes as if the solitude and the dreariness were more than she knew how to bear.

At length, however, relief came to her in the shape of new friends, whom she was fortunate enough to find in the rector and his family.

The one good-sized and pleasant-looking house in Sandyport was the Rectory. It stood near the Church, within a high-walled garden, wherein clustered the only trees to be found in the whole place. When Lily arrived at Mrs. Wilson's the lilacs and laburnhams were just coming into flower in the Rectory-garden, and the Miss Nortons, the Rector's daughters, were just setting up the lawn-tennis net again, after the long dullness of the winter season.

Mr. Norton, the Rector. being a placid and a good old man, was quite contented with his lot in life; but Mrs. Norton and her daughters did not appreciate the absolute tranquillity of Sandyport at all. The dullness was unspeakable. There was no neighbours, and there was no society. Marian and Katie Norton were good girls; but they caught eagerly at the faintest and slenderest excitement to break the monotony of their lives.

Such an excitement was afforded by the arrival of Lily Finch at the Terrace with the odging-houses.

A young lady—and a pretty young lady too—could not have dropped down in any corner of Sandyport without at once attracting the attention of the whole of its inhabitants, and of course the Rectory people were among the first to know of it.

"Such a pretty girl, mamma!" said Marian, excitedly. "I caught a sight of her on the Terrace yesterday. I wonder who she is—do let us call on her!"

"Certainly we will call on her; let us go to-day."

But Miss Finch was out, sitting on the sands by the sea, when the called, and so there were only a whole flight of cards awaiting her return when she came in.

But a few days later the two sisters met her face to face, close ottside their own door.

"You are Miss Finch, are you not?" asked Marian, holding out her hand. "Do come in and see us. How tired you look!"

"I have been ill; I am not very strong yet," said Lily, accepting the invitation gratefully.

They took her into the pretty garden within the high walls, and she sat on the bench in the sun, while they played lawn-tennis.

By and by the Rector and his wife came out and joined them, and welcomed Lily kindly and cordially.

"How do you like being at Mrs. Wilson's?" asked Mrs. Norton. "Does she make you comfortable?"

"Oh! yes, very, thank you."

"But you must find it rather dull?"

"It is not exactly lively," answered Lily.

"My dear, I hope you will come here as often as you like," said kind Mrs. Norton.

And Lily gratefully accepted the kind invitation to the Rectory.

She went there, indeed, every day; and their constant kindness, and the fresh seabreezes began at last to work favourably upon her health and spirits.

One day that she came in as usual to join the two sisters in their game at lawn-tennis, she found the whole family in an unusual state of delight and excitement.

"Such a wonderful thing is going to happen," explained Marian Norton to her. "A young lady is going to stay with us."

"A great friend of yours?" asked Lily politely.

"Well, no, not exactly. To tell you the truth, papa was her brother's tutor before he married; it was a long time ago—and her brother died. We only know her very slightly; but she is so handsome and clever."

"Yes. and so nice and pleasant too," said Katie.

"And she is engaged to be married too," cried Marian; "and I do think it will be so amusing to have an engaged young lady—for you know Katie and I have never had any lovers ourselves."

"She has had a bad attack influenza, and is ordered to the sea to get well before her marriage, and so she thought of coming to us—for you must know she is rather above ourselves in rank—so it shows how nice she is to want to come to a quiet clergyman's family," explained Katie.

"And what may her name be?" inquired Lily, without any great interest in the stranger. But the answer to the question startled her.

"Her name is Lady Honoria Rosett," said Katie.

CHAPTER XXVI.

LOUGHTON FAIR.

Once a year, and it is always in the last week in April that it takes place, there is a fair held in the queer little old-fashioned town of Loughton. The market-place for three days is filled with open stalls, where all sorts of cheap wares—crockery, cutlery, turnery and articles of dress—both masculine and feminine—are sold all day long, among the Babel of voices and shouts and confusion. This is the business part of the proceedings. Hard by, in a large open space on the outskirts of the town, the votaries of pleasure hold high revels from morning till night, and pretty nearly from night till morning. Here the goods sold are more of a frivolous description—gaudy toys and unwholesome looking sweets, gingerbread men and penny ices, being the chief ingredients of commerce. There is a long line of booths, wherein fat boys, three-legged ponies and performing dogs are constantly atsracting crowds of eager sight seers, and a merry-go-round that goes by steam, and gyrates to the tune of "Tommy make room for your Uncle," with a deafening clamor and with unceasing energy and perseverance.

It will readily be imagined that at fair-time Loughton is a place to be avoided by all decent and respectable inhabitants. The town is filled with a crowd, of the worst and most rowdy description. An immense concourse of ruffians of every kind—gypsies and vagrants, who never come to the surface at any other time—pour in from the country around, and hold high jinks for these three day of unbridled pleasure.

I suppose, if the townspeople had taken the matter strongly in hand, the nuisance might have been put down; but the fair is good for trade, and so the Loughton authorities submit to the institution, and put up with its many inconveniences as patiently as they can.

But amongst the neighboring gentry Loughton fair-time is held in deep and indignant abhorrence, and the town is as much deserted and as carefully avoided by them as Margate at Whitsuntide and Epping Forest on Bank Holiday is by the respectable and peace-loving Londoner.

I don't know how it came to pass that Stella King, being a stranger, knew nothing about Loughton fair; and as ill-luck would have it, the fancy came into her head to walk by herself into the town on the afternoon of the third day of the revels.

Norman was away, or she would probably have been warned against so rash a proceeding; but he had gone up to town for a few days, and the time of his return was so uncertain. It so happened that something was wanted for the decorations that were now in process of preparation for the wedding next week. All the morning the two sisters and Mrs. Finch had been working hard at some white satin quillings, which were intended to wreathe the bannister all the way up the staircase, tied up at intervals with bunches of greenery. They worked at it till they were tired, and until they had exhausted all their materials.

"We shall want at least two dozen more yards of white satin ribbon," Mrs. Finch had said, when their task came perforce to an end. "It must be got at Loughton."

In the afternoon Stella remembered the white satin ribbon. She had a headache, and such an utter weariness of mind and body, that it came into her head that a walk by herself would do her good. So she thought she would go and buy the ribbon herself in Loughton. Without saying a word to anybody, and with no recollection of the fair, which, if she had heard of, she had certainly not realised the condition of things to which such a festivity can reduce an ordinary tranquil, and dead-alive little country town, she put on her hat, and sallied forth alone across the fields.

When, however, she got near the town, she percsived that some unwonted excitement was going on. There were tents covered with gandy paintings; flags flying in every direction; a confused sound of coarse, half-drunken merriment, and the jingling music of the interminably gyrating merry-go-round.

Stella was a little disturbed in her mind at these indications of vulgar revelry; but she was now so near the town, that it seemed to her a pity not to go on and accomplish her errand.

She was, moreover, naturally grave, and not easily daunted; it was unpleasant, of course, to have to push her way through a rough, tipsy-looking crowd; but, after all, she did not imagine that they could hurt her.

So she pushed on quickly and courageously, looking neither to the right nor the left, working her way straight up the middle of the booths and the open stalls.

The people fell back a little to let her pass, staring with some curiosity at the delicate, lovely young lady who had ventured thus unprotected in their midst. One or two men stared at her rudely, and a ragged woman shrieked after her some taunting, horrible words, of which she hardly caught the meaning, but which made her shudder with disgust.

Nothing, thought Stella, should induce her to return the same way. She now felt sorry that she had come; but there was a longer way home by which she could get back to Wrexham without coming near these horrible merry-makers again. She reached the little draper's shop and made her purchase; the shopman seemed surprised to see her, and even made some remark about the place not being very orderly for ladies to walk about in.

"I had no idea there was anything going on," said Stella, as she paid for her ribbon. "What is the matter?"

"Why, it's the fair, miss—didn't you hear of it? And a shameful state of things I call it, that respectable persons should be kept shut up for three days because of all these drunken vagabones. However, there is some as likes it even among them as ought to know better. You are never going to walk back, are you, miss? Would you like my little lad to go with you? It would be a kind of a protection like."

"Oh, thank you very much. No, I don't want any one, because I shall go back another way. I can get across the common to Wrexham; it is a longer walk, but it will be quiet that way."

The shopkeeper shook his head.

"There's a many bad characters loafing about everywhere, miss. You had better let Johnny go with you.

But Stella declined the protection of the valiant Johnny, who was twelve years old, and small for his age, and decided upon venturing forth again by herself.

She started forth across the common at a rapid pace, and soon left the town and its noisy occupiers far behind. It was a breezy, blowing day; little showers scudded across the heavens, alternating with gleams of sunshine.

The common across which she walked was a wide expanse of heath and brushwood, some three miles or so in length. It was not a flat plain, but was undulated; the path leading up and down a succession of little dips in the land; and it was so thickly studded over with gorse-bushes and juniper-shrubs, that a whole army might have been concealed upon it without betraying a sign of its existence until you were close upon it.

Stella walked on bravely and quickly; the wind blew gently in her face, flushing it a rosy red, and ruffling the soft locks of her fair hair. She looked very serious as she walked, for her thoughts were full of sad and solemn things; but there was no despair or rebellion in her grave eyes, because she was a good girl, and she would not allow herself to dwell overmuch upon that sad secret of her heart which only of late had been fully revealed to herself.

"I lost him by my own folly," said Stella to herself; "and now I have got to make the best of things—to love them both dearly, and hope for their happiness, and to do my duty in the life that is before me. I shall live with grandpapa, as he said, and make him happy till he dies; and I shall be an old maid, and make the most model of maiden aunts," and she smiled to herself a pale, sorrowful little smile that had no depth nor life in it.

And then all at once she heard somebody running up behind her. Turning round quickly, she was rather dismayed to see close to her a rough looking man in a suit of ragged corduroy, and a red scarf tied loosely around his bare uncovered throat. He was very dark, had wild, rough hair, and a lawless but not altogether unpicturesque appearance.

"Here! stop!" cried the man to her.

But Stella, although her heart beat violently, made no answer, but walked rapidly on; only with a sudden impulse of self-preservation she quietly slipped off her watch and the rings from her fingers, and the earrings out of her ears, and unfastened a little gold brooch at her collar, and dropped them all into the pocket of her jacket. By this time the man had come close up to her.

"Why didn't you stop when I called out to you, miss?" he said, looking at her curiously, but not altogether uncivilly, and panting loudly—he was evidently out of breath with running after her. "You might have waited a little bit for a fellow!"

A wise instinct told Stella that to look frightened, or to speak roughly to this man would be fatal. Her only chance lay in preserving her coolness and her temper.

"I couldn't wait," she answered quite civilly. "I am in a hurry to get home."

"And where may your home be, pray, miss?"

"Oh—over there," she answered pointing, vaguely to a belt of wood beyond the common. Oh! how poor Stella wished herself there!

"Well, I suppose you won't mind a poor fellow like me walking alongside of you, miss?" said the man, with a sort of a half-familiar, half-respectful manner, looking at her curiously. Probably if she had been plain and old, instead of the loveliest vision of womanhood he had ever set eyes on in his life, he would not have been at the pains to be so polite to her.

"I can't help you walking by me, of course, if you like," answered Stella, keeping her eyes straight before her. Her companion was staring hard at her, looking her up and down from head to foot. Stella felt certain he was looking for her rings and watch, and congratulated herself for her promptitude in hiding them.

"I suppose, now, you have never walked alongside such a rum-looking card as me in your life before, miss?" said the man, presently.

"Never," answered Stella, and for all her terror, she could not help smiling.

Presently the man stipped short close in front of her.

"Look here!" he said to her "there are three of us about here on the common, and we drew lots which should come and trap you!"

"What do you mean?" faltered Stella, changing color for the first. "You cannot mean to do me any harm—you seem a civil-spoken young man—I am sure you will not stop me!"

He laughed.

"Oh! I don't know about doing you any harm. If you wasn't such a pretty lass, I'd have knocked you down behind the first green-bush long ago; but you've got them pretty blue eyes and hair just like the sunshine on a cornfield, so that I can't find it in my heart to lay a finger on your pretty throat."

Stella turned sick and cold with fear, yet she had sense enough to know that to resent the man's rude admiration would be to bring his wrath upon herself.

"I am sure you wouldn't hurt me!" she said. "You look too kind and manly to ill-treat a woman with no one to protect her!"

He laughed uneasily.

"I don't know about that," he said. "I've been sent after you to get your money and your jewellery. I know you got them somewhere about you, because I saw you slip something into you pocket as I came up; but now, you look here, I'll not take them from you—not a thing—I'll go back and tell my mates you had nothing about you, if you will let me give you one good kiss."

Stella uttered a faint cry of horror.

"You'd better not try screaming, because I've only got to whistle, and my pals will come up directly. Now, will you or won't you?"

He stood close before her—there was no chance for her to escape. In despair Stella empted out her pockets.

"Take everything I have got!" she said, trembling, "and for pity's sake go away!"

The man looked surprised, and even disappointed. A woman who would part with her jewellery sooner than submit to an insult was evidently a new experience to him.

"I would sooner kiss you than take them," he said, doubtfully, half-pushing back her out-stretched hand.

And then, in the tension of her over-strung nerves, and in the terror of her loneliness and helplessness, Stella at last lost her presence of mind.

"How dare you offer such an insult to a lady! I would sooner die than touch so much as your hand!" she cried, half-frantic with fear and disgust.

Suddenly, at her words, the evil nature of the man, that had been charmed for a short space to sleep by the spell of her beauty, awoke once more into life.

"Oho! my lady! so that's your game, is it!" he cried furiously. "Let us see whether you can show fight, you pretty pigeon!"

He seized her in his arms, and dragged her roughly to him. The wild, brown face with its rough black locks and shining wicked eyes, was close to her. Her brain reeled, her heart almost ceased to beat, her very eyesight seemed to fail her!

Then close behind her a footstep upon the grass—a voice that cried out suddenly:

"My darling—I am here!"

A few smothered oaths—a struggle—a blow or two—and she was free! There was a swift vision of a dearly loved face above her; and Stella remembered nothing more, for she had fallen headlong on the soft grass among the gorse-bushes at Norman Allingham's feet.

CHAPTER XXVII.

"IS IT TOO LATE?"

When Stella recovered her consciousness, she found herself staring straight up at the cloud-flecked sky, whilst somebody was sprinkling water upon her upturned face. For a minute or two she could not recollect what had happened, nor make out at all where she was.

"Do you feel better, Stella?" asked Norman, gently, and then she suddenly discovered that she was in the middle of Loughton Common, and that her head was supported upon her cousin's shoulder.

She sat up blushing.

"He is gone away, dear; don't be frightened," said Norman, reassuringly; "the brute went off quickly enough when I appeared on the scene. I felt as if I could have killed him when I first caught sight of him!"

But Stella was not thinking of the vagrant who had given her such a fright. She had but the dimmest recollection of his coarse words and his rough gestures. She was quite safe now, and not in the least frightened—only what she was thinking now was, that it was Norman's voice that had called out to her.

"My darling—My darling!" Norman, who was to be married to her sister next week—Norman, who had called her by that sweetest, tenderest, and least to be mistaken name in the English language. My darling! he had called her. Ah! what a great glow of gladness was in the depth of poor Stella's heart when she remembered it! Ah! could it be possible, that he loved her, and not Cecily?

And then her conscience smote her, and almost at the same minute she seemed to see the meaning of his words. Was it not the case that she and Cecily were very much alike—he had come up behind her; at a little distance he would hardly have been able to tell which sister it was—of course he must have mistaken her for Cecily.

"You thought it was Cecily, I suppose," she said, aloud, following the current of her unspoken thoughts.

"Cecily!" he repeated, in surprise, "but why did you think that? I knew it was you—besides, could I ever make a mistake between you?"

She had risen to her feet by this time.

"Do you feel able to walk now?" he asked, anxiously.

"Oh! yes. quite; let us go on, Norman. And then turning suddenly to him. "How on earth did you happen to be here, in the middle of Loughton Common, just in time to rescue me from that dreadful man!"

"Why, that is simply told. I came home just after you had left the house; nobody knew where you were, but Mrs. Finch thought you had gone to Loughton. I remembered the Fair, and how unfit it was for you to be walking about the country whilst it was going on; there are always so many of these tramps and gypsies about. So I set out and followed you. I traced you into the town, and to the draper's shop; and the man there told me you had started to return home by the common—about the worst place, by the way, you could have selected to walk over by yourself; so I put my best leg forward, and as you see, merrily arrived upon the scene in time to save you from that ruffian's insults."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

When the Great Mississippi Burts Its Bounds.

The river all through the bright moonlight night had quietly lapped the edges of the embankment, the surface being quite serene. As the storm neared, however, the surface roughened, and from far over on the Missouri side the wrinkles began to come across the surface, deepening as they came. The night-workers knew that this meant danger, and of common consent they moved, halting only when they reached places where the ground back of the dike was high enough to brace the earthworks reasonably well. By this time the first gush came, and it was followed by another and another, the bosom of the old Father heaved and there was a long swash against the bank, which made the earth tremble and dashed spray up over the top of the dike. George Hoevener and another reckless laborer stood far out where the dike was most dangerous, and their friends yelled to them to come away quick or they would be caught. Almost as the warning was given the mischief began, for down about the lowest point of the little valley, and just at the line where the dike began to rise, the ground suddenly gave way and a volume of water about the size of a barrel spurted through the wall of clay and out into the low ground. A couple of scrub oaks were close to the spot and the water striking their roots with great force was thrown high up as by a fountain. A second later the opening had increased to ten times its original size and the volume quickly enveloped the scrub oaks. Two seconds more and the earth all crumbled and sank down into the gap, being carried out into the lowlands with a power that was apparently irresistible. Meanwhile the flood was pouring through the gap with a roar that could be heard a mile distant, and the walls of either side were being rapidly eaten away. In less than ten minutes after the first small opening at the bottom of the dike appeared, there was a gap about 200 feet wide, through which a volume of water twelve feet deep was ruuning. This had continued for two hours, and an immense roaring river was moving through wheat fields and potato patches two miles away, when a second gap, a hundred yards further south, opened with a roar, and added a second flood to the first. The workmen stood and watched the sublime scene for a time, and then they began to hurry off in ones and twos to carry news of the break to the anxious people inland.

The London Flunky.

W. J. Stillman says in "Characteristics of London," in the October Century: "In the intonation of the low-toned command is the highest expression of that incommunicable, indescribable, and, except by generations of cultivation, unattainable quality we call high breeding. In the reply to it is the perfect antithesis in breeding, which we ought to call low—the profound, unquestioning, and unhesitating prostration of self of the traditional hereditary 'flunky,' disciplined like a soldier, who, as his master never permits himself to express a disturbing emotion, never allows himself an expression of surprise or a word of comment; whose self-command is as great as his master's—perhaps greater—a well apparelled statue, save when an order is given; whose bows and deference for his master's guests are graduated by the distance at which they sit from the head of the table; a human creature that sees nothing, knows nothing, and believes nothing which his master does not expect him to see and know and believe; who, if he thinks of a heaven at all, never dreams that it can be the same thing for his master and himself; he hopes to meet his father and grandfather and great-grandfather in the servants' hall of that celestial abode where his master and all the family for countless generations will dwell in their mundane state; his brains could no more take in the parable of Dives and Lazarus than the laws of Kepler, and the most insensate chartist or radical could never inspire in him any ambition to be anything beyond butler in his master's mansion."

"Why didn't you deliver that message as I gave it to you?" asked a gentleman of his stupid servant. "I did the best I could, sir." "You did the best you could, sir, did you?"—imitating his voice and look. "Pshaw! If I had known that I was sending a donkey I would have gone myself."

Other nations pray for rain as we do. In a season of great drought in Persia, a schoolmaster, at the head of his pupils, marched out of Schairaz in procession to pray for rain. A stranger asked whither they were going. The tutor told him, and added, "He doubted not but God would listen to the prayers of innocent children." "My honest friend," said the traveller, "if that were the case, I fear there would be no schoolmaster left alive."

THE FARMER'S CORNER.

Farm Work for October.

Large weeds in meadows and pastures are now readily seen, and can be quickly removed with a chisel-blade attached to a long handle. Grass lands to furnish hay next year should not be closely fed by stock during the late autumn, but instead be top-dressed with fine, well-rotted manure. Grass seeds may be sown on spots where the sward is poor, and if harrowed over, and some fertilizer added, a good growth may be expected.

It is not too late to sow wheat and rye; if the soil is in fine condition, both may do as well as early-sown grain, and are more likely to escape the ravages of the Hessian fly. A top dressing of manure will assist in giving the plants a good growth before the ground freezes.

Potatoes should be dug as soon as they are ripe, and kept for a time in heaps in the field to dry out. Sunlight injures potatoes, and they should therefore be stored in a dark, frost-proof place. All decayed potatoes should be assorted out, and burned with the vines, when clearing up the field. Mangles and beets are injured by the frost, and should be harvested in safety. These roots may be kept in heaps near the stable, and removed by the load as required. It is important to ventilate the pits well to prevent heating. Turnips will stand frosts, and continue to grow until the season closes.

Make the necessary water-courses in fields to relieve them of the excess of surface water during heavy storms. The furrows, wide and shallow, should run diagonally across slopes, with little fall. All kinds of litter, except weeds with ripened seeds, should go out into the barnyard. There should be a general cleaning up in and around the garden and stables, to give a tidy appearance at the end of the season, which is a good time to make the necessary repairs and improvements for wintering the farm animals before bringing them permanently into the yards and stables.

Notes on Live Stock.

Horses should no longer be turned out at night. A cold rain may bring on troubles which are difficult to cure at this time of year. If horses are unavoidably drenched, rub them dry as soon as possible, and cover with blankets. Horses need to enter upon the winter in good health.

Cows cannot be kept in good flow of milk without ample rations of rich fodder. As the pastures become bare, corn stalks, cut and mixed with ground oats and corn, may be given. Feed the tops of beets, turnips, etc., in small quantities. The aim should be to have the cows in fine form at the close of the pasturage.

Look sharp for March lambs this month. There often a fine profit in buying poorly-fed sheep from sections where fodder is scarce, and fattening them off fat in the spring. In this way a large amount of straw, if fed with corn, may be made into manure as a valuable source of gain.

Brood sows need to be kept in good condition to meet the male next month for spring pigs. It is best to begin at once to fatten for pork, using the soft corn first. The pens should be clean and warm. The store pigs will do well on the slops of the house, with bran stirred in. Skim milk is good for them.

Fine pullets will lay through the winter if kept in a warm house, and provided with crushed shells and good fed. Chopped cabbage and other green food is relished by them along with grain. Avoid crowding the poultry, and keep the nests, walls, etc., free from vermin. Early fattened poultry are more profitable marketed during the latter part of October and early in November than at Thanksgiving or Christmas time.

Choosing Sheep for Profit.

One point to consider is the increasing use and value of mutton, and, no doubt, this increase would be more rapid and greater in amount if the quality of the meat offered were better; the second point is the large price of an early Spring lamb, worth not so much for size as for quality and plumpness; third is the market value of wool. Now, it would go without saying to the practised and practical farmer that all those points need for their most successful issue upon the management of the flock—the selection, the breeding, the care, the feeding, and the shelter. All these are of the greatest importance, but the first of all is the selection. If a poor sheep is kept that makes inferior gains, bears a thin, scraggy, bony lamb, or produces low-priced wool, all the care bestowed upon it is thrown away and labor lost. And in regard to mutton, while it must be admitted that the Southdown takes first and the Shropshire second, and that these hold the same place as regards the finest lambs, yet we have a class of Merinos, known as delaue wool sheep, which are very deep-bodied, and of which a 3-year-old wether yields as good and well-flavored mutton as even the Southdown, and a Merino lamb is proverbially plump and fat. At the same time the wool of this sheep, classed as fine combing—for it is long enough for combing with the present improved machinery—and delaine, is quoted in the Boston market at 48 to 50 cents per pound, which is 5 cents higher than Ohio and Pennsylvania full blood fine wool from the fine short wool merino. This, then, would seem to be the most profitable sheep for the farmer to keep, more especially as it produces as heavy a fleece as the long wool sheep. It is inferior in every point. Next to it might be placed the Southdown and Shropshire sheep, so nearly alike, except in form, that an expert only could distinguish them. These produce mutton of a peculiar fine texture tender quality, and gamey flavor which is very profitable. For the most part, these sheep, being small and compact, all die young, strictly speaking, for they appear in the butcher's stall as lambs although they may be mature and full grown. It is very true that as "lamb" sell generally, these sheep make as good a lamb as the long wool lambs, really in their first estate. But as Spring lambs, weighing 40 pounds and three months old, they are unexcelled or even unapproached by those of any other breed. Such lambs have sold and often sell at $8 or $10 each when young enough and heavy and fat enough. Here is a full 100 per cent. dividend on the ewe, with another to come by and by from the fleece of 25 per cent. or more. And the ewe, when fed, will always return her cost, with interest. These are the sheep from which the fine, soft lambs' wool is sheared when a year old, of which the finest and softest fabrics are made, but which is not plentiful enough ever to come on to the market as a graded sort. These sheep yield a fleece of about five pounds of that kind of wool which is songht by the country mills and buyers for ordinary domestic goods. The wool is short, medium fine, and strong, and is usually classed as medium, carding, or clothing wool. Either of these breeds make an excellent cross upon the native grades ewes, and the cross is as valuable in every way except for breeding, as the pure bred. They are worth study and examination by farmers who are desirous of going into sheep as a farm product.

The Potato Rot.

The daily papers recently contain telegraphic accounts of the great destruction of the potato crop in various sections of the country. The disease was the one known as the "potato rot." This is not a new trouble, and most of the older inhabitants can remember the ravages of this pest in 1842 and again 1845, when it spread over Great Britain, Ireland, and the United States, causing much distress to those who make the potato the leading article of food.

The rotting of the potatoes is caused by a microscopic fungus, Peronospora infestans, which intest the potato plant.

By fungus is understood a plant of a very low order, the more familar members of which are the toadstools, mushrooms, mildews, and moulds. Some of the fungi live only on decaying organic matter, and are comparatively harmless; in fact, are often helpful in hastening decay and preparing substances for future usefulness. Other species of fungi are parasitic, growing upon living things. The bread mould is a familiar illustration of a small fungus which feeds upon dead matter, while the potato rot fungus is an equally striking example of one thriving upon a living plant. The mildew of the grape, which has caused great damage in many vineyards, is a close relative of the potato rot. They both belong to the same genus (Peronospora), a genus which contains a large number of species, and all are destructive to the host plants.

The potato rot fungus consists of long filaments or threads, which grow through the substance of the potato plant, and rob it of juices and induce a rapid decay. The fungus usually makes its first appearance upon the under side of the leaves as frost-like patches, soon causing the foliage to curl and turn brown. The frost-like appearance is due to a multitude of spores which have formed upon the ends of fungus threads protruding from the breathing pores of the leaf. There are many thousand stomata or breathing pores to the square inch, and a dozen or more threads may come out at each opening. Each of these threads form branches, and each branch bears a spore. This helps to give an idea of the vast number of spores formed upon a single affected leaf. These spores germinate quickly and in a peculiar manner—each spore giving rise to several smaller spores provided with hair-like appendages (cilia) by means of which they move quickly around. This is a most admirable provision for the rapid and perfect spreading of the disease when it has once "struck" a potato field.

After the foliage has become affected the disease passes into the stems and down to the tubers, when the most destructive work is done. The farmer should be on the watch for this fatal pest of his potato field. Like most fungi this Peronospora thrives best in warm, rainy, or "muggy" weather. In one of the recent press reports it was stated that the decay was caused by the wet weather which has prevailed in many parts of the country. The weather was only a favoring condition for the growth of the rot plant, as much so as the rains are aids to the profitable development of the various field crops. Weeks ago we predicted, and with a great degree of certainty, that the potatoes would rot in many sections. This came from a knowledge of the nature of the rot and the conditions which favor its development.

It has been shown that the disease is first seen upon the leaves. When the foliage begins to curl and turn brown, the potatoes should be dug at once, and in this way prevent the fungus from reaching the tubers. The potatoes should then be placed in a cool and dry place—the conditions least favorable for the further growth of the fungus should it be present. All affected tubers should be thrown out and gathered with the vines and burned. This destroys multitudes of spores which might otherwise live through the winter and be ready to propagate the rot the following season.

There has been a great deal said about "rot proof" varieties of potatoes, but they probably do not exist. Some sorts are more susceptible than others, probably from constitutional weakness. Many prizes have been offered in England for the finding of the best sorts to withstand the attacks of the rot fungus, but without any satisfactory results. Knowing that the disease is caused by a parasitic fungus, the rapid development of which is favored by moist, warm weather, there is little hope of finding a variety of pototoes so abnormal as to be "rot proof."

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

The Rochester Post-Express says: A cat that would'nt gladly die for the privilege of having its dead body thrown at Oscar Wilde as 'Romeo' must have a very poor comprehension of the beauty of Shakespeare."

A new Gatling gun has been invented which can be so elevated as to fire perpendicularly into the air. It will be popular with Virginia editors.

Hamburg landlords insure their tenants' furniture for them and add the premium to the rents.

There are said to be 250 legitimate life insurance companies in the world, and 9,000,000 policy-holders, implying some 45,000,000 people depending on the stability of the institution.

An indiscreet son-in-law:—"Your mother-in-law appears to have a pain in her side?" "Not at all. She has a toothache." "But every now and then I see her put her hand to her side, as though she felt a pain there." "That is because she put her teeth in her pocket."

A SCENE OF CARNAGE.

Charge of a Railway Train Upon a Multitude—Frightful Mutilation of Forty Victims.

Heartrending and appalling are but weak words to describe what must be called a railway "accident," which occurred near Berlin recently and resulted in the immediate death of about 40 persons, comprising 17 men, 18 women, and four children, and the more or less serious wounding of many others. An old soldier who witnessed the catastrophe said that he had been present at six pitched battles and a variety of minor engagements, but that all the scenes of carnage he had ever beheld were surpassed by that upon which he looked yesterday.

The sad story is soon told, Steglitz, at the station of which the accident happened, is a village, or townlet, about three miles from Berlin, on the Potsdam-Magdeburg-Cologne Railway Line; and the fine Sunday weather had tempted to the place, as to all other suburban resorts, crowds of pleasure seekers of the poorer class, including some patriotic societies, to celebrate the anniversary of Sedan. At the close of the day the station was besieged by several hundreds of the excursionists, eager to get home by the first train from Potsdam. The station at Steglitz is furnished with insufficient waiting accommodation, and passengers going to Berlin have to cross the rails in order to enter the up trains. Until the up trains arrive it is usual to detain Berlin bound passengers on the down platform, by means of a moveable barrier, such as is used at most crossings, and behind this barrier towards ten o'clock, an impatient crowd of 200 or 300 people were waiting for the train that was to take them home to Berlin. The train arrived; and eager to secure seats, the excursionists either burst, or jumped, or pushed back the barrier poles, and began to stream across the rails,

LIKE A FLOCK OF SHEEP.

This they did in spite of the shouts, remonstrances, and lantern-waving of the railway officials—of whom, however, it is said there was an altogether insufficient number—who saw, to their horror, that the Cologne express from Berlin was tearing down upon the station at the rate of a kilometre per minute. There was one heart-rending and unanimous shriek which silenced even the thunder of the approaching wheels, the heavy engine dashed in among the wedged and struggling mass, and in another instant the line was strewn with the horribly mutilated bodies of some 40 human beings.

The catastrophe was as appalling as it was unique. Words could not describe the scene of carnage which presented itself after the express, its wheels clogged with ghastly proofs of the ruin it had worked, had passed the fatal spot. Surely never had Juggernaut's car a more ghastly harvest of sacrificial victims. The station-master, a strong man, fainted away at the sight; and the driver of the express was so shaken by the spectacle that he had to leave his engine at Potsdam. Some of the corpses were mangled and mutilated beyond all possible recognition. One poor young mother had both her legs cut off, and gave birth to a child in her dying agonies. The fragments of the dead were gathered together and laid out in one of the waiting-rooms, and a sort of panic-terror spread over the place. Medical help was procured from all sides, but a good many cases were beyond the reach of surgery.

CAUSE OF THE DISASTER.

Towards morning the Potsdam terminus in Berlin was besieged by an eager crowd, such as used to await the arrival of the wounded from the seat of war in 1870. The Emperor sent two of his adjutants this morning to inquire into the nature of the disaster, with the responsibility for which the Prussian Parliament must ultimately be saddled. It is true that the primary blame must fall on the unfortunate excursionists themselves, who rushed across the line before they ought to have done so; but at the same time they never would have been tempted to break the rules had the Prussian Chamber been characterized by a less penny-wise and pound-foolish spirit of niggardliness.

The Berlin-Cologne Line is now a State railway, like most others in Prussia, and it was only in April last that Herr Maybach, the Minister of Public Works, asked Parliament for 422,000 marks to build a proper station at Steglitz, where the traffic is active, and to construct a tunnel under the line, so as to obviate the dangerous necessity for crossing over it. But the Chamber refused this most reasonable demand, and the recent horrible catastrophe is the result.

The Terror of the South.

JASPER, FLA.—Mr. Boardman W. Wilson traveling for A. G. Alford & Co., dealers in Firearms and Cutlery, Baltimore, was prostrated here, with the "break-bone fever," he asserts that in his own, as well as in the case of others, the only thing found to relieve this painful malady was St. Jacobs Oil. This wonderful pain-cure has the endorsement of such men as Ex-Postmaster General James, Senator Daniel W. Voorhees, and an army of others.

Sam Patch and Captain Webb can go down to an inglorious immortality together. Another idiot is said to be preparing to emulate the latter.

Do not wear faded clothes when a 10 cent package of the Triangle Dyes will make them look bright as new. All the popular colors. 10 cents.

At a curiosity shop—"Oh, the charming little box! Antique, isn't it?" "No, madame, it is modern." "What a pity—it was so pretty!"

CORNS! CORNS! Tender corns, painful corns, soft corns, bleeding corns, hard corns, corns of all sizes, are alike removed in a few days by the use of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. Never fails to cure, never causes pain, never leaves deep spots that are more annoying than the original discomfort. Give Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor a trial. Beware of substitutes. Sold by druggists everywhere. Polson & Co. Kingston, proprs.

A NEW INDEPENDENCE.—The Irish Templar says:—"July 4th is hereafter to be the temperance holiday, if the Good Templars of Los Angelos, California, are to have the ordering of the day. They have called a great temperance meeting to be held at Oak Grove, near Pasadena, on that date, for the purpose of making a new "declaration of independence"—this time from the power of men—and so do away with "the humiliating fact that America's holidays are red letter days in the annals of crime and drunkenness."

THE HIGHEST AUTHORITY.

Upon a Subject of Vital Interest, Affecting the Welfare of All.

The following remarkable letter from one of the leading and best known scientific writers of the present day is especially significant, and should be of unusual value to all readers who desire to keep pace with the march of modern discoveries and events:

"A general demand for reformation is one of the most distinctive characteristics of the nineteenth century. The common people, as well as the more enlightened and refined, cry out with no uncertain voice to be emancipated from the slavery of conservatism and superstition which has held the masses in gross ignorance during a large portion of the world's history, and in the time of the 'Dark Ages' came near obliterating the last glimmer of truth. Dogmatic assertions and blind empiricism are losing caste among all classes of all countries. People are beginning to think for themselves, and to regard authority much less than argument. Men and women are no longer willing that a few individuals should dictate to them what must be their sentiments and opinions. They claim the right to solve for themselves the great questions of the day and demand that the general good of humanity shall be respected. As the result of this general awakening, we see, on every hand, unmistakable evidences of reformatory action. People who, a few years ago, endured suffering the most intense in the name of duty, now realize the utter foolishness of such a course. Men who were under the bondage of bigoted advisers allowed their health to depart; suffered their constitutions to become undermined and finally died as martyrs to a false system of treatment. There are millions of people filling untimely graves who might have lived to a green old age had their original troubles been taken in time or properly treated. There are thousands of people to day, thoughtlessly enduring the first symptoms of some serious malady and without the slightest realization of the danger that is before them. They have occasional headaches; a lack of appetite one day and a ravenous one the next, or an unaccountable feeling of weariness, sometimes accompanied by nausea and attribute all these troubles to the old idea of 'a slight cold' or malaria. It is high time that people awoke to a knowledge of the seriousness of these matters and emancipated themselves from the professional bigotry which controls them. When this is done and when all classes of physicians become liberal enough to exclude all dogmas, save that it is their duty to cure disease as quickly, and as safely as possible; to maintain no other position than that of truth honestly ascertained, and to endorse and recommend any remedy that he has found useful, no matter what its origin, there will be no more quarreling among the doctors, while there will be great rejoicing throughout the world."

"I am well aware of the censure that will be meted out to me for writing this letter but I feel that I cannot be true to my honest convictions unless I extend a helping hand and endorse all that I know to be good. The extended publications for the past few years, and graphic descriptions of different diseases of the kidneys and liver have awakened the medical profession to the fact that these diseases are greatly increasing. The treatment of the doctors has been largely experimental and many of their patients have died while they were casting about for a remedy to cure them."

"It is now over two years since my attention was first called to the use of a most wonderful preparation in the treatment of Bright's disease of the kidneys. Patients had frequently asked me about the remedy and I had heard of remarkable cures effected by it, but like many others I hesitated to recommend its use. A personal friend of mine had been in poor health for some time and his application for insurance on his life had been rejected on account of Bright's disease. Chemical and microscopical examinations of his urine revealed the presence of large quautities of albumen and granular tube casts, which confirmed the correctness of the diagnosis. After trying all the usual remedies, I directed him to use this preparation and was greatly surprised to observe a decided improvement within a month, and within four months, no tube casts could be discovered. At that time there was present only a trace of albumen, and he felt, as he expressed it, 'perfectly well,' and all through the influence of Warner's Safe Cure, the remedy he used."

"After this I prescribed this medicine in full doses in both acute and chronic nephritis, [Bright's disease] and with the most satisfactory results. My observations were neither small in number nor hastily made. They extended over several months and embraced a large number of cases which have proved so satisfactory to my mind, that I would earnestly urge upon my professional brethren the importance of giving a fair and patient trial to Warner's Safe Cure. In a large class of ailments where the blood is obviously in an unhealthy state, especially where glandular engorgements and inflammatory eruptions exist, indeed in many of those forms of chronic indisposition in which there is no evidence of organic mischief, but where the general health is depleted, the face sallow, the urine colored, constituting the condition in which the patient is said to be 'bilious,' the advantage gained by the use of this remedy is remarkable. In Bright's disease it seems to act as a solvent of albumen; to soothe and heal the inflamed membranes; to wash out the epithelial debris which blocks up the tubuli uriniferi, and to prevent a destructive metamorphosis of tissue."

"Belonging as I do to a branch of the profession that believes that no one school of medicine knows all the truth regarding the treatment of disease, and being independent enough to select any remedy that will relieve my patients, without reference to the source from whence it comes, I am glad to acknowledge and commend the merit of this remedy thus frankly.

Respectfully yours,

R. A. GUNN, M. D.

Dean and Professor of Surgery, United States Medical College of New York; editor of Medical Tribune; Author of Gunn's New and Improved Hand-Book of Hygiene and Domestic Medicine, etc., etc.

The fruit merchant a strawberries may not fill the measure; but Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry fills the measure every time in the people's requirements for an unfailing remedy for all forms of Summer Complaints. (27)

From MR. WILLIAM MAGRATH

Erindale, Credit P. O., Jan. 8th, 1883.

MY DEAR SUTHERLAND: Some two months since I became so afflicted with Rheumatism of the neck and right shoulder as to render my right arm nearly powerless. I determined to try your "Rheumatine" and the result is that I am now free from pain, and enjoy the full use of my arm. My general health is also much improved by the use of the medicine. The first two bottles relieved me—the third bottle freed me from all pain.

WM. MAGRATH.

J. N. Sutherland, St. Catharines.

"Your language is wholly uncalled for," as the publisher told the author whose works failed to sell.

Mrs. Partington declared the Neuralgia to be worse than the old Rheumatism; but however bad either may be, Burdock Blood Bitters will conquer it. It also makes pure blood, regulating the Liver, Kidneys and Bowels, and eradicating scrofulous humor from the system. 25,000 bottles sold in the last three months. (25)

"I occasionally drop into poetry," as the man said when he fell into the editorial waste basket.

The Greatest Horse Breeding Establishment of America.

One of the many wonderful enterprises the great West is noted for, and one which none favored with opportunity should miss seeing, is the great breeding establishment of "Oaklawn," owned by M. W. Dunham, at Wayne, Ill., 35 miles from Chicago. His importations of Percheron horses from France, to date, have aggregated the immense sum of $2,500,000,00, and at the present time at "Oakland," 500 head of the choicest specimens of that race can be seen, while on their Colorado ranges are 2,000 mares and 21 imported Percheron stallions in breeding.

In a slander suit in Oregon, the Court held that "an honest man is a man who won't steal firewood on a cold night."

In the summer and the fall, the urchin climbs the garden wall,
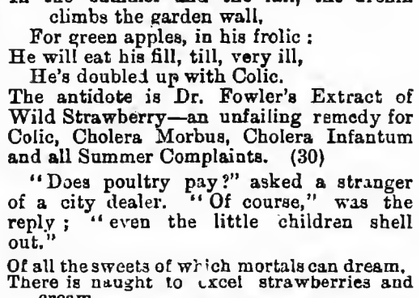
For green apples, in his frolic:
He will eat his fill, till, very ill,
He's doubled up with Colic.
The antidote is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry—an unfailing remedy for Colic, Cholera Morbus, Cholera Infantum and all Summer Complaints. (30)

"Does poultry pay?" asked a stranger of a city dealer. "Of course," was the reply; "even the little children shell out."

Of all the sweets of which mortals can dream,
There is naught to excel strawberries and cream.
Neither is there any remedy known to mortals that can excel Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry as a cure for Chol a Morbus, Cholera Infantum and all Bo el Complaints. (29)

When a man is about to be told a secret he shuts the door; when it is a woman she opens it, to be sure no one is listening outside.

The well-known drug firm of Ormand & Walsh, Peterboro, writes that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is one of their "standard summer medicines, and has a good sale." An unfailing remedy for all forms of Bowel Complaint. (26)



"If I thought I was going to become grey I know I should die," exclaimed Miss Springle. When she turned grey she did dye, sure enough.

Mr. W. J. Guppy, of Newbury, informs us that he has used Burdock Blood Bitters in his family with good effect, and adds that the Rev. J. R. Smith has used it and speaks of it in high terms of praise. It is the great system-renovating tonic that cures all diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys, acting harmoniously with Nature's laws. 25,000 bottles sold during the last three months. (28)

"A. P." 144

ST. JACOBS OIL

TRADE MARK

THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY FOR PAIN.

CURES

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica,
Lumbago, Backache, Headache, Toothache,
Sore Throat, Swellings, Sprains, Bruises,
Burns, Scalds, Frost Bites,
AND ALL OTHER BODILY PAINS AND ACHES.

Sold by Druggists and Dealers everywhere. Fifty Cents a bottle. Directions in 11 Languages.

THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO.
(Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.) Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

FOR SALE CHEAP—SPLENDID STOCK or Dairy Farm, 400 acres adjoining Courtland, 5 miles from Tilsonburg, about 100 acres cleared, free from stumps and stones, a quantity ready for cleaning up; standing timber worth half-price asked; frame barn and stables; two new frame houses; good water; would sell half, or exchange for a small property. Apply to ROBERT WHALEY, Box X. Courtland.

WANTED—STEADY EMPLOYMENT and good pay given to every lady owning a sewing machine. Material sent and returned by mail. Send one dollar with your application as a guarantee that the material we furnish will be returned when finished. FINDLAY & CO., Manufacturers, Detroit, Mich.

909 ACRES MINERAL AND TIMBER lands in the township of Darling, county of Lanark, at one dollar and a half per acre; lies near Kingston and Pembroke Railway; joins township of Lavant, where the Caldwell gold mines and other mineral deposites have recently been discovered; must be sold in one lot; mining companies or dealers in wood can have a bargain. Apply immediately to I. S. SPARLING & CO., Real Estate and Commission Merchants, Pembroke, Ont.

THE LILY

is a perfect gem, equal to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most fastidious. Manufactured by

THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.
78 YORK STREET, TORONTO.

Markdale monthly Cattle FAIR.

A regular Monthly Cattle Fair will be held in the Agricultural Grounds, Markdale, as fo'lows :

—1883—

SATURDAY	.....	Aug. 4
Do.	.....	Sept. 8
Do.	.....	Oct.
Do.	.....	Nov. 3
Do.	.....	Dec. 8

MARKDALE Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats !

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and deiivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23. 1882. 80-1y

Health is Wealth !

Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment, a guaranteed specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Fits, Nervous Neuralgia, Headache, Nervous Prostration caused by the use of alcohol or tobacco, Wakefulness. Mental Depression, Softening of the Brain, resulting in Insanity and leading to misery, decay and death, Premature Old Age, Barr enness, Loss of Power in either sex, Involuntary losses and Spermatorrhœa, caused by over-exertion of the brain, self-abuse or over-indulgence. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser a written guarantee to refund the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by A. Turner &Co., ole authorized Agent for Markdale Ont. John C. West &Co. sole proprietor Toronto.Ont.

FARMERS !

LOOK TO YOUR INTERESTS AND GET

SARGENT'S

PATENT LOAD LIFTING MACHINE

THIS SEASON.

It will save you one or more hands every day you are drawing in, as you don't need a man at the front of the mow to pitch it back. You can pitch from the load as you are pitching down instead of up. You can unload in half the time, and with greater ease than in the old way.

Agents wanted in every county. Wm. SARGENT, Berkeley P. O.

THE BEST PLACE

TO GET

A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery.

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

WAR IN CHINA !

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Wilson Benson

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,

CHEESE, SALMON,

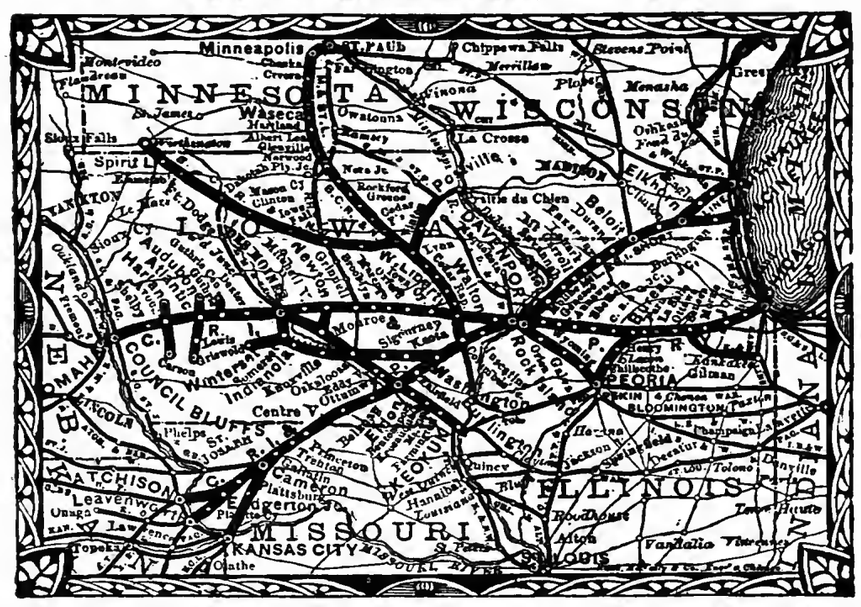
LOBSTERS, SARDINES

In endless variety.

DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.



In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

WILSON BENSON.

July 6, 1882.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE Minneapolis

St. Paul
Chippewa Falls
Stevens Point
MINNESOTA
WISCONSIN
La Crosse
Madison
Beloit
Janesville
Rockford
Chicago
Davenport
Rock Island
Peoria
Bloomington
Council Bluffs
Omaha
Lincoln
Atchison
Leavenworth
Kansas City
St. Joseph
Quincy
Hannibal
Keokuk
Burlington
Ottumwa
Des Moines
Iowa City
Grinnell
Newton
Winterset
Indianola
Knoxville
Oskaloosa
Fairfield
Ottawa
Streator
Joliet
Aurora
Elgin
Rockford
Freeport
Galena
Dubuque
Clinton
Monroe
Sigourney
Keota
Centre Ottawa
Washington
Fulton
Galesburg
Monmouth
Kewanee
Princeton
Mendota
Dixon
Sterling
Rock Falls
Clinton
Wilton Junction
Muscatine
Tipton
Wheaton
Geneva
Batavia
Aurora
Naperville
Plainfield
Wilmington
Braidwood
Morris
Ottawa
Peru
La Salle
Streator
Pontiac
Chenoa
Lexington
Bloomington
Normal
Tolono Danville
Champaign
Rantoul
Paxton
Gilman
Roodhouse
Alton
Vandalia
Terre Haute
Lafayette
Logansport
Peru
Kokomo
Marion
Muncie
Winchester
Richmond
Connersville
Indianapolis
Greenfield
Shelbyville
Greensburg
Rushville
Columbus
Seymour
Vincennes
Jeffersonville
Louisville
Madison
Aurora
Lawrenceburg
Cincinnati
Hamilton
Middletown
Dayton
Springfield
Xenia
Urbana
Piqua
Sidney
Troy
Greenville
Richmond
Connersville

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 4. MARKDALE, ONT., OCT. 4. 1883. No. 160.

The Markdale Standard
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY THURSDAY EVENING,
At Markdale Ontario.
$1 Per Annum
IN ADVANCE.
C. W. RUTLEDGE.
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,
WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O. Physician and Surgeon, Priceville, Graduate of University. Vict. College. " " New York, and " Graduate, of the same, " " Ayleth Medical Institute. " " Opthalmic Hospital, N,Y. Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST,
GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the 2nd Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,
BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
FRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B. County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,
BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.
A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Bruce St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYancers, &c. &c.
OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in
MARKDALE;
over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
Funds to lend on reasonable terms.
W. CREASOR, Q. C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown,
ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,
ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate se[cu]rity.

W. C. RICHARDS,
BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

MISS. GREEN,
DRESS AND MANTLE
PARLOR.
Dunlop's building Markdale.
All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.
Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

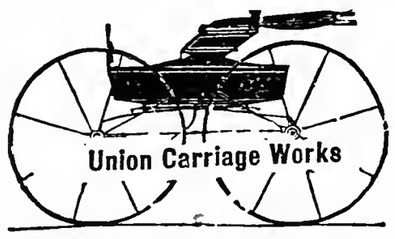
ROYAL MARKDALE LODGE,
No. C. O. O. F. No. 78, will meet in their hall on Monday evening, Oct. 15th at eight o'clock p. m.
108 A. Turner, Sec'y.

JOHN NOBLE,
MARKDALE,
GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING
A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.
THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.



CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.
The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.
Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,
CONTRACTORS.
Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.
Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail

{BUTCHER!}
BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.
FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON
Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call at No. 3 Burns' Block, opposite the new Union Block.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.
All work manufactured from
FIRST CLASS MATERIAL
In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with English Varnish.
Painting & Trimming Rigs
will receive prompt attention.
All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time consistent with good workmanship.
GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.
Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside
D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor
Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

STARTLING DISCOVERY!
LOST MANHOOD RESTORED.
A victim of youthful imprudence causing Premature Decay, Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, etc., having tried in vain every known remedy, has discovered a simple self cure, which he will send FREE to his fellow-sufferers, address J. H. REEVES, 45 Chatham St., N. Y.

Holland Council

Council met for the transaction of business, at Holland Centre, Sept. 22.

Deavitt, McKinnet, that this Council supply for the use of the Council six chairs and that Mr. Vogan agrees to come responsible for their safe keeping and that the Reeve supply the same.

Galbraith, Deavitt, this council agree to purchase jointly with the Township of Sydenham a gravel pit on Jas. Farly's property with township of Sydenham providing that a proper title be given for the same and that Mr. Shute see after getting the proper documents.

Shute, Deavitt that the sum of one hundred and twenty three dollars be levied on the taxable property of police village of Chatsworth, at the request of John Gilchrist, trustee.

Galbraith, Deavitt, that the affair of James Page regarding road through his property be left over till next meeting.

McKinnet, Shute, that $20 be granted to the Holland Centre Agricultural show.

Galbraith, Deavitt, that the acount of C. W. Rutledge be paid.

Shute, Deavitt, that Andrew Walker be paid $10 for doing job of road work on 70 side road, 2 con. West.

Deavitt, McKinnet, that James Dudgeon be paid $2 for gravel.

McKinnet, Galbraith, that the sum of $10 be expended on the extention of 50 side road near Geo. Walkers.

Shute, Galbraith, that By-Law No. 6 fo the breaking up of S. S, No. 3, and attaching to section No. 2 Union and No. 6 Holland, be read 1. 2. & 3, times and engrossed on the Minutes.

Moved and seconded that the application of Robert English and others with regard to getting money on town line between Holland and Glenelg cannot be entertained as a grant was made at the last meeting of Council for that purpose.

Shute, Galbraith, that those parties giving or selling deviation to the Council be notified to appear and and give proper conveyance.

McKinnet, Galbraith, that Wm. Norton be collector at a salary of $70.

Deavitt, Shute, that Rich. Shute be collector at th salary of $90.

Galbraith, Shute, that this council adjourn till the 30th day of October.

Money order to the amount of $214.94 were granted.

CARSON PRICE, Clerk.

Priceville.

From a correspondent.

Mr. R. Robertson is building an addition to his residence.

Mr. John McArthur will open a general store in the new building opposite Atkinson's hotel about the 1st November.

John McMillan, who has been manager in Dr. Ghent's store for the past two years left this place last week. He was highly respected and carries with him the best wishes of a large number of acquaintances. He goes to Toronto.

Mr. A. Webster having sold his property and business here, is selling of his store goods and will give up possession on the 30th of Oct., to Mr. James Brander, the purchaser. We regret very much to loose Mr. Webster, who has by enterprise and integrity made a host of fast friends.

Our bridge which was carried away by the spring freshet, has been replaced, completed and highly commended as a creditable job. The structure cost the Township over $500, and ought to be a substantial bridge, not requiring any further outlay for repairs for many a year, but instead of this we have one of the most disgraceful jobs imaginable. A few days after the bridge was finished and contract passed the water was raised by the mill dam being completed and the gates closed, the consequence was the sand with which the approaches to the bridge is filled gave way with the water to such an extent as to lower the road sufficient to bury a horse beside the bridge making it at once impossible. Another contract had to be let and is now complete, filling up the sunken portion of the approaches making it again passable, and costing some $25 dollars, but this will most certainly go down when the water is again raised, the fact of the matter is the approaches are without a proper foundation and will continue to be a bill of expense, (we might say a sinking fund) to the township until something more substantial than sand is used for such filling. We as a village feel justly indignant for the way this bridge has been handled. We consider when such contracts are to be let, a competent person should be employed to draw out specifications and not have the township funds squandered in such a manner.

Dundalk.

Snow fell freely here, on Friday and Saturday.

Satisfactory progress is being made on the drainage works.

The veneering of McCullough's hotel has been commenced.

P. T. Smyth, late of Dundalk, has arrived safely at his destination in Chili, South America.

The band will enliven the exhibition on Thursday evening and Friday afternoon, by their presence.

Inspector Ferguson visited our school lately and appeared to regard it as progressing satisfactorily.

Mechanics are working hard at the addition of the Agricultural Hall, which will be ready by show day.

Several new buildings, besides those in process of erection, will be built before winter, that is if it does not set in too soon.

A representative of one of the rival firms of school book publishers was here this week, but as the other house was not represented, there was no war of words.

The merchants have been busy during the week, stocking their shelves with new goods, and brushing up and re-arranging old ones, with a view to business on Thursday and Friday next.

The county valuators were here last week engaged in the valuation of Proton. From what can be learned, the valuation will not be favourable to the poor townships.

Candidates for Municipal honors are smiling serenely on the ratepayers just now. At present there are prospects of being lively times at the next municipal election. The names of J. J. Middleton, T. Haubury, A. McPhail, D. McMillan, and T. Fennel are mentimed in connection with the Reeveship. It is understood that our present Reeve will not run again, Mr. Agnew the present Deputy Reeve will probably be a candidate for the same position next year the councillors will probably all be in the field with some opposition though to what extent is at present uncertain.

Williamsford Station.

From a correspondent.

A Lodge of C. O. O. F. was organized in this place recently by Mr. G. Howitt of Georgian Lodge, Owen Sound. The following are the officers elected for the present term:—Carson Price, N. G.; John Speers, V. G.; John Bruce, Secretary; Rev. J. Hart, L. M.; Walter Close, Conductor; John Lilburn, Warden; H. H. Dickey, R. S., N. G.; Jas. Ireton, L. S., N. G.; Wm. Vogan, R. S., V. G.; F. Kempt, L. S., V. G.; Robt. Algoe, I. T.; H. Patton, O. T.

The Industrial Fair.

The gross receipts at the exhibition gates this year was $32,930. an excess over last year's taking of $4637. This will be further increased by the rent from the booths, which is also ahead of previous seasons. The money taken at the turn stiles on bombardment day last year was $8825. The grangers' day this year exceeded this ameunt by $76. The gross receipts for each year since the institution of the fair are as follows: 1879, $25,448; 1880, $23,484; 1881, $22,804; 1882, $28,293; 1883, $32,930.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,
BANKERS,
Money Loaned
IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.
INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.
Allowed on Savings Deposits.
Drafts issued and Collections made on points, at lowest rates.
W.M. LUCAS,
Manager.
September 23, 1880. 2-ly

EUGENIA
Grist, Saw and Lath Mills
Having made eqtensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.
GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND
Chopping Done Every Day.
Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.
LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.
Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted
69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

MANHOOD
HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED
SEAL
We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.
Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.
The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.
This Lecture should be in the hands o every youth and every man in the land.
Address
The Culverwell Medical Co,.
P.O. box 450 41 Ann St., New York
110-62.

SEEING IS BELIEVING.
GENTLEMEN,—
If you want a first-class
Buggie or Wagon
call at
MCKENNA & MASON'S
CARRIAGE WORKS
MARKDALE.
They can supply you with anything from a
Lumber Wagon
up to
Extension Top Phæton.
To buy from them is o
SAVE MONEY!
They are both practical workmen, snd employ none but
PRACTICAL WORKMEN
They guarantee their work
Second to none for Lightness of Draught and Superiority of Finish.
They use nothing but First-class White Oak for Wagons, and thrice Extra Second Growth Hickory for light work.
The immense amount of work turned out of McKenna & Mason's shop is sufficien proof of the wide reputation they enjoy for doing good work.
THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END
Poor cheap work we positively will not take.
Special attention given to Re-Trimming and Repainting all classes of Carriage Work.
Satisfaction guaranteed (or No Pay) in
HORSESHOEING
SHOP—On Mill Street opposite to Sproule's Hotel.
McKENNA & MASON.

HISTORICAL EARTHQUAKES.

A List of the Most Serious Disasters of this Nature.

There was an earthquake in Asia that overturned twelve cities. A.D. 17; Herculaneum buried by one, 79; four cities in Asia, two in Greece, and three in Galatia, overturned, 107; Antioch destroyed, 115; one that swallowed up 150 cities, 357; at Nicomedia, in Bythinia, 358; at Jerusalem and Constantinople, 363; in Italy, 369; Nice destroyed, 307; a general one, 377; one from September to November swallowed up several cities in Europe, 394; five in different parts of Europe, 400; one swallowed up several villages of the Cimbri, 417; one in Palestine, 419; one at Constantinople, 434; at Constantinople, Alexandria and Antioch, 446; one that destroyed Antioch, Sept. 14, 458; one at Constantinople that lasted forty days, 480; one at Antioch that destroyed that and other cities, 526; another at Antioch that swallowed up 4,800 inhabitants, 528; Pompelopolis, in Mysia, swallowed up, 541; one almost universal, 544; one at Constantinople, 552; one at Rome and Constantinople, 557; city of Beritus destroyed, the Isle of Coos shaken, and Tripolis and Biblus damaged, 560; at Daphne and Antioch, 581; six hundred cities destroyed, 742; in Palestine and Syria, where thousands lost their lives, 746; at Mecca, where 1,500 houses and ninety towers were thrown down, 867; Constantinople overthrown and Greece shaken, 986; one at Batavia, 1021: at Worcester and Derby, 1042; one on April 8, 1076, in England, and again in 1081 and 1089; one throughout England, followed by a scarcity, 1090; one in Shropshire, 1110; one which overwhelmed Liege and Gotenburgh in Sweden, 1112; one in December at Antiochia, which destroyed several cities and towns and overturned the castle of Trialeth and the cities of Mariseum and Mamistria, 1114; in Lombardy for forty days, 1117; one that overthrew the Church of Lincoln and others, 1185; at Calabria, in Sicily, a city, with its inhabitants, lost in the Adriatic sea, 1186; Verona greatly damaged, 1187; in Somersetshire, 1199; at Brisa, in Lombardy, where 2,000 lives were lost, 1222; general one that threw down St. Michael's on the hill, without Glasstonburg, 1247; the greatest ever known in England, Nov. 1318; a dreadful one in Germany, 1346; several churches thrown down, May 21, 1382; a very dreadful one accompanied with thunder and lightning, Sept. 28, 1426; one in Naples, when 40,000 persons perished 1456; in Italy, 1510; in the Isle of Cuba, 1530; at Ryegate, Croydon, Dorking, in Surrey, May 1551; in China, 1556; in Hertordsnire, ich overthrew Kingston chapel, etc., Feb. 17, 1571; in Yorkshire, Worcestershire, Gloucestershire, Herefordshire, etc., Feb. 26, 1574: in London and Westminster, when part of St. Paul's and the Temple churches fell, it was felt at Sandwich and Dover, in Kent, April 6, 1580; in Peru, 1581-2; in Dorsetshire, where it removed a considerable piece of ground, Jan. 18, 1583; in Bohemia, Moravia and Hungary, 1590; in Japan, where several cities were swallowed up. 1596; in Kent, where full of water, 1596; at Peru, Quito, and Arevu'pa, 1600; at Banda, in the East Indies, 1621; at Manilla, 1637; in Calabria, ig Italy, March 27 1638; at Meerlin, in Germany, 1640; in Norway, May 24, 1657; in France, June, 1660; at Ragusa, in Illyrium, nearly six thousand inhabitants were lost, and several towns in Dalmatia and Albania, April 6, 1667: in Chiua, 1668; in Staffordshire and Derbyshire, 1677-8; in Oxfordshire and Staffordshire, 1679; at Oxford, 1683; at Naples, where a third part of the city and much shipping were destroyed, June 6 and 7, 1665; Smyrna destroyed, July, 1688; Lime in Dorsetshire, nearly destroyed, 1689; Port Royal, in Jamaica, destroyed and three thousand people lost, September, 1692; Messina, in Sicily, overturned in a moment, eighteen thousand persons perished, and in the island sixty thousand, January, 1693; a dreadful one in the island of Teneriffe, Dec. 24, 1704; one at China, June 19, 1717: Palermo, in Sicily, nearly swallowed up. September, 1726; at Boston, in New England, Oct. 29, 1727; the whole kingdom of Chili swallowed up, with St. Jago, July 30, 1730; at Aynho, in Northamptonshire, Oct. 10, 1731; one at Naples, 1731; another in the city of Avellino, which it destroyed, and Oriona in great part, Nov. 29, 1732; in Calabria, where the territory of Nova Cesa sunk twenty-nine feet without destroying a building, April 18, 1733; at Arundel and Shoreham, Oct. 25, 1734; in Ireland, which destroyed five churches and above five hundred houses, Aug. 1734; in Hungary which turned round a mountain, Oct. 23, 1736; at Smyrna, April 1739; at Palermo, which swallowed up a convent, but the monks escaped, Feb. 4, 1739—40; at Leghorn, Jan. 5 and 6, 1742; in Somersetshire, June 15, 1745; a terrible one at Lima, which destroyed that city, and five thousand persons lost their lives; there were 74 churches, 14 monasteries, and 15 hospitals thrown down, and the loss in effects reckoned immense, from Oct. 27 to Nov. 20, 1746; it extended itself to Callao, which was destroyed with about 5,000 of its inhabitants: in London, Feb. 8, and March 8, 1650; at Liverpool, Chester, and Manchester, April 2, 1750; at Flume, in the gulf of Venice, Feb. 5, 1751; the greatest part of the city of Adrianople destroyed, Aug. 22, 1752; Grand Cairo and two-thirds of the houses and 40,000 of the inhabitants swallowed up Sept. 2, 1754; the city of Quito, in Peru, destroyed April 24, 1755; the island of Meteline, in the archipelago, where 2,000 houses were overthrown, May, 1755, which did considerable damage at Oporto, in Portugal, and Seville, in Spain, but more particularly at Libson, where most of the houses and 50,000 inhabitants were destroyed, and whole streets swallowed up; the cities of Corinbra and Bruga suffered. and St. Ubes was swallowed up; at at Foro 3,000 inhabitants were buried; a great part of Malaga was destroyed; one-half of Fez, in Morocco, and 12,000 Arabs were swallowed up, and about half of the island of Madeira destroyed. It extended 5,000 miles. At the Azores isles, where 10,000 were buried in the ruins and the island divided in two, in 1757; at Bordeaux, in France, Aug. 11, 1758; at Tripoli, in Syria, which extended nearly 10,000 miles; when Damos lost 6,000 inhabitants, and several other cities, with the remains of Baalbec were destroyed between October and December, 1759; in Syria, Oct. 30, 1760; in the Molucca islands, 1763; one at Constantinople that buried 880 persons, May 22, 1776; at Martinico, August, 1766, where 1,600 lost their lives, and at St. Pierre, 1767; at Comora and Buda, June 28, 1768; one in the Brazils, 1772; in the achipelago 700 houses and 100 inhabitants were lost in December, 1770; one at Fez, in Morocco, May 6, 1763; in Kerry, in Ireland, June, 1773; Gautimala, in Spain, entirely swallowed up and many thousands inhabitants perished, Dec. 15, 1773; at Radicofan, near Florence, in Italy, great damage was done, Oct. 5, 1777; at Smyrna, June 26, 1778, which destroyed a great part of that city; at Tauris, in Persia, were fifteen thousands houses were thrown down, and a great part of the inhabitants perished, 2, 1780; at Calabria and in Sicily, 1783, and in 1878, which totally destroyed Messina; at Archindechen, when it destroyed the town and 12,000 inhabitants, July 18, 1784; Arequipo, destroyed, 1785; in the north of England, Aug. 11, 1786; in Mexico and other parts of New Spain, April 18, 1787; Borgo di San Sapoloro, in Tuscany, had its cathedral, bishop's palaces, etc., destroyed Sept. 30, 1789, with the adjacent town of Castello, etc., and Borgo had 150 houses destroyed, and 30 houses, etc., swallowed up by an opening of the earth; in Westmoreland at Arnside, March 6, 1776; in Scotland, in October, 1791, in Sicily and Calabria, October, 1791, particularly at Mileto and Monte Leone; at Lisbon on the 27th of November, 1791, when many chimneys were thrown down and much damage done; at Zant, in the Adriatic sea, where many buildings were blown down, and about sixty persons perished, Dec. 3, 1779, in the counties of Bedford, Leicester, Lincoln, Nottingham, etc., March 2 1792; at Domingo, where thirty-two houses were overthrown, at the Cape, April, 1793; at Shaftesbury and Salisbury on Sept. 29, 1793, but no very material damage done; in Turkey, where three towns containing were lost, July 3, 1794; near Naples, where the city of Torre Greco was nearly destroyed, June 13, 1764; in different parts of the north of England, Nov. 18, 1795; at Sumatra, in the East Indies, great damage was done and about three hundred persons perished, Feb. 20, 1797. The whole of the country between Santa Fe and Panama destroyed by an earthquake, including the cities of Cuzoc and Quito, with 40,000 inhabitants, in February, 1779; there were several violent shocks in the West India islands in the same month; at Sienna, in Italy, when fifty persons lost their live by the fall of the buildings, May 25, 1798; at Constantinople, Oct. 26, 1800, which destroyed the royal palace and an immensity of building—it extended into Roumania and Wallachia, to Bucharest and Adrianople. June 12, 1802, an earthquake nearly destroyed Crema, in upper Italy; Minguin was entirely swallowed up in a lake; Brescia had three churches and twelve houses destroyed; so violent a shock in Holland as to cause the chandeliers in Manslin church to vibrate two or three feet, in January, 1804; the Church of La Tour and most of the houses in Lucerne, partly destroyed by an earthquake, April, 1808.

THE HILLS BECAME VALLEYS

IN ABOUT EIGHT MINUTES

TEN THOUSAND INHABITANTS

The list might be extended down to the the present time, but it will suffice to refer to great earthquake in New Madrid in 1811-12, the effects of which were sensibly felt over a broad area of country—even to Cahokia, near St. Louis, where the brick dwelling owned by Maj. Jarrott was cracked by the earthquake waves, the crack in the south wall of which can be seen to this day.

In 1846 Sir Charles Leyell, the eminent English geologist, visited what he calls the sunk country, around New Madrid, and from his account the following extract is taken:—

He says: "Before I left New Orleans Mr. Bringler, the engineer, related to me that he was on horseback near New Madrid in 1811, when some of the severest shocks were experienced, and that as the waves advanced he saw the trees bend down, and often the instant afterward, when in the act of recovering their position, meet the boughs of other trees similarly inclined, so as to become interlocked, being prevented from righting themselves again. The transit of the wave through the woods are marked by first heard on one side and the other, at the same time powerful jets of water, mixed with sand and muddy bituminous coaly shale, were cast up with such a force that both horse and rider might have perished had the undulating ground happened to burst immediately beneath them.

THE CRASHING NOISE OF COUNTLESS BRANCHES,

He also told me that circular cavities, called sink holes, were formed where the principal fountains of mud and water were thrown up. Hearing that some of these cavities still existed near the town, I went to see one of them, three-quarters of a mile to westward. There I found a nearly circular hollow, ten yards wide and five feet deep, with a smaller one near it, and I observed scattered about the surrounding level ground fragments of black, bituminous shale, with much whiter sand. Within a distance of a few hundred yards were five more of these 'sand bursts,' or 'sand blows,' as they are sometimes termed here, and rather more than a mile further west, near the house of Mr. Saross, my guide pointed out to me what he called the 'sink-hole where the negro was drowned.' It is a striking object, interrupting the regularity of a flat plain, the sides very steep and twenty-eight feet deep from the top of the water's edge. The water now standing in the bottom is said to have been originally very deep, but has grown shallow by the washing of sand and the crumbling of banks caused by the feet of the cattle coming to drink. I was assured that many waggon-loads of matter were cast up out of this hollow, and the quantity must have been considerable to account for the sand; yet the pieces of lignite and the quantity of sand now heaped on the level plain near its borders, would not suffice to fill one-tenth of the cavity. Perhaps a part of the ejected substance may have been swallowed up again, and the rest may have been so mixed with water as to have spread freely like a flui dover the soil."

Sir Charles describes lakes which were formed by the earthquake twenty miles and upward in extent, while others were found that had been drained.—St. Louis Republican.

More truth than poetry kills a poem.

WHAT SHALL WE DO?

What shall we do when our foe appals us,
And duty calls us
With him to fight?
What can we do when our hearts are failing,
And spirits quailing
At his dread sight?
Though he be mighty, and fear appals us,
If duty calls us,
We will be true;
Muster our courage and bravely fight him!
Yes, we will smite him!
That's what we'll do.

What shall we do in temptation's hour,
When drink's fierce power
Our souls would bind?
What shall we do when our friends are chiding,
Or else deriding,
Hard, and unkind?
Though they deride us, yet in that hour
From Drink's fierce power
We will be free!
We'll take the pledge, and we'll be Abstainers,
Total Abstainers,
That's what we'll be.

C. E. T. Chronicle.

Alcohol and Cholera.

Dr. Kerr, one of the best known physicians of England, gave recently an able lecture on "Cholera and its Prevention," in London in which he gave some significant statements, well worthy of the most careful consideration. He said that neither bad water, nor dirt, nor filth, nor alcohol, could be said to be the origin of the disease. All these existed in abundance in many countries, but only in India Cholera was indigenous, showing in that country, where the disease was first observed in Bengal exactly 330 years ago, there were special conditions favorable to its development. When developed the cholera poison, or germ, could be readily carried long distances. The cholera germs required conditions of evil favoring their development into an attack of cholera. With the mind calm, undisturbed, and devoid of fear, and the body sound and vigorous, through healthy surroundings, and a healthful habit of life, though one might be infected through water or other agents laden with cholera germs, the risk of an acute attack was slight, compared to the risk of the fearful, the weak of body, and the intemperate in living. To drink freely was to invite the disease, and by diminishing the strength, to lessen the chances of recovery. In England alcoholic indulgence had been a prolific factor in the mortality from cholera. From personal experience he could testify of the inutility and danger of intoxicants as a remedy for the cure of cholera, and to the great value of pure water. The doctor himself had been attacked and discovered in a state of unconsciousness, but recovered without alcoholic drink; and if he should be attacked again he would rather have an unlimited supply of clear cold water and ice than be surrounded with every comfort and medical treatment, if water were either forbidden or administered with a grudging hand.

If the conditions of the body were unfavorable to the growth of the cholera, even when introduced into the frame, these germs were eliminated and destroyed, and the individual escaped uninjured. That intemperance was the main cause of that state most favorable to the development of the disease, was not only the conclusion to which nearly all, if not all, medical men who had seen much cholera had come, but was attested by the striking disproportions between the rates of cases of deaths among the temperate and intemperate.

Why did alcoholic drinks predispose to cholera? Because they, in some degree, had a similar effect on the blood. Cholera blackened and thickened and vitrated the blood, thereby impeding the circulation. Strong drinks disturbed and corrupted the blood, cutting short the life of the red globules and loading the vital fluid with carbonaceous or fatty matters. Both poisons disturbed and poisoned the blood, rendering it less pure and healthy. In other ways alcoholics predisposed to the disease, (as, for example) by weakening the vital powers and depressing the system, bodily weakness and mental depression being a powerful invitation to an attack. In Paisley, Scotland, while in every 181 inhabitants there was one case, only one in every 2,000 of the teetotallers was attacked."

Civil Service Exemptions.

What a set of uncultivated Philistines they must have for Aldermen down in Ottawa, when in all sober seriousness they propose to tax those models of deportment—the civil servants. And these dear fellows held an indignation meeting over it, did they? The poor dear things, it was shameful so it was, for the Council to intimate that in its opinion, they, the Civil servants, were not sufficiently ornamental to be excused from bearing the ordinary burdens of humanity. It must have been an imposing sight, all these dignified gentlemen met in solemn conclave, to protest against such a piece of outrageous absurdity as their being asked to pay something for the privilege of hearing their own patent leather boots go patter, patter, patter, along well-paved streets, or of mixing their daily whiskey with the clear and limpid waters of the mighty Ottawa. Gentlemen of the Civil Service, keep your heads cool; if necessary, take a bath,—to use a vulgar phrase which, even to your fastidious ears may not be wholly unintelligible, "Keep your shirts on." Tell us now please, Why should you not pay taxes? You are the servants of the Government, which by a strange fatality happens to have its headquarters in the thriving town of Ottawa. But the town of Ottawa and the Government of Canada are two entirely different entities, and it does not follow that the enterprising burghers of that famous city on the noble river of the north, are to be so devoured with a sense of the honor of your presence, that they will willingly light the streets for you; pave the streets for your convenience, place policemen near convenient hiding places, for the protection of you and your families, or do any of the hundred and one things which, perhaps, an amiable and rightly constituted mind like any of yours might easily imagine that they would be very glad to do. A priori reasoning, however, is sometimes a deceitful thing in this practical age, and the Common Councilmen of Ottawa, are apparently a very practical set of men.

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

WANTED—STEADY EMPLOYMENT and good pay given to every lady owning a sewing machine. Material sent and returned by mail. Send one dollar with your application as a guarantee that the material we furnish will be returned when finished. FINDLAY & CO. Manufacturers, Detroit, Mich.

195 ACRES—48 CLEARED; 10 FOR HAY; clay loam; no stone or rock; nearly level; well watered; large frame barn, with granary, log stable, and foreman's house, all nearly new; immediate possession; $2,300 cash. also 212 acres, 17½ cleared, 15 pasture; clay and black loam; situated on Mary Lake, Stephenson township, large new two-story frame house, 24 x 28 and 16 x 16 stone cellar 24 x 28; pantry, W.C., store-room, and woodshed; new frame stable, with loft, price of 407 acres, $5,000 cash; these prices if sold at once. CAPT OPENSHAW, Port Sydney, Muskoka.

ROOFING.—CHEAP, DURABLE, FIRE PROOF, easily put on composed of Felt cemented together for Flat or steep roofs. H. WILLIAMS, Manufacturer and dealer in Felt roofing materials, 4 Adelaide Street West, Toronto.

AMBER SUGAR CANE MACHINERY.
New Paragon School Desk
J. M. BEATTY & SONS, Welland, Ont.
Early Amber Cane Seed imported from Southern States. Send for catalogues and prices.

THE BEST HORSE REMEDY
TRADE MARK. are those made by
THE ELLIS SPAVIN CURE CO.

Every owner of one or more horses can save a large amount of time and money by having on hand a good supply of Ellis's Horse Remedies, and to supply a general demand we announce that we will send the following by express (on receipt of the money, or C.O.D. return charges): $6.50 for $5; 1 box. Horse Medicated Food, $1; 2 bottles Spavin Cure, 2 boxes Large Condition Powders, $1; 1 box Worm Powders, $1; 1 box Heave Powder, 1 box Colic Powder, 50c.; 1 box Hoof Ointment, 50c.—$6.50. J. H. Whitson & Son, 21th N. Y., says: "We have used Ellis's Spavin Cure in our stables for two years, and have cured on the following with perfect success: Spavin, curbs, ring bones, bunches on the neck, swellings, ankles, also quincy, sore throat, and for general stable liniment it is the best article we have ever used." For further particulars, testimonials, books, etc., write to

ELLIS SPAVIN CURE COMPANY,
50 Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.;
or 276 Fourth Avenue, New York.

THE GREAT CURE FOR RHEUMATISM

And all complaints of a Rheumatic nature.
RHEUMATINE is not a sovereign remedy for all the ills that flesh is heir to, but for NEURALGIA, SCIATICA, RHEUMATISM, and complaints of Rheumatic nature.

IT IS A SURE CURE

Sold by all druggists. The Rheumatine Manufacturing Co., Niagara Falls, Ont. Agents, Northrop & Lyman, Wholesale Agts., Toronto.

JAS. LEE & CO'S CHEAP WATCHES.

No. 540.—GENTS' SOLID SILVER CASE, beautifully engraved in a variety of handsome patterns, with a fine full plate. Patent Lever Movement. 17 Ruby Jewels. Expansion balance sprung over with hardened and tempered hair springs closely regulated and adjusted. Every part of this Watch is as complete as the best skilled workmanship and fine machinery can produce, and we guarantee this Watch, in every case, to give the most complete satisfaction.
In Hunting Case, Key Winders, at following prices: $15.00, $18.00, $20.00, $24.00, $27.00.
2 ounces, Box case, 4 ounces, Box cases, Gozeos.
In Hunting Case, Stem Winders and Stem Setters: $18.00, $21.00, $24.00, $27.00, $30.00.
2 oz cases, Gozeaes, 4 oz cases, Box cases, Gozeaes.
LADIES' SIZE STEM WINDERS AND STEM SETTERS. Price.....$18.00
N.B.—The above prices are a little higher than goods we have usually handled, but we have had so many enquiries for a really fine Silver Watch, that we have decided to offer our friends something unusually good. When the weight of the case is taken into consideration—from 2 oz to 6 oz of pure Silver in each Case, and the very superior quality of the works is also considered, it will be seen that the prices have really been put very low indeed.

No. 541.—GENTS' SOLID SILVER KEY WINDING HUNTING Case. 3/4 Sunk Plate. Talmar's Style. Side Lever. Full Ruby Jewelled. A good serviceable Watch, finely engraved and guaranteed a first-class timekeeper. Price.....$12.00

No. 542.—GENTS' SOLID SILVER KEY WINDING HUNTING Case Patent Lever Watch. A good watch and one which gives satisfaction. One grade cheaper than No. 541. Price.....$9.00

No. 543.—GENTS' SOLID SILVER OPEN FACE STEM Winder and Stem Setter, price.....$8.75

No. 544.—GENTS' SOLID SILVER OPEN FACE STEM Winder and Stem Setter Cylinder.....$8.25

No. 545.—LADIES' SOLID SILVER HUNTING CASE Key Winder Patent Lever.....$8.50

No. 546.—LADIES' SOLID SILVER OPEN FACE STEM Winder and Stem Setter, a fine Watch.....$8.50

No. 547.—LADIES' SOLID SILVER HUNTING CASE, Cylinder Movement.....$7.50

No. 600.—EXTRA LARGE SIZE HUNTING CASE American Movement gold-plated watch. A splendid watch for trading, and stamped Aluminium Gold. This Watch is sold by American dealers at $10, price.....$6.00

No. 605.—THE SAME WATCH AS THE ABOVE, BUT PLATED in front with German Silver, looks exactly like a Silver Watch.....$6.00

No. 610.—GOLD PLATED HUNTING CASE, CYLINDER Movement, a smaller size than No. 600, but a fair watch, and sells well.....$4.75

No. 615.—PLATED WITH GERMAN SILVER, AND looks exactly like a Silver Watch, same size and movement as No. 610.....$4.75

No. 620.—EXTRA LARGE SIZE AMERICAN MOVEMENT Heavy Nickel Plate Hunting Case Key Winder, a good strong durable Watch, and one we can highly recommend.....$7.50

No. 700.—GENTS' FINE NICKEL STEM WINDER AND Stem Setter open face, a very superior watch and an excellent timekeeper. The very best Nickel Watch in the market; the front is protected by a triple heavy flat crystal, which positively cannot get broken unless stamped upon or dashed violently to the ground. Guaranteed a fine timekeeper.....$10.00

No. 701.—GENTS' FINE NICKEL PLATED STEM WINDER and Stem Setter. Open face, protected with a triple heavy flat Crystal. Cylinder Movement. A very fine Watch and guaranteed to give satisfaction.....$6.50

No. 702.—GENTS' FINE NICKEL PLATED WATCH, same as No. 701, but not so fine by one grade. Price.....$5.50

No. 755.—GENTS' SOLID NICKEL PLATE OPEN FACE Triple Heavy Crystal. Stem Winder and stem Setter. This wonderful Watch will enable the wearer to tell the time as easily in the darkness as in broad daylight. The hands are so made that it has a bright visible appearance in the dark.....

No. 785.—OUR EXTRA QUALITY, EXTRA LARGE SIZE, Patent Lever. Illuminated Dial. A better Watch than No. 755. Price.....

No. 20.—GENTS SOLID GOLD HUNTING CASE Winding Watch. Patent Lever. A better Watch to be a time keeper and a good and reliable watch. Post-paid.....

No. 21.—GENTS SOLID GOLD HUNTING CASE Winder, Patent Lever. A better Watch than No. 20. In handsome velvet lined case, post-paid for.....

No. 22.—GENTS SOLID GOLD HUNTING CASE Winder and Stem Setter, Patent Lever. [illegible] put out of order. Post-paid.....

Above is a grade better than No. 22

No. 24.—GENTS FINE SOLID GOLD HUNTING CASE Winding and Setting Watch. A very superior article, good quality gold and splendid timekeepers. Post-paid.....

No. 25.—GENTS SOLID GOLD WATCH, extra strong, heavy gold cases, guaranteed to be 18 carat Gold. Stem Winder and Stem Setter. Patent Lever. Full Jewelled, a No. 1 article in every respect, and guaranteed to give every satisfaction. Post-paid.....

No. 26.—GENTS' EXTRA FINE HUNTING CASE Watches, war anted to be Fine Gold of a high quality, Hunting Case Patent Lever, full jewelled, best Swiss Works, Stem Winder and Stem Setter and equal for all ordinary purposes to a $100 Watch. Post-paid with handsome Velvet lined Case, for.....

LADIES' WATCHES.

No. 30.—LADIES' SOLID GOLD WATCH, Open Face, Cylinder Movement. A pretty little Watch and very salable. Price.....

No. 31.—HUNTING CASE GOLD CYLINDER MOVEMENT Low Karat Grade, a fair Watch.....

No. 32.—HUNTING CASE PATENT LEVER, Gold Watch. A really good and reliable watch and timekeeper, and a Watch that will suit most anybody. $25 retail. Price.....

No. 33.—HUNTING CASE PATENT LEVER, Full Jewelled. Guaranteed 9 karat gold. A better Watch than any of the above, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Price.....

No. 34.—HUNTING CASE PATENT LEVER, Extra Standard of Gold. Fine finish. Elegantly engraved in beautiful Velvet and Satin lined Case. A fine Watch. Price.....

No. 35.—A SPLENDID ARTICLE. Hunting Case, Patent Lever, full Jewelled, Stem Winder and Stem Setter. Guaranteed to give satisfaction. Price.....

No. 36.—A VERY SUPERIOR WATCH, combining the good qualities of Nos. 34 and 35, and a more expensive Gold Case. Price.....

No. 37.—OUR BEST GOLD WATCH. This is a Watch in praise of which too much cannot be said. It is the best grade we handle, and we have every confidence in placing it before the public. Hunting Case, Stem Winder and Stem Setter, Patent Lever, Full Jewelled, high quality of Gold and guaranteed to be a Number One Watch in every particular. Post-paid for.....

WALTHAM WATCHES.	2 oz. Cases, Open Face.	2 oz. Cases, Hunting.	3oz. Hunting Case or Open Face.	4oz. Hunting Case.	5 oz. Hunting Case.	6oz. Hunting Gold Jubilee and Silver Case.	8oz. Hunting Gold Jubilee and Silver Case.
	$ c.	$ c.	$ c.	$ c.	$ c.	$ c.	$ c.
Key Wind Broadway Movement	14.00	14.50	15.80	17.70	19.90	26.70	36.50
Key Wind Ellery Movement	16.50	16.90	18.50	20.75	23.20	30.10	38.75
Key Wind Bartlett Movement	22.00	22.50	24.50	26.80	28.10	34.00	42.50
Stem Wind Ellery Movement	21.00	21.75	23.50	24.90	27.10	32.50	41.00
Stem Wind Bartlett Movement	27.40	28.00	30.50	31.50	34.10	40.00	48.50

10 p. c. discount if 3 Watches are ordered at one time.
15 p. c. discount if 6 Watches are ordered at one time.
20 p. c. dis. if 12 Watches are ordered at one time.
After 1 dozen Watches have been ordered you can order one or more at a time and still deduct the 20 p. c. dis.
COLD PLATED CHAINS, each $1, $2, $3, $4.50, $6.
SOLID GOLD CHAINS, each $15, $18, $21, $24, $30.
SOLID GOLD RINGS, each $1, $1.50, $2, $3.50, $5.
REAL GENUINE DIAMOND RINGS, each $9, $13, $17, $25, $40.

Please Take Notice:—
1st.—We guarantee all goods in the above list to be exactly as represented.
2nd.—Nos. 600 605, 610, 615, being plated cases, will last from one to two years, according to usage, (and in some cases where care is taken much longer).
3rd.—Any person ordering a Watch is entitled to one of our heavy gold-plated $3, $4 or $5 Chains at half price, but not otherwise.
4th.—Watches sent C. O. D., with privilege of examination, providing $3 is sent in advance to cover charges. If Watches are not taken from express office, the $3 will be refunded, less expressage.
5th.—We cannot send C. O. D. by mail. We do not sell on credit. We cannot send any goods to be paid for when sold. Please do not ask it. We guarantee the safe delivery of all Watches sent by us. Registered letters or P. O. Orders at our risk.

Jas. Lee & Co., Montreal, P.Q.

A NIHILISTIC BUG.

A Remarkable Insect Discovered by a Jersey Professor—A Living Source of Dynamite.

The Agassiz Entomological society of this city was yesterday in receipt of an important communication detailing the discovery of a new species of bug, possessing wonderful properties. Its discoverer signed himself Prof. Valentine Geysir, A. M., and asserted that the insect discovered by him might appropriately be called "the dynamite bug," as it possesses extraordinary explosive powers. The address of the scientist was given as No. 642 Guilford street, Newark, N. J. So wonderful were the properties ascribed to the new discovery that a committee of three was appointed to visit the professor and investigate the report.

The details of the experiments, as set forth in the letter to the society, are briefly as follows:—On the evening of Aug. 27, while walking in the gardens surrounding his residence the attention of the professor was gradually drawn to a small striped bug crawling upon the bark of a willow tree. Mechanically he teased the insect with his fingers, watching the little fellow's attempts to escape. Removing his cigar from his lips, he lazily tried the effects of heat in turning his victim from its path up the tree. Slightly touching the bug with the glowing end of his cigar, the professor was startled by a loud explosion, accompanied by a disagreeable odor. A sensation of pain resulted in part of his thumb-nail blown away and the forefinger severely burned. The entire hand was blackened as if burned by powder. After binding up his injured hand a search was instituted for other bugs of the same species. An hour's toil was rewarded with the capture of two of the striped insects.

Carefully carrying them to the house, the scientist stumbled as he entered the rear door, dropping his captured pets upon the floor. He called for a light and the servant came with a lamp. By its light the two bugs were seen moving across the room. Reaching after one of his pets, the professor shouted to the domestic to stop the other one. Supposing it to be a detested cockroach, the maid, raising her skirts, brought down a New Jersey foot upon the insect and in an instant found herself thrown violently to the floor, while a deafening detonation shook the house.

The professor here goes into elaborate details, explaining how the sole of the girl's shoe was torn completely off, her stocking burned, and the floor of the room where the accident occured charred for a space of six inches in circumference. The remaining bug he carefully dissected, and found what he demonstrated was the explosive form—a small sack just beneath the back filled with a grayish substance resembling chalk.

Painstaking experiments with minute quantities of this matter, which is detailed at length, demonstrated the substance to be an entirely new form of nitro cellulose possessing properties analogous to the compound called dynamite. He estimates its explosive force at twenty three times that of any known explosive. Its fulminating properties appeared to be especially great, the matter exploding with greater force when struck than when touched with flame.

In conclusion, the discoverer of this new force in nature goes on to relate that after patient search he now possesses three of these insects, which he proposes to examine in the presence of an accredited committee of the Agassiz society.

This much was given as facts, and in a few concluding sentences the professor gives various theories regarding the part which the insect is expected to play in the economy of nature. He is reluctant to believe that this powerful explosive is placed in an humble insect merely for the purposes of revenge, as to wreak its anger the bug would be compelled itself to die an awful death. He readily explains how certain foods might be assimilated into such an explosive, and is experimenting with a view to discovering what is most voraciously eaten by his captives. It is his belief, though unsupported by evidence, that the insect possesses the means of discharging small portions of its charge at short range. This he hopes to prove by careful microscopic analysis.

His classification places the insect in the Datta family, and the name given is B Occidentalis.

A reporter of the World visited Newark yesterday with a view towards securing more information concerning this strange freak of nature. The city directory located Guilford street three miles out in the country, across long stretches of salt meadows. At the corner of Avenue L, half hidden by ancient trees, the residence of the scientist stood—an old, two story frame building. Moss lined the walks, the gate was dilapidated and the quaint, old-fashioned knocker resounded to no effect. The professor was evidently out. Back of the house was a well and on the way to this refreshing spot a pair of legs were brought to view dangling from the limb of an old willow tree. The usual courtesies of the day brought no response from the owner of the limbs and a loud "halloa!" was rewarded with a childish "hush."

A request for information concerning the dynamite-bug finally brought a bald head to view and a pair of green goggles gleamed down as he said:—

"Come up into my laboratory?"

"Where is it?"

"Here. Come up here and I will explain the wonderful discovery which is to make the name of Geysir famous forever. Come up."

There was no escape, and astride a limb twenty feet from the ground the details of the singular bug's construction were gone into with a mixture of technical and common terms that would have driven a Harvard professor wild. Warming to his subject the queer old fellow threw his arms wildly about as he described the changes his pet would work over the entire civilized world.

"There will be no more slavery, nor will the present governments continue to exist. These insects will be domesticated and can be used to most deadly advantage. They can be concealed beneath the pillow of a Czar, and a few score allowed to burrow beneath the Bank of England's vaults can lift the millions stored there into the street, where the poor can enjoy their rightful share.

"The bugs burrow in a straight line invariably, and by allowing, say, ten to enter the same aperture, they can easily be exploded at the proper time and place, and will shatter any building. This bug," tenderly rolling a new acquisition, "is the great communist and leveler, and will make the rich poor and the poor rich," and so he continued in an endless strain.

The man was evidently a harmless scholar with unbalanced mind. The bug he held so carefully in his hand was inspected and found to be of a common species known as the potato bug. Placed upon a stone and trod upon, it gave forth a slight crackling sound as its shell was broken. That appeared to be its only explosive quality. The long tramp across the meadows was taken again, and a resolution formed not to be present at a battle between bugs which the professor announced would occur Friday.—New York World.

CHINA'S DEFENCE.

Her Forts, Fleet, Guns, and Arsenals—Disadvantages of France.

If France should declare war her actual difficulty, says the Pall Mall Gazette, will be the question of transport. Unlike England, which has coaling stations at intervals all over the world, the French possess few points between Toulon and Saigon where they could put in to replenish their bunkers or refit their ships. In case of war between the friendly Powers the ports of neutrals would necessarily be closed to the ships of both belligerents. To China this would not matter, for she is self-contained, and would merely be fighting a defensive battle. To France it might be serious indeed. The enormous fleet of transports necessary to convey an army of 30,000 men across the world would find the greatest difficulty in securing coal. No doubt this difficulty might be surmounted, but no small part of the resolution of the Chinese to oppose the aggression of the French arises from the belief that it is practically impossible for any Power but England to land an effective expedition on the Chinese coast.

THE CHINESE FORTS.

The old Taku forts have not only been made twice as effective as they were when they were captured in 1860, with a loss to the allies of 400 men, but new forts have been erected at some distance from the mouth of the river. Forty-three guns of heavy calibre are mounted on the Taku forts, and it is believed they could be rendered almost impregnable without much difficulty. Seven detached forts have been erected round Tien-tain, and altogether the fortresses of the Chinese littoral are so strong that some time ago, when confidential enquiries were made as to the number of troops necessary for a successful invasion of China by two European Governments, it was stated that it could not be safely undertaken with less than forty thousand men.

THE FLEET.

In addition to the fortresses on the coast the Chinese possess a fleet which, although in some respects inferior to that of the French, is much stronger in weight of metal. It is divided into four squadrons, the vessels for the defence of Pei-ho consisting of two iron-clads of the type of the Inflexible—namely, the Yan-quei and the Chao-yong. Both of these were built in England; their horsepower is 2,460 and their tonnage 1,300; they carry each two Armstrong guns of 26 tons and six mitrailleuses; their speed over the measured mile was 16½ knots. They are the best vessels in the Chinese fleet, and they are supported by 13 gunboats. The squadron of Foochow consists of two cruisers and 21 smaller boats. At Shanghai there are six frigates and one armoured gunboat. The Canton squadron consists of two cruisers and 22 gunboats. The majority of these gunboats are very small vessels of little importance, but eight are very formidable fighting vessels indeed. They are the Alpha, Beta, Gamma, Delta, Epsilon, Zeta, and Theta, built in England by Sir William Armstrong. These boats have a displacement of from 400 to 450 tons, engines of 310 horsepower, a speed of nine knots, and a draught of only eight feet, the first four carrying each a 27½-ton gun, and the others a 38-ton gun, all worked by hydraulic power. With slight differences in construction the length of each of these gunboats is 125 feet, and the breadth between perpendiculars 30 feet.

THE GUNS.

The guns are fixed irremovably along the centre line of the boat and rest upon trunnion blocks, which work upon a couple of beam slides. The projectiles are brought by steam from the magazines below to the leading positions and thrust home by a mechanical rammer working beneath the glacis plates at the bow. In addition to these there are two gunboats, constructed in England, of 250 tons, each carrying a sixteen-ton gun. The number of cannons in the Chinese fleet is said to be 350. It is manned by 8,000 seamen, 2,000 of whom, however, are in the reserve.

THE ARSENALS.

The Chinese maratime arsenals stand at Foochow, Shanghai, and Canton. The old arsenal still stands at Canton; a new one has been established at Tientsin; a third stands at Nankin. The manufactory of arms has been established at the capital of the province of Kan-tsu, on the Yellow River, and artillery and torpedo factories are established at Foo-chow. The chief weakness of the Chinese navy is in the scientific, medical, and commissariat service; the dockyard accommodation is bad; their skilled officers are few, and it was stated some time ago that not a single doctor had been appointed on any of the ships. The steamers of the China Merchant Company, forty in number, may be freighted for the transport of troops and materials, and could be of considerable service. The possession of these steamers enables the Chinese to move their troops with considerable rapidity from place to place, thereby materially increasing their capacity either for offence or defence. In 1860, when war was expected with Russia, an army of 20,000 men was shipped on from Hankow to the north without the least difficulty, solely by the Chinese steamers and transports.

"Miss Fitzjoy—aw—are you not fond of etchings—aw—you know they are deuced clever—some of them are?" "Ah, yes, indeed, Mr. Featherweight. And do you know there is something about you that reminds me very much of an etching?" "What, really—aw—how charming ——" "Yess. There is about you such a foggy suggestion of something that isn't there, you know."

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL

FIVE MINUTES SELECT READING.

Summary of Foreign, Domestic and War Items—Concise, Pithy, and Pointed.

Five townships in Tipperary County have been proclaimed on account of agrarian outrages.

Anti-Jewish excesses are reported in the Veeprim district of West Hungary. Houses were burned, leading to several arrests being made.

The rebellious African chiefs Mampoer and Mapoeh, defeated by the Boers and captured in August, have been found guilty of treason and sentenced to death.

The shah has sent his private secretary to Cabul to sound the Ameer respecting the purchase of Herat by Persia. The secretary also conveys an assurance that England would readily consent to the transfer.

Bradlaugh has addressed a letter to Sir Stafford Northcote declaring he will again demand his seat in the Commons. He charges Sir Stafford with causing all the mischief that has grown out of the continued violation of Bradlaugh's rights.

It is reported that Russia will issue a note to the European Powers taking exception to the recent changes in the Government of Bulgaria, by which Prince Alexander removed the Russian Ministers, Generals Sabeloff and Kaulbars, and placed Zankoff, a Liberal at the head of his Cabinet.

Cetewayo has sent a messenger to Mr. Osborne, the British Commissioner in Zululand, to negotiate his surrender to the British authorities. The messenger states that Cetewayo's followers will deliver themselves to the British officials on the latter promising to guarantee their safety.

It is reported that negotiations between the Vatican and France have reached a satisfactory conclusion. The French Government has restored the suppressed stipends to the Catholic clergy and given formal assurance of her most pacific intentions towards the Holy See.

The Black Flags have abandoned Sontay, Pkung, Lugne, and Day, and retreated to the left bank of the Red River. Several mandarins have given in their submission to the French. The French forces will undertake no offensive operations until after the arrival of reinforcements.

The general feeling throughout Europe is one of great uneasiness. It is felt that the relations of the Great Powers are daily growing more uncertain and dangerous. All the diplomatists look with anxiety to the Balkan peninsula and the growing probabilities of a rupture between Russia and Austria.

The Khedive has taken kindly to Clifford Lloyd, the former residental magistrate in County Clare, Ireland, during the conspiracy trials, and who was recently appointed Under Secretary in the Home Department in Egypt. The Khedive has given him carteblanche power in his work of organizing the Egyptian constabulary.

The majority of the Paris newspapers depreciate any exhibition on the part of the people of anything resembling open resentment upon the occasion of King Alfonso's arrival there. The Temps expresses the opinion that Bismarck intended by the appointment of Alfonso to the Colonelcy of the Uhlans to prepare a cold reception for the King upon his arrival in France, and urges Parisians by their conduct when the King enters the city to upset these calculations.

The report that the Czar and the Emperor of Germany will hold a conference at Kiel is of doubtful origin. Nevertheless reports that the Emperor William will shortly have a meeting with the Czar continue to be published in Berlin. Some of the German papers are of the opinion that the date of the interview depends on the return of Prince Bismarck, who will certainly be present. Prince Bismarck will make a trip to Friedrichsruhe on Saturday. His health has much improved.

The Paris Clarion publishes an interview of its Geneva correspondent with an eminent Russian general, who, under a semi-transparent disguise, is easily recognized as General Gourko, governor of Poland. Gourko declares that war between Russia and Germany is imminent. He has not the slightest doubt that the day will soon come when the Russians' bitter antipathy to Germans, especially Polish Germans, will develop into a general anti Teutonic feeling which will involve bloodshed

A trusty messenger from Cape Town has brought Mr. Sullivan, M. P., chief counsel for O'Donnel, a number of documents of great importance to the defence. Among these papers are affidavits of several reputable residents of Cape Town, to the effect that Carey, while there, was drunk and disorderly, and very quarrelsome. There are also included in the documents statements made upon oath, tending to show that the shooting was unpremeditated and the result a quarrel provoked by Carey. O'Donnel complains bitterly of his treatment at the hands of officials since his arrival here, and accuses them of hampering the defence in every possible way.

Faults of our School System.

We school the children too much. That is to say, we keep them at school all the year round; we continually force their perceptive and memorizing faculties, and give no time for the play of their reflective faculties. In other words, they don't reflect upon what they have learned or attempt to apply it in their own minds. We cram them with too many studies. How else in the fact to be accounted for that a child in the country, having but four months' schooling in the year, will come to Boston more matured in his education than one who has had nine months' schooling in the year? In our city schools there is too much teaching and too little learning. By that I mean to say that the great press of studies placed upon the young mind by oral teaching for a few minutes at a time, and a different study most every hour in the day, tend to break up the continuity of the pupil's thought, and the oral addresses and lectures receive but little attention from the tired minds of the pupils.—B. F. Butler.

Greenburg, Pa., men shot a tramp for stealing potatoes from their field. Such conduct is tuber-rootal for anything.

A FIENDISH MURDER.

A Beautiful Girl Stabbed Twenty-six Times by a Mysterious Murderer. Was it a Madman?

OXFORD, Ind.—Mounted men are scouring the country in every direction for traces of the murderer of Miss Ada Atkinson, aged 18 years. She had been left alone in the house in the afternoon, and her sister found her mutilated body on the floor. There were twenty-six wounds on her person. She had not been outraged. The wounds are evidently made with a penknife in the hands of some nervous person and for revenge. The victim was rich and accomplished.

FOWLER, Ind.—The excitement over the murder of Miss Ada Atkinson has increased considerably. The fact that the young lady, who was handsome, rich, and popular, was terribly mutilated by her murderer, her body being stabbed again and again evidently after life was extinct, adds to the intense feeling in the community. As no property was taken from the house, the deed could not have been committed for the purpose of robbery, and the physicians have asserted that the girl was not violated. The general theory of the crime has been that the murderer was inspired by revengeful feelings. She had been left alone in the house, and her body was found late in the afternoon. There are few clues as to who did the deed.

Mrs. Hugh, a neighbor of the Atkinson's, was examined by the Coroner. It was alleged that she had made threats against Miss Atkinson. She proved by her children that she remained at home the entire day, sick with chills. Her house was searched twice, but nothing was discovered to excite suspicion.

A young man named Adsit, who had blood upon his sleeve and shirt front, when asked how the blood came there, said he did not know. He was taken before the Coroner. He then said was caused by being struck in the mouth during a fight in Oxford Saturday night. He said he was pressing hay on the afternoon of the murder. The people believe him innocent.

THE BLOOD ON HIS SHIRT FRONT

The most important information received since the murder has come to light. Two brothers named Jefferson, residing near the Atkinson place, started to Oxford with a load of wood. In passing the Atkinson residence, which stands back about twenty yards from the main road, they saw no one in the yard. After going a short distance one of the boys, on looking back, saw a man leaving the gate of the yard. He was mounted on a gray horse. He started toward them on a gallop, but upon nearing them checked his horse, drew his hat over his eyes, and rode past. There was blood on his right hand and on the side of his face. He was apparently about 20 years of age. They did not know him. After passing the waggon he started off at a breakneck speed, taking a road leading eastward, evidently to avoid going near Oxford. It was about 2 30 o'clock when he passed them.

The mysterious man was also seen by Jerome Wattles, a farmer, who was going west on the road mentioned, but was not close enough to recognise him.

The two Jefferson brothers have been closeted with detectives and startling information is promised. A farm laborer in the employ of Mr. Atkinson, and the only person who was near the house during the afternoon, is shown up in a very bad light.

Two days before the murder, Lucy, sister of the murdered girl, made known her intention of going to Oxford that evening. In going to her room an hour afterwards, and upon entering the door, she protruding from under the bed. She asked twice, "Who's there?" but received no reply. She called her father, but he had left the house in the mean time. Soon after the farm hand came out of the room exclaiming, "Don't get frightened; it is only me. When asked what he was doing under the bed, he said:

DISCOVERED A MAN'S FOOT

"I dropped some money and was looking for it."

A good deal of suspicion is directed toward this man. On Friday night last the murdered girl, in company with a young man named Glasscock, attended a dance given at this place. The day after the murder a handkerchief belonging to him was found in the yard at Atkinson's house. It was tied in a knot. When questioned regarding it, Glasscock said that the murdered girl's brother had taken it from him during a scuffle they had at school. Young Atkinson does not remember keeping the handkerchief, and denies having thrown it in the yard. The funeral of the murdered girl took place to-day. Fifteen hundred persons attended The cries of the bereaved mother and sister moved many to tears.

Nothing whatever is missing from the house. There were many valuables of all kinds, but nothing was molested.

The house of Mr. Atkinson is about half a mile from any neighbor. An old man at work in a neighboring field heard no sounds of a struggle. The fact that no outrage was committed is accounted for by some on the theory that the girl rapidly bled to death and the villain fled. Others think the nature of the wounds and their number and the places selected for their infliction indicate that it was the work of a madman, who delighted in inflicting as many wounds as possible upon the body.

The physicians think the murderer could not have left the house without getting much blood on his clothing. Some have hopes that this may point him out.

ALL SORTS.

A sure sign—No trust.

A fast color—Cyclone blew.

Egotism is the I-dear of most everybody.

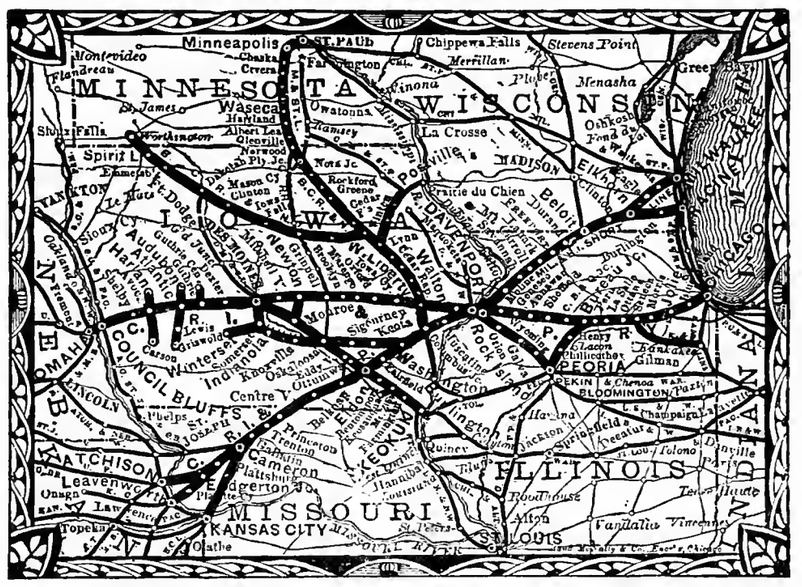
Waggon tracks are royal road, for are they not prints?

Look out that your stove-pipe is not "full." Its elbow is often crooked.

To speak of the thread of an argument would imply that the whole thing is a "yarn."

It doesn't follow because a surveyor gets the lay of the land that he has monopolized the egg business.

The man who was reconciled to his lot must have had the mortgage on it lifted, or something.



The point of a swell's existence is his shoes; but a woman's existence is sometimes even more point-lace.

The boy who bit into a green apple, remarked, with a wry face, "'Twas ever thus in childhood—sour!"

The late Mr. Yale, of New Haven, left a fortune of $3,000,000. Like Samson, his strength was in his locks.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

The Standard.

MARKDALE, OCT. 4TH, 1883.

MARKDALE AT THE INDUSTRIAL.

Between prize horse flesh and new patent inventions, Markdale made a very creditable and profitable exhibit at the late Toronto Industrial Exhibition. Mr. J. R. Trimble's horse, "Clear Grit, Jr." won first prize and diploma for roadster stallion, being the highest award possible to take. Mr. Trimble is one of the best horsemen in the country and it is a credit to the place to have such an enterprising man in our village, while it is profitable to the surrounding country to have horse flesh improved by the introduction of good stock.

Messrs. Rae & Irving, of this place, had their new invention also on exhibition. This new idea was invented by Mr. J, G. Irving, pumpmaker, of this place, and was patented June 21st, 1883 and is called "Irving's Patent Valve." It is made of rubber, is attached below the lowest valve in a pump, and is calculated to hinder any obstruction being drawn up with the water that would stick in the valve causing the pump to loose its priming. The invention was pronounced by experienced pump manufacturers at the exhibition to be without a fault, and wondered at its simplicity and why they did not conceive the idea before. The invention was awarded a diploma, and is certain to prove a valuable improvement to the pump business, while it cannot fail to be highly remunerative to our fellow citizens who are handling it. One of them would not accept $5,000 for his share in the concern.

Mr. Wm. Sargent's Patent Load Lifter was an object of considerable attraction. A large number have been in use present season through Caledon York, Markham, Vaughan, and other townships in that district, and those who have used them (who ought to be the best judges) were unanimous in speaking in the highest terms of satisfaction with which this new invention did its work. The following testimonial we give from among several dozen equally strong:

This is to certify that I have used one of Sargent's Load Lifing Machines and that it has given me entire satisfaction. I consider it one of the best labor-saving machines yet introduced, and would most strongly recommend it to all farmers.

HENRY D. SANDER,S
Sept.4,'83. Fair Bank P.O.,York Tp.

Mr. Sargent has also attended the Guelph and London fairs, and has been successful all round in receiving high commendations from the judges. There was no prize for this new invention, so that the highest award available was in the shape of being highly commended. The patentee, Mr. Sargent, has cleared this season alone in the neighborhood of $10,000 from his patent.

South Grey Exhibition.

The annual show of the S. G. Agricultural Society came off on Tuesday and Wednesday last and was fairly attended. The display of horses and other stock was fully ahead of former yesrs. Poultry was fairly represented, but field produce was rather slim, no doubt, owing to the lateness of the season, and eraly frosts. Fruit and garden vegetables were good. although not so numerous as we would like to see. Flowers, were very nice, and a slight improvement. The ladies' work was also improved, and the articles displayed were testefully prepared, and showed that they were not just brought out to catch prizes where there was no competition. The chief exhibitors in ladies work were Mrs. Milner who is always to the fore; Mrs. Dr. Jamieson, who is a new resident amongst us, and we hope she will be on hand on future occasions; Miss Mockler and others. The articles, which we think most worthy of note were two fine Percheron horses, by Yost and McAlear; a set of furniture by Geo. Kress; and a cone-work minature horse by Mrs. Milner. But a look at the prize list will show who the exhibitors and prize takers were. As is usual a few "soap?" vendors and other swindlers were on hand and some fools actually potronized them. Surely people will learn in time, and give all such individuals a wide berth. Everything passed off very satisfactorial and with little disturbance. There are a few things we would like to see improved, among which, would be better prizes for field roots, which are not half what they should be, a little more encouragement to fine arts, and a few classes for rare flowers and plants dropped and the prizes improved for the more common varieties. As far as we have seen and heard the Judges' decisions were satisfactory.—Grey Review,

Glenelg Fall Show.

This show was held in Markdale, on the 27th and 28th Sept. The weather was exceedingly cold rendering it very uncomfortably for those attending. The lateness of the harvest hindered a great many from attending, a large portion of grain being yet unhoused, it had also the effect of hindering many from exhibiting grain, roots, fruit &c., not having sufficient time to prepare such things for the show, consequently the exhibit in the above named classes were below that of former years. There was a fine display of horses which shows that the best animals are not yet all bought up and taken out of the country. The quality of the exhibit all through was of a high order and the gate receipts satisfactory on the whole. The following is the list of prizes:

HORSES.

Span General Purpose Horses—1st, special by Jas Bryad, Wm. Fawcett, 2nd, Jas. Mercer, 3rd, Alex. Mercer.

Span Carriage Horses—1st, special by M. Byrnes, M. Byrnes, 2nd, Thos. Davis, 3rd, J. H. Henderson.

Buggy Horse—1st, spec'l by A. McDougall J. R. Trimble, 2nd, Thos. Elliott.

Saddle Horse—1st, Edward Davis, 2nd special by M. Burns, Ed. Large.

Brood Mare—1st, Thos. Elliott, 2nd spec'l by Jas. Bryan, Wm. Douglass.

Spring Colt, G. P.—1st, A. Mercer, 2nd, Robt. Walker.

Spring Colt, Roadster—1st, S. Boyce, 2nd, Thos. Townsend.

Colt or Filly, 2 yrs., G. P.—1st W. Walker, 2nd, E. & W. S. O'Brien.

Colt or Filly, 1 yr. G. P.—1st, J. Hutchinson, 2nd, Wm. Walker.

Colt or Filly, 2 yrs. roadster—1st. James Mercer 2nd John McGee.

Colt or Filly, 1 yr. roadster—1st, Robert Freeborn, 2nd, A. Shiel.

CATTLE.

Bull over 2. yrs.—1st, C. C. McFayden, 2nd, special by Jas. Bryan, B. Coleman.

Bull under 2 years—1st. A. Mercer, 2nd, J. Hutchinson.

Durham Cow with Pedigree, 1st, E. & W. O'Brien.

Ayrshire Cow—1st. Wm. Douglass, 2nd, A. Shiel.

Grade Cow—1st, Robt. Walker, 2nd, Wm. Walker

Heifer 2 yrs.—1st, Robt. McBride, 2nd Thos. Elliott.

Heifer 1 year—1st, Jas. Foster, 2nd, E. & W. S. O'Brien.

Spring Calf—1st, E. & W. S. O'Brien, 2nd Wm. Walker.

Yoke Oxen—1st, A. Shiel, 2nd, J. Thibodo

Pair Steers, 2 years—1st, Robt. Walker, 2nd, R. McBride.

Pair Steers, 1 year—1st Robt. Walker.

SHEEP.

Aged Ram, Thoroughbred—1st, William Fawcett, 2nd Wm. Shepherdson.

Shearling Ram, Thoroughbred—1st. Wm. Fawcett. Wm. Shepherdson.

Ramb Lamb, Thoroughbred—1st, Willism Fawcett, Wm. Shepherdson.

Pair Ewes, raised lambs 33—1st, William Fawcett, Wm. Shepherdson.

Pair Ewe Lambs—1st, Wm. Shepherdson, Wm. Fawcett.

SWINE.

Berkshire Boar, aged—1st, Robt. Freeborn 2nd, D. McDuffie.

Spring Boar, berkshire—1st, Ben. Coleman, Robert McBride.

Aged Sow, berkshire—1st, D. McDuffie, Jas. Nelson.

Spring Sow, berkshire—Jas. Mercer, D. McDuffie.

Spring Boar, suffolk—Thos. Davis, Ben Coleman.

Spring Boar, any other kind—1st, Wm. Douglass.

Aged Sow, suffolk—Ben. Coleman.

Spring Sow, suffolk—Thos. Davis.

POULTRY.

Collection Barnyard Fowls—1st, Ben. Coleman. 2nd Robt. Montgomery, 3rd, Robt. McBride.

Pair Geese—Ben. Coleman, Robt. Montgomery.

Pair Turkeys—Jas. Murcer.

Pair Ducks, large—R. Montgomery, H. McKee.

Pair Ducks, small—B. Coleman, S. Boyce.

Pair Plymoth Rock—Haskett Bros., Ben Colemen.

Pair Leghorns—E. Large, R. Montgomery

Pair Brahmas—Hasket Bros., B. Coleman.

Pair Spanish—Robt. Montgomery, Robt. Montgomery.

Pair Hamburgs—E. Large.

GRAIN.

Bush. Spring Wheat, White Russian, 1st W. Robinson, 2nd, E. Rutledge.

Bush. Spring Wheat, any other kind—1st special by W. J. McFarland, R. Watson, 2nd, Wm. Anderson.

Bush. Barley—1st special by Moffatt Bros. E. Rutledge, 2nd, E. Large.

Bush. Peas, large—J. R. Anderson.

Bush. Peas, small—E. Rutledge, Wm. Douglass.

Bush. White Oats—H. Mathewson, Wm. Robinson.

Bush. Black Oats—H. Mathewson, Ben Coleman.

Half Bush. Timothy—H. Mathewson, W. Anderson.

ROOTS.

Collection potatoes—1st A Shiel, 2nd H Herd.

Bushel Early Rose—1st Robt Montgomery, 2nd Wm Robinson.

Bush any other kind—1st Ed Purvis, 2nd J H Heard.

Swede turnips—1st Wm Robinson, 2nd H Matthewson.

Blood beets—1st R Walker, 2nd Ed Rutledge.

Turnips, any kind—1st J. R Anderson, 2nd, H. Mathewson.

Mangold Wurtzel—1st, Wm. Douglas. H. Mathewson.

Field Carrots—Wm. Douglass, Thomas Davis.

E. H. Carrots—1st, Special by M. Byrnes, Robert Walker, 2nd, R H Stinson.

Cauliflowers—C Littlejohns.

E. Yorke Cabbage—E Purvis, H Mathewson.

Cabbage any other kind—J. Nelson, C Littlejohns.

Tomatoes—E. Davis, W. Douglass.

Onions any kind—R. Walker, R. Walker,

Cucumbers—H. Mathewson, J. McGee.

Citrons—R. McBride, H. Mathewson.

(To be Continued.)

Personals.

Mr. Wm. Lucas returned home this week.

Miss Willmott, of Milton. is visiting at Mr. Bowes.

Miss Lizzie Walker returned from Connecticut last week.

Thos. Eiseline and family, removed to Owen Sound, this week.

Mr. Wm. Bowler returned from a trip to manitoba last week.

Mr. Thos. Mann was home from Toronto on a visit this week.

Miss Rooke returned to Toronto last week after a six mounths visit with her sister, Mrs. Cæsar.

Miss Sarah A. Milsap, left on Tuesday, for Lefroy, where she will remain six months.

Oscar Wright and Albert Rutledge returned on Monday to the Owen Sound buisness Collage.

Mr. Boyle, of Glenelg, and Mr. Hamlin, of Osprey. left this week for Queens' Collage Kingston, to resume their studies.

Mrs. Mark Richardson and family left for Manitoba, last week, where they will join Mr. Richardson who has been up West for a number of years.

Mr. J. L. Browne, artist, left Markdale this morning, and, after spending a few days with his friends in Durham and vicinity, will take his departure for Victoria, B. C. His many friends will be sorry to hear of his leaving; as an artist he is A 1.

Spelling In Davonshire.

Mr. Bering Gould, M. A., in his life of Mr. Hawker, vicar of Morwenstow, gives the following advertisement over a little shop in Davonshire. It was written by "a schoolmaster of the old style:"—"Roger Giles, Surgin, Parish, clark Skulemaster, Groser and Hundertaker, respectably informs ladys and gentlemen that he drors teef without waeting minit, applies latches every hour blisters on the lowest tarms, and viqicks for a penny a piece. He sells Godfather's Kordales, kuts korns, bunyons, doktors horses, clips donkies once a month, and undertakes to luks after every bodys nayls by the ear. Jose harps, penny whissels, brass candelsticks, fryin pans, and other moozikal instrumints hat greatls rordcoced figers. Yung ladys and langeude, in the purtiest manner, also great care aken of their morrels and spelling. Also xarm-zinging, teaching the base vial, and all sorts of yancy work, squadrills, polkers, weazils, and all country dances tort at home and abroad at perfeckshun Per fumery and znuff in all its branches. As times cruel bad I begs to tell ey that I his just beginned to sell all sorts of stashonery ware. cox, hens, vouls. pigs. and all other kind of poultry. Blackin brishes, herrins, coles, shrubbin, brishes, traykell, godly bukes and bibles, mise-traps brick-dust, whisker seed, morrel poketankercheis, and all zorts of swatemaits, including tatars, sassages, and other garden stuff, bakky, zigars, lamp oyls pattins, tay kittles, and other intoxicating likkers; a dale of fruit, hats, zongs, here oyl, bukkits; grindin stones, and other aitables, korn, and bunyon zalyes and other hardware. I has laid in a large azzortment of trype, dogs mate, lolipops, ginger-beer, matches and other pikkles, such as hepsom salts, hoysters, Winzer sope, anzetrar. Old rags bought and zold eere and nowhere else, new lade eggs by me Roger Giles; zinging birds keeped, such as howles, donkies, paycox, lobsters, crickets, als the stock of a celebrated brayder. Agent Ior selling gutty-porker souls. P. S. I tayches gography, rithmetic, cowstick, jimnasticks, and other Chynees tricks."

CARD OF THANKS.

As I am now about leaving Priceville and having been engaged in various branches of business for over twenty years, in this village, I take this opportunity of kindly thanking all my old friends and the public generally, for the very liberal amount of patronage they have bestowed upon me in all the various branches of business in which I have been engaged. I hope you will give my successor in business a hearty welcome when he comes among you, and I also wish that he may prove himself worthy of all the support you may favor him with, and at the end of twenty more years he may be able to do what I am now doing, viz.: thanking you again for your very great liberality.

I remain, dear friends,
Yours very truly,
ALEX. WEBSTER.

Priceville, Oct. 3, 1883.

In the Goods of MARGARET IRETON (DECEASED)

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to Section 34 of Chapter 107, R. S. O., the creditors of Margaret Iretin, late of the township of Glenelg, in the county of Grey, deceased, who died on or about the 5th day of May, 1883, and all parties having claims upon her estate are on on before the next, to send by post prepaid, to Benjamin Coleman, of the Village of Markdale, in the county of Grey, one of the Executors, of the personal estate and effects of the deceased, (or to James Masson, Markdale, solicitor for the executors,) their Christian and Surnames addresses and description, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and nature of the securities (if any) held by them. and in default thereof the assets of the said deceased will be distributed, having regard only to the claims then received or those of which the executors then have notice, BENJAMIN COLEMAN, JOHN WM. FORD, } Executors.

FIFTEENTH DAY OF NOVEMBER

J. MASSON,
Solicitor for Executors.

Dated this 1st Day October, 1883.

MARKDALE EXCITED.

THE EXCITEMENT AT THE CORNER OF MILL & ARGYLE STREETS, STILL PREVAILS.

TRIMBLE & WRIGHT having re-leased the premises they now occupy, have just opened the largest assortment of Fall and winter goods ever shown in MARKDALE & vicinity.

LADIES.

For the ladies we have NEW Costume Cloths, all shades, NEW Black Cashmeres, NEW Colored Cashmeres, NEW Dress Goods from 10cts per yard upwards, new fall Prints, new Wincies, new Wraps, new Shrwls, new circulars, new Underwear, new knitted and quilted Skirts, new Hoop Skirts, new Bustles. new Silks, new Satins, new Fringes, new Frills, new Ribbons, new Collars, new Boots, Shoes & Slippers in the half sizes, round and box toes, &c.

GENTS.

For the Gents we have the newest patterns in Scotch, English, American and Canadian Tweeds made to order on the shortest notice by either Tailors. A new and large stock of ready-made clothing, new oil cloth coats, white shirts, colored shirts, hats, caps, cuffs. collars, ties, hose braces boots and shoes, &c.

BOYS.

For the boy's we have the largest assortment of ready-made clothing in the market as well as an endless variety of hats, caps, ties, collars, hose, boots & shoes, undercloth-ing &c.

GIRLS.

For the girls we have anything and everything calculated to make them comfortable, pleasant, happy, and attractive.

BABIES.

Don't forget the babies, we have just opened a large assortment of new Wool Hoods, new Bootees, new Leggins new Infantees, new Hose, new Bibbs, new Waists, new Wool Scarfs, new Boots, New Shoes.

We have added to our immense stock $2,000, two thousand dollars worth of choice Jewellery consisting of Watches, Clocks, Gold and Silver Chains, Lockets ear ring sets, wedding rings and in fact more than is kept in a well regulated Jewellery store and prices that touch the bottom.

Our GROCERIE Department is full to the TOP.

Our dress goods department is above the usual standard and we would advise all lovers of novelties and new things generally, to reserve their purchases until they have visited our store.

We also carry a large and well assorted stock of imported and canadian staples, linnen goods of every description, our stock is all fresh, and on inspecting it we feel sure you will pronounce it all through, Very Choice, good taste and judgment having been displayed in selection as to styles, colours and values.

TRIMBLE & WRIGHT.

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK

DressStuffsTweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILLIAM BROWN

Messrs. DOLL & BROWN

THE PEOPLES JEWELLERS OF

MARKDALE & CHATSWOSTH,

ARE AWAY AHEAD

When in town do not fail to call and see their immense new stock.

THEY have the ONLY GOOD stock in this section of Country. THEY buy for CASH, IMPORT Direct, and are not FRESH at the Business. Mr. Brown's Watch repairing is giving

FIRST CLASS SATISFACTION.

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

McFarland's boys say since their boss left for his trip business has been booming.

Mr. Henry Hamilton has leased S. J. Coleman's farm adjoining the village for five years.

Mr. Lyon the reform candidate for Algoma, was elected by a small majority last week.

Mr. R. Notter a very highly respected citizen of Owen Sound died at his residence on Sunday last.

Those indebted to A. McIntyre will save costs by calling at his shop without delay and settling up.

Dont forget the cattle fair on Saturday next the 6th. There will be a flock of sheep on the fair grounds for sale that day.

The editor of the Flesherton Advance continues to delight in his shame by calling names and dealing out slang.

The Board of Directors of the Toronto Industrial Exhibition decided to hold the fair next year from the 8th to the 20th of September.

Mr. Geo. Moorhouse, of the Flesherton station steam flour mill has pulled up stakes and went to Detroit. The mill has been idle some six weeks.

The proceeds of the Presbyterian tea meeting on show fair day together with the concert in the evening amounted to the sum of $92.00.

Ex. S. S. Cynhtia from Liverpool arrived at Montreal with dress goods jackets, cloakings, cashmers, shawls and mantles for W. J. McFarland. Entry will be opened up in a few days.

If you wish to subscribe for the Globe, Mail. Star, Farmer's Advocate or Montreal Witness or renew your subscription for any of the above papers hand in your name and subscription to this office.

CREDIT SALE.—Mr. S. J. Coleman has leased his farm and will sell by public auction on Saterday the 13th inst., at his premises adjoining this village, a quantity of stock and implements. For particulars see bills.

I. O. O. F.—At the last regular meeting of Loyal Markdale Lodge C. O. F. No. 78, the following members were elected officers for the next three months: W. L. Young, N. G.; Turner, V. G.; A. McFarland, sec. S. Rae, L. M.; D. McFarlane, warden; J. Cæsar, Treas.; Wm. Wilson, I. T.; G. S. Brown, R. S.. N. G.; C. McMillan, L. S.. N. G.; Mullarky, R. S., V. G.; J. Bryan, L. S., V. G. This lodge has some forty five members and is working harmoniously.

Mr. Thos. Sargent, of Berkeley, has built quite a little Village of his own at that place, and is carying on a good business in the blacksmith and wagon making line. He has also laid down considerable side walk round his premises.

Miss Laura Trevarrow, McFarland's popular millner, is expected to resume her old position this week. She is now with Mr. McFarland in Toronto selecting bonnets, hats, feathers. flowers, etc. Look out for grand display upon their return home.

We have recently sent out a large number of accounts, a few have promptly responded and we hope the balanse will hand in the amount of their account as soon as possible. We are determined to pay as we go and if others would do likewise it would greatly relieve us.

Our Photographer Mr. Hamilton had a fine display of pictures at our Township show. They are really a credit to our local artist. He exhibited also at the county fair at Flesherton taking first prize. His display there was very much admired and added very materially to the exhibit in the hall.

STREET LAMPS.—The evenings are long and nights dark rendering it very unpleasant and even dangerous for predestrians on our streets at night. We think our leading business men ought to erect street lamps, they would not cost much while they would be both usefull and ornamental. Who will take the lead in this matter.

NOTICE.—The person who took a can of honey from Berkeley station on Tuesday the 25th Sept. is hereby notified that if they do not return the same to the owner, Wm. Sargent Berkeley P. O., or remit to him the price ($5.) on or before the 10th day of October he will be prosecuted according to law, as he is well known.

We received an extended account of the sickness and death of Dr. Finney, of Kimberly, last Thursday after the paper was printed, we had previously received notice of his demise which we published and as our columns are so crowded we hope our correspondent will pordon us for the non-appearance of his interesting sketch in reference to above.

Dr. Armstrong has accepted a situation from the Syndicate as Surgeon on the C. P. Railway, his head quarters for the present is Port Arthur. He left on Tuesday and will enter upon the duties of his new situation at once. The Dr. made many friends while in Markdale, who regret very much to loose him. We wish him every success in hie new field of action.

District Dashes.

Mr. W. A. Gerolamy. of Tara, has struck an extensive market in British Columbia for his celebrated fanning mill's.

The Durham Chronicle advocates fire protection for that town.

The Editors of the Hanover Post and Durham Chronicle have buried swords and are now quite friendly. That's sensible.

The South Grey fall show was not up to former years.

BIRTHS.

ELLIOTT—In Artemesia, on Sept. 30th, the wife of Mr. Thos Elliott, of a son.

FERGUSON—In Flesherton, on the 1st inst., the wife of Mr. Geo. Ferguson, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

RUTHERFORD—WALKER—At Christ Church, Markdale, on the 3rd inst., by Rev. Jas. Ward, Mr. David Rutherford, of Owen Sound, to Miss Jane Walker, of Markdale.

DIED

ROBBE—On Monday, Sept. 3rd, the wife of Mr. Joseph Rorke, Clarksburg, aged 45 years and 5 months.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

For the Standard.

The Need of Teachers Being Instructed in Man's Constitution.

The grand difficulty of conducting education is that teachers and parents are ignorant, and that society has formed its institutions in ignorance of human nature.

To be able to convey instruction, the teacher must himself possess an accurate knowledge of the functions of faculties, and the different periods of which they are developed. When he sees manifestations in a child particularly powerful, he must know to what faculty they belong, and the particular class of objects or of studies fitted to cultivate this faculty into permanent energy and activity.

In order to train the faculties we must know what they are, what their spheres of action are and what objects are calculated to rouse them, and we must present these for words do not train.

The object of education is to modify the innate powers, and to regulate their manifestations, to restrain such of them as may be too energetic, or to call forth into greater activity those which may be naturally languid. Before we can hope to conduct education to advantage, we must acquire a knowledge of the innate dispositions and capasities of the mind, and learn philosopiecally, the sphere of action of each faculty, and how far each is susceptible of bein repressed or exhalted.

Education is intended to enlighten the intellect, to train it and the moral sentiments to vigor, and to repress the too great activity of the selfish feelings. But how can this be successfully accomplished, when the faculties and sentiments themselves, the laws to which they are subject, and their relations to external objects, are unascertained? Accordingly the theories and practices in education are innumerable and contradictory, which could not happen, if men knew the constitution and relations of the objects which they are training.

Is the mind a simple power? or does it manitest a plurality of facilties? it is important to teachers to ascertain this point. If it is one power then every kind of exercise cultivates the whole; if a plurality you must cultivate each; if it is one power, you cannot give rest by alternating studies; if plurality you may. Cultivate all the faculties. says a teacher at Ottawa, by composition; cultivate all says a teacher at Berlin by mathematics; cultivate all says a teacher at Hartford by reading fluently. If their be a plurality of faculties, it is important to the teacher to know what they are; that he may know how to excite them, and that he may cultivate them all.

The preceipt, "train up a child in the way he should go," is admirable, but extremely little information is communicated concerning. 1st, the way in which he should go, and 2nd the proper mode of training him to go in it. To find out the first we must know human nature and its relations clearly and precisely, as these display themselves in the institutions of society, and also the talents and dispositions of the child himself; because successful training implies judicious dictation of the individual into his proper department of life, enlightened with all the knowledge that is necessary to enable him to discharge the duties of it well,. Unfortunately, however, those who ought to train the child in the way he should go, in these respects are ignorant themselves.

To discover the second, we must either have enjoyed extensive experience in teaching and training children, or have made this subject a special study neither of which advantages are generally enjoyed by the trainers of children. Further, until the elementary qualities of the mind shall be familiarly known, it will be impossible to render the experience of one man in teaching thoroughly available to others; because vagueness and inconsistancy will be unavoidable as long as practice is purely empirical, which education must continue to be until it shall be founded on the philosophy of the mind. I repeat, therefore, that the effectual step in the improvement of the mass of the people must be to communicate to them a knowledge of the science of their own nature with the duties resulting from it, and to teach them the mode of beneficially applying this knowledge in ameliorating their own condition

(To be Continued.) DUX.

TOO GOOD TO MISS.—The O. S. Times says:—"The editor of the Flesberton Advance has been to Toronto, and treats his readers to an account of his trip last week, but gives himself away by telling how a boy charged him fifteen cents for blacking his boots. The editor is indignant and thinks it was extortion, but we must decline to believe it till we hear from the boy. We'll bet that youth imagined he had got a big contract on two mud scows from the north, and never wants to tackle such a job again. When that editor strays away from home again, and begins to put on airs and have his boots blacked, he musn't grumble if the boy takes into account the dimensions of the job.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NTH.			GOING SOUTH
Read Down.			Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	TORONTO	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	CARDWELL JUNC.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	ORANGEVILLE...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	MOUNT FOREST..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	TEESWATER	5 00	2 45
11 50	8 30	FLESHERTON	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	MARKDALE,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	OWEN SOUND....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE. General Manager

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.08; Spring, $0.92 to $1.12; Barley, 55c to 67c; Oats, 39c to 40c Peas, 70c to 78c; Hogs, $8.00 to $8.25; Potatoes, per bag, 90c to $1c; Butter, dairy, 17c to 18c; eggs, 18c to 00c.

STRAYED.

Came to my premises about the 1st Sept., a litter of spring pigs, three black and one white. The owner is requested to prove property, pay expenses and take them away.

DONALD McDUFFIE.

Glenelg, Sept. 17, 1883. 158-60

A CARD.

To all who are suffering from the errors and indiscretions of youth, nervous weakness, early decay, loss of manhood, &c., I will send a receipe that will cure you, FREE OF CHARGE. This great Remedy was discovered by a missionary in South America. Send a self-addressed envelope to REV. JOSEPH T. INMAN, Station D, New York City.

WANTED.

Three teachers wanted for the Public Schools, Markdale 1884. One male and two female teachers. Male teacher must hold at least second class Provincial. Females 3rd class Provincial. Applications stating salary and grade of certificate received until November 1st, 1883, by the undersigned.

B. COLEMAN.
Sec.-Treasurer.

Markdale, Sept. 22, 1883. 159-61

William McLeod,

BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,

MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Mathews' harness shop.

159-3m

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

FOR SALE.

LOT 3, GEORGE ST. SOUTH, MARKDALE, containing a fifth of an acre. Will be sold at a Bargain. The owner will be at the Markdale House, on the 24 th September. For further particulars apply to WM. McCUTCHEON, Markdale P. O., or to C. W. RUTLEDGE, at the STANDARD Office.

Farm for Sale.

50 ACRES, being lot 74, 3rd West of T. & S. R, Holland, four miles from Markdale, 20 acres cleared, well fenced and watered, balance good hardwood bush, with sufficient cedar for fencing.

For terms and other particulars apply to

WM. ROWE,
on the Premises.

Berkeley P. O., July 3rd, 1883. *41

New FALL Importations

——arriving daily at——

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats. Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in a the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

STELLA;

OR, AT CROSS PURPOSES.

CHAPTER XXVII. (CONTINUED.)

"IS IT TOO LATE?"

They were walking slowly onward, side by side.

"It is very good of you, Norman, to have taken so much trouble about me," said Stella, gently.

He looked at her oddly.

"Good of me!" he repeated, below his breath. "Oh! Stella, if you only knew!" and then they were both silent.

Presently they reached the end of the common, and got into the wood beyond it. A fallen tree lay prone by the side of the pathway.

"Let us sit here a minute and rest," suggested Norman, and they both sat down upon it.

"Stella," said Norman, very gravely. "I know very well what you are thinking of—it is of what—of the name I called you just now. You see, when one is frightened, like I was, why all pretenses are cleared away, and the truth leaps involuntarily to one's lips."

He did not look at her as he said this; he leant forward, making holes with his stick in the ground at her feet, and seemed to be absorbed in contemplating them.

Stella trembled so much, that she could not trust herself to speak. Presently he raised his head and looked at her; he saw all the trouble.

"Stella!" he said hoarsely—"Stella is it too late?"

The blood leaped up into her face—her heart beat wildly—tumultuously—she could not speak to him. Then the hot words burst at last from his lips—he forgot honor, and truth, and duty—he remembered only that he was alone with Stella, and that he loved her!

"You know what I mean!" he said brokenly. "You know it is you whom I love, and not her! It has been a wretched, miserable mistake from first to last. I don't know how it came about, or how it happened, that I was so mad as to fling away the chance of you—of your love! I was angry with you, I suppose—hurt and sore. You wounded my vanity—I was piqued and offended! I did not see that my very anger against you proved the all-absorbing interest that you were to me! I made up my mind that since I was to marry one of you, it should not be you, because I thought—forgive me, dearest—that I would make you feel pained by my preference of your sister! And then somehow I went through the farce of believing myself in love with her—or at least of liking her sufficiently well to fulfill our grandfather's wishes with regard to her and not to you. You know how it came about—and now—and now—I see only you before my eyes—you only in my dreams and in my thoughts! There is not a flower that does not remind me of your loveliness, nor the song of a bird that does not speak to me of your sweetness! Why, the very winds of heaven seem to breathe but your name, and cry aloud to me 'Stella—Stella!' and I—I am the most miserable man upon earth!"

"For pity's sake say no more!" she cried, white and trembling, half rising from his side: but he caught her hands and held them passionately to his breast.

"No—no! stay and hear me out! Tell me, Stella, are we both to be wretched forever and evermore for the want of a little courage, love? of a little resolution—a little disregard of the world's opinion—are we to spoil our lives?—yours, my darling, as well as my own, forever?"

Oh! how hard it was to be so tempted by the man she loved so well; to hear his pleading voice, to meet his entreating eyes; to be drawn towards him by the hands she would so gladly have yielded to, and yet to have to resist him!

Not for one minute did Stella waver or hesitate; not for all the lost joys of her life would she have dallied with the temptation which he laid thus at her feet.

Far back upon her mind there rushed the memory of the little bed-chamber in the French town by the Loire; she seemed to see again the high wooden beadstead in the alcove, the quaint, foreign furniture, and through the windows the tall towers of the cathedral, with the gray and white pigeons whirling about it, and the chimes that struck merrily all through the weary hours; and within, the dying woman on the bed, and the thin hands that held her own; and once again she seemed to hear the faint voice that had bidden her to be a mother to her sister in her place. And she had vowed that she would be so. And now she was to take her own happiness at the expense of Cecily? Was she to wreck her young sister's life in order to make good her own? Was that the manner in which she was to fulfill that vow spoken to her dying mother? Heaven forbid? What sweetness would life contain for her forever, if she were to be guilty of so base and so treacherous a thing!

Gently and slowly she withdrew her hands from Norman's grasp.

"Alas!" she said sadly; "if it were only my own happiness, do you suppose that I should hesitate? But there is Cecily!"

He was silent, looking gloomily downwards; then, with almost a groan, he echoed her words:

"Yes, there is Cecily! I had forgotten her."

"It would break her heart!" said Stella, in a whisper, "I would sooner die! Yes, it has been a mistake: but you will live it down. You will forget what you have said to me to-day. Oh! Norman, I am sorry you have ever said it—it will make it so much harder for you to bear."

"And you?" he said, quickly—"do you not feel it hard as well? Stella, tell me truly just this once—say that you love me, and then I will forget this madness, and do my duty to Cecily!—poor Cecily! yes, I had forgotten her!—but tell me once that you love me! You do, do you not?"

And then for the space of half a minute she was quite silent. A shadow of white despair passed over her face, and a great and noble resolve came over her heart. For his own good and for Cecily's that they might be happier together; that the past might not stand forever before the young husband's eyes—when he clasped his wife to his heart—for his sake Stella spoke words that were untrue.

"I love you as a brother!" she answered in a low, hard voice.

He rose to his feet; there was a great rage in his heart against her, and a wild despair.

"And you have let me pour out my whole soul to you! Forgive me and forget what I have spoken!"

He looked harsh and angry as he strode along by her side; but Stella said to herself:

"He will get over it sooner! It is better that he should believe that I do not love him; it is easy to be misjudged by him now, so that he may be the happier for it by and by! After awhile he will learn to love Cecily—who is gentle, and sweet and better tempered by far than I am—and will be happy together; and as to me—well, it will be no worse for me!"

But presently, as they neared the house, he stopped again and spoke to her:

"I do not believe what you said just now, Stella! If it is true, you are more cruel and heartless than I could have imagined! I will not ask you again if you love me——"

"Pray, do not!" she interrupted hurriedly; for who knows whether her fortitude might not have given way before a second trial!

"I will take you at your word, then!" he said, coldly; "but this may be the last time we may ever be alone together! When I am your sister's husband, Stella, I shall not dare to come near you; do not be afraid, whatever may be my weakness and my misfortune, I will not fail to do my duty towards her! And—and—I see you are right! I am bound to her even if you loved me!"—Stella winced at the word—"if you loved me, I must have kept my troth to her! The wrong I would do her in deserting her would have been too foul and dishonorable; but, Stella, ere we part to-day, grant me one boon! Do you remember that I kissed you once?—the night of the fancy ball at Valency, when you wore the pretty little costume, and you turned my head with your lovely eyes?—do you remember that I kissed you?"

"Can I ever forget it!" she murmured, not daring to look at him.

"Ah! if you knew how often since then the memory of that kiss has sweetened my dreams and haunted my waking thoughts! It was a light kiss that I gave you, Stella; and do you remember what you told me the next day, when you flouted me out of your sight with such indignant fury?—do you not remember that you told me that you considered a kiss a sacred and solemn thing?"

She bent her head in assent.

"I told you I would remind you of that some day. Stella, before we part—before a gulf, worse than death itself, is fixed forever between us—give me that sacred and solemn pledge—if not of love, at least of forgiveness!—give me one kiss!"

She cast one terror-stricken glance up into his face—a face so sad, so serious, that the boon he craved seemed almost like the prayer of a dying person—and then she covered her face with her trembling hands.

"I cannot—I cannot do it!" she wailed. "Oh, do not ask me!—it would kill me!"

She turned and fled from him; and Norman, in spite of her denial, knew that she loved him.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

LADY HONORIA'S SPRAINED ANKLE.

The singular chance which brought Lady Honoria Rosett at this juncture to the very remote seaside village of Sandyport, was an accident, fraught with the most important consequences to more than one of the characters of my story.

Lady Honoria came down to the Rectory for two days only—she brought with her her maid, and two large trunks, and a collie-dog—and before she had been a couple of hours in the place, all Sandyport seemed to have become aware of her presence.

Her large, well-made figure, walking across the sands towards the sea, was instantly descried by the major portion of the population, and created amongst them a distinct thrill of interest and excitement.

The sound of her large, cheery voice, the ring of her hearty laugh, and the loud barkings of the delighted collie, as he scampered about wildly over the wet sands after the swiftly-vanishing flights of seagulls, seemed to inspire a wholesome and reviving exhilarance in the utter stagnation of the dead-alive little town.

Even in a crowd Lady Honoria was not a person to pass unnoticed; far less, then, was she likely to be unobserved in such a tranquil place as Sandypoint.

Of course, on the very day of her arrival the Miss Nortons, who were shy of her, and also somewhat overpowered by the mingled grandeur and good-nature of their distinguished guest mentioned the name of their quiet little friend, Lily Finch.

"Lily Finch!" cried Lady Honoria. "Oh! I know her very well. She was governess at Lady Dyson's, Sir Edgar's mother, you know—poor little thing! I heard she had been very ill."

"So she has," answered Marion Norton, "and she is staying here to get strong It is very dull for her alone in lodgings, and so she comes over to us a good deal. Yes, of course, we know she had been a governess, but she never told us where it was. It is singular that she did not speak of Lady Dyson, for she heard us talking of your engagement to Sir Edgar; and she must of course, have known you."

"She is an odd, retiring kind of girl," said Katie. "She has never told us anything about herself—she is so reserved, that we always imagined she had been crossed in love!" she added, laughing.

"I wonder she has not been here to-day," said her sister. "She generally comes over in the morning. Perhaps she is shy of you, Lady Honoria!"

"Oh, dear me! fancy anybody being shy of me!" cried the Earl's daughter, laughing heartily. "But don't let us wait for her—come out and unearth her in her lodgings—I should like to see her again."

"Will you not be tired, Lady Honoria?" inquired Marion Norton, politely, for they had just come in from an hour's ramble by the sea.

"Me tired! Oh! when you have known me a little longer, you will find out that nothing ever tires me, except sitting still and doing nothing!"

So they sallied forth again, and at the corner of the street they encountered Lily Finch herself. The poor child blushed crimson. She would have given a good deal to have avoided the meeting—indeed, she had purposely kept to her room all the morning. It was only when she had watched the three girls re-enter the Rectory doors that she had ventured forth for a little walk, not imagining they would come out again so soon.

"Halloo, Miss Finch!" cried Lady Honoria, shaking her hand heartily; "we were just coming out to look for you. I am so pleased to see you about again—you have had a bad illness, have you not?—you look as if the sea-breezes would blow you away into froth now—but I hope you are feeling better?"

"Oh! yes, thank you, I am much better," but she could not look at Lady Honoria—she felt that she could hardly bear the sight of that happy, handsome face, that had all unconsciously stolen her lover away from her.

"Oh! how wicked I must be!" said the poor child to herself, "to feel so jealous and so miserable, Why can I not try to love her for his sake, and to forgive her—she who is so good and so kind to me."

But there are some things that are beyond the strength of even the meekest, and the gentlest, and the most unselfish of girls. And to feel in perfect love and charity with the successful rival who has supplanted her, is a thing which may be possible to an angel, but is distinctly out of the question for a woman.

Well, on the second day of Lady Honoria's visit to Sandyport, after she had tramped about on the sands, and made ducks and drakes with flat stones along the tops of the waves, to the unspeakable admiration of a small crowd of Sandyportian boys; after she had run races with the collie, and eaten her fill of big brown shrimps, and had declared her cold to be quite gone, and her whole self to be completely and effectually salted and saturated with brine,—after all this had been successfully accomplished, there came to pass a most dreadful thing. At least, it would not have been dreadful for any ordinary mortal; but for Lady Honoria Rosett—a beauty and an heiress, engaged to be married, moreover, within a month, and pledged to appear in goodness knows how many public places and responsible positions, as head of her father's establishment, and leader of the county society, between this and then—it was a very dreadful thing indeed.

Lady Honoria sprained her ankle. Nobody knew quite how the accident happened, or whose fault it was that she and the collie were suddenly perceived by the inhabitants of Sandyport to be scrambling along together, in an undignified fashion, upon the top of the very dilapitated wooden breakwater, which ran far out to sea upon the western side of the town; but so it was, that when in this precarious condition, Lady Honoria suddenly shouted aloud for help to her friends the Nortons, whom she had left upon the sands, and who were somewhat startled by the remarkable activity of this energetic young lady. When help, in the shape of a boat—for the breakwater was surounded by the waves, reached her, Lady Honoria stated her conviction, placidly, that her ankle must be sprained, and that if the town of Sandyport contained such an article as a surgeon or a doctor, that gentleman had better be sent for to the Rectory forthwith.

Mr. and Mrs. Norton were beside themselves with distress. Lady Honoria was to have gone home that very afternoon; and what would Lord Alchester say?

"Oh, never mind!" said Lady Honoria, cheerfully; "it can't be helped, you know, and it really might have been far worse, for I might have tumbled off into the water, and been drowned, whereas now I have only sprained my ankle."

"But, my dear, what will your papa say!" reiterated Mrs. Norton, almost wringing her hands. "There is your dinner-party at home to-night you were to have been home for!"

"Yes, and there are five invitations for next week I must write and put off!"

"Oh, dear!—oh, dear! Lord Alchester will think we are not to be trusted with the care of you! What are we to do?" groaned Mrs. Norton.

"Why, you must telegraph to papa at once, and say I cannot come home. Oh! he won't mind very much, I assure you, Mrs. Norton — he is quite used to my vagaries!"

"Is there anybody we can send for from home to nurse you, and shall we have a doctor from Colchester?"

"I don't want anybody but my maid—she will do everything I want; and as to the doctor, your native Sawbones will answer every purpose!"

Poor Mrs. Norton, although inwardly bewildered that so aristocratic a personage as Lord Alchester's daughter should designate a respectable member of the medical profession as a "Sawbones," was nevertheless relieved to be spared the trouble of sending to Colchester for a more eminent practitioner.

"She is a good-natured creature," the good lady confided afterwards to her husband, "but a regular tom-boy; and the slang she talks is quite abominable!"

It is certain that the manners and customs of the "upper ten" presented themselves in somewhat a new light to Mrs. Norton and her daughters during Lady Honoria's visit.

The Earl's daughter was made as comfortable as circumstances would admit of. She was installed upon a sofa drawn up by the window, with a full view of the sea and the road—not, by the way, a very exciting prospect, but still the best that Sandyport could afford. There was always the omnibus, going backwards and forwards to the station, to be looked at; the shop-girls walking up and down in the sun, arm-in-arm with their sweethearts; and the fishing-boats, with their broad sails, coming into the barbor, laden with herring and mackerel. It was the best the place could offer.

At Lady Honoria's elbow stood a table covered with fresh flowers and books, carefully selected and arranged for her entertainment by the Rector himself. There were no modern novels amongst them, for circulating libraries were an unknown luxury in this remote corner of the world, but there was the best that Mr. Norton's bookshelves could produce—"The Vicar of Wakefield" and "Evelina." "Boswell's Life of Johnson" and "Wuthering Heights"—all of which would have improved Lady Honoria's mind and education very much indeed had she taken the trouble to read them. But Lady Honoria hated reading, and would have none of Mr. Norton's carefully chosen favorites.

She looked out of the window, and she played with Rollo, the collie—she talked to the Norton girls till she was sick of them—and then she took to yawning, loudly, repeatedly, and unceasingly—so that it was plain that her enforced inactivity was the worst and direst punishment which fate could possibly have inflicted upon her.

By the end of the second day she was at the end of her patience.

She could bear it no longer! She said to Mrs. Norton: "Mrs. Norton, would you very much mind it if I were to send for Sir Edgar Dyson?"

"My dear"—poor Mrs. Norton's old-fashioned ideas were somewhat startled—"your father, surely—"

"Oh! papa would only bore me! And I really must have somebody fresh to amuse me, or I shall die of it! Besides, what would you do with papa?"

What, indeed! Mrs. Norton shuddered as she pondered over the very plain cooking of her heavy-handed chef de cuisine. But, then, Sir Edgar might be nearly as bad!

"Papa, you see, would have to stay in the house; he couldn't go out backwards and forwards at night, because his throat is delicate; besides which, he couldn't see the fun of sitting by me all day, and it would bore us both to death! But Edgar could get a bedroom at the inn, and a mutton chop there is all he would care for. He is not at all particular; and if you don't mind his coming to see me——"

"Of course I don't mind, Lady Honoria—that is to say, if you are sure it would be quite proper."

"Oh, dear, yes," she answered laughing. "What an odd thing, you should think of propriety! That never entered my head! Give me my writing-case, please, Marian, and I will write to him at once. It will be something to do."

For Lady Honoria was not one of those young women who write daily journals to their lovers. She had only written one letter to Edgar since they had been engaged, and that had been an invitation note, to which he had duly replied.

On this occasion she sent him a more lengthy epistle:

"Sandyport.

"MY DEAR EDGAR:

"Here I am, tied by the leg literally, having managed to sprain my ankle as I dare say you have heard already from papa. This is the most frightfully dull place I ever was in in my life, although I liked it well enough as long as I could walk about with Rollo. The Nortons are very kind, but of course I have nothing much to say to them. I do wish you would run down for a couple of days to amuse me. You can get a room at the inn. It will help to pass away the time, and I hope I shall be well enough to be moved home in a week. The old lady is very much shocked at me for wanting to send for you. She does not think it proper. I suppose she thinks you will want to sit and kiss me in public, with your arm round my waist all day long! I must explain to her that nowadays nobody does that kind of thing out of a three-volume novel; it has gone out of date, like our grandmothers' nightcaps. It is very tiresome to be kept here doing nothing. I think I have never yawned so much in my whole life! I am very anxious to know if you have ordered my diamonds yet. How good you are to give me such a beautiful present! I shall long to hear all you have done about them. Do come as quickly as you can.

"Yours always,

"HONORIA."

"P.S.—By the way, little Miss Finch is here; but of course you know it. I dare say she will be glad to go out for a walk with you when you get quite cramped by sitting by my sofa."

And when Sir Edgar Dyson had read this letter all through, down to the very last word of the postscript, he packed up his portmanteau straightway, and started by the very next train to Sandyport, in Essex.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Defect of the New Version.

In the October Century, Prof. George P. Fisher of Yale, writes forcibly of "Martin Luther After Four Hundred Years," and compares the new version with Luther's translation of the Bible, to the detriment of the new, as follows: "He was determined to issue not a colorless version, or a version enervated by idiomatic peculiarities of the Hebrew and Greek, or a pedantic version, intelligible and interesting only to the cultivated, but rather a translation which should make the Bible appear to have been written in German. He gives amusing accounts of the struggle it cost him to make the sacred writers 'speak German.' In dealing with Job, especially, his patience was well nigh exhausted. No one could understand what it had cost him to make Job 'reden Deutsch.' But he succeeded. In his version, the apostles and prophets 'reden Deutsch.'—the Deutsche of the shop, the market, and the hearthstone. Luther's Bible is a living book. If the recent English revision of the authorised version, admirable in various particulars, fails at any point, it is just here. There is a lack of freedom in the incorporation of the English idioms; in a word there is an undue servility. So far as a translation fails to give the force and beauty or the original, it is incorrect. Close adhesion to grammar and lexicon, in many instances, may be the cause of the greater loss than gain. We must have the spirit as well as the letter of the text. If we can not have both, then better the spirit than the letter. Our recent revisers make the frightened disciples who saw Jesus walking on the sea cry out: 'It is an apparition' (Mat xiv. 26). Would such a company of fishermen, in a state of alarm, use this word? If not some other should have been substituted for it. The juicy language of Luther's version, its sinewy vigor, its racy idioms, and the rythmical charm which it has in common with the authorised English version, are literary merits which it is impossible to estimate too highly."

A young girl was caught kissing her sweetheart a few nights ago. Her mother took her to task for such actions, but the girl silenced her by this quotation: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." The old lady wilted. Memories of old were brought to mind.

LOST IN THE BUSH.

A Young Bostonian Without Food Eleven Days.

The Champion arrived here yesterday from her usual trip to the north shore. She had on board a young Bostonian, Louis Lelong, who came to this about six weeks ago, and who has time been working for Mr. Frank on surveying work on the eastern the Canada Pacific Railway. The nate young man, who is now lying at real House in a very weak and bruised dition, tells the following story of his ing. He says on the 2nd instant, decided to leave the employ of Mr. ley, he started off for Jack Fish Bay, tance of ten miles. By some means, ing the country, he missed his way, several days wandered through the without any other food than such country afforded in berries, which that neighborhood. At last, after no less than ten days in this helpless solitary state he came to Victoria Cape, overlooks Jack Fish Bay. He was weak and exhausted, and was endeavoring make his way to the water's edge to his thirst, when he slipped and fell cliff about forty feet high. It appears some workmen on the railway at the posite side of the bay saw him when made his appearance on the summit of cliff, and as he did not reach the camp search party was next day despatched look for him. Their efforts were and Lelong was found in a terribly ed condition, with his feet swollen to ly twice their natural size, and his legs body badly bruised. He was conveyed the headquarters of Mr. J. J. Reid, foreman took charge of him until the of the Champion on the same day, poor fellow was placed upon a mattress the deck of the tug, and, as stated was brought into town yesterday. He been eleven days in all without and everything conducive to the comfort was done by the officers of the and a Swede passenger who took an in him. Upon the arrival of the tug Dr. Smellie was notified, and he the sufferer and prescribed for him.—der Bay Sentinel.

CHOICE THOUGHTS OF THE BEST THORS.

Doing good is the only certainly happy tion of a man's life.—Sidney.

The certain way to be cheated, is to one's self more cunning than Chanon.

The censure of those that are opposite us is the nicest commendation that given us.—St. Evremond.

As they who, for every slight infirmity take physic to repair their health, do impair it; so they who, for every trifle, eager to vindicate their character, do weaken it.—Burke.

To be happy, the passion must be and gay, not gloomy and melancholy, propensity to hope and joy is real one to fear and sorrow, real poverty, Hume.

A tender conscience is an inestimable b'ssing: that is, a conscience not only to discern what is evil, but instantly to it, as the eyelid closes itself against —T. Adams.

It is very often more necessary to contempt than resentment, the former never forgiven, but the latter sometimes got.—Chesterfield.

To make others' wit appear more one's own, is a good rule in conversation necessary one, to let others take notice your wit, and never do it yourself.—Sir Temple.

Some men are as covetous as if they to live forever; and others as profuse they were to die the next moment.—totle.

Where necessity ends, desire and curiosity begin; no sooner are we supplied with thing nature can demand, than we sit to contrive artificial appetites.—Johnson.

It is certain that either wise bearing or norant carriage is caught as men take eases one of another; therefore, let them heed in their company.—Shakspeare.

Nothing is so great an instance of manners as flattery. If you flatter all company, you please none. If you only one or two, you affront the rest.—

A shrewd obsever once said that in ing the streets of a slippery morning might see where the good natured lived, by the ashes thrown on the ice the doors.—Franklin.

There are a set of malicious, prating dent gossips, both male and female, murder characters to kill time; and will a young fellow of his good name before has years to know the value of it.—Sheridan.

If you cannot be happy in one way another, and this facility of disposition wants but little aid from philosophy, health and good humor are almost the affair. Many run about after felicity absent man hunting for his hat, while in his hand or on his head.—Sharp.

If Satan ever laughs it must be at crites. They are the greatest dupes he They serve him better than any others, receive no wages. Nay, what is still extraordinary, they submit to greater fication than the sincerest Christian Colton.

Gilt-Edged Folly.

At a children's carnival at Saratoga little girl was dressed to resemble a mine, and she looked just about like a pound nugget. Her shoes were gilded, stockings of gold-colored silk, her pantalets were bordered with bullion fringe, her one mass of gilded silk, bunched up in so that it looked like a rough, lumpy chunk of gold. With bracelets on her almost covering them, great chains her neck and a crown on her head, and dust powdered thickly on her long hair, the little one looked very precocious deed. One elderly man remarked that the child needed to complete the was to have a ring through her nose.

A Maine woman is about to bring for breach of promiss against her husband, who promised to marry her but who appears to have escaped,

FARMER'S CORNER.

The Mildew of the Grape.

Closely related to the potato rot fungus, an account of which was recently given, is the mildew upon the grape vine. These two fungi belong to the same genus, the former being known to science as Peronospora infestans and the latter as Peronospora viticola. The mildew of the grape is much slower in its action, though the general behavior and appearance of the two pests are much alike. The grape mildew makes its first appearance upon the under surface of the grape leaves in the form of small frost-like patches. The smooth leaved varieties of grapes exhibit this parasite to much better advantage than those sorts the leaves of which are covered with a dense coat of hairs. These patches of a crystalline appearance consist of the web of branching threads which come out of the breathing pores of the leaves and bear the summer spores on their many terminations. These spores are formed very rapidly, fall away from their attachments, and are carried by the wind, and otherwise, to new places and there germinate, thus propagating the mildew. The substance of the grape below the "frosty" patch is interlaced with the threads of the fungus, which branch and send short suckers into the walls of the leaf cells and rob them of their nourishment. The mildew lives upon the stolen juices of the grapevine and thus does its injury. The infested leaves soon turn brown and die unless some measures are taken to destroy the parasite.

The conditions most favorable for the growth of the grape mildew are a moist atmosphere with bright sunshine. A succession of showers in late June is very apt to result in an abundance of mildew. This season it has been unusually destructive, owing to excessive moisture in early summer. The fungus does not confine itself to the leaves, but spreads to the stems and the fruit. The writer has examined many clusters this season, the berries of which were discolored within when only partly grown; while on the outside they had the attractive color of half ripened fruit. When sections of these prematurely ripened grapes were placed under the compound microscope, they were found infested with the filaments of the grape mildew. The skin of the grape being tough and without breathing pores, prevents the fungus from coming to the surface and forming the summer spores. The diseased grapes cease to grow, become shrivelled, and finally drop as worthless masses from the stems.

Some varieties seem to be more injured than others by the mildew. The fungus thrives best on the thin leaved sorts, but none of the varieties, so far as we know, are proof against the pest. Some varieties are more vigorous and perhaps are better able to withstand the attacks of the mildew. The remedy for the mildew on the grape is flowers of sulphur. It should be dusted on or blown on, with a bellows, so soon as the first signs of the trouble may be seen. The sulphur is more lasting in its effects if applied when the foliage is wet, either with dew, in early morning, or with rain. It is important to get the yellow powder upon the under side of the leaves and in contact with the "frosty" patches. It is too late to apply the remedy this season, but all grape growers should make the necessary preparations to meet this enemy upon its next appearance early next summer.

A second form of spore is formed by the mildew and within the substance of the infested part. It results from the union of the contents of two cells, and is of slow growth. These spores are provided with thick coverings of a brown color and do not germinate until the following spring. The sexual spores, as they are called, are most abundant on the foliage in late autumn, and remain in the substance of the foliage until set free by the processes of decay, etc. It is evident that these spores are designed to carry the mildew over the winter season, and may be called winter spores in distinction from those formed early in the season, which might be designated summer spores. Very many fungi have these two forms of spores, and in some the number is increased to five or more.

The leaves of the vineyard after they have fallen should be gathered in piles and burned, and in this way a vast number of the spores within the leaves would be destroyed. This part of the work of checking the spread of the grape mildew may still be done this season. It is a prevention, an ounce of which is worth a pound of cure. The remedy is applied in early summer in the form of flowers of sulphur. Many vineyardists are careful about "sulphuring" their vines at the time are in manuring the ground or gathering the crop. Others are careless of this, and lose by it.

There is another mildew of the grape vine, closely related to if not the same as the fatal oidium of European vineyards.

Improved Blackberries.

All of the popular cultivated Blackberries were originally found in a wild state. If any really excellent variety has been raised by cultivation from seeds, we are not aware of it. Almost every one who has in his youth gone "a blackberrying," can recollect certain patches, or single bunches, which gave fruit far superior to others, and which, in memory, seem vastly better than any of the cultivated sorts. Those who know of such special wild bushes can easily bring them into cultivation, and enjoy their fruit without hunting for it. Take up the roots of such bushes this fall and cut all that are as large as a goose-quill, or larger, into pieces from one to three inches long. Take a box of any kind, and, if the bottom is tight, bore several holes in it. Lay some straw over the holes, and over this an inch or so of soil, more roots, and so on until the box is full. Bury the box in a place where water will not stand, and cover it with enough earth to prevent freezing. Next spring the roots may be planted in nursery rows.

Feeding Cows During the Grazing Season.

Grazing dairy cows is the almost universal practice of our farmers, without any regard to the condition of the grass, or the character of the season. This practice is well enough where there is full feed, and the cows get all the feed they can digest. It is not economy on the great majority of our farms, especially in the older States. As a rule the land devoted to pasture has been pastured for generations, has for many years received no manure except the droppings of the cows, and its best constituents have been carried off in the shape of milk, veal, and beef. The cow is a machine for making milk and butter, and can no more yield these commodities without suitable and abundant forage than a grist mill can turn out meal without corn in the hopper. A certain portion of her food goes to keep her in good flesh. This has the first claim, and some pastures do little more than meet this want. The milk grows small by degrees and beautifully less, until the cows dry up early in the fall. In other and better pastures, there is material for a good supply of milk for six months in the year, and the average yield of butter on our farms probably does not reach two hundred pounds per cow annually. With suitable addition to the rations gathered from the pasture, there is little doubt that the yield could be brought up to an average of three hundred pounds of butter a year per cow, with more profit in the last hundred pounds than in the first two hundred pounds. The capital invested in the cow, the milking and care of the milk are about the same whether the yield of butter be two or three hundred pounds. There is additional expense for the food, and the labor of feeding. To offset this you have, beside butter, the better condition of the cow, a better calf, the additional quality of manure dropped upon the pasture and in the stable, and its better quality, to say nothing of the satisfaction of having a sleek, profitable and well-fed animal under daily observation. Esthetics are worth something above pecuniary value. We are trying this season, upon a thorough-bred Jersey cow, the experiment of daily rations of cotton seed meal one quart in the morning, wheat middlings one quart, corn meal one quart, at evening, in addition to pasture, and are surprised at the increase and excellence of the butter, and the growth of the manure heap.

The Modern Coquette.

A recently-published story contains the following striking paragraph:—The mere suffering which a man undergoes at the hands of a coquette is not in its first effects so greatly to be depreciated. It is in the consequences that lies the deepest wrong which the insincere woman does to the man who loves her. For the distrust of her whole sex which grows upon him, and the conviction that neither she nor her kind are worthy of the best that is in his nature. She is responsible. The disdain which he may feel toward her can not greatly injure him. But the spirit in which he regards the tendency in his nature which looks to woman for the truest support of his life, and the systematic hardening of those qualities in him which reach out instinctively to the feminine side of humanity, are soul hurts, which are not healed when the pain of the deceived love has passed. His judgement of the whole sex can net fail to be biased by his experience of the woman who has most deeply interested him. Thus it is that the coquette, by lowering the whole standard of womanhood in the eyes of man, injures her own sex as well as the other.

The forms of coquetry are infinitely varied and some of them are much more reprehensible than others. The woman who undertakes conquests simply for the glory of displaying at the wheels of her chariot the captive she holds by the rosy bonds of love, is the commonest type. As her coquetry is of the most patient kind, its wounds are rarely severe or lasting, and yet there is a certain vulgarity about this spirit of conquest which makes this type of woman dangerous to both men and women.

A more subtile and disastrous influence is wielded by the woman who is bent on the scientific analysis of the various effects produced by the tender passion of men of different character and nature. She has little pigeon-holes marked with different characteristic names, and into these she classifies every new specimen. She is apt soon to discover that the pigeon-holes may be very few, and that nearly all the men she meets will fit exactly into one or another of them. When she has arrived at this conclusion she is satisfied: two or three good specimens of every sort having been coolly analyzed and properly pigeon-holed. It is variety and not quality she desires, and having already become quite familiar with the manner in which a certain species of the genus homo is affected by the greatest of passions, she allows many possible victims to pass by without an effort or desire to add them to her connection; but if a specimen hitherto unclassified crosses her path, she is ready with her little dissecting knife to peer into the labyrinths of a new phase of human nature.

Another class, perhaps the most dangerous one, into which we are dividing coquettes, include those women who fancy themselves in love with each fresh lover. These are emotional and sympathetic women, who, being incapable of strong feeling themselves, are borne along by the force of a passion which fascinates them, and which they would gladly reciprocate. In their often-renewed disappointment at finding that the new lover can not make them forget themselves they feel a senseof injustice, and never dream that they are not the injured ones.

What He was in.

"Mr. White," said a Harrisburg lawyer to a witness in the box, "at the time these papers were executed you were speculating, were you not?"

"Yes, sir."

"You were in oil?"

"I was."

"And what are you in now?"

"Bankruptcy and the poor-house!" was the solemn reply.—Wall Street News.

Mrs. S—— remarked to a friend that she intended going to Niagara for a few days during the summer, and had decided to take her little son with her.

"I was there for three weeks, with all my children, last summer," said the lady addressed.

Mrs. S—— expressed surprise that Mrs. —— should take her children to so dangerous a place. "Weren't you afraid they would get into the falls?" she questioned.

"Oh, no," said Mrs. ——, with evident satisfaction. "My children are all well trained."

At which Mrs. S——'s boy, who was present, cried out, bitterly, "Well, I guess I've been trained if anybody ever has."

PERSONALITIES.

Interesting Items about Different People.

The Pope proposes to open the Vatican Library freely to historical students.

Mr. Joe Jefferson's sister Cornelia reappears the coming season on the stage.

Thomas Hughes is visiting the Rugby College, in which he still has confidence.

Instead of having guests led up and presented to her, Queen Margherita goes about the room and greets each one in turn.

The Duchess of Connaught and Princess Christian sang at a concert lately given for the completion of St Anne's Church, Bagshot.

Miss King, one of the nursing Sisters at Fort Pitt Military Hospital, has received the Royal Red Cross in recognition of her services in Egypt.

Florence Nightingale has been invited to Osborne by the Queen in order to be invested with the new Order of the Red Cross, but was compelled to decline on account of ill health.

The two children of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught are to be left at Windsor Castle and Osborne during the absence of their parents in India, which looks nice and grandmotherly.

The Comte de Paris, at present heir to the French monarchy (or what is left of it) is rich, tall, slender, in delicate health, and forty-six years old. His wife is ambitious, and an interpid horse-woman.

Canon Farrar, of Westminster Abbey, has become a total abstainer from alocohol. His friends say that his capacity for work is increased thereby. He can now push along without any intermission, except for meals, from morning to night.

Prince Alexander, the young Crown Prince of Servia, only seven year old, performs the most wonderful arithmetical operations in his head with great quickness, which, altogether with his extreme sensibility, occasions his parents anxiety.

An entertainment given recently by Mrs. Gladstone, in London, was enlivened by the presence of Miss Jenny Young, of New York, who read before a fashionable audience her interesting lecture on Longfellow, and sang several of his poems, instead of reciting them, to illustrate her points.

M. Renan and his family narrowly escaped destruction at Casamiccioli, having engaged rooms at a hotel where nearly all the inmates were destroyed, but having been prevented from taking them by his readiness to oblige the Minister of Public Instruction, who wished him to delay long enough to distribute the school prizes.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie of New York, having presented a free library to the town of Dunfermline, Scotland, a speech in honor of the event was delivered by Lord Roseberry, who said among other things: "We all of us, in whatever position we may be placed, have occasion to find life irksome and almost intolerable. I have always found two aids or assistances to overcome that sense of irksomeness, which are within the reach of the poorest of us, and which are the most efficient for the purpose. The first is sense of humor, and the second the love of books."

Woman as a Guide.

There has always been a dim consciousness in man that his relations to the divine, that is, to the ideal side of life, were most fitly represented by the purity and singleheartedness of woman, and that she is in a manner a mediator and interpreter between him and heaven, reversing the puritan, and, so to speak, political idea expressed in Milton's line, "He for God only, she for God in him." Of this dim consciousness the Pythia and Delphi and the vestal virgins at Rome were testimony. But woman as a representative of the ideal can hardly be said to have been consciously recognized until Christianity had consecrated the adoration of the Virgin Mother. Since then, although the influence of women as wives and mothers must always be immeasurably the most important and precious, it is impossible to deny that their influence has existed in other forms which have affected the history of mankind. It is enough to name Jeanne d'Arc and St. Catharine of Siena, as types of a class that has proved furens quid femini possit when her frenzy is of that rare celestial kind which can work itself out in ordered action, and leave its mark in the weighty affairs of men, as the lightning on the river rock. Nor yet is it as wife or mother that Beatrice is the mystic guide of Dante's spiritual life. The middle ages, with their sense of the nearness of the supernatural, were of course a period far more apt for such manifestations. The puritan and reforming religious enthusiasms of the seventeenth century were associated with mysticisms of a different kind, and as to the eighteenth, a Jeanne or a St. Catharine could hardly, under any modification, have co-existed with Frederick II. and Voltaire. Yet the paths of perfection in which good women have walked unsupported by man's arm have not been less thronged since then because they have been more hidden from the light. Not from deserts, and hermitages or mystic oak forests have they gone forth to sway battles on the fields or councils in the palace, but from inconspicuous homes into hospitals and prisons and haunts of squalid misery and vice.

Uncle Sam's Navy

In a communication published in the Army and Navy Journal, Commander J. B. Coghlan, U. S. N., states that the consultations of eminent naval and other surgeons, respecting his rheumatic attack, failed to afford him the slightest relief. By advice of Dr. Hoyle he used St. Jacobs Oil, which wrought a complete and, as he says, a wonderful cure. John Carr Moody, Esq., lawyer at Vallejo, Cal., was likewise cured of a severe joint trouble.

The rivers are generally very low. Tippleton asks, "What could you expect? This comes of taking nothing but water,"

The daughter of Lawrence Barrett, who has just married a German Baron, is of gentle manners, with a sweet serious face. Her husband is a man of family and fortune. He fell in love with her while she was studying in Stuttgart.

THE FATHER OF FISH-CULTURE.

Seth Green's Ideas About the Finny Tribes and some of His Varied Experiences.

(Turf, Field and Farm.)

"How did you ever come to devise this scheme?"

"I have been working at it ever since I was large enough to bend a pin."

The above remark was addressed to Mr. Seth Green, the veteran fish culturist, who is known to the entire world, and his reply indicates the extent of his labors.

"When I was quite young," he continued, "I would lie on the limbs of trees that reached out over the water entire afternoons watching the movements of the fish and studying their habits. In this way I discovered many characteristics which were before unknown. I saw, as every observer must see, the destructive elements that are warring against fish, and I realized that unless something were done, the life in the streams of this country would become extinct. To counteract this disastrous end became my life work, and I am happy to say I have seen its accomplishment."

"Were you successful on the start?"

"No, indeed. Up to that time all artificial attempts to hatch and raise fish from the spawn had failed, and I was compelled to experiment in an entirely new manner The work was a careful and tedious one, but I finally succeeded, and to-day I am able to hatch and raise fully seventy-five per cent of all spawn."

"Enormous! Why, that is a larger percentage than either the vegetable or animal kingdoms produce in a natural condition."

"I know it, but we exercise the greatest care in the start, and guard the little fellows until they become able to care for themselves."

The foregoing conversation occurred at Caledonia where the representative of this paper was paying a visit to the state fish hatcheries. It has been his privilege to report very many interesting sights within the past twenty-five years, but the view presented here exceeds in interest anything ever before attempted.

"How many fish are there in those ponds, Mr. Green?"

"As we have never attempted to count them it would be impossible to say. They extend away up into the millions though. We shipped over three millions out of the ponds this year and there seemed to be as many afterward as before. We have nearly every variety of the trout family and many hybrids."

"You speak of hybrids, Mr. Green. What do you mean by that?"

"I have experimented for years in crossing the breed of the various fish and am still working upon it. We cross the female salmon trout with the male brook trout, and thus produce a hybrid. And then we cross the hybrid with the brook trout, which gives us three-quarter trout and one-quarter salmon trout. This makes one of the finest fishes in the world. He has all the habits of the brook trout, lives in both streams and lakes, develops vermillion spots on his sides, rises readily to a fly, is far more vigorous and fully one-third larger than ordinary brook trout of the same age. The possibilities of development in the fish world are great and we are rapidly ascertaining what they are."

As the man of news watched the countenance of Mr. Green while he was giving the above account, he could not but feel that he was in the presence of one of the few investigators who, from a rich and life-long experience, bring great benefit to the world. Let the reader imagine a strong and stalwart frame, surmounted by a head strongly resembling that of Socrates, and covered with a white silky beard of luxuriant gray hair. Seth Green, the father of fish culture, is a picture of health, and the reporter could not help remarking so.

"If you had seen me the last winter and spring, young man, you might have thought differently," said the veteran.

"How is that? One would think, to look at you, that sickness was something of which you knew nothing."

"And so it was until last winter. I went down into Florida in the fall to see what kind of fish they had in that state and study their habits, and was attacked with malaria in its severest from, and when I came home I realized for the first time in my life, that I was sick. My symptoms were terrible. I had dull, aching pains in my head, limbs and around my back. My appetite was wholly gone, and I felt lack of energy such as I had often heard described but had never experienced. Any one who has ever had a severe attack of malaria can appreciate my condition. I went to bed and remained there all the spring, and if there ever was a sick man I was the one."

"It seems hardly possible. How did you come to recover so completely?"

"My brother, who had been afflicted by a severe kidney trouble and threatened with Bright's disease was completely cured by a remedy in which I had great confidence. I therefore tried the same remedy for my malaria and am happy to say I am a well man to day and through the instrumentality of Warner's Safe Cure, which I believe to be one of the most valuable of medicines. Indeed I see it is indorsed by the United States medical college of New York, and that Dr. Gunn, dean of that institution, has written a long article concerning its value."

"And are you now as well as formerly?"

"Apparently so. I keep the remedy on hand all the while though and do not hesitate to recommend it to others."

"One question more. How many ponds of fish have you here and how are they divided?"

"Well, we have 42 ponds which are divided up as follows: 22 ponds of brook trout, 2 ponds of salmon trout, 3 of McCloud river or rainbow trout, 2 ponds of German trout, 3 of California mountain trout, 2 ponds of hybrids, 4 of one-quarter salmon and three-quarter brook trout, 2 ponds of gold fish, and one pond of Carp. Then we have what we call the centennial pond 'happy family,' consisting of crosses of different fish, including Kennebec salmon, Land Locked salmon, California salmon, brook trout, salmon trout and hybrids. These fish range in size from minnows to 18-pounders, and in age from one-and-one-half months to eleven years. I forgot to say, also, that we have a 'hospital' pond, which is entirely empty, which speaks pretty well for a community of many millions. Indeed the whole secret of fish culture can be summed up in four things. Impregnation—using no water. Plenty of food. Plenty of pure water and cleanliness."

The numerous fish exhibitions which are taking place in all parts of Europe and the unusual interest which is being manifested in this subject throughout the world all owe their origin to the process above described as originated and conducted by Seth Green. It is certainly cause for congratulation to every American that this country produces so many men whose genius brings value to the world, and it is proof positive of the greatest merit that a remedy even with such high standing as Warner's Safe Cure is known to have should be so strongly endorsed and recommended by one so reputable and reliable as Seth Green.

Query—Is the gondola the car naval of Venice?

C. S. Judson, Wallaceburg, says Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, for Summer Complaints is a splendid preparation, and I do not know of a single case in which it has not given satisfaction, but on the contrary have had many testimonials to its efficacy. (32)

"Try not the pass," the old conductor said to the dead beat.

It is a fact that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has more well-earned testimonials of praise for its virtues in curing Cholera, Colic, Cholera Infantum, Dysentery, etc., than all other remedies of that class combined. It will stand investigation. (36)

About the only troubles that come single are fussy old maids.

Age should always command respect. In the case of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry it certainly does, for 25 years that has been the standard remedy with the people, for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Colic and all Bowel Complaints. (33)

Is the Irish language a real language, or is it merely a Pat-ois

There is no remedy known to medical science that is more positive in its effect, to cure Cholera Morbus, Colic, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cholera Infantum, and all Bowel Complaints than Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. (35)

Our babies—With all their faults we love them still, not noisy.

True merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increasing sales; as a prominent druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits." It is the grand specific for diseases of Blood, Liver and Kidneys. 25,000 bottles have been sold, during the last three months. (34)

Jack Frost doesn't say anything, but he indulges in freezs peach.

J. E. Kennedy, dispensing nemist, Cobourg, says that no blood purifier that he has ever handled has had such a large sale as Burdock Blood Bitters, and adds, "in no case have I heard a customer say ought but words of highest praise for its remedial qualities. (31)

The most prominent man in the city is the street sweeper. He fills the public eye.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-st. West, Toronto, Canada.

The Rev. Mr. Henn is a minister in Georgia. Probably a lay preacher.

From MR. WILLIAM MAGRATH.

Erindale, Credit P. O., Jan. 8th, 1883.

MY DEAR SUTHERLAND: Some two months since I became so afflicted with Rheumatism of the neck and right shoulder as to render my right arm nearly powerless. I determined to try your "Rheumatine" and the result is that I am now free from pain, and enjoy the full use of my arm. My general health is also much improved by the use of the medicine. The first two bottles relieved me—the third bottle freed me from all pain.

WM. MAGRATH,

J. N. Sutherland, St. Catharines.

A tenor singer can always secure a hall easier than a basso, because he can go higher.

DON'T YOU DO IT.—Don't wait an hour before buying a bottle of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. It is safe, painless, prompt in action, never leaves sore spots behind, and therefore perfection itself. Substitutes are being offered for the genuine Putnam's Extractor. See that the name of Polson & Co. is on each wrapper. Sold by druggists and country dealers, only 25 cents.

Tooters brass instruments are the bandittiti of American villages.

A.P 145

St. Jacobs Oil

THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY

FOR PAIN.

Relieves and cures

RHEUMATISM,

Neuralgia,

Sciatica, Lumbago,

BACKACHE,

HEADACHE, TOOTHACHE,

SORE THROAT,

QUINSY, SWELLINGS,

SPRAINS,

Soreness, Cuts, Bruises,

FROSTBITES,

BURNS, SCALDS,

And all other bodily aches and pains.

FIFTY CENTS A BOTTLE

Sold by all Druggists and Dealers. Directions in 11 languages.

The Charles A. Vogeler Co.

(Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.)

Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

FOR SALE CHEAP—SPLENDID STOCK or Dairy Farm. 400 acres adjoining Courtland, 5 miles from Tilsonburg, about 100 acres cleared, free from stumps and stones, a quantity ready for cleaning up; standing timber worth half-price asked; frame barn and stables; new two frame houses, good water, would sell half or exchange for a small property. Apply to ROBERT WHALEY, Box X. Courtland.

909 ACRES MINERAL AND TIMBER lands in the township of Darling, county of Lanark, at one dollar and a half per acre; lies near Kingston and Pembroke railway; joins township of Lavant, where the Caldwell gold mines and other mineral deposits have recently been discovered; must be sold in one lot; mining companies or dealers in wood can have a bargain. Apply immediately to I. S. SPARLING & CO., Real Estate and Commission Merchants, Pembroke, Ont.

Markdale monthly Cattle FAIR.

A regular Monthly Cattle Fair will be held in the Agricultural Grounds, Markdale, as fo'lows :

—1883—

SATURDAY	.....	Aug. 4
Do.	.....	Sept.
Do.	.....	Oct.
Do.	.....	Nov. 3
Do.	.....	Dec. 8

MARKDALE Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats !

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and deliivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23, 1882. 80-1y

Health is Wealth !

Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment, a guaranteed specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Fits, Nervous Neuralgia, Headache, Nervous Prostration caused by the use of alcohol or tobacco, Wakefulness, Mental Depression, Softening of the Brain, resulting in Insanity and leading to misery, decay and death, Premature Old Age, Barrenness, Loss of Power in either sex, Involuntary losses and Spermatorrhœa, caused by over-exertion of the brain, self-abuse or over-indulgence. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser a written guarantee to refund the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by A. Turner &Co., ole authorized Agent for Markdale Ont. John C. West &Co. sole proprietor Toronto.Ont.

ROBT. ASKIN,

MARKDALE,

Has opened out a First-Class

UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,

And therefore has supplied a want long felt,

COFFINS,
CASKETS, SHROUDS,
and all

FUNERAL FURNISHINGS

supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse

for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—

PICTURE FRAMING

Done on short notice.

ROBT. ASKIN.

ALEX KAY

BooT & ShoE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and Positively cures Piles. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by A. Turner & Co

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

THE BEST PLACE

TO GET

A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery,

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Wilson Benson

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.

DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

WILSON BENSON.

July 6, 1882.

J. W. FORD

Is giving splendid satisfaction in

CRISTING,

By the New Process at the

Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

THOS. MATHEWS,

HarnesS EstablishmenT

MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!

IN CONNECTION.

CALCINED PLASTER,

—OR—

Plaster Paris,

One car of Nova Scotia, all best and cheapest in the market.

Machine Oils and Paint

OILS AT CLOSE PRICES.

H. PARKER'S

Drugstore - DURHAM.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Division Court No. 5, will meet at Flesherton on the 24th October.

Wm. Lucas & Co, bankers, Markdale, have $200,000.00 to loan on real estate. Straight loan system. No fines. Low interest; moderate charges.

Dye Stuffs of all kinds at the Medical Hall, A. Turner & Co.

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate. It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

This is an unusual early autumn, as many husbands have realized by their wives striking them for new fall bonnets.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

When Henry was courting Sarah he used to boast that he had a "boss" girl; now that he is married he finds that he has a "boss" wife; but he never mentions it.

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

A Bradford young lady refused to allow her sister to borrow the former's beau as an escort to a party, saying, "It is not good that the man should be a loan." She has not been a member of the Bible class for nothing.

THE QUESTION HAS OFTEN BEEN ASKED.

Can—Rupture—(abdominal hernia) be cured? We most emphatically say, YES. That this part of the body offers no exception to those physiological laws which govern the whole physical economy and it makes not a particle of difference whether the age of the Rupture is one year or a hundred years. For proof of this send for a Free Book on Rupture to The Excelsior Rupture Cure M'f'g Co., Prescott, Ont. 132-84.

"Is there anything wrong in kissing. We overheard a Markdale young man ask his girl as they stood together at the garden gate one evening recently. "Certainly there is," She briskly replied; then slowly and softly added after a pause. "if there's anyone looking."

A GENERAL STAMPEDE.

Never was such a rush made for any Drug Store as is now at A. Turner &Co's for a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. All persons affected with Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Severe Coughs or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, can get a Trial Bottle of this great remedy free, by calling at above Drug Store.

RAM LAMBS FOR SALE.—A choice lot of South Down grade ram lambs for sale at H D Irwin's and Thos. Irwin's a short distance East of Markdale.

TRUE TO HER TRUST.

Too much cannot be said of the ever faithful wife and mother, constantly watching and caring for her dear ones, never neglecting a single duty in their behalf. When they are assailed by disease, and the system should have a thorough cleaning, the stomach and bowels regulated, blood purified, a malarial poison exterminated, she must know that Electric Bitters are the only sure remedy. They are the best and purest medicine in the world and only cost fifty cents. Sold by A. Turner.

J. P. Marshall, Dentist, will be at the Markdale House the first and third Wednesday of October for the practice of his profession.

If you are sick take Rejuvenator Bitters to make you well, and if you are well take the Bitters to keep you well, sold by Smith, the barber, and he is continually selling them.

Three teachers wanted in the Markdale school for 1884. See advt. in another column.

MILLIONS GIVEN AWAY.

Millions of bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, have been given away as Trial Bottles of the large size. This enormous outlay would be disastrous to the proprietors, were it not for the rare merits possessed by the wonderful medicine. Call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle free, and try for yourself. It never fails to cure.

AGRICULTURAL EHIBITIONS

ARTEMESIA.—At Priceville, on the 9th October.

EUPHRASIA.—At Rocklyn, on the 10th of October.

NORTHERN.—At Walkerton, Oct, 10 to 13.

OSPREY.—At Singhampton on the 9th October.

ARTEMESIA WAREHOUSE

FLESHERTON STATION.

Dry Goods, Hardware, Crockery, Boots and Shoes

Groceries, Provisions, &c. Stock kept full and well assorted with new goods received every week.

MY BRANCH STORE AT EUGENIA

replenished with new goods every week. For sale cheap for cash or produce.

My Saw Mill, Shingle Factoty, and Lime Kiln

AT LITTLE FALLS, ARE IN OPERATION.

All kinds Saw ogs bought at the Mill or sawn on shares.

Lumber, Lath, Broom Handles, Shingles and Lime for sale.

WM. HOGG.

LIQUOR SHOP

A. M'INTYRE

TEA! TEA! TEA!

A. M'INTYRE

Flour, Flour, Flour.

McINTYRE'S LIQUORS! LIQUORS

McINTYRE'S Cigars, Cigars.

McINTYRE'S Coffee, Coffee.

McINTYRE'S MEAL! MEAL! MEAL!

McINTYRE'S Pork, Pork, Pork.

McINTYRE'S Teas, Teas.

And ever ythin g kept n in a first-class Grocery and Liquor Store. always on hand, CHEAP FOR CASH.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

—AT—

Bulmers Photograph Gallery

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we are not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

PLOW POINTS.

ALL KINDS AT REDUCED RATES,

Made of Special Iron,

The Chepest and Best.

Support Home industry and procure your Plow Points

—— AT THE ——

Markdale Foundry.

Plow Points, 3 for $1.

Old Iron taken in Exchange.

PLOW POINTS.

Robt. S. Rae,

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

W. J. BELLAMY

Insurance Agent Flesherton

Will be at the Markdale House Markdale

Every THURSDAY

First Class Companies only represented

Money to loan on good farms at 7 per. cent.

134-60.

$500 Reward !

We will pay the above reward for any case of Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Constipation or Costiveness we cannot cure with West's Vegetable Liver Pills, when the directions are strictly complied with. They are purely Vegetable, and never fail to give satisfaction. Sugar Coated, Large Boxes, containing 30 Pills, 25 cts. For sale by all Druggists. Beware of counterfeits and imitations. The genuine manufactured only by JOHN C. WEST & CO., "The Pill Makers," 81 & 83 King St. East, Toronto, Ont. Free trial package sent by mail prepaid on receipt of a 3 cent stamp. For sale at Turner &Co. Drug Store.

MONTHLY FAIRS.

Markdale—Saturday before Flesherton.
Chatsworth—Monday before Durham.
Dundalk—Tuesday before Orangeville.
Flesherton—Monday before Orangeville.
Shelburne—Wednesday before Orangeville.
Orangeville—The second Thursday in each month.
Mount Forest—Third Wednesday in each month.
Priceville—Monday before Durham.
Durham—Third Tuesday in each month.
Hanover—Monday before Durham.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 5. MARKDALE, ONT., OCT. 11. 1883. No. 161.

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY THURSDAY EVENING,

At Markdale Ontario.

$1 Per Anumn

IN ADVANCE.

C. W. RUTLEDGE.

EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence--Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O.
Physician and Surgeon, Priceville,
Graduate of University. Vict. College.
" " New York, and
Hon. Graduate, of the same,
" " Aveth Medical Institute.
" " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y.
Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J.P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.

DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton. Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYancers, &c. &c.
OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in
MARKDALE;
Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
Funds to lend on reasonable terms.
JOHN CREASOR, Q.C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

MISS. GREEN,
DRESS AND MANTLE
PARLOR.
Dunlop's building Markdale.

All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.
Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

ROYAL MARKDALE LODGE,
Of C. O. O. F. No. 78, will meet in their hall on Monday evening, Oct. 15th at eight o'clock p. m.
108 A. Turner, Sec'y.

JOHN NOBLE,

MARKDALE.

GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING

A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
O. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR,

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

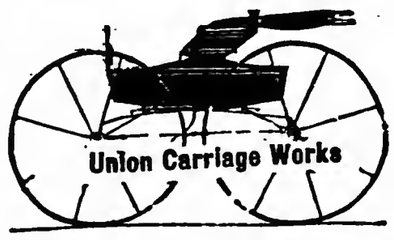
COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,
CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.



GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail

BUTCHER!

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.
FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call at No. 3 Burns' Block, opposite the new Union Block.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from
FIRST CLASS MATERIAL
In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs
will receive prompt attention.
All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time
consistent with good workmanship.
GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.
Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside
D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor
Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

STARTLING DISCOVERY!
LOST MANHOOD RESTORED.
A victim of youthful imprudence causing Premature Decay, Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, etc., having tried in vain every known remedy, has discovered a simple self cure, which he will send FREE to his fellow-sufferers, address J. H. REEVES, 43 Chatham St., N. Y.

East Grey Exhibition.

The annual Fall Exhibition of the East Grey Agricultural Society was held at Flesherton last week, and considering the many drawbacks which farmers have had to contend with this year, was a grand success. The articles exhibited in the hall were placed in position the first day and prizes awarded On Wednesday the live stock were taken to the show and judged. The attendance was large and much interest was displayed by the spectators in viewing the various classes of horses and cattle as they were judged during the day.

The show of horses was very good and shows that increasing interest is being taken in raising good horses in the County of Grey There was a large number of thoroughbred and grade cattle, many of them very fine animals, and show a marked improvement on former years. The show of sheep, pigs and fowl was excellent. There was a fine display of buggies, carriages, wagons and agricultural implements. Although the day was chilly there was several thousand peodle on the grounds during the day.

In the Society's large Hall was a magnificent display in the various classes. All along one side was arranged the several classes of grain. and it was quite a surprise to many to see the superior quality of the exhibits in this class, and the large number of bags shown. Bath fall and spring wheat were exceedingly good. The barley was very fine in color. Oats and peas were good, The display of roots was very fine, particularly in onions, carrots, potatoes, celery and turnips. In dairy produce there was a good display. The display in fruit and flowers was very fine. Apples, pears and plums were shown in great variety and occupied nearly the whole of one side of the centre table in the hall. Messrs. Doll & Brown of this place showed in a fine glass case a very handsome assortment of watches and jewellery, which was much admired. Mr. John Gordon, of Flesherton showed several sets of neatly made and substantial harness, Mr. Hamilton, of Markdale, and Bulmer, of Flesherton had on exhibition fine assortments of photographs. The former taking first prize. There has generally been on Exhibition at the East Grey Show a number of fine drawings and paintings, but the display of works of art in this class this year is something remarkable, and some very beautiful drawings were on exhibition that would be a credit to any artist, The display of Ladies' Work and domestic manufacturers were very fine, and many of the samples exhibited were exceedingly neat and well done.

We congratulate the society in their continued success, having labored together with a will, in purchasing grounds, erecting a suitable hall and fence, and otherwise working for the prosperity of the society they now enjoy the satisfaction of having the leading Exhibition in the county. The following is the prize list:—

HORSES.—General Purpose Horses—1st Geo. Dinwoody, Jas. McMullen, S Wylie. Draught Horses—S Stokes, Jas Mercer, S Stokes. Roadster Horses—J Johnston, J & W H Johnston, H Heard. Carriage Horses—J. H. Henderson, J. Marquis, T Kells. Buggy Horses—J R Trimble, A S Vandusen. J McMullen. Saddle Horse—W G Moffat. E Davis, H Johnston. Draught Brood Mare with foal by her side—W Nicholl, D. McDonald, Alex. Henry. General Purpose Brood Mare with Foal by her side—T Elliott, G Glazier, J. McMurdo. Draught 2 year old Gelding or Filly—C C James D Stinson. Draught 1 year old Gelding or Filly—J Milnor, Jas. Feyris. Draught Spring Foal—J Myles, W Nichol, W. Brewster. General Purpose 2 year old Gelding or Filly—J Sewart. H Hurd, J O'Brien. General Purpose 1 year old Gelding or Filly—T Mann, D McDonald, J Holley. Gen. Purpose spring foal-H Johnston, G Glazier, A Mercer. Heavy Draught Stallion 3 years old and over—J McLear. Heavy Draught Stallion 2 years and under—Jas. Best Roadster Stallion 3 years and over—J R. Trimble. Roadster Stallion 2 years and under—J. & W. H. Johnston, H Johnston. General Purpose Stallion, 3 years and over—J R Trimble. General Purpose 2 years and under—R Patton. Blood Stallion, with Pedigree—David Madill. Special by J. R. Trimble for Clear Grit Spring Foals—H Johnston, J & W H Johnston. Special prize by R. Leaver, for Lord Byron Foal.

CATTLE (Durham).—Bull 2 years and over—R Black, R Wright. Bull 1 year old—A Mercer. Bull Calf age attached—R Plantt, R Leaver. Cow—E & W S O'Brien. 2 year old Heifer—R Black. (Ayrshire.) yr'ling bull G Pickell. (Devons).—Bull 2 years and over—R Oliver. Bull 1 year old—R Oliver. Cow—R Oliver. Heifer Calf under 1 year with age attached—R Oliver. For best Herd—R Oliver. (Grades.)—Cow—A White, W. Pickell. 2 year old Heifer—A Cairns, R. Wright. 1 year old Heifer—R Wright, 1st & 2nd. H. Calf, E & W S O'Brien, J Ferris. Pair working Oxen—R Oliver, D Stinson. Pair 3 year old Steers—J B Thibodo, J Best. Pair 2 year old Steers—D McMullen. Pair yearling Steers—T Kells, J Scott.

SHEEP. (Long Wool)—Ram aged - Wm. Shepherdson, W Fawcett & Sons. Shearling Ram—W Shepherdson, W Fawcett & Sons. Lamb—W Shepherdson W Fawcett & Sons, W Shepherdson. Pair aged Ewes—W Fawcett, W Shepherdson, W Fawcett & Sons. Pair Shearling Ewes—W Shepherdson. W Fawcett & Sons, W Fawcett & Sons. Pair Ewe Lambs—W Shepherpson, W Fawcett & Sons, G Swanton, (Fine Wool Sheep.)—Ram aged—J Becroft. Ram Shearling—H D Irwin, J Howey. Ramb Lamb—J Howey, J Howey, H Hurd.. Pair Ewe Lambs—J Howey.

SWINE—(Berkshire or other Black Breed) Boar Aged—J Johnston. Boar Pig, 1883—J Johnston. Sow aged—W Campaigne, D Stinson. Sow Pig of 1883—J Johnston, Jas. Mercer. Suffolk or other White Breed.)—Boar, aged—D Stinson Boar Pig, 1883—J Howey, W H Campaigne. Sow Aged D. Stinson, R. Leaver. Sow Pig of 1883—J Howey, D. Stinson.

POULTRY.—Pair of Brahmas—R Montgomery, D Swanton, Pair Leghorns—W Barnhouse, W. H Campaigne. Pair of Hamburgs—J Magee, R Lever. Pair of Houdans—W Barnhouse, W Barnhouse. Pair of Spanish—R Montgomery, R Montgomery. Pair of Game—Robert Montgomery 1st & 2nd. Pair of Alesbury Ducks—G Swanton, W. J. Cooey. Pair of other Ducks—W Buchanan, sr., R Montgomery. Pair of Turkeys—J Becroft, Jas. Brodie. Pair of Geese—R Montgomery, J McAlear.

GRAIN AND SEEDS.—Fall Wheat, Clawson—R Plantt, R Ruthven, J Hickling. Any other Variety—J Marquis, J. Miles, D Stinson. Spring wheat and other Grains. Geneseo—J Stewart, J Cameron. Glasgow—J Marquis, J Cameron, D Stinson. Russian—R Ruthven, J Stewart, R Plantt. Any other variety—J Marquis, J Cameron, J Stewart. Barley 6 rowed—J Stewart J Brodie, J Beecroft. Oats, White, D Stinson, J Stewart, T Kells. Oats Black, D Stinson, J Beecroft W Norton. Peas Small, J Stewart, E Rutledge, A Carr. Peas, Large, J R Anderson J Myles, J Cameron. Corn, Yellow, W Norton. Col. Beans, J Ferris, J Brodie, J Magee. Peck Timothy Seed. J Brodie, A Carr, J Stewart.

ROOTS AND VEGETABLES.—Potatoes, Cups, J Abbott, E. Rutledge Potatoes, Early Rose, J Farris, M P McMaster, J Best. Potatoes, other variety, ——— J & W H Johnston, J Ferris. Col. Potatoes, Jas. Brodie, R Black. Mangold Wurtzels, Globe, W H Campaigne, W Fawcett. Mangold Wurtzels, long, W Fawcett, J G Carson. Turnips, Sweedish, G Swanton, W Robson. Turnips, other Field, R Black, J R Anderson. Turnips, table, G Swanton, Wm. Buchannan, sr. Long Blood Beets, J Ferris, W H Campaigne. Beets, any other kind J Ferris, J Milnor. Field Carrots, W Norton, J R Anderson. Early Horn Carrots, J Ferris, J Milnor. Parsnips, J Ferris, W. Norton. Onions, from black seed, John Beecroft, Mrs. J Thompson. Potatoe Onions J Scott, W J Cooey. Win'stad Cabbage, W H Campaigne, W Barnhouse. Cabbage, Drumhead, H Mathewson. Mrs. J Thompson. Cabbage, any other Variety, H Mathewson. Mrs. J. Thompson. Cauliflower heads, J Beecroft. Celery, White, W Barnhouse, J Ferris. Celery, Red, J Ferris, J Milnor, Squashes, Mrs. J Thompson. Citrons, Mrs. J Thompson, W H Campaigne. Tomatoes, smooth red, H Mitchell

FRUITS.—Crab Apples, J I Graham, Geo. Swanton. Fall Apples, J Brodie, J Marquis. Winter Apples, J Beecroft, W Norton. Fall Apples, R Ruthven, J Marquis. Winter Apples, 1 variety, E Davis, H Mitchell. Fall Pears, W Norton, R Gilray. Pears, Winter, J Magee G. Stewart. Red or Blue Plums, W Norton, J H Heard. Yellow or Green Plums, E Rutledge, H Mitchel. Grapes, J H Heard, J I Graham. Canned Fruit. Mrs. S Damude. Mrs. W W Trimble.

DAIRY AND OTHER PRODUCE.—Honey in Comb, J H Heard. Butter prepared for table, Mrs. J Abbott, Mr. H King, Mrs. J Aickling, Mrs. G Dinwoody. Butter, not less than 15 lbs, Mrs. E Rutledge, Mrs. J Abbott, Mrs. H Norton, Mrs. W Robson. Butter, tub, Salted for keeping, Mrs. E Rutledge, Mrs. J Ferris, Mrs. H King, Mrs. J Abbott. Factory Cheese, G Stewart. Cheese, not Factory, Mrs. W Norton, Mrs. R. Black, Mrs. J Milnor.

In Implements & Machinery no prizes were awarded. The principal exhibits were J G Irving, Pumps: A Dunlop, Sewing Machines H. Mathewson, pat't Churns and Fanning Mills; Thos Elliott, combined Broadcast Seeder, harrow and turnip drill; A S Vandusn, Massey's low down binder, Ploughs, Fanning mills and Rakes.

MANUFACTURES.—Lumber Waggon, John Noble, J H Heard. Democrat Waggon, G Cruickshank, J H Heard. Buggy, covered, J H Tupper, H Mitchell. Buggy, Open, J H Heard, Wilson & Mackechnie.

CLASS M,—Set Heavy Team Harness, J Gordon. Carriage Harness, J Gordon. Buggy Harness, J Gordon. Saddle and Bridle, J Gordon. Gents fine Sewed Boots, W Barnhouse. Gents Stoga Boots, W. Barnhouse. Ladies Boots, W Barnhouse.

DOMESTIC MANUFACTURES.—Blankets, home made, J Cameron, J Hickling. Fulled Cloth home made, J Cameron, Flannel, union, home made, J Hickling, J Milnor. Stocking Yarn, home made, J Cameron, J Abbott. Woollen Mits, J Cameron J McGee. Woollen Socks, J Cameron, S Stokes. Woollen Stockings, J Magee, W Norton. Patchwork Quilt, R Gilray, J Brodie. Knit or Crotchet Quilt, W Norton, W Robson. Quilt any other kind, M Burke, A Carr, Col. Berlin Wool work, J Milnor, J Middleton. Braiding in Cotton, Dr. Sproule, M Burke. Embroidety in Silk, R Ruthven, J Milnor. Embroidery in Cotton, S M Hickling, R Ruthven. Embroidery Worsted, J Milnor. Crotchet work in Cotton, R Ruthven, R Gilray. Point and Honiton Lace, J Milnor. Crotchet work in Wool, E Davis, R Gilray. Fancy knitting in Wool, R Gilray, J Milnor. Woollen work on Canvass, A White J Milnor. Needle work ornamental. Miss Magee J Milnor. Man's Shirt, hand made, Miss Mathewson, S Stokes. Rag Mat, W W Trimble, J Mercer. Loaf Bread, J Abbott, J Cameron. Macrame Lace, A Armstrong, J Middleton. Leather work ornamental, R Ruthven. Worked Slippers, E Damude, J Milnor. Tatting, S M Hickling. Wax Fruit, J Milnor. Wax Flowers; L Armstrong J Milnor. Col. Photographs, Jas. Hamilton. J Bulmer. Penmanship, E Davis Crayon Drawing, Miss McDowell, Miss A Armstrong. Cretonne Work, A Armstrong. J Mlinor. Rag Carpet, R Ruthven, J Milnor Pencil Drawing, Miss Ruthven, Miss McDowell. Water color Painting, A Armstrong Miss McDowell. Col. Paintings and Drawings, Miss A Armstrong, Miss McDowell.

PLANTS.—Table Boquet, J Beecroft, Mrs. Vandusen. Foliage Plant, J Abbott, J Beecroft. Geranium, Mrs. Vandusen, J Abbott. Fuschia, double, Mrs. McDowell, M P McMaster. Hanging Basket, J Beecroft. Calla Lily, S Damude. Heliotrope, J Beecroft. Begonia, R Lever, Mrs. Bulmer. Collection Flowers. J Beecroft. Collection Plants, Mas. McDowell, Mrs, Vandusen.

Glenelg Fall Show.

(Continued from last week.)

FRUIT.

Winter Apples—E. Davis, Robt Gilray.
Fall Apples—E Davis, D R Ellis.
Collection Apples—E Davis, S Boyce.
Crab Apples—R. Gilray, J H Henderson.
Pears—Robt Gilray, John McGee.
Grapes—J H Heard. R. Gilray.
Blue Plums—E Davis, R. McBride.
Green Gage Plums—E Davis, S. Boyce.
Plums any other kind—J H Heard, E. Rutledge.

DAIRY.

Tub Butter—1st, E Rutledge, 2nd, special by Hill Bros., Wm. Robinson, 3rd, S. Boyce.
Butter Rolls—S Boyce, R Walker, H. Mathewson.
Wheat Flower 100 lbs.—1st, J W Ford, B Coleman.
Bakers Bread—John Montgomery.
Home made Bread—S Boyce, H Mathewson.
Maple Sugar—C Littejohns, E. Rutledge,
Honey in Comb—J H Heard.
Half Gal Maple Syrup—E Rutledge, E Rutledge.

MANUFACTURERS.

Democrat—J H Heard.
Buggy—D J Shanahan, J H Heard.
Pair Men's Boots—A Kay.
Set Horse Shoes unfiled—D J Shanahan, Wm Mason.
Pump—R S Rae, R S Rae.
Cabinet work—Fred Moffatt, Fred Moffatt.
Pannel Door—E Purvis.
Window Sash—E. Large, E Large.
Cooper Ware—T Mullarky, T Mullarky.
Tinware—Haskett Bros.
Drawing—Thos. Moffatt.
Collection Photographs—Jas. Hamilton.
Full cloth, homemade—Robt McBride, R. Waller.
Satinet, home-made—R Walker.
Fancy Flannel—R. H. Stinson, R. McBride.
Pair Blankets home-made—R. Walker, J, McGee.
Pair Horse Blankets—R Watson.

LADIES WORK.

Pair Woolen Mits—T Davis, J McGee.
Patch Quilt—R Gilray, Mrs. W. A. Brown.
Fancy Quilt—R. Walker, R. Gilray.
Log Cabin Quilt—R. Askin, R. Gilray.
Embroidery in Cotton—R. Askin, Mrs. R. D. Biggar.
Berlin Wool not raised—A Mercer, Mrs. R. D. Biggar.
Fancy knitting in Cotton—W Anderson, R Walker.
Fancy knitting in Wool—Mrs. A. Turner.
Braiding in Cotton—Mrs. Dr. Sproule, Mrs W. A. Brown
Knitted Lace—T Davis, J Brady.
Collection Berlin Wool—Mrs. Haskett, Mrs. Turner.
Gents fine shirt hand made—special by M. Byrnes, H. Mathewson, 2nd, Wm. Douglass.
Rag Mat—J. Mercer, T. McNea.
Mat any other kind—E. Large, Mrs. R. D. Biggar, Rag Carpet—R Watson, R. Walker.
Collection Flowers—Mrs. Alex. Rutledge.
The following were highly recommended.
Wanzer Sewing Machines—A Kilborn.
Macrawine Lace—Mrs. R. Watson.
Ploughs—Faher & Pulfard, Walkerton.
Fanning Mill—McMillon & Co., Listowell.

Don't.

Don't go to bed with cold feet.

Don't sleep in the same undergarments that are worn through the day.

Don't sleep in a room that is not well ventilated.

Don't sit or sleep in a draught.

Don't lie on the left side too much.

Don't lie on the back to keep from snoring.

Don't try to get along with less than seven or eight hours' sleep out of twenty-four.

Don't get out of bed immediately on awaking.

Don't forget to rub yourself well all over with crash towel or hands before dressing.

Don't forget to take a good drink of pure water before breakfast.

Don't take a long walk when the stomach is entirely empty.

Don't eat anything but well cooked and nutritious food.

Don't eat what you don't want just to save it.

Don't eat between meals nor enough to cause uneasiness at mealtimes.

Don't eat the smallest morsel unless hungry, if well.

THE SKELETON'S STORY.

Ride closer!

It is two miles ahead to the foot-hills—two miles of parched turf and rocky space. To the right—the left—behind, is the rolling prairie. This broad valley strikes the Sierra Nevades and stops as if a wall had been built across it.

What is it on the grass? a skull here—a rib there—bones scattered about as the wild beasts left them after the horrible feast. The clean-picked skull grins and stares—every bone and scattered lock of hair has its story of tragedy. And what besides these relics? More bones—not scattered, but lying in heaps—a vertebræ with ribs attached—a fleshless skull bleaching under the summer sun. Wolves? Yes. Count the heaps of bones and you will find nearly a score. Open boats have been picked up at sea with neither life nor sign to betray their secret. Skeletons are found upon the prairie, but they tell a plain story to those who halt beside them. Let us listen:

Away off to the right you can see treetops. Away off to the left you can see the same sight. The skeleton is in line between the two points. He left one grove to ride to the other. To ride! Certainly; a mile away is the skeleton of a horse or mule. The beast fell and was left there. If he left the grove at noon he would have been within a mile of this spot at dusk. It is therefore plain that he did not leave until mid afternoon, or possibly at dusk. Signs of Indians may have driven him from his trapping-ground, or mayhap he had exhausted the game and was shifting to new fields.

It is months since that ride, and the trail has been obliterated. Were it otherwise, and you took it up from the spot where the skeleton horse now lies, you would find the last three or four miles made at a tremendous pace.

"Step! step! step!"

What is it? Darkness has gathered over mountain and prairie as the hunter jogs along over the broken ground. Overhead the countless stars look down upon him—around him is the pall of night. There was the patter of footsteps on the dry grass. He halts and peers around him, but the darkness is too deep for him to discover any cause for alarm.

"Patter! patter! patter!"

There it is again! It is not fifty yards from where he has last halted. The steps are too light for those of an Indian. A grizzly would rush upon his victim with a roar of defiance and anger. A panther would hurl himself through thirty feet of space with a scream to unnerve the hardiest hunt-

"Wolves!" whispers the hunter as a howl suddenly breaks upon his ear.

Wolves! The gaunt grizzly wolves of the foot hills—thin, and poor, and hungry, and savage—the legs tireless—the mouth full of teeth that could crack the shoulder-bone of a buffalo. He can see their dark forms flitting from point to point—the patter of their feet on the parched grass proves that he is surrounded.

Now the race begins. There is no shelter until the grove is reached. Instinct guides the horse, and horror lashes him with such a whip as human hand never wielded. Over space, through the gloom, almost as swift as an arrow sent by a strong hand, but a dark line follows. A line of wolves spreads out to the right and left, and gallops after—tongues out—eyes flashing—great flakes of foam flying back to blotch stone and grass and leave a trail to be followed by the cowardly coyotes.

Men ride thus only when life is the stake. A horse puts forth such speed only when terror follows close behind and causes every nerve to tighten like a wire drawn until the scratch of a finger makes it chord with a wail of despair. A pigeon could not skim this valley with such swiftness, and yet the wings of fate are abroad, and long and tireless. The line is there—aye! it is gaining! Inch by inch it creeps up, and the red eyes take on a more savage gleam as the hunter cries out to his horse and opens fire from his revolvers. A wolf falls on the right—a second on the left. Does the wind cease blowing because it meets a forest? The fall of one man in a mad mob simply increases the determination of the rest.

With a cry so full of the despair that wells up from the heart of the strong man when he gives up his struggle for life that a hunter almost believes a companion rides beside him, the horse staggers—recovers—plunges forward—falls to the earth. It was a glorious struggle, but he has lost.

The wings of the dark line oblique to the centre—there is a confused heap of snarling, fighting, maddened beasts, and the line rushes forward again. Saddle, bridle and blanket are in shreds—the horse a skeleton. And now the chase is after the hunter. He has half a mile the start, and as he runs the veins stand out, the muscles tighten, and he wonders at his own speed. Behind him are the gaunt bodies and the tireless legs. Closer, closer, and now he is going to face fate as a brave man should. He has halted. In an instant a circle is formed about him—a circle of red eyes, foaming mouths and yellow fangs which are to meet in his flesh.

There is an interval—a breathing spell. He looks up at the stars—out upon the night. It is his last hour, but there is no quaking—no crying out to the night to send him aid. As the wolves rest a flash blinds their eyes—a second—a third—and a fourth, and they give way before the man they had looked upon as their certain prey. But it is only for a moment. He sees them gathering for the rush, and firing his remaining bullets among them he seizes his long rifle by the barrel and braces to meet the shock. Even a savage would have admired the heroic fight he made for life. He sounds the war-cry and whirls his weapon around him, and wolf after wolf falls disabled. He feels a strange exultation over the desperate combat, and as the pack give way before his mighty blows a gleam of hope springs up in his heart.

It is only for a moment; then the circle narrows. Each disabled beast is replaced by three which hunger for blood. There is a rush—a swirl—and the cry of despair is drowned in the chorus of snarls as the pack fight over the feast.

* * * * *

The gray of morning—the sunlight of noon-day—the stars of evening will look down upon grinning skull and whitening bones, and the wolf will return to crunch them again. Men will not bury them. They will look down upon them as we look, read the story as we read it, and ride away with a feeling that 'tis but another dark secret of the wonderful prairie.

RAVAGED BY A HURRICANE.

Towns Levelled, Lives Lost, and Ships Blown Out of the Sea.

Capt. G. O. Davis, who went to San Domingo last March from New York, had some remarkable experiences in the recent hurricane. He was in the port of Azua on a small schooner, which he had chartered and loaded with salt. "At 7 A. M.," he says, "the wind changed to south by east, blowing about sixty to eighty miles an hour. The sea rolled in with huge waves, breaking everything before it. We had two anchors out, which held us fast. A vessel that was near us was at last blown over. The Captain then called to me to come on deck. I had the barometer in my hand. It then marked 29.3, and was falling. I stood in the companionway, and the Captain and crew crouched under the railing, the wind being too strong for them to stand up. We were all waiting, when suddenly the Captain and crew plunged over the stern and into the sea. I clung to the tiller ropes and saw some of the crew struggling in the water, but only for a minute, when they were carried out of my sight, I saw the Captain and two sailors clinging to the standing rigging. Then a huge wave came and I was jerked from my position and pitched into the sea. The wind seemed to blow from all quarters. I was almost strangled and could not get into a position to strike out. Though I had heavy shoes on, I could not keep my feet down, but was whirled around on every crest of the waves. After a long struggle I at last reached land.

"I grabbed the roots of the trees at the water's edge and hung on with a death grip. It was impossible to stand, the wind was so strong; but, after lying where I was, about two hours, I managed to crawl under a cover, where I lay about six hours, too much exhausted to move. Toward evening some persons came with a mule to where I was lying. They placed me on the mule. We had six miles to go, and for three miles we waded through a lake of water up to the mule's back, with the rain pouring down in torrents. We at last reached the village of Azua, but what was once a dry brook was now a raging river. I was compelled to lie in an old building containing about thirty families whose homes had been blown to pieces. Out of our crew of seven the Captain, mate, and steward were drowned. All that remained of the schooner was a few pieces of timber that were washed ashore.

At least one-half of the village of Azua, which has a population of 6,000, was in ruins. All the small vessels off the coast had been destroyed, and there was no way of getting to the city of San Domingo, except by the use of horses. After delay I procured horses and a guide and started for the city, a ride of 100 miles. The first night we stopped at Acro. Here the sea had destroyed plantations, torn up the docks, and swept away every building in the place. Cattle were killed in large numbers, and the shore was strewn with dead fish. From Acre to Savana la Grande 30 miles, twenty-three bodies were washed ashore.

"Three days afterwards I arrived at San Domingo, and learned that all the shipping there had suffered severely. Of three brigantines which were laying outside on the fatal evening, nothing remained the following morning save a few spars and pieces of wreckage. The vessels had foundered and the crews had been drowned.

The brigantine Dauntless of Bangor, Me., Capt. Williams which had brought out a cargo of ice, and which had reloaded with sugar, honey, and wood, was destroyed and her crew of six men all drowned. Capt. William's life was saved by a remarkable accident. On the Saturday before the storm he went ashore, and upon starting to return to his vessel in a small boat the wind and current carried him below her. For three days he floated down the coast, finally making a landing and then crossing over to Barahona. He returned to San Domingo city by the English steamer to find that his vessel had been lost.

"A Spanish vessel which had recently arrived slipped her cables and managed to get out a few miles to sea, but this storm drove her back upon the coast, and her crew of ten men were lost.

"A Dutch vessel was also driven ashore and destroyed. Three of her crew climbed up the foremast, and when she struck the shore they were thrown on land. The others were drowned.

"An English steamer unloading sugar machinery at Palinca hoisted her anchor when the gale commenced and put to sea. The vessel labored so heavily that it was impossible to pick the anchor up, and it knocked two holes in her bow before the crew could cut the chain cable and let her go. The forward compartments filling with water, the hatches were blown off and the fire room was flooded. For two hours she lay in the trough of the sea, but finally the fire-hold was cleared and steam again raised. She was then kept with her head to the sea and was finally saved, though badly damaged. The machinery which the steamer had landed, together with thirty lighters was destroyed.

"The American schooner Henry Sommers, from Searboro', Me., which was loading down the coast, was dashed to pieces and her crew drowned.

Products of the Hen.

The hen has in her ovaries, in round numbers, more than 600 egg germs, which develop gradually and are successfully laid. Of these 600 the hen will lay twenty in her first year; 135 in her second, and 114 in the third. In each one of the following four years the number of eggs will be diminished by 20, and in her ninth year she will lay at most 10 eggs. In order to obtain from them sufficient product to cover the expense of alimentation, they should not be allowed to live over four years.—Annales de la Sociedad Odontologica, Havana.

A black woman was brought before a magistrate for unmercifully beating her son a saddle-colored imp. and the Judge was delivering a reprimand, when the woman broke out with, "Judge, has you eber been a parent to a wooffless yeller boy like dat ar cub of mine?" "Never," ejaculated the Judge with great vehemence, getting red in the face. "Den don't talk!',

SHOOTING HIS BROTHERS.

Dreadful Tragedy in the Mansion of an Old Kentucky Family.

At the old Rogers mansion on Indian Creek, near Blue Lick Springs, Robinson County, Ky., where 101 years ago ancestors of the family fought a bloody battle with the Indians, one of that old family shot two of his brothers, one of whom died, and the other, it was feared, after a few hours could not survive. The three brothers were Samuel G., William O., and Thomas. William O. Rogers is an attorney of St. Louis. Thomas is a farmer, and lived near the scene of the shooting, and Samuel who did the shooting, is President of the Farmers' Bank, in Carlisle. The father of these men, who died at an advanced age, willed his entire estate, which is large, and consists of lands, to Samuel G. and Robert Rogers, and cut off William and Thomas Rogers without a cent. Samuel G. Rogers was made administrator of the estate. The two brothers who were disinherited took legal measures to break the will, and to that end have been engaged several days in taking depositions. Their counsel was the County Common-wealth Attorney. Samuel and Robert employed as counsel Mr. Lytle of Carlisle. During these legal proceedings there have been frequent recriminations between the brothers leading almost to a conflict.

At noon, when seated in the old residence where some of the boys were born, Samuel drew his pistol in a wordy encounter and fired a shot which penetrated the clothing of one of the attorneys. In an instant everybody except the contestants rushed out of the room. The firing went on until Samuel's pistol was emptied. He then stepped out of the room and returned to Carlisle, where he was arrested. Dr. French of Cincinnati and Dr. Dill of Carlisle were called to the scene. The room in which the tragedy occured was small and uncarpeted. William O. Rogers lay on the floor, near the front door. The bone of his right leg was shivered, and there was a bullet hole through his abdomen from right to left. He died at 11 at night. Thomas Rogers received a shot in the right temple, which came out above the left eye, near the hair, and another shot in the left arm. He is still conscious, but his condition is very critical.

Samuel G. Rogers, who did the shooting, says that his brothers reached for their pistols before he began to shoot, but their attorney denies this, and says that they made no attempt to draw their pistols. Samuel Rogers was the only man who fired a shot, and he emptied his pistol. Each of the four Rogers brothers has a wife and children, and neither of them is under 40 years old. Samuel has the reputation of being a quiet man until aroused, and then it is unsafe to trifle with him. Great bitterness has been engenderd between the brothers in this strife over the will of their father. The two who were cut off charged that the old man was in his dotage and had been unduly influenced. He died less than a year ago. Efforts to settle the case amicably have failed, and from the day of the funeral to the day of the tragedy the fewd between the brothers has increased.

What the Tobacco Money Bought.

Between seventeen and twenty-three there are tens of thousands of young men damaging themselves irretrievably by tobacco. You either use very good tobacco or cheap tobacco. If you use cheap tobacco, I want to tell you why it is cheap. It is a mixture of burdock, lampblack, sawdust, colt's-foot, plantain leaves, fullers' earth, lime, salt, alum and a little tobacco. You can't afford, my good brother, to take such a mess as that between your lips. If, on the other hand, you use costly tobacco, let me say I do not think you can afford it. You take that which you expend and will expend, if you keep the habit all your life, and put it aside, and it will buy you a house, and it will buy you a farm, to make you comfortable in the afternoon of life. A merchant of New York gave this testimony: "In early life I smoked six cigars a day at six and a half cents each; they averaged that. I thought to myself one day, 'I'll just put aside all the money I am consuming in cigars, and all I would consume if I kept on in the habit, and I will see what it will come to by compound interest.'" And he gives this tremendous statistic: "Last July completed thirty-nine years since, by the grace of God, I was emancipated from the filthy habit, and the saving amounted to the enormous sum of $29,102.03 by compound interest. We lived in the city, but the children, who had learned something of the enjoyment of country life from their annual visits to their grandparents, longed for a home among the green fields. I found a very pleasant place in the country for sale. The cigar money now came into requisition, and I found that it amounted to a sufficient sum to purchase the place, and it is mine. I wish all American boys could see how my children enjoy their home as they watch the vessels with their white sails that course along the Sound. Now, boys, you take your choice, smoking without a home, or a home without smoking."—Rev. T. De Witt Talmage.

An Explanation that Lacked Something.

"Will you please tell me why you are standing on my toes?" asked a very polite gentleman of a colored citizen as they stood in a crowd listening to a humorous vender of patent soap.

"Sah?" remarked the negro.

"I ask will you please tell me why you are standing on my foot?"

"Yas, sah, certainly, sah. 'Cause yo' foot's un'er mine. Dat's right, sah, take it away. Ef it hurts yer so bad doan put it un'er dar no mo'."—Arkansas Traveller.

He Has No Objection.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—The Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees, United States Senator from this State, remarks: "My opinion, sir, I have no objection to giving. I suffered from rheumatism of the back, used some St. Jacobs Oil, which gave me instantaneous relief and finally cured me completely. I think it a remarkable remedy, indeed." His candid and courteous expression carries weight.

Mrs. Scott-Siddons has adopted, under act of Parliament, the boy musician, Henry Stephen Walker. Her husband, Captain Thomas Chanter, who changed his own name in order to preserve the distinguished name of his wife, prefixing his mother's name, Scott, is reported to be insane in an Australian asylum.

A DETECTIVE'S EXPERIENCE.

His Successful Undertaking and Escape from an Impending Fate.

(Buffalo, N. Y. News.)

One morning several years ago just as the dull gray light was beginning to show itself in the east, a small band of men might have been seen deployed about a house on Ferry street, in Buffalo. There was nothing special either in the dress or appearance of the men to indicate their intention, but it was plain that they had business of importance on hand. Suddenly a man appeared at one of the windows, took in the situation at a glance, and swinging himself outward with wonderful quickness, scaled the roof of the house. This man was Tom Ballard, the notorious counterfeiter; and, armed to the teeth and fully realizing his situation, he defied justice and the officials below him. Some of the officers knowing the desperate character of the man, proposed to shoot him until he was killed, but one of the number promptly protested, and declared that if his brother officers would assist him to ascend, he would capture the man alive. Accordingly he began the difficult and dangerous task, and succeeded in bringing his prisoner to the ground in safety.

The man who accomplished this task was Mr. Thomas Curtin, the present superintendent of city police of Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. Curtin is a man who is known by every prominent detective and policeman in America, and he stands pre eminently in the front rank of his profession. Quiet and gentlemanly in appearance and manners, he possesses a courage, combined with marked physical powers, that make him the terror of evil-doers and the pride of law-abiding citizens. Few people can realize, however, the trials, exposures, and even privations, to which the members of every municipal police and fire department are exposed. Compelled to be on duty at uncertain hours, subjected to the most inclement weather, and often necessitated by the nature of their duties to protracted undertakings, they endure a nervous and physical strain that is terrible. Such was the experience of Mr. Curtin in former days; and it is not surprising that he found himself suffering from a mysterious physical trouble. In relating his experience to a representative of this paper he said:

"At time when I was on duty I would feel an unaccountable weariness and lack of energy. My appetite was also uncertain and my head seemed dull and heavy. I did not fully understand these troubles, but supposed, as most people suppose, that I was suffering from malaria. I tried to throw off the feeling, but it would not go. I thought I might overcome it, but found I was mistaken, and I finally became so badly off that it was almost impossible to attend to my duties. I have known any number of men in the police and fire departments of this country who have been afflicted as I was, and I doubt not there are to-day hundreds similarly troubled who, like myself, did not know the cause, or really what ailed them."

"Your present appearance, Mr. Curtin, does not indicate much physical debility," said the interviewer as he looked at the 220 pounds of bones and muscle standing nearly five feet eleven inches in height before him.

"Oh, no; that is altogether a thing of the past, and I am happy to say that for more than a year I have enjoyed almost perfect health, although I now realize that I was on the road to certain death by Bright's disease of the kidney, and travelling at a very rapid pace."

"How did you come to recover so completely?"

"That is just what I want to tell you, for I believe it may be of great service to many others in my profession, who may possibly hear of it. I began the use of a popular remedy at the earnest solicitation of a number of friends in this city, and found to my great gratification that I began feeling better. This feeling continued and I gained in strength and vigor until now I am perfectly well—and wholly through the instrumentality of Warner's Safe Cure which I believe to be the best medicine for policemen, firemen, railroad men or any other class of people exposed to danger or a change of weather, ever discovered. Since my recovery I have recommended it everywhere, and never knew a case where it failed either to cure or benefit. I would not be without it under any consideration, and I am positive it is a wonderfully valuable and at the same entirely harmless remedy. Indeed, I see that Dr. Gunn, dean of the United States Medical College of New York, indorses it in the highestt erms."

"So you experience little difficulty in the execution of your duties now, Mr. Curtin, do you?"

"None whatever. Our department was never in better condition than at present."

"And do you never have any fear of some of the desperadoes whom you have been the means of bringing to justice?"

"Not in the least. Such men do not try to retaliate, partially because they have not the courage, but oftener because they respect an officer who does his duty."

The policemen, firemen, letter carriers and other public employes in this country have a particularly trying life. When, therefore, a simple and pure remedy that can restore and sustain the health is found, it should be cause for great congratulation, especially when recommended by such a man as Superintendent Thomas Curtin of Buffalo.

Matrimonymaniacs.

An Okokomee octogenarian, who is now a widower for the fifth time, is looking around for a new helpmate.

In Shelbyville, Ky., there is a widow who has buried four husbands, and now seems anxious to prepare another for the silent tomb.

A Chicago woman is now living happily with her third husband, the others having obtained divorce on the grounds of incompetibility of temper.

A Maine man secured a divorce from his wife because she made faces at him in the dark. He married again, and now wants to be separated from his second charmer on account of her proclivity for snoring in church.

A negro barber was arrested in the South, the other day, for having half dozen wives in as many different towns.

☞ Fashion in colors! The three [illegible] shape of the Triangle Dye Package has come all the rage, completely throwing [illegible] old fashioned square one into the [illegible] Ask your druggist.

Out of sight, out of "mind"—a dis[illegible] child.

ONE HUNDRED PERCHERON STALLIONS [illegible] CANADA.—Large numbers of Percherons [illegible] lions are being bought in the United [illegible] by Canadian breeders to renew the [illegible] French blood so highly prized, and also [illegible] give quality, style and action to the [illegible] English draft and Clydesdale stock [illegible] has been bred there so long. Nearly [illegible] hundred Percheron stallions have been [illegible] to Canada during the past two years by [illegible] W. Dunham, "Oaklawn Farm," [illegible] Illinois, the greatest importer of the [illegible] ranch, who has imported from France [illegible] 1,400 head 390 have recently arrived [illegible] "Oaklawn."

All men have their frailties, and [illegible] ever looks for a friend without [illegible] fections will never find what he seeks [illegible] love ourselves notwithstanding our [illegible] and we ought to like our friends in [illegible] manner.—Cyrus.

From MR. WILLIAM MAGARTY [illegible]

Erindals, Credit P. O., Jan. 8th, [illegible]

MY DEAR SUTHERLAND: Some two [illegible] since I became so afflicted with Rheu[illegible] of the neck and right shoulder as to [illegible] my right arm nearly powerless. I [illegible] mined to try your "Rheumatine" and [illegible] result is that I am now free from pain, and [illegible] enjoy the full use of my arm. My [illegible] health is also much improved by the [illegible] the medicine. The first two bottles relieved me—the third bottle freed me from all pain.

WM. MAGARTY.

J. N. Sutherland, St. Catharines.

We rise in glory as we sink in pride,
Where boasting ends, there dignity begins.
—Young.

The well-known drug firm of Ormond, Walsh, Peterboro, writes that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is one of their "standard summer medicines, and has a good sale." An unfailing remedy for all forms of Bowel Complaint. (26)

Whenever you command add your reason for doing so. It is this which distinguishes the approbation of a man of sense from the flattery and sycophants of admiration of fools.—Steele.

Mr. W. J. Guppy, of Newbury, informs us that he has used Burdock Blood Bitters in his family with good effect, and adds that the Rev. J. R. Smith has used it and spoken of it in high terms of praise. It is the great system-renovating tonic that cures all diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys, acting harmoniously with Nature's laws. 1,000 bottles sold during the last three months. (28)

Men are never so ridiculous for the qualities they have as for those they affect to have.—Charron.

In the summer and the fall, the small boy
climbs the garden wall,
For green apples, in his frolic:
He will eat his fill, till, very ill,
He's doubled up with Colic.
The antidote is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry—an unfailing remedy for Colic, Cholera Morbus, Cholera Infantum and all Summer Complaints. (30)

The ordinary restaurant waiter measures all his customers from tip to tip.

Of all the sweets of which mortals can dream
There is naught to excel strawberries and cream.
Neither is there any remedy known to mortals that can excel Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry as a cure for Cholera Morbus, Cholera Infantum and all Bowel Complaints. (29)

Professor Alexander Graham Bell has added a large room to his Washington house for the daily reception of deaf-mutes, whom he will teach there the art of speech.

The fruit merchants strawberries may not fill the measure; but Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry fills the measure every time in the people's requirements as an unfailing remedy for all forms of Summer Complaints. (27)

Mr. Thomas Cotis, an Englishman one hundred years old, and his wife of eighty, have just emigrated from Michigan to Washington Territory, where the old gentleman expects to find good shooting.

CORNS! CORNS! Tender corns, painful corns, soft corns, bleeding corns, hard corns, corns of all sizes, are alike removed in a few days by the use of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. Never fails to cure, never causes pain, nor leaves deep spots that are more annoying than the original discomfort. Give Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor a trial. Beware of worthless substitutes. Sold by druggists everywhere. Polson & Co., Kingston, proprs.

The German Crown Prince and Princess are to occupy the Prince of Wales's [illegible] of Abergeldie this fall.

"A. P."

$1 FOR WESTERN ADVERTISER, LONDON, ONT., from now to end of 1884. Magnificent premium, "BOOK OF PORTRAITS," only $1 extra—contains following chromo-lithographs in five colors: Queen Victoria; the new Governor-General (Marquis of Lansdowne); Sir John A. Macdonald; Hon. O. Mowat; Hon. Alexander Mackenzie; Chester A. Arthur, President U. S. Biographical sketch of each. Agents wanted. Address—ADVERTISER PRINTING CO., London, Ont.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

FIVE MINUTES SELECT READING.

Summary of Foreign, Domestic, and War Items.—Pithy, Concise and Pointed.

It is reported that eight thousand Afghan-Russian troops have been defeated by the Ghilzais.

A public meeting has been held at Neufchatel, to demand the expulsion of the Salvation Army.

The Spanish Minister of Foreign Affairs denies that a treaty has been entered into by Spain with Germany.

The Hungarian Prime Minister has proposed a plan for the settlement of the escutchen question in Croatia.

Fifteen hundred dollars has been received by O'Donnell from a New York committee appointed to raise funds for his defence.

The British Consul at Scutari, Alabama, was fired at while hunting recently. He was not hurt. The intended assassin escaped.

Owing to repeated anti-Jewish disorders in Ekaterinoslev and other districts of South Russia, martial law has been proclaimed therein.

From a dispatch from New York it would appear that the Democrats of America are generally in favor of the tariff question being settled.

It is reported that the man who bought the homestead of the noted Bender family of murderers has found $30,000 buried on the premises.

Boring is reported to have again broken out at Canton, the natives considering the punishment inflicted on the tide-waiter not sufficiently severe.

The German Government is stated to have addressed a diplomatic note to France, protesting energetically against the hostile reception of King Alfonso.

The Bishop of Clonfert, at a meeting recently, asserted that millions of Catholics had been lost to the faith in America, and secured State aided emigration.

A report comes from Ottawa that Col. Williams has made a formal complaint against Major General Luard, and that the matter is before the Privy Council.

A large Nihilist depot containing arms, ammunition and other explosive materials has been discovered at Charkoff in connection with numerous arrests of Russian officers.

Secretary Folger has decided that green fruits are free of duty under the new tariff act. There is considerable trade in this line between Canada and the United States.

The matter of the exhumation of Shakespeare's remains has been settled. The city council of Stratford-upon-Avon has passed a motion condemning any disturbance of the grave.

United Ireland, a League organ, states that a certain official intimately connected with the detection of crime in Dublin has been suspended. The cause of his suspension is likewise to create a sensation.

An order has been issued regulating the traffic on the C.P.R. which prohibits the taking of any kind of a parcel into the passenger coaches, even a lunch basket being included. There is no injunction restraining the size of the pockets.

All is quiet at Canton. Halphong advices state that 550 French troops under Colonels Servonnet and Badens started on the 29th ult. for Son Tay River for Bacninp. It is believed that an expedition left Hanoi at the same time for Bacninp.

A Church congress at Reading has discussed the proposed alterations in the marriage laws. Rev. Dr. Coleman, of Ohio, on behalf of the American Church, appealed to the Church of England to maintain the existing marriage laws.

Advices from Madagascar states that Makoo, commander of the Hovas, has offered rewards for the slaughter of the captain of any French man-of-war which shall wreck or destroy vessel. It is reported that the French garrisons at Tamatave and Majunga are virtually blockaded.

It is stated that the informers in the Phœnix park murder trials, who were not permitted to land at Melbourne, will go to Perth, where Carey decided to go until he was rejoined by his wife. It is reported that Carey was offered a clerkship in the new Colonies at Karrachee.

It is reported that the Chamber of Deputies will have to judge between MM. Grevy and Ferry. If the Ministry carry the day President Grevy will issue a message and retire into private life. Some of the papers deprecate Deputy Antoine's arrest as an answer to the recent anti-German cries.

The steamer Melbourne arrived at Marseilles from New Caledonia with Joseph Smith, an informer in the Phœnix park murder trials, who was not permitted to land at Melbourne. Smith was recognized at Marseilles, when he suddenly left the vessel, it is believed taking passage for China.

Five hundred letters were deposited in the New York post-office recently for despatch to foreign countries, each being prepaid by a two-cent stamp, indicating that the public are under the impression that the foreign as well as the domestic rate of postage has been reduced. This is not the case, the foreign rate still being five cents.

The London Times has a report from an Upernavik correspondent of a Copenhagen journal that Greely, of the American Arctic expedition, was murdered by a mutinous crew. The report comes from Hans Hendrik, an Esquimaux with Dr. Nathorst. Hendrik states that he got the news from the Esquimaux at Cape York. The Times considers the report improbable, as Dr. Nathorst never mentioned it.

Alarming reports prevail that the Spanish Cabinet will demand of the French Government a public apology for the insults to the King, and that the German Government will make a diplomatic remonstrance at the indignities to which the King has been subjected. The Radicals violently attack Grevy and Ferry for the course they have pursued. The Cabinet is divided as to its policy.

Contentment is a pearl of great price, and whoever produces it at the expense of ten thousand desires, makes a wise and happy purchase.—Balguy.

The Resuscitated Irishman.

A Galway gentleman was wont to tell the following humorous story of unexpected resuscitation: "That many people are buried alive, is beyond a doubt. I know an instance that I will relate to you, which I may say happened in my own establishment, for our huntsman, Jack Burke, was the subject of it. Jack had a dangerous illness—a fever, I think it was—and, to all appearance died. He was duly coffined, and as duly waked; and such a wake and funeral was never remembered in Galway; for Jack was a universal favorite, a character and a wag, and crowds came from far and near to the burying. The bewailing cries were so loud as the procession moved along the road, that they could be heard a mile off; and by the time they reached the churchyard, all were hoarse with crying. It is the custom in these parts to carry the coffin three times around the church, after which it is laid by the side of the open grave. All present sink upon their knees in prayer, the men reverently uncovering. The immediate relatives of the deceased close round the remains, and for some minutes there is total silence. The contrast between this death like hush and the loud cry of the funeral wail is striking, and the appearance of the motionless kneeling crowd very impressive.

"On the present occasion, the path round the church was rough and stony, and the ground uneven with graves; so that poor Jack, while being carried his three rounds, was badly jolted in his coffin.

"A rousing leap we had to take, surely, when we came to Tom Grady's tombstone," said one of the bearers afterwards. 'Enough to wake the dead, it was. We couldn't put our feet upon the new clean grave, and the dacent man not a week inside; so there was nothing else but to hop it.'

"Whether or not consciousness was jolted into Jack by this 'hop,' is uncertain; but certain it is that the dead silence customary after laying down the coffin was broken, not by the usual smothered sobs, but by vehement thumpings at the lid! It was quickly opened, and Jack sat up. After staring around with an air of comical bewilderment on his astonished friends, a great-coat was thrown over his graveclothes, and he was helped up on a jaunting-car, and in this plight driven home.

"The old woman who had been left behind to keep the house when all went to the funeral, and who was telling her beads over the kitchen fire, was nearly frightened out of her senses at the apparition. There was some difficulty in persuding her that it was Jack himself, and not his ghost, she saw.

"Meantime, Jack had drained a bowl of milk that was on the dresser, and now looked wildly about.

"'Is it wanting anything ye are, my poor fellow?' said his friends. 'Lie down now, and compose yerself. A drop of spirits, with a bit of nourishment and a stretch on the bed, will do ye good, after the start ye got, finding yourself—God save us!—in the coffin. There now, be aisy, do!'

"But Jack would not 'be aisy.' He kept glaring about him and searching for something; staggering here and there, looking behind doors and shutters, and peering into cupboards.

"'The saints be good to us!' whimpered the old woman; 'his mind is gone—gone with the fright. Masther, darlint, what ails ye? Is it the hunger, the long fast that's putting ye stray? Sit down, for the love of the blessed Vargin, and I'll fry you a shave of bacon, and mix a tumbler of punch in a second, to rise your poor heart and put life into you. Do now, avic?'

"'Arrah, will you get out of my way, and lave me alone,' cried Jack. 'It's my stick I'm looking for—my stick, for my wife, bad luck to her! when she comes home. And if I don't give her such a lambastin' as never mortal woman got before, my name isn't Jack Burke, that's all!—Look here!' he exclaimed, plucking at his shirt—which had seen better days—while he panted with rage and weakness. 'Six brand-new shirts, whole and sound as the day they left the weaver—without rent or tear, patch or darn—I left behind me; and look at the rags she dresses up my poor carcase in! making a fool of me in the coffin when I'm dead and gone, and bringing me to shame before the neighbors and the country. Ah! the stingy one! to grudge the dacent linen to the boy that owned her! Only let me catch a hold of her, and see if I don't make her four bones smart for it!'

"With much difficulty, poor Jack's wrath was calmed, and he was got to bed by his friends, Mrs. Jack in the meantime wisely keeping out of the way. He never forgave her the ragged shirt—to him, the feature in the affair.

"To 'make an appearance' at their burial is the ambition of the lowest orders of Irish. They will undergo privation, sooner than pawn or wear the sacred under-garment laid up to 'dress the corpse in.' Thus it was that the indignity to his remains was so paramount in Jack's mind, that ever after, it completely set in the background his narrow escape from the dreadful fate of being buried alive."—Chambers' Journal.

Double Duty for the Baggage Man.

The other day a woman shipped her husband's remains and a dog over the Central. At Albany she appeared at the door of the baggage car to see how they were getting along.

"How does he seem to be doing?" she asked with a sniff.

"Who, the corpse?" inquired the baggage master, kindly.

"No, the dog."

"Oh, he's comfortable," replied the baggage man.

"Anybody been sitting down on him?"

"Who, the dog?"

"No, the corpse."

"Certainly not," answered the baggage man.

"Does it seem cool enough in here for him?"

"For who, the corpse?"

"No, the dog."

"I think so," grinned the baggage master.

"Does the jolting appear to affect him any?"

"Affect who, the dog?"

"No, the corpse."

"I don't believe it does."

"You'll keep an eye on him, won't you?" she asked, wiping a tear away.

"On who, the corpse?"

"No, the dog."

And having secured the baggage man's promise, she went back to her coach, apparently contented.—Cin. Sat. Night.

Another English Enoch Arden.

Upwards of twenty years ago a husbandman, a native of Cumberland, married a girl belonging to the county. The newly married couple went to reside with the bride's friends. The bridegroom, however, could not agree with them, and in the course of a few months he left his wife and went away, no one knew whither. The woman had reason to believe that her husband, after leaving her, took his passage in the ill-fated steamer London, which in the year 1866 foundered on her voyage to Australia. Seeing in the list of those who perished a name similar to that of her husband, the woman concluded he was dead. Shortly after her husband's departure she gave birth to a daughter, and the two lived together for a long time without any particular incident occurring to change the current of their daily life. After waiting for many years the woman married a miner residing in a village near Maryport, and the pair have since lived happily together. The daughter of the first husband is now married, and has gone to Newcastle to reside.

A few days ago the first husband made his appearance at the residence of a sister in Wigton, and to her he had stated that he had been for some time living in Newcastle,—the very town that he had himself been residing in—and that the wife he had deserted was married again. His sister was unable, however, to give him the address of his daughter; and after waiting upon some of his relatives at Maryport—to whom he had announced his intention of searching for the daughter he had never seen—he proceeded to the residence of his wife, not far from the town, in order to obtain his daughter's address. The second husband was not at home when the wanderer made his visit, and the woman was in the house alone. He knocked at the door. When the woman opened it she failed to recognize him and asked him what he wanted. The man asked if she had a daughter alive, and if so, where she was living. The woman wished to know his reason for asking such a question, and inquired if he was any relative of her daughter's husband. "No," he replied, "I am a nearer relative than that."

The woman then invited him into the house, and gave him the address, which he put into his pocket and prepared to leave the house. As he was crossing the threshold he turned, and, looking her full in the face, said, "Well, Eliza, you have got married again, and I hope you will do well by your husband and live comfortably. I am your daughter's father."

The poor woman knew him then, and, almost fainting, cried in a thrilling tone, "Oh, Jim!" but before she could recover her composure he had walked away. He has since left the country.—Maryport Advertiser.

Thrashing a Prince.

One day a young recruit was standing guard before the door of the entrance to Peter the Great's private chambers in the palace of St. Petersburg. He had received orders to admit no one. As he was passing slowly up and down before the door Prince Mentchikoff, the favorite minister of the Czar, approached, attempting to enter. He was stopped by the recruit. The prince, who had the fullest liberty of calling on his master at any time, sought to push the guard and pass him, yet the young man would not move, but ordered his highness to step back.

"You fool," shouted the prince, "don't you know me?"

The recruit smiled and said,—

"Very well, your highness; but orders are peremptory to let nobody pass."

The prince, exasperated at the fellow's impudence, struck him a blow in the face with his riding whip.

"Strike away, your highness," said the soldier, "but I cannot let you in."

Peter, in the room, hearing the noise outside, opened the door and enquired what it meant, and the prince told him. The Czar was amused, but said nothing at the time. In the evening however, he sent for the prince and the soldier. As they came together, Peter gave his own cane to the soldier, saying,—

"That man struck you in the morning; now you must return the blow to that fellow with my stick."

The prince was amazed.

"Your majesty," he said, "this common soldier is to strike me?"

"I make him a captain," said Peter.

"But I'm an officer of your majesty's household," objected the prince.

"I make him a colonel of my Life Guards and an officer of the household," said Peter.

"My rank, your majesty knows, is that of general," protested Mentchikoff.

"Then I make him a general, so that the beating you may get may come from a man of your rank."

The prince got a sound thrashing in the presence of the czar, the recruit was next day commissioned a general, with the title of Count Oroincff, and was the founder of a powerful family, whose descendants are still high in the imperial service of Russia.

A Circus Loving Preacher.

A story is told of a Toledo, Ohio, preacher on a brother minister that will bear repeating. Recently a circus was in the city, and the ministerial curiosity was so awakened that an outside view of the stretch of canvas would not suffice. The minister had compunctions of conscience against the gratifications of what he fancied might be a questionable desire. However, his liberality of belief would permit of the children going and of their seeing all there was to be seen, provided they had some good-sized masculine protector with them. But, unfortunately for him, he had no children, and was, therefore—to use an unorthodox expression—"in a hole." Finally he hit upon a plan. He went to his brother preacher and tried to borrow his 5-year-old boy as a companion to the circus. But it wouldn't work, the preacher remarking: "I've waited a long time for my boy to get big enough to go to a circus, and now I want to use him myself."

All censure of others is oblique praise of self. It is uttered in order to show how much the speaker can bear. It has all the invidiousness of self-praise, and all the reproach of falsehood.—Addison.

THE EMPEROR OF CHINA.

The Monarch in His Rich and Luxurious Home.

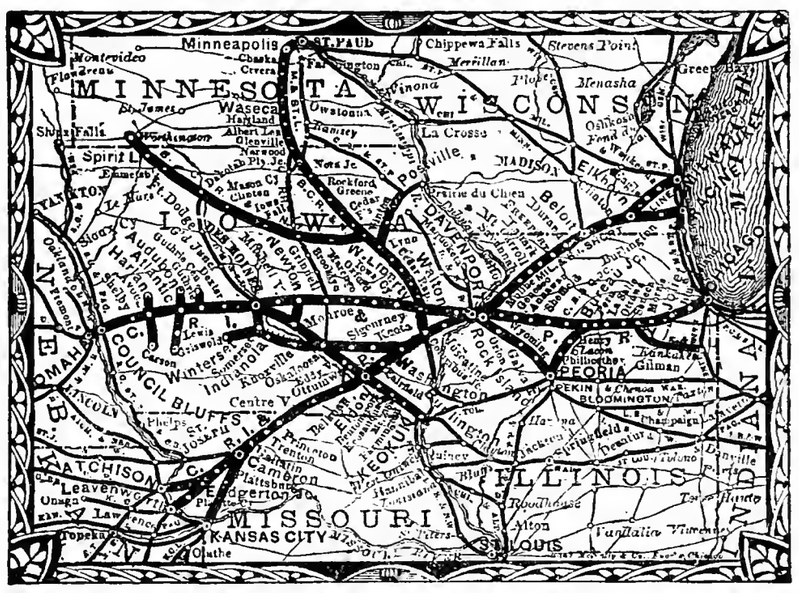
Sacredness of the Young Man's Person.

The ruler of the 250,000,000 of which the Chinese nation probably consists is now within five years of his majority, and is an occupant, while yet a minor, of the same apartments in which lived the Emperor who preceded him on the Dragon Throne. There, says the North Carolina Herald, he eats with gold-tipped chopsticks of ivory. There he sleeps on a large Ningo bedstead, richly carved and ornamented with ivory and gold, the same on which the noble-minded Emperors Ang Hsi and Chien Lung used to recline after the day's fatigue last century and the century before. Like one of these living Buddhas who may be seen in a lamasery on the Mongolian plateau, he is knelt to by all his attendants and honored as a god. There is this difference, that the respect felt for him is more profound than for them. The seclusion in which he is kept also is far more complete. The building in which the Emperor resides is called Yang Hsin Tien, and is a little to the west of the Ch'ien Ch'ing Meu in the middle of the palace. At the back of the central gate, on the south side, is the great reception hall. When ministers of State and others enter for an audience, at four, five or six, in the morning, according to custom, they have to go on foot to the centre of the palace over half a mile if they enter by the east or west gate, and when they get on in years they can appreciate the Emperor's favor, which then by a decree allows them to be borne in a chair instead of walking.

SEVEN MAGNIFICENT COMPARTMENTS.

The rooms of the Emperor consist of seven compartments. They are provided with the divan or k'ang, the peculiar institution of North China. The k'angs are covered with red felt of native manufacture, and the floor with European carpets. The cushions have all embroidered on them the dragon and the phœnix. Pretty things scattered through the rooms are endless in variety, and are changed in accordance with any wish expressed by the Emperor. The rooms are all thirty yards long by from eight to nine yards deep, and are separated into three different apartments, the throne room being the middle one. Folding doors ten feet in height open into each of these apartments to the north and south in the centre of each. The upper part of these doors is in open work, in which various auspicious characters and flowers are carved. At the back, paper is pasted to admit light to the rooms. The front is ornamented with gilding, sculpture and varnish of various colors. These doors remain open even in winter, because during that season a thick embroidered curtain of damask is hung in the doorway, which by its weight keeps its place close to the door posts and prevents cold air from entering. In summer this is replaced by a curtain admitting the breeze on account of its being made of very thin stripes of bamboo. The silk threads used in sewing the stripes of bamboo together are of various colors, and passing through the whole texture of the curtain from the top to the bottom are very agreeable to the eye. These summer and winter curtains are rolled up to give air to the rooms when required. Exit and entrance are effected on each side of these curtains by side doors. Along the whole front of thirty yards there is a covered flight of steps fifteen feet wide. The roof over this rests on two rows of pillars. The pillars shine with fresh vermilion, both within the rooms and on the steps outside, and are decorated with sculptured work, partly gilt and partly varnished. The Hoppo who lately returned from Canton gave the Emperor a present valued at $8,000. It consisted of chandeliers holding 500 wax candles each. His Majesty has also some electrical machines and numberless foreign curiosities.

HIS MOTHER AND HIS STUDIES.



The Emperor was vaccinated when an infant before his high dignity was thought of; otherwise it would have been difficult to vaccinate him, for his person being sacred when Emperor, no lancet can touch him. His mother, the Princess of Ch'un, who is a sister of the Empress of the West, will be raised to the rank of Empress Dowager when he is sixteen, and his father will also be made T'ai Shang Huang. At least this is to be expected by precedent, so that after three years we shall again have two empresses dowager, but in this case they will be sisters. The Princess, his mother goes in to see him once a month, and kneels when she first speaks to him, but rises afterward. His father does so too. The Emperor studies Chinese daily for an hour and a half, and Manchu also for an hour and a half. He spends two hours in archery and riding, and in winter amuses himself with sledging. He has a little brother of five, whom it may be hoped the mother takes with her when she goes to the palace. The teachers who instruct him kneel to him on entering, but afterward sit. The Emperor has eight eunuchs who constantly attend him, besides an indefinite number for special occasions. He has his meals alone, and the eight eunuchs wait round him, restraining him if he takes too much of any one thing. His schoolroom is at the back of the Yang Hsin Tien already described, and the hall for conference each morning with Ministers is a little to the east.

The Burglar under a Couch.

Nine out of ten women probably look under their bed every night before retiring to rest in search of the much-dreaded burglar, and possibly no woman in a thousand millions has discovered that often-looked-for visitor. What happened on those rare occasions history sayeth not, although, considering the universality of the search, some general rule as to the measures to be taken in case of discovery ought by this time to have been pretty well established. In default of such standing orders the example of Mrs. Crolly, whose case is reported from Dublin, may be commended for imitation by the rest of her sex. Finding a man concealed under a couch in her drawing room, she immediately locked him in, sent for a constable, and then, without waiting for the arrival of the police, she armed herself with a revolver, re-entered the drawing room, and threatened to shoot the intruder if he stirred. He remained motionless under the sofa, under the cover of Mrs. Crolly's revolver, until the arrival of the constable, when he was carried off in custody. But how many women, it may be asked, have either the nerve or the revolver of Mrs. Crolly? Those who lack either or both will probably console themselves by reflecting that there is no woman who cannot scream and, with few exceptions, a scream is as effective for scaring a burglar off the premises as a dozen revolvers.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Callatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

The Standard.

MARKDALE, OCT. 11TH, 1883.

SHOT AT.

An Unsuccessfull Attempt to Murder.

On Friday evening last, after dark, Mr. J. B. McMillan, a peaceful citizen of this place, was on his way home afoot and alone, and when about half a mile west of Barrhead Mills, which is one mile from this village, suddenly the report of a revolver was heard close to him, quickly followed by several others. Owing to the darkness, together with the fright, Mr. McM. could see no person, but the flash with each shot, the smell of powder, and the whizzing of bullets around his ears, he made all possible speed home and did not receive even a wound, though there was the mark of three bullets having passed through the rim of his hat. Mr. McMillan has not the slightest suspicion of who the would-be assassin is.

South Grey Teachers' Association.

Following is a programme of the semi annual meeting of the South Grey Teachers' Association, which will be held in Durham, on Thursday and Friday, Oct. 18th and 19th, 1883:—

1. President's address. 2. Rev. Mr. Forrest—"Duties and encouragement of teachers." 3. H. Dunbar—"Minister of Education v.s. Superintendent." 4. Librarian's Report, suggestions, etc. 5. C. Treadgold—"Temperance." 6. Delegate's Report. 7. Mr. Reid—"How a develope Voice in Children," 8. Gilbert McEachern—"Co-operation," 9. John B. McGillivray—"Mental Arithmetic" 10. A. H. N. Jenkins—"The Teaching Profession." 11. Mrs. Reid—"How to Read Difficult Papers." 12 Question Drawer. 13. Jos. Reid. R A.,—"Background of Burk's Reflections." 14. H. V. Thompson—"Desire." 15 Mrs. Reid—"Gesture," its Uses, Abuses, and Principles." 16. R. J. Hill—"How to Teach Writing." 17. Elementary Drawing—General Discussion.

A musical and literary entertainment will be given on the evening of the first day's meeting.

WM. GORSLINE, Chairman.

Artemesia Fall Show.

The above society held their show this year at Priceville, the accommodations are much improved and things much more convenient than heretofore. The weather was all that could be desired which added very much to the success of the fair. The exhibit in the hall was not very extensive, yet there were some fine specimens in some lines, the grain and roots were good, Mr. A. Hislop had a very fine collection of fruit. The show of horses was very good on the whole, cattle was also well represented, Mr. Robert Oliver shows a fine heard of Devons, this is a hardy and easily kept breed. The exhibit of sheep was indeed a creditable one, the best we have yet witnessed at any of the local fairs, Mr. R Oliver had two pens of Leicester and Cotswold, Mr. Geo. Swanton had a very fine pen of Cotswold's and was successful in taking many prizes in that class. Mr. James Stewart had a pen of good sheep being but a few from his flock while his nephew, Jas. H. Steward had the finest animal we have yet seen, a shearling Leicester recently purchased from Earnest Parkinson, of Eramosa Tp. This ram owing to the owner being absent when his class was called for at the County show was overlooked, but the judges award him an extra 1s prize. Mr. D. Stinson had some fine boar pigs in the Berkshire and Suffolk breeds. Mr. R. Cook of Flesherton Station showed a seed harrow at this as well as at the County fair which is well worthy the attention of Farmers, it has stood the test and will doubtless be much sought after. The show passed off orderly and we would judge satisfactorily.

The prize list will be given next week.

Personals.

Mr. John McKenna and family, returned on Tuesday.

Jessie Hanbury returned from Manitoba last week. He looks well.

Geo. Littlejohns went this week, to Owen Sound Business College, where he will spend a term.

We had a call from Mr. Smith, of Detroit, who is the guest of Mr. Armstrong, this week.

Mr. Peter McArthur removed to Owen Sound, last week, with his family.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To Editor STANDARD.

SIR—Would you permit me to correct statements made by your Priceville correspondent, regarding the new bridge in that place.

The bridge was tendered for, and ten tenders received, it was let to the lowest for $418, no extras, and not $500 as stated. The filling was of same material as last one, and difficult to obtain, costing something like $900. The new bridge was erected two feet higher than the old one, which necessitated more material, the old embankments remaining pretty much as they were. The abutments of the new bridge being better, of good cedar and well anchored with store. The specifications were carefully drawn and faithfully carried out. They provided for packing of the material until the road should be level with the road way of the bridge, but it did not provide for a coat of gravel. This was to have been put in, as I understood it, by the statute labor. as the by-law provides that at least 50 per cent of the statute labor must be expended on the gravel roads. This was not done in time I presume, hence perhaps the real cause of damage, and not at all by the village, but the councillor of the ward it seems, let the work by contract and has paid for it out of his ward appropriation, and by doing so has done a kindly act for the village. The bridge is an excellent one, when for a moment one thinks of the number of feet of timber of all sizes, nearly 3000 feet running messure of specification sizes wite nearly 600 cubic yards of filling with corbals, bolts, etc., and the bad season for such work. I have no hesitation in saying that if your correspondent had sincerely taken the whole situation he would have found no room for grumbling, but a great deal of room for commendation.

W. CHRISTOE.

[The cost of filling, above, is, we presume, a mystake, it is however per copy, ED.]

MR. EDITOR.—The Advance readers have had another intellectual treat from the pen of A. R. Fawcett "Mr. Pickell once more." It is a difficult matter to correspond satisfactorily with a man so unscrupulous and void of common sense. In reply to my letter he has persistently avoided nearly all the points to which I called his attention and has helped largely to fill a column with a repitition of former exploded statements and Fawcett twaddle which injures no one but the man who wrote it and passes for what it is worth. There are a few things that might be worth noticing. his reference to yourself and paper as being ready on any excuse to attack the Advance and Flesherton is merely a ruse to give sympathy from his readers. That the STANDARD and Flesherton are in harmony is evident from the fact that upwards of sixty of its copies come to Flesherton P. O. weekly. He should not have forgotton this when in reply to my letter he launches out by saying that I called him a "fool and other nasty names," if he took the benefit of the adage quoted all right but where are the "other nasty names?" can any STANDARD reader find the slightest approach to such a thing? what does Mr. Fawcett called his assertion here? does it come under the head of an unmitigated falsehood?

I now notice that part of his reply where he says he is on his dignity. Something new is it not, never before knew he had any, it certainly never manifested itself. Now Mr. Fawcett, I say again distinctly that you were waited upon by those men in the manner in which I stated and do not think for a moment that by assuming an air of daring bravado you can squirm or wriggle out of it as your custom is, for I mean to hold you to the point for once. It is not necessary, and I respect those men too much to use their names publicly in a correspondence of this kind but I am ready at any time to bring you face to face with them and will thus show who is the truthful man. Now sir it rests with you to call for this proof which you shall have, and if you do not the public will easily see who has told the unmitigated falsehood. It almost makes me smile when he compares the Advance with the Globe, it reminds one so forcibly of the dog barking at the moon and yet I wonder how he dares thus unnecessarily to basely insult the many readers of this one of the standard papers of the Dominion those very men from whom he largely draws his daily support. In conclusion I notice Mr. Fawcett say he has got a motto, it has never appeard at the head of his paper I presume it is like his dignity, he has not had it long. He says it is "Peace with all, mean, equal rights to all," he should add special rights to the Flesherton journalist. I remain

Yours Respectfully,
W. G. PICKELL.

Personal.

The Rev. Mr. G. F. Lee, and wife, of Laurel, formerly pastor of Primitive Methodist Church in this place, are visiting friends here.

BIRTHS.

ADAMS.—In Flesherton, on the 29th ult., the wife of J. C. Adams, of a daughter.

RYAN.—In Glenelg, on the 20th ult., the wife of Timothy Ryan, of a son.

SKENE.—In Glenelg, on the 20th ult., the wife of James Skene, of a son.

BOYCE.—In Glenelg, on the 2nd Oct., the wife of R. H. Boyce, of a son.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.70 to $1.00; Spring $0.70 to $1 00; Barley, 50 to70; Peas, 60; Oats, 35c Butter, 15c; Eggs, 18c; Potatoes, 40c; Hay, $6 .00; Pork, 7.50 to 7.75; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20.

325 ACRES | Fonthill Nurseries | 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address

STONE & WELLINGTON,
161-75 Toronto, Ont.

AUCTION SALE

—OF—

Valuable Village Property

—IN THE—

VILLAGE OF HOLLAND CENTRE

—IN THE—

COUNTY OF GREY.

There will be sold on Friday, the

Second Day of November,

1883, at One o'clock in the afternoon, on the premises, in the Village of Holland Centre, by virtue of a Power of Sale, contained in a certain mortgage, which will be produced at the Sale, the following property:—

Under mortgage from George Skene, village lot No. 25, on the west side of the Toronto and Sydenham Road, in the Village of Holland Centre, containing one fifth of an acre, more or less, being part of lot 31 in the 1st Range, south-west of the Toronto, and Sydenham Road, in the Township of Holland, in the County of Grey.

The following improvements are said to be on the premises: A frame dwelling with outbuildings.

TERMS—One tenth of the purchase money to be paid down on the day of sale. For balance terms will be made known at the sale.

For further particulars apply to

JONES BROS. & MACKENZIE,
Solicitors, Masonic Hall, Toronto.
or to JOHN LYONS, Esq., Markdale.

Toronto, Oct. 4th, 1883.

Farm for Sale.

50 ACRES, being lot 74, 3rd West of T. & S. R, Holland, four miles from Markdale, 20 acres cleared, well fenced and watered, balance good hardwood bush, with sufficient cedar for fencing.

For terms and other particulars apply to

WM. ROWE,
on the Premises.

Berkeley P. O., July 3rd, 1883. *41

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 16th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NORTH. Read Down. A.M.	P.M.		GOING SOUTH Read Up. A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	TORONTO	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	CARDWELL JUNC.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	ORANGEVILLE...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	MOUNT FOREST..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	TEESWATER	5 00	2 45
11 50	8 :0	FLESHERTON	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	MARKDALE,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	OWEN SOUND....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE, General Manager

MONTHLY FAIRS.

Markdale—Saturday before Flesherton.
Chatsworth—Monday before Durham.
Dundalk—Tuesday before Orangeville.
Flesherton—Monday before Orangeville.
Shelburne—Wednesday before Orangeville.
Orangeville—The second Thursday in each month.
Mount Forest—Third Wednesday in each month.
Priceville—Monday before Durham.
Durham—Third Tuesday in each month.
Hanover—Monday before Durham.

MARKDALE EXCITED.

THE EXCITEMENT AT THE CORNER OF MILL & ARGYLE STREETS, STILL PREVAILS.

TRIMBLE & WRIGHT having re-leased the premises they now occupy, have just opened the largest assortment of Fall and winter goods ever shown in MARKDALE or vicinity.

LADIES.

For the ladies we have NEW Costume Cloths, all shades, NEW Black Cashmeres, NEW Colored Cashmeres, NEW Dress Goods from 10cts per yard upwards, new fall Prints, new Wincies, new Wraps, new Shrwls, new circulars, new Underwear, new knitted and quilted Skirts, new Hoop Skirts, new Bustles, new Silks, new Satins, new Fringes, new Frills, new Ribbons, new Collars, new Boots, Shoes & Slippers in the half sizes, round and box toes, &c.

GENTS.

For the Gents we have the newest patterns in Scotch, English, American and Canadian Tweeds made to order on the shortest notice by either Tailors. A new and large stock of ready-made clothing, new oil cloth coats, white shirts, colored shirts, hats, caps, cuffs, collars, ties, hose braces boots and shoes, &c.

BOYS.

For the boy's we have the largest assortment of ready-made clothing in the market as well as an endless variety of hats, caps, ties, collars, hose, boots & shoes, underclothing &c.

GIRLS.

For the girls we have anything and everything calculated to make them comfortable, pleasant, happy, and attractive.

BABIES.

Don't forget the babies, we have just opened a large assortment of new Wool Hoods, new Bootees, new Leggins new Infantees, new Hose, new Bibbs, new Waists, new Wool Scarfs, new Boots, New Shoes.

We have added to our immense stock $2,000, two thousand dollars worth of choice Jewellery consisting of Watches, Clocks, Gold and Silver Chains, Lockets ear ring sets, wedding rings and in fact more than is kept in a well regulated Jewellery store and prices that touch the bottom.

Our GROCERIE Department is full to the TOP.

Our dress goods department is above the usual standard and we would advise all lovers of novelties and new things generally, to reserve their purchases until they have visited our store.

We also carry a large and well assorted stock of imported and canadian staples, linnen goods of every description, our stock is all fresh, and on inspecting it we feel sure you will pronounce it all through, Very Choice, good taste and judgment having been displayed in selection as to styles, colours and values.

TRIMBLE & WRIGHT.

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK

Dress Stuffs Tweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILLIAM BROWN

Messrs. DOLL & BROWN

THE PEOPLES JEWELLERS OF

MARKDALE & CHATSWOSTH,

ARE AWAY AHEAD

When in town do not fail to call and see their immense new stock.

THEY have the ONLY GOOD stock in this section of Country. THEY buy for CASH, IMPORT Direct, and are not FRESH at the Business. Mr. Brown's Watch repairing is giving

FIRST CLASS SATISFACTION.

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

The Provincial Exhibition at Guelph was a grand success.

Who will bring us a load of wood this week; dont all speak at once.

Our market reports are now changed regular and farmers can depend on their correctness.

Eight girls wanted at Miss Green's Dress Making Parlor, six apprentices and two assistants. 161tf

Weather prophets appear well agreed that there will be a fine open fall. Wont that be just splendid.

There is a tremendous heavy trade being done in freight and passengers from Owen Sound North by water.

There were 1,077 entries at the Holland Centre Agricultural Show, held at Williamsford Station last Friday.

We have to thank Mr. J. Seegmiller, secretary of Northern Exhibition held at Walkerton, for Press badge and copy of prize list.

The Beaver Lodge of C. O. O. F. at Thornbury started with eight members a year ago and has now about forty.

Mr. James Stewart of Artemesia took more prizes for grain at the East Grey county fair than any other exhibitor.

The telegraph wire from the village to the R. R. station has been removed as it has not been in operation for some time.

The Osprey Agricultural Society held their fall show at singhampton on Tuesday, We will give full report with prize list next week.

In the minutes of Holland council published in this paper last week the by-law passed for breaking school section No. 3 Should read No. 2.

Madame DeLanney of France, formerly Miss Ollernshaw of Owen Sound, lectured in the latter town recently on the french Missionary service.

Mr. Joseph Swinburne, of Glenelg, received injuries which caused his death recently, while endeavoring to jump from a load of peas which was at the time upsetting.

Hereafter no hair cutting will be done on Saturdays after dark, by Smith, the barber, as he is too busy shaving and selling Rejuvenator Bitters.

If you have a friend living at a distance who would be interested in the news of this district, just leave us the name, and we will forward the STANDARD postage paid twelve months. We venture to say you could not send a present that would be more appreciated by them.

Mr. T. Mathews has leased the premises occupied by A. McDougall as harness shop and will mooye into it next week. Mr. Nevison who had leased this place is not now comming.

Shawls for the Ladies and Hoods for the Babies'. We have a complete stock of Clouds, Hoods, Shawls, etc., and at prices never before offered in Markdale. Reynolds & Son.

QUICK, NOW.—You can have either the weekly Mail or Globe with the STANDARD to the end of 1884 for $2, CASH. Be alive and secure the balance of the year free which is worth 50 cents.

Miss Walker, who was Married last week, will be verry much missed in the Englich church of this place as She has been a constant and zealous worker in Sabbath school and church work.

Reynolds & Son are selling boots and shoes at Prices that beat anything ever offered in this section of Country Come in and see our stock, we keep the boots you are looking for, and don't you forget it.

If you wish to subscribe for the Globe, Mail, Star, Farmer's Advocate or Montreal Witness or renew your subscription for any of the above papers hand in your name and subscription to this office.

The Printers' Circular never printed a more truthful sentence than the following: The smallest country newspaper is worth more to its subscribers in a month than its price for a year, and does more for its neighborhood for nothing than many a high official does for his munificent salary.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY (T. G. & B. R. DIVISIONS.)—We learn that as soon as the new management has taken charge work will be proceeded with to complete the new elevator commenced last fall. Other works of importance will be done, such as extending the sidings, erection of sheds, new station, &c. It is probable that in these works the Company will employ at least 200 men all winter.— O. S. Advertiser.

The next meeting of the Teachers' Association of East Grey, will be held in Andrews' Hall Thornbury, on Thursday and Friday October 18th and 19th. The new School Readers will be discussed on the afternoon of the first day. It would be well for teachers and others interested, to give the subject their careful attention, and to come prepared to enter into and discuss the subject forcibly and intelligently.—Thornbury Venture.

True merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increased sales, as a prominent Druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits;" It is the grand specific for diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys, 25. 000 bottles have been sold during the last three months. For sale by A. Turner & Co. Markdale.

Change in Railway officials.

One of the results of the late amalgamation of the Toronto, Grey, and Bruce Railway with the Ontario and Quebec is the resignation from the former of Mr. Edmund Wragge, manager of the line. The vacancy has been filled by appointing Mr. W. Whyte, manager of the Credit Valley Railway, to the position, so that that gentleman now holds the position of manager of the Credit Valley, Toronto, Grey, and Bruce, & Ontario and Quebec railways, all branches of the Canada Pacific line. Mr. Wragge has been appointed to a position on the Grand Trunk in order to meet a want long felt by merchants and business men in Toronto. Full powers have been given him to deal with and settle all questions in dispute without reference to Mr. Hickson at Montreal, thus entailing delay and inconvenience as has hitherto been the case.

Glenelg Council.

This council met at the Town Hall on 1st instant. All the members present.

Accounts passed—W. Whitmore, repairing scraper $1.50; Thomas Cook, repairing plough $2.00.

Davis, Mullarky,—That Richard Jack be paid, $5.00 for repairing bridge at Lot 5 con. 8.—Caried.

A petition was reccived from R. E. English and others for a grant for the town-line of Holland and Glenelg.

Mullarky, Davis—That $15.00 be granted to repair the town line between Holland and Glenelg, from Glaecott P. O. East, on condition that Holland grants an equivalent for the same place carried. Davis, Mullarky—That $12. be granted to cut a hill at lots 5&6, con. 4 S. D. R. carried. Dunsmore, McMillan—That $20.00 be granted to repair a hill at lot 28 con. 2 E. G. R. carried.

Council adjourned to meet at the same place on 10th December next.

The Toronto Grey and Bruce.

The directors met on Saturday, and it is believed that Mr. Sutherland Taylor was appointed general manager pro tem. It is said that the $250,000 which the Ontario and Quebec were to give for the lease of the road has not yet been paid, though the amount is overdue.

Priceville.

From a correspondent.

Our saw mill commenced operations on Monday and will now be run constantly every working day. The proprietor Mr. John McLeod, has a large stock of logs in his yard and will be able to supply the demand. The grist mill will commence about the 1st November. Mr. McGowan has taken a partner in the person of Mr. Black from Mt. Forest, and who has been employed in American mills the past five years where grinding is done on the new system, they are now putting in purifyers, or roolers in their mill here and will no doubt be able to turn out a superior quality of flour, So mote it be.

Chatsworth.

From a correspondent.

Chatsworth, Oct. 8.—On Saturday night Robert Green, of this village, attempted tomurder his wifebyshooting but for interference of his motherwould have accomplished it. Green has for some time, been drinking hard, and while in this state procured a revolver from his show case, went into the houe caught his wife around the neck, and pulled the pistol from his hip pocket. His mother seeing this caught his hand He discharged the pistol, but without effect. His wife broke from his grasp and fled to a neighbour's almost distracted, and for some time feared he was following her but in the mean time his neighbour secured him and awaited the arrival authorities, but for want of proper affidavit Green will be brought up for threatning and bound over to keep the peace.

The Algoma Boom

(From The World)

There is much rejoicing amongst the merchants of Manitoulin Islands, as since the Algoma election farmers and others who were seeking for credit and unable to pay their store bills a week or two ago, are now loaded down with shekels, and are settling up all round. One of them called last night and paid his three dollars for the World.

The Markdale Methodist S. S. Anniversary, will take place in the Methodist Church in this place, on Tuesday evening, the 16th Oct. The entertainment will consist of usual dialogues, recitations, readings, music &c, to commence at 7:30 p. m. admission 10 cents. The Anniversary Sermon will be preached on the 21st at 10:30 by the Rev Mr. Wilson and at 7, by the Rev Mr. Casson a collection will be taken up at each service in behalf of the S. S.

In the Goods of MARGARET IRETON (DECEASED)

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to Section 34 of Chapter 107, R. S. O., the creditors of Margaret Iretin, late of the township of Glenelg, in the county of Grey, deceased, who died on or about the 5th day of May, 1883, and all parties having claims upon her estate are on on before the next, to send by post prepaid, to Benjamin Coleman, of the Village of Markdale, in the county of Grey, one of the Executors, of the personal estate and effects of the deceased, (or to James Masson, Markdale, solicitor for the executors,) their Christian and Surnames addresses and description, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and nature of the securities (if any) held by them, and in default thereof the assets of the said deceased will be distributed, having regard only to the claims then received or those of which the executors then have notice,

FIFTEENTH DAY OF NOVEMBER

BENJAMIN COLEMAN
JOHN WM. FORD, } Executors.

J. MASSON,
Solicitor for Executors.

Dated this 1st Day October, 1883.

A CARD.

To all who are suffering from the errors and indiscretions of youth, nervous weakness, early decay, loss of manhood, &c., I will send a receipt which will cure you, FREE OF CHARGE. This great Remedy was discovered by a missionary in South America. Send a self-addressed envelope to REV. JOSEPH T. INMAN, Station D, New York City.

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.10; Spring, $1.00 to $1.12; Barley, 50c to 70c; Oats, 38c to 39c Peas, 70c to 73c; Hogs, $8.00 to $8.25; Potatoes, per bag, 90c to $1c; Butter, dairy, 15c to 17c; eggs, 18c to 00c.

WANTED.

Three teachers wanted for the Public Schools, Markdale 1884. One male and two female teachers. Male teacher must hold at least second class Provincial. Females 3rd class Provincial. Applications stating salary and grade of certificate received until November 1st, 1883, by the undersigned.

B. COLEMAN.
Sec.-Treasurer.

Markdale, Sept. 22, 1883. 159-61

William McLeod,

BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,

MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Mathews' harness shop.

159-3m

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

CARD OF THANKS.

As I am now about leaving Priceville and having been engaged in various branches of business for over twenty years, in this village, I take this opportunity of kindly thanking all my old friends and the public generally, for the very liberal amount of patronage they have bestowed upon me in all the various branches of business in which I have been engaged. I hope you will give my successor in business a hearty welcome when he comes among you, and I also wish that he may prove himself worthy of all the support you may favor him with, and at the end of twenty more years he may be able to do what I am now doing, viz.: thanking you again for your very great liberality.

I remain, dear friends,
Yours very truly.
ALEX. WEBSTER.

Priceville, Oct. 3, 1883.

New FALL Importations

——arriving daily at——

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats. Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in a the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

STELLA;

OR, AT CROSS PURPOSES.

CHAPTER XXIX.

THROUGH THE FOLDING DOORS.

When Sir Edgar Dyson had discovered, upon his return to Barfield, that Lily Finch had been already spirited away, he had been very much disturbed indeed. There had been a yearning to see her once more in his heart, that not all the duties of his new relations towards Lady Honoria had been able to quench; and there had also been misgivings in his own mind as to whether he had not possibly been too ready to misjudge and to think evil of her.

Lily's illness had softened his heart towards her, and he longed intensely to see with his own eyes that she was better, to hold her soft hand within his own, to look into her gentle eyes, and to say to her just once—"Forgive me—if I have wronged you."

But all this was seemingly to be denied him. When he came back to Barfield, Lily was gone, and he could not find out from his mother where she had been taken to.

"She has gone to friends at the seaside—I really cannot tell you where," was all that Lady Dyson would tell him, and she said it in a manner that made him fancy she knew no more than he did himself of her whereabouts. "It was the best thing in the world for her to have a thorough change of air. Of course she will come back to me by and by, when she is strong enough to resume her work."

"But, my dear mother, have you not provided for her at all—how is she to live?"

"Oh, of course I have given her plenty of money—she will not have to be a burden upon anybody," and that was all the information that he could extract from Lady Dyson.

In his perplexity Sir Edgar even rode over to Wrexham, and asked Mrs. Finch, who was a person he cordially detested, for news of her daughter.

"She has gone to the sea, was that lady's answer. "I really haven't troubled myself much about it. I suppose Lady Dyson knows where she is, as she has been kind enough to send her—you know I never correspond much with Lily—it is somewhere in Essex, I believe."

Mrs. Finch possibly knew more than she chose to say, but she was too clever to impart the desired information. She had not forgotten that Lily had been once what she called "foolish" about Sir Edgar; and now that he was engaged to be married to Lady Honoria Rosett, of what possible interest could Lily Finch's movements be to him? She had always hated the Dysons, and to encourage the baronet's empty and meaningless attentions to her daughter, would be, she considered, worse than useless. There was one more person whom Sir Edgar consulted concerning Miss Finch, and that was his own brother. With a strange pang of anxiety at his heart he spoke to Walter about her.

"Walter, do you know—surely you do know—where Miss Finch is gone?"

"I? My dear fellow, I assure you I have not the remotest idea! Look here, Edgar, you have run your head against this idea until you have gone insane upon it. I give you my word that I have no more to do with the girl than—than you have—not so much probably!—don't look so savage, old man, I'm only joking! I dare say we both of us made a little love to the pretty governess, just for the sake of something to do; but upon my word of honor, she is nothing at all to me. Good Heavens! I have got my hands full enough as it is—if you only knew!——"

But Sir Edgar was too much absorbed in his own troubles to remark the significant manner in which Walter disclaimed all knowledge of Lily's doings. He was annoyed with his brother for speaking of her so lightly, and yet he could not but believe in his earnest asseverations.

"I have been a madman," he said to himself, bitterly. I have wrecked my own happiness, and possibly hers too, because I judged her too hastily, and condemned her without giving her a chance of self-defence. But still, she had no business to allow Walter to kiss her—a women cannot be quite true and pure who permits a man to embrace her, even in sport."

But though he blamed her still, he blamed himself far more, and was very unhappy.

It was not possible for him to do anything else—he could not in conscience set himself to work to trace Lily Finch and to pursue her. The scandal for her and for Lady Honoria, whom he deeply respected and sincerely liked, would have been too great.

Then Lady Honoria went to Sandyport to get rid of her cold, and there came the news of her sprained ankle, and then the letter from her which summoned him to her side, and with it—at last—the information which he had been seeking for concerning Lily Finch.

As to Lily, she only heard the news of Sir Edgar's advent from Lady Honoria's lips upon the same day that he came. She was sitting by the couch of the invalid, doing her best to amuse her, and to vary the dullness and monotony which she complained of, when Lady Honoria said suddenly to her:

"Who do you suppose is coming here today, by the very next train?"

"I cannot tell, Lady Honoria," answered Lily, smiling.

"Guess, then."

"Lord Alchester."

"Oh, dear, no; the last person in the world who would come."

"Lady Dyson, perhaps."

"No; try once more."

And then Lily bent her head very low, and her heart throbbed rapidly and painfully.

"Perhaps it is Sir Edgar."

"Yes, you have guessed it. Fancy Sir Edgar coming to a fearful place like Sandyport!"—none of the Norton family, it may be mentioned, were present—"Is it not devoted of him to subject himself to such a fearful boredom just to come and see me?"

"It is natural he should wish to see you," murmured Lily.

"No, I don't think it is natural at all for a man to condemn himself to the discomforts of a second-rate country inn, and to the intense stupidity of the most dead-alive little seaside town in the world, merely to see a woman whom in course of time he would be able to see with perfect comfort and convenience to himself. Men are not so fond of putting themselves out, and of giving up their own creature-comforts, I can tell you, Miss Finch. But then, perhaps you don't know so much about them as I do—and lucky for you that you don't. Why! what are you getting up for? You are not going away so soon, surely?"

"I'm afraid I must, Lady Honoria."

She had risen, and was putting on her hat and gloves.

"Oh! do stay a little longer. If you wait you will see Sir Edgar—and he must be here in less than half an hour now. Oh! do stay to see him. I believe you are rather a favorite of his, Miss Finch—he told me so one day; now do stop a little longer to see him.

"I—I have some letters to write—indeed I must go," stammered poor Lily, and made her escape as quickly as she could from Lady Honoria's well-meant and good-natured entreaties.

What a relief it was to the poor child to be out-of-doors, away from the good natured, handsome woman, whose unconscious tongue inflicted such terrible stabs upon her poor wounded heart—how glad she was to feel the cool sea-breezes blowing upon her cheeks, and to smell the fresh, salt spray as it dashed up against the sea wall. The tears that in Lady Honoria's presence she had been forced to drive back and to hide, welled freely up into her eyes now she was alone. Oh! how bitter it was to hear him spoken about by her happy and successful rival! to witness her contented approbation of him! and worse still, to listen to the idle words of commendation of herself that he had spoken to her!

She was "a favorite of Sir Edgar's," so he had told Lady Honoria. Oh! how could he speak of her so—how could he, who had so often sworn eternal love and devotion to her, even mention her name to this other woman, who was to be his wife! Oh it was hard—very hard to bear!

And yet, deep down at the very bottom of her heart, there was a great gush of guilty gladness. He was coming again—and she would see him again—he would speak to her kindly and gently, perhaps—would tell her he forgave her—and though she would never be able, probably, to explain to him how terribly he had mistaken her in deeming her guilty for the unmanly persecution of his own brother—yet if he were only to say, "I forgive you," would not that be comfort enough to brighten her life through many of the long, dismal, unlovely years that spread themselves out gloomily and drearily before her.

"Oh! I wish I had died when I was so ill!" said the poor child, miserably, to herself, as she sought the seclusion of her dull-looking lodgings.

And here, when she knew that the train must have arrived, and Sir Edgar actually be in Sandyport, Lily Finch felt strongly inclined at first to lock herself up in her bedroom.

But during the course of the afternoon, a little note came to the lodging-house by the sea from the Rectory. It was an invitation to Miss Finch to come to dinner that very evening.

"Mamma hopes you will come," wrote Marian Norton, "as Sir Edgar will be here, and Lady Honoria thinks he will like to meet you."

Lily had not the strength of mind to decline this invitation; she sent back word that she would go.

Now, the back drawing-room of the Rectory had been for the last two days transformed, by the kindness of her hostess, into Lady Honoria's bed-chamber. In this way she could, with the help of her maid and a strong crutch-stick of the Rector's, hobble backwards and forwards from her room to her sofa by the window, without the pain and fatigue of going up-stairs.

Accordingly, on this particular evening, when Sir Edgar, who had been sitting with her for an hour or so in the afternoon, had gone away to the inn again, in order to dress for dinner, Lady Honoria also retired through the folding-doors into the inner-room, to make sundry changes in her toilet for dinner.

The maid, a Frenchwoman whose fashionable appearance had filled the minds of the sober Rectory servants with astonishment mingled with awe, was desired to re-dress her mistress' abundant dark locks, which, from lying down all day among her sofa-cushions, had become extremely disordered and untidy. Then, of course, it is a difficult and tedious operation to dress a lady who is unable to put her foot to the ground; and also, there was the injured limb to be bathed and bandaged; so that altogether Lady Honoria was a very long time indeed over her dressing.

Before, indeed, it was half completed, Lily Finch, arriving quite punctually, was shown into the adjoining room, and neither she nor Lady Honoria perceived, what the latter became aware of soon after, that the folding-door was not quite closed between the two rooms.

Lily sat quite quietly by herself in the bow-window, looking thoughtfully out upon the gray line of sea beyond the sands. She was rather pale, but not otherwise than calm and self-contained. The light was already rather dim and indistinct, and yet it was by no means dark enough for candles.

None of the Nortons were down stairs. They were rather an unpunctual family, and were never quite ready in time for anything. So Lily sat on alone in the window and looked at the sea; and Lady Honoria, on the other side of the folding-doors, sat having her ankle bandaged by her French maid.

All at once she heard the slam of the front door, and the rapid footsteps of a man as he ran lightly up the stairs and entered the adjoining room.

It was, as Lady Honoria knew, Sir Edgar coming in ready for dinner from the hotel. It came into her mind that she would make haste and finish her dressing, so as to join him as quickly as she could; when all at once she heard his voice so plainly, that she discovered instantly that the door was ajar; and the words which she heard Sir Edgar speak was such an utter shock to her, that it did not even occur to her to close it.

"Lily!" she heard him say. "Lily, is it really you! Oh! my little darling, how white and ill you look!"

"Oh! please, Sir Edgar, don't speak like that to me!" said the girl's trembling voice.

"My pretty one, don't cry! I can't bear it! Oh! Lily, I can see in your face I have wronged you cruelly! You have always loved me truly, have you not, my sweet! Don't turn from me child! Let me look at you once more."

"Oh! Sir Edgar—you know you ought not to speak to me like this. Lady Honoria——"

"Yes, I know I have thrown away your love, child, and behaved like an idiot! and Lady Honoria is very good, and I am quite unworthy of her. I shall try to make her a good husband, because there is nothing else left for me to do; but, oh! she is not like my Lily!—my little darling, that I love so well! Do you know that I have come here on purpose to see you, child—just to look at you once more and to say good-bye? Yes, my pet, I must have seen you once more; and now we shall have to say good-bye, and pray heaven that we may forget each other, and never meet again!"

"Henriette," said Lady Honoria in a whisper to her maid, "go away at once—I don't want you any more; and go to Mrs. Norton's room, and tell her I feel too unwell to come down to dinner."

Henriette left the room.

And there was great consternation amongst the Nortons that evening, because Lady Honoria Rosett posivively declined to leave her room.

CHAPTER XXX.

LADY HONORIA DOES HER DUTY.

"When one has a great and important resolution to make, there is nothing like sleeping a night upon it before making up one's mind as to what is to be done."

This was Lady Honoria's waking reflection the following morning, as the sun came shining brightly into her room. She rang the bell for her maid, and began to get up.

"I feel much better about it to day than I did last night," she said to herself; "and now I can see my way plainly, and I know what my duty is! Can I ever be thankful enough for the accident which has prevented he wreck of three lives!

And then, as soon as she was dressed, and installed upon the sofa by the bow-window, and had finished the tea and toast that had been set upon a little tray by her side, Lady Honoria sent round a note to the hotel, begging Sir Edgar to come and see her as quickly as possible.

He came in brightly and cheerfully.

"Well, how are you this morning, Honoria—better, I hope? I was sorry you felt so unwell last night; we must get you away from here; this place is too quiet for you——"

And then something in her face stopped him, and he saw, by the way in which she looked at him, that something was wrong with her.

He sat down upon the low chair by her side.

"Is anything the matter, Honoria?" he asked her, gravely and kindly.

"Yes," she said, "there is something very much the matter. I have a very serious and important thing to say to you."

He had no idea what was the manner of thing that she had to say to him. He smiled at her in a kind and friendly way.

"You know very well that I will give my very best attention to anything you have to say to me."

For a minute she did not speak, but looked away out of the window. She had not, perhaps, loved him very deeply—it was not in her nature to do do so; but she was disappointed in him, and she felt the slight to her vanity and her self-love very keenly indeed.

"Edgar," she said suddenly turning round again and looking at him, "do you know that I overheard what you said to Miss Finch in this room last night!"

He looked startled and his face flushed, and then he said, earnestly:

"I am very, very sorry for it, Honoria."

"But I am not sorry at all," she answered, bravely, with something of her usual downrightness and dash of manner; "for it has shown me the truth, and has prevented us all from making a very great mistake. You know, Edgar I love the truth—at any price?"

"Then, Honoria, let me tell the truth!" he cried, eagerly. "The truth is, that I was once engaged to Lily Finch, but my engagement with her has long ago been at an end. I am pledged to you, and nothing on earth shall induce me to break my faith to you; I would not do you such an injury for the whole world! Do not imagine that I will not keep true to you! I shall never see Lily—Miss Finch I mean—again. Last night I walked home with her, and I have said 'Good-bye' to her, and she quite understands that all is over between us. Believe me, I have too high a regard and esteem for you, to be guilty of wanting in anything that is your due, Honoria, upon my honor that is the truth!"

She smiled rather sadly.

"My dear Edgar, do not deceive yourself; the truth is what I can tell you far better than you can me—the truth is, that you love the girl, and that you don't love me; and not all the sophistry on earth can alter that! Pray recollect that I heard all that you said to her last night! Do not blame yourself—I can see it all quite plainly—you loved her, and you like me, and in some way there was a quarrel or a misunderstang between you. I gathered so much as that from what I heard—and then you were angry with her, and you fancied that you liked me the best. Well, perhaps it is all for the best that I have found this out in time. Of course I am fond of you. But I don't suppose I have given you quite as much as you expected from me; and though naturally, I am verry sorry, yet I would not marry you now upon any consideration. I am not mean enough to make myself happy upon the ruins of other people's lives. It will be a disappointment to my father, and to your mother, of course; and, well, yes—I don't mind owning—to me, too; but I am not the sort of woman to go out of her mind, or to fall into decline, for this sort of thing. I shall have a good gallop across the Downs, and perhaps go yachting for a month, and then I dare say I shall be all right again, and feel very glad indeed to think that I have done only what is my duty after all!"

"Lady Honoria, I think that you are a noble creature," said Edgar, earnestly. "I can never forgive myself for having behaved to you so shamefully!"

"Oh? I don't think you have behaved shamefully at all. I don't see that you could help it. Your mother wished you to marry me, I know that; and of course from a worldly point of view, Miss Finch is not a good match for you. But I think if you have made her love you, that you ought to marry her, will you not, Sir Edgar?"

"Oh! Lady Honoria, pray do not speak to me like that!" he said, distressed voice.

"No! Why should I not? We shall always be friends, I hope. You mean to marry her, I trust?"

"Of course I shall marry her," he said, in a low voice, not daring to look at her.

"That is right," she answered, heartily. "I am glad of that."

And then she stretched out her hand to him. He took it almost reverently between his own, and raised it to his lips.

There was a little quiver at the corners of her mouth as he did this.

"Say that you forgive me, Lady Honoria," he said, rather unsteadily.

"Of course," she answered, in a cheerful voice; "there is nothing to forgive. You made a mistake, but we have found it out in time, that is all. I liked you very much—I like you still. We shall always be good friends, I hope; but you know I am not going to break my heart, nor die an old maid, not at all;" and she laughed a little as she said this.

"We need not tell anybody about this," she said again, presently, after a moment's pause. "Nobody need know exactly what has happened. We will just say that we have quarreled—that we agreed to break our engagement by mutual consent. There is no occasion to let everybody into the secret." And there was a little flush of wounded pride upon her face as she said this; for, after all, it was hard upon Lord Alchester's beautiful daughter that her lover should have preferred a little unknown governess to herself. She felt the humiliation of it more intensely than she would have liked to own.

"No one shall ever know," he answered. "But you have behaved very nobly, Lady Honoria. I must tell you once more that had you not accidentally discovered my secret, you should never have found it out from my conduct to you. The effort of my life would have been to crush my love for Lily out of my heart, and to be to you the best and most devoted of husbands."

"I dare say; but then, you see, I had rather have a husband to whom it would not be an effort to be good and devoted," she said, quietly. "And now, Sir Edgar, I think you had better wish me good-bye—and—and—give Lily my love, and tell her I am not at all vexed with her. I have always liked her very much, and by and bye, when—when I come back from that yachting, you know, and when you are settled down at Barfield—I shall come over and call upon her, and I hope we shall end by being very good friends. You need not trouble to write to my father; I will do that—and to your mother, too. Now go, Sir Edgar—good-bye!"

She held out her hand again, and Sir Edgar kissed it once more, murmuring a devout and heartfelt "Heaven bless you," as he bent over it.

And then he got himself away somehow out of the room and the house, feeling just a little bit ashamed of himself for the part he had played in the whole business, and yet with a load of care lightened from off his heart, such as he had not experienced for many a long day.

He lifted his hat from his head as he stood for a minute outside the Rectory hall, and drew a long breath of relief, inhaling the fresh sea-breezes as he did so.

"Now for Lily!" he said to himself, and walked rapidly away from the Rectory in in the direction of the row of green-shuttered lodging-houses.

As for Lady Honoria, after she was left alone she lay back for some minutes upon her sofa-cushions, with her eyes closed. She looked rather pale, as though she were very tired, and there were two large circles round her eyes, which certainly had no accustomed place there.

After a minute or two she opened her eyes, and sat half up.

"So ends that chapter of my life," she said, aloud to herself, as she drew her writing-case near to her on the table by her side. Then she dipped her pen into the ink, and wrote the two following notes:

"My Dear Papa,

"You will be suprised to hear that I have broken off my engagement with Sir Edgar. I find, when it comes to the point, that I do not care for him sufficiently to marry him, so I thought it best to put an end to everything between us at once. My ankle is getting on very well, and I shall make a great effort to come home on Friday or Saturday. Please tell everything about me before I come back.

"Your affectionate daughter,

"Honoria."

"My Dear Lady Dyson,

"Sir Edgar and I have settled that we are not likely to make each other happy, so we have mutually agreed to break off our engagement to each other. You must not blame him, for it is really entirely my doing. But I hope that there may be no interruption of our friendly relations together, and that after a while you may resume your kind friendship to yours,

"Always affectionately,

"Honoria Rosett."

The second of these notes gave her more trouble than the first, and she read it over several times before she felt quite satisfied with it. At last, however, she folded them both up and addressed and sealed them.

"That is done!" she said aloud to herself, with a sigh of relief, and leaned her head once more back among the sofa-cushions. She was not going to break her heart, as she had told him, but she would have been more than human had she not felt it.

(To be continued.)

The Hebrew New Year.

On Tuesday and Wednesday Oct. 2 and 3, the Hebrews throughout the world celebrated their New Year, which opened the year 5644 in their calendar. On Wednesday evening, October 10th, the day of Atonement, or Yum Kipur, began, when services were held all day at the various synagogues and other places of worship, and all devout Hebrews abstained from any food for twenty-four hours.

What is most productive of mal-aria? A squeaky-voiced soprano.

Murder Discovered by a Dream.

The dead body of William Scott was found lying along the track of the Erie Railway, a mile from the Olean, N.Y., depot, about midnight recently. There were bad cuts about the head, back, and shoulders. Coroner's jury returned a verdict that Scott had been killed by the cars. On Thursday word was received from a brother of the dead man that he had dreamed on Tuesday night that his brother was murdered in a piece of woods and robbed. When the dreamer awoke he was so nervous that he was unable to sleep again during the night. He awoke from his dream between 11 o'clock and midnight.

On the same day a sister of Scott's, who lives in Rochester, sent word to a friend in Olean that she had a dream Tuesday night in which she saw two men beat her brother to death in the woods, and take money from his pockets. She awoke screaming, afraid to touch the money! There is blood on it! She says she was frightened so much that she arose from bed and lit out a light. It was on the bureau showed the time to be half past 11:30.

These singular declarations led to bring-to light the fact that on the day of William Scott's death he had sold some property, for which he was paid $1,000. In the afternoon he was seen in an out of the saloon kept by a man named O'Mara in company with two strange men. He was intoxicated and exhibited a large roll of money, and boasted of the bargain he had made in the sale. Between 4 and 5 o'clock he was so drunk that the men carried him out to a barn in the rear of the saloon and left him there. About 11:30 o'clock that night he was met by an acquaintance on the road leading from O'Mara's to the Friedsam near a piece of woods. He was not quite alive again.

There was no money in his clothes when found. It is noted now that there was no blood on the rails or anywhere about the track at the spot where he was found, and railroad men say that it would be next to an impossibility for a person to be hit by an engine or run over there without the fact being discovered at once either by the engineer or fireman. The belief is strong that Scott was murdered and robbed where he was found to give the impression that he had been killed by the cars.

The case is to be re-investigated.

The Boiled Shirt.

We would like to know, says Gilbert, what sort of an idiot the man was who conceived the idea of the boiled shirt. We would like to speak to him calmly and quietly, and point out to him where he was wrong. The flannel shirt is sensible, useful, warm and comfortable, but the boiled shirt a whited sepulchre, and a starched, expensive ornament, of no use whatever. It is a waste and taken in connection with the modern collar, a vexation. To begin with, the boiled shirt has no shape or style about it; there was some tone about the ruffled shirt of our ancestors, but the shirt of the present day looks like a pillow-slip with a crash string at one end of it and the bottom out of the other end. Then there is the absurb tab at the lower end of the bosom with a button-hole in it. We have often wondered what that meant. We don't know whether it was intended as an appropriate place for the owner to inscribe his name, in that if anything should happen to him suddenly the coroner could tear it off and identify the man, or whether it was merely ornamental. We judge it as merely ornamental, however, in consequence of the button-hole as the most careful research has failed to find a button to fill it. Then, look what a world of contingencies have arisen because of the modern boiled shirt. In our grandfathers' days the collars and cuffs were tacked on and the sleeves were made of a length approximating to the length of the arms of the wearer. Now we have to buy separate collars and cuffs, and sleeve-buttons, and gum-elastic bands to hold our sleeves up, for they are generally about six inches too long, and we have Chinese laundry-men to please, and altogether it looks like working for a dead horse to own a boiled shirt. We do not want it to be understood that we desire the civil and world to retrograde and practice barbaric customs, but our society days are over; we care not what the world may say, and we believe it would be a relief to several millions of gentlemen in this country if the boiled shirt were barred (some of the finest shirts are already barred) and the plain, as-you-please bleached muslin shirts of our forefathers, with collars and cuffs attached, adopted.

A Game of Chess.

A singular game at chess has just been finished in the north of Scotland. The game was begun about twelve months ago in Brooklyn. The first player, Mr. J. R. Mellman, made a move, and then passed the score sheet on by post to a friend. That friend made a move in reply, and then passed the paper on by post to another well-known player, who made a move in continuation. In this way the document found its way to Baltimore, where Mr. Sellman, who played lately in the London tournament, added a move and sent the paper on to Jamaica. From Jamaica it was sent to England, and after passing through the hands of well-known players in London and other towns, who each added a move, it began a tour among the chess players of Scotland. It travelling as far north as Dallwillington, the document was sent back to Sheriff Spens, Glasgow. That gentleman examined the position, and decided that the game was won for white, as black could force an exchange of rooks and win with the pawns. He therefore returned the game to the first player, Mr. J. B. Munoz, who now sent it to London to be published as a curiosity in the Field Monthly, where it has just appeared. The scoring sheet bears the signatures of seven players, who each made a move in the game, and the document shows that it has passed from hand to hand through thirty towns and cities of England, Scotland, and America.

The world is a looking glass, and gives back to every man the reflection of his own face. Frown at it and it will in turn look surly upon you; laugh at it and with it, and it is a jolly, kind companion, and so to all young persons take their choice.—Thackeray.

Goes without saying—the deaf and dumb alphabet.

UP IN A BALLOON.

An Aeronaut's Account of his Voyage Across the English Channe.

"We started from Hastings," says Mr. Simmons, "under somewhat unfavorable auspices, the wind being north-easterly at the time. A crowd of some forty thousand persons had gathered to witness our departure, and as we ascended they gave us a tremendous cheer. My fellow passenger, Mr. Small, a photographer, was so lost in admiration of the magnificent panorama of Hastings lying below us that I had to warn him that he must be quick if he wished to obtain a photograph, and we just got the apparatus ready as we passed over the beach, the balloon being at that moment (3:20) at an altitude of 3,000 feet. At 3:30 we had a long range of coast line, Eastbourne pier being exceedingly distinct. I thought we were a trifle too near Beachy Head ever to make any point of land on this side of the Atlantic, but when we attained an altitude of 7,500 feet we southed a trifle more. Appearances were, however, much against our ever reaching land, and I must acknowledge that I was sorely tempted to come down off Beachy Heae and get picked up. But this would have been rather too ignominious, and I decided to keep on our course. We had the satisfaction, a few minutes later, to find Beachy Head receding north of us, and we quickly settled our minds to make a night of it if necessary.

"At 4:20 we were over a magnificent cloud scene; here and there patches of the coast line could be discried far away to the west, while at a vast distance there was a gap through which we got a patch of sea, with three or four ships very distinct. A moment later and the great curtain or clouds had shut out our last landmark. Mr. Small got his apparatus ready to secure a cloud effect, but his shutter missed fire two or three times, and this suggested some little improvements for such experiments in future. From 4:30 to nearly sunset (to the people on earth) our altitude ranged between 8,000 and 9,000 feet. During this interval we got peeps at the sea many times, but no land was seen. We could see the sun's rays two hours after he had withdrawn from earth and sea. The shadow of the balloon on a cloud looked very much like a shuttlecock, the car forming the butt end, and the balloon and cords forming the feathers. The transition from day to night was very slow and gradual, and as daylight departed the moon's rays from dead gold gradually changed to bright silver. Mr. Small said, 'Did you see that shooting star?' I said, 'Wait a minute and I will show you another.' The balloon had commenced to revolve, and this motion made it appear as though a bright star was darting through the air. It was, of course, an optical illusion.

"A remarkable appearance was caused by the reflection of the balloon in the focussing screen of the camera. When we surrounded it with a black cloth the frame round the glass we could see sky, sun, moon, and stars inverted, and the balloon cleaving its heading 'downward' course through illimitable space, the effect being most extraordinary. Soon after 7 o'clock we began to get cold, and set to work to don flannels, &c. Our large wrapper got tightly jammed in the rigging, but the hard pulling necessary to get loose soon made us feel warm, and, having once got up a good circulation, we did not, during the entire voyage, again feel cold. The cork jackets which were supplied by Mr. Cornish contributed greatly to warmth. During the night for more than an hour our altitude did not vary 20 feet. This was exceedingly encouraging, for upon our power of poising so nicely depended our chance of floating all oft all night. When the balloon did take a slight downward turn I carefully noted how much ballast it would take to 'stop her.' The temperature of the air was very regular, and I found that seven pounds of eight pounds was sufficient.

"At 10:15 we saw a vessel almost under us, and came down low enough to hail her. This we did as lustily as we could, but at first got no response, only a remarkable distinct echo from our own voices. At last a voice was heard on deck, 'Voila balloon, balloon!' 'Are you English?' No reply. 'Parlez vous Francaise?' 'Oui, oui,' was replied, but with all our French we could not ascertain our whereabouts, and whether we were over the English Channel or the Atlantic.

"At 10:25 something slightly darker than the normal horizon could be faintly discerned. We kept ourselves absolutely motionless, and, listening intently, we seemed to hear in the same direction a sound as of a far-distant rolling surf. I looked long and eagerly, until I exclaimed. 'It's nothing but a mist,' for it seemed to change its form, and at last to vanish into 'thin air.' I passed nearly another hour intently watching for lights until a similar dark portion of horizon was brought under view. We could not possibly bring ourselves to believe it was land, because no lights could be seen up to this time, but at last there was an unmistakeable flicker in the exact direction where I was gazing. 'Look along my finger as a telescope. What do you call that?' 'A lighthouse,' exclaimed Mr. Small. I said, 'I believe that dark strip before us is land, with sea just beyond it again. If it turns out to be so, be prompt in doing everything I tell you, for it will be sharp work to land on that strip.'

"The sound of surf was now unmistakable, and in about the same time as I am taking to tell this the line of coast was presented distinctly to our view, every minute getting more distinct. The sea now began to ripple up sharply. Ten minutes longer and we were passing the coast line, and sharply veering toward the other sea beyond. 'What sort of ground are we coming down on?' said Mr. Small, 'Rugged rocks and stone walls, I believe,' I said. 'Hold on firm. Out goes the grappling iron.' At first it would not hold, but soon it got wedged into a crevice in the rocks, giving us just time enough to pass over the precipice and down on to the beach. There was just room for us between the receding tide and the rocks, and none to spare. Had we gone ten yards further and half a second longer we should have been in the sea.

"We heard whispering near us. In a few moments a man and a woman appeared, but would not at first approach us, fearing, I suppose, we were some monstres. By and by they gained confidence, and then they told us we were on Cape de la Hague, the extreme north-west point of France. We then found that our informants were M. Auguste Larem of Canton de Beaumont, Arrondissement Manche, and his wife. They most kindly helped us to empty the balloon of its contents, and gave us supper and shelter for the night. Next morning, at 7 o'clock, we went to view the scene of our descent, and Mr. Small photographed it. We afterward proceeded to Cherbourg, and thence home."

SCIENCE.

M. Galippe states, in the Journal de Pharmacie, that copper exists normally in all plants, and especially in wheat. It may, therefore, be detected in bread without its having been fraudulently introduced.

Luminous paint which contains as a basis sulphide of calcium is rapidly becoming appreciated for special uses. When properly painted, objects are visible in the darkest nights with a pale white light. Life-buoys and life-saving apparatus are conveniently illumined, and, perhaps, a most common example, match boxes are doubly useful when painted with the luminous paint.

In a lecture on school-hygiene Professor Cohn Breslau made the remark that in the use of the ordinary slate a child who would see ordinary ink-writing quite distinctly at a distance of twelve inches must approximate his eye to eight inches from the slate to obtain the same distinctness. He considers that slates should be banished from schools; and he recommended dull white tablets of artificial stone, supplied by Priebatsch, in Breslau, which are written on with a special kind of pencil.

Mr. John Burns, of Castle Wemyss, has recently had provided for him by the British post-office telephone communication between his office in Jamaica street, Glasgow, and his house in Wemyss bay, a distance of thirty-two miles. This new feature of telephonic science is said to be the longest private wire in the world. It is what is known as a metallic circuit—that is to say, it consists of two wires, through which the current of electricity passes round and round, up one wire and down the other, always in the same direction, and the two wires are "twisted." Ordinary telephone and electric wires consists only of one wire.

Few are aware of the present extensive utilization of the various refuse matters discarded by tanners and currriers, and known as "paste roundings, shoulder splits and skivings," for the heels and soles of all kinds of boots and shoes. These materials are cleaned, damped, cut by dies, pasted into moulds, compressed in a powerful press, and dried, the refuse in this process being, in turn, manufactured into what is known as

He was Grateful.

He must have been from the West. He was idling about Old Burling Slip, when he took a tumble and brought up in the river. A ready hand threw him a plank to sustain himself, and he was soon hauled out.

"Gentlemen," he said, as he gave himself a shake, "what's your time worth per hour?"

"I'm getting twenty-five cents per hour," replied one.

"And you were about nine minutes fooling with my case. About nine, but we'll call it ten. Your charge should be about four cents, about four, but we'll call it five. I haven't anything smaller than a dime, but one of you can run across the way and get it changed!"

"We don't want pay," remarked one.

"You don't? But you must accept of something. Here, boy, run over and buy me a couple of pears!"

The fruit was purchased and placed in his hands, and as he put one pear in his pocket and bit into the other one he remarked:

"And if you ever come within fifty miles of where my uncle lives, he'll be glad to have you stop all night with him. He keeps a hotel, and his charges won't be over $2!"

The Dimensions of Heaven.

The following paragraph, entitled "The Dimensions of Heaven," is from 'Lewis' Penny Readings:"—"And he measured the city with a reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth, and the height of it are equal."—Rev. xxi., 16. Twelve thousand furlongs equal 7,920,000 feet, which, being cubed, is 496,793,088,000,000,000,000 cubic feet. Reserving half of this space for the Throne and Court of Heaven, and half the balance for streets, we have the remainder of 124,198,272,000,000,000,000 cubic feet. Divide this by 4,006, the cubical feet in a room sixteen feet square, and there will be 30,321,843,750,000,000 rooms. We will now suppose the world always did and always will contain 999,000,000 inhabitants, and that a generation lasts for 33 1/3 years, making in all 2,970,000,000,000 every century; and that the world will stand 100,000,000 years or 1,500 centuries, making in all 2,970,000,000,000 inhabitants. Then suppose there was one hundred worlds equal to this in number of inhabitants and duration of years, making a total of 2,997,000,000,000,000 persons; and there would be more than a hundred rooms sixteen feet square for each person.

Three-Year-Old's Prayer for Patience.

One of the greatest little witches that ever lived was the 3 year-old girl of a certain Methodist D. D., L.L. D., prominent alike for vigorous preaching and stern practice, but whose ideas of duty does not extend to the restraining of his children nor the holding up of his wife's weary arms. Hence when his little "thorn of his flesh" became too troublesome and troublesome, he would withdraw to his study leaving her to the mother, and she often with an audible prayer for strength would yield. One day Gracie was left alone for a moment all prepared to make a visit with her mamma, dressed in her finest. In a few moments she was missed from the room and search was made. Up stairs, down stairs, and in "my lady's" chamber, passed the weary mother. At last she entered the kitchen and saw the child playing in some soot, and black as the rubbish was. When the mother in the door looking at her more in sorrow than in anger, quick as a flash the little one dropped on her knees, clasped her grimy hands, and lisped, "O Lord dive us patience!" No jest was it or family speech, only the prayer that had often been the plea from a weary, true mother's heart.—Boston Traveller.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

In 1881, 4,000,000 acres of land were under cultivation and the production of wheat was over 31,000,000 bushels. In 1882 the trade of the [illegible] £115,000,000 stg.

Victoria, Australia, excels in big trees, a fine specimen of the Eucalyptus Amygdalina has been found recently with an altitude of 420 feet. Trees are found there with a circumference of 86 feet.

Ireland sends out yearly 19,890 men and boys to garner the harvest of the seas; they secure annually 26,959 tons. Scotland sends out 48,109 fishermen, who catch 216,810 tons each year. Each Scot therefore catches 4½ tons annually, while each son of Erin catches but 1½ tons.

One of the machines used in a watch factory will cut screws with 589 threads to an inch. These threads are invisible to the naked eye, and it takes 144,000 of the screws to make a pound. A pound of them is worth a pound of pure gold. Lay one of them upon a piece of white paper and it looks like a tiny steel filing.

The population of Egypt is 6,798,230, of which 3,393,918 are males, and 3,404,312 females, Cairo has 368,108 inhabitants; Alexandria, with its suburbs, 208,775; Port Said, 16,560; Suez, 10,913; Tantah, 21,725; Damietta, 34,046; Rosetta, 16,671; Mansourah, 26,784; Zagazig, 19,046.

The quantities of coals, cinders, and patent fuel exported from the United Kingdom to foreign countries and British settlements abroad during 1881 were—Coals, 18,759,931 tons; cinders, 415,762 tons; patent fuel, 412,310 tons; total, 19,587,063 tons. The quantity brought into London amounted to 10,574,807 tons.

In 34 cities of the United States from 50 to 82 per cent. of children of school-age are not enrolled. In 86 cities the average attendance is only about two-thirds of the enrolment, or one-third of the population of school-age. These 86 cities contain over 8,000,000 inhabitants, or nearly one-sixth of the total population of the country; but more than a third of their population of school-age never enter the schoolroom at all.

Minister Young, at Pekin, says he learns from official sources that the census of China, as taken last year for the purpose of taxation, shows a total population of 255,000,000. This does not include the Mongolian or other out-lying dependencies of the empire, but only the eighteen provinces of China proper; nor does it embrace various aboriginal tribes. Including these, it is probable that the population really exceeds 3,000,000.

In 1816, Australia exported only 13,000 lbs weight of wool, in 1882 the total export of Australia was over 414,000 000lb. weight. In 1816 the value of the wool exported was £21,000,000. Then in 1882 the whole colonies exported 25,000 tons of tallow. In 1861 there was no boiling-down establishments, and consequently there was no tallow. In 1882, 10,000 pounds of meat were exported to Great Britain. In 1788 the live stock of Australia consisted of one bull, five cows, and a calf, about seven horses, seventy-four pigs, and 300 head of poultry. To-day in Australia there are 75,000,0000 sheep and 9,000,000 cattle.

ABDUCTED BY HER HUSBAND.

A St. John, N. B., Sensation.

A great sensation has been caused at St. John, N. B, by a case of wife-abduction. About three years ago Miss Lena Robinson, a handsome young lady whose father occupies a prominent position in connection with the Government Savings Bank in that city, was secretly married at Amherst, N. Y., to De Blavier Carritte, a son of Dr. Carritte, of that place, contrary to the wishes of her parents, who had a more eligible partner in view. The couple separated immediately after the ceremony, the lady returning to her parents and Carritte going to New York. When the secret leaked out there was great indignation in the Robinson household, and it was determined that a dirorce should be procured. For this purpose, it is said, the young lady resided in one of the Eastern States for some time, but Carritte was determinedly opposed to any such proceeding, and the lady was brought home. Carritte returned to St. John this year and established himself in business. He was not allowed to approach his wife. About 10 o'clock on a recent Saturday night, accompanied by his friends, he followed Mr. Robinson and his daughter towards their home, and when in a dark street assaulted Robinson and seized the young lady, and putting her in a coach on hand for the purpose drove off. Three days later Carritte and his wife were found in a hotel where they had arrived about 2 a.m., after a drive around some country roads. Carritte was arrested on a warrant for assault, information having been laid against him by Mr. Robinson. The young husband acted on legal advice, and it is believed that the young lady was privy to the abduction. The parties move in the best social circles.

Value of a Big Hotel's Refuse.

"I have just let the contract for the swill of my house for the next season at $500," said the manager of a large summer hotel to a Journal reporter this morning. "The price is very low, and there seems to be no reason why the contractor should not make $1,000 clear out of the deal."

"How can he treble his money?"

"Because the swill itself is worth at least $1,000, and then the dishes he picks out, besides the marked ones, are good for $500 more. Why, do you know that at one of the Coney Island hotels, where I was formerly employed, a man was hired for the express purpose of sorting over the swill, and picking out the dishes?"

"How do so many dishes get into the swill?"

"You should get into the kitchen of a large hotel when a rush comes. Everything goes—spoons, forks, knives and dishes. Generally the silverware is marked, and so is returned by the contractor. The waiters are very indifferent. Why, do you know I once saw a waiter with a salver full of goblets, which cost $1.00 a dozen, actually slide them into the broken glass barrel to save him the trouble of setting them on a shelf. The destruction in a watering place kitchen during a rush is terrible."—Albany Journal.

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs,

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions, said to be just as good.

For Diabetes, ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

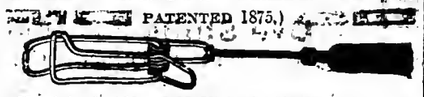
For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,

Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

Mrs. Partington declared the Neuralgia to be worse than the old Rheumatism; but however bad either may be, Burdock Blood Bitters will conquer it. It also makes pure blood, regulating the Liver, Kidneys and Bowels, and eradicating scrofulous humor from the system. 25,000 bottles sold in the last three months. (25)

HOW TO MAKE MONEY FAST



OVER 5,000 SOLD!

A Book containing 25 very valuable money making secrets, sent to any address post-paid and sealed, on receipt of $1.00.

N. W. BOYD, Knowlton, P. Que.

WELLS' WINDOW SHADE CLASP.

(PATENTED 1875.)

Used for holding WINDOW BLIND SHADES without rollers, pins, or cords. Saves blinds, money and patience. Looks orderly and neat. Is durable and cheap. Retailed by all dealers everywhere. Trade supplied wholesale by the manufacturers, The TORONTO INDUSTRIAL WORKS CO., 96 Church street, Toronto.

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS

—OF THE—

WHITE STAR LINE

Are all of them without exception among the LARGEST AND FASTEST of Ocean Steamers. They were constructed with special reference to the conveyance of passengers, and for Safety, Comfort or Speed, are unexcelled. They are specially noted for the regularity of their rapid passages in all weather. The steerage accommodations are of the highest order, the ventilation perfect; and every provision has been made for the comfort and protection of the passengers. In addition to the total and absolute separation of the single men and women, except on deck, the married compartment has been so remodelled and arranged that every married couple or family has a little private room to itself. For particulars apply to the company's agents at all towns in Ontario or to T. W. JONES, General Agent, 23 York street, Toronto.

CLEAN YOUR BOILERS

Britannia Scale Purger Saves Fuel, saves Repairs, obviates Danger.

CROSS LUBRICATORS Save Oil.

Tube Cleaners Save the Tubes.

Bolt Fasteners Save any Bolt.

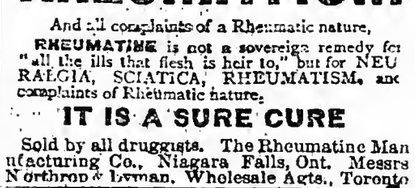
For [illegible] McLAREN, [illegible] Montreal.

195 ACRES—45 CLEARED; 40 FOR HAY; clay loam; no stone or rock; nearly level; well watered; large frame barn, with granary, log stable, and foreman's house, all nearly new; immediate possession; $2,300 cash. also 212 acres, 171 cleared, 15 pasture; clay and black loam, situated on Mary Lake, Stephenson township, large new two-story frame house, 24 x 28 and 16 x 16; stone cellar, 24 x 28; pantry, w. c., store-room, and woodshed; new frame stable, with loft, price of 407 acres, $5,000 cash; these prices if sold at once. CAPT. OPENSHAW, Port Sydney, Muskoka.

BLACKSMITHS' BELLOWS

ANVILS, VICES

PORTABLE FORGES,



BABBET METAL,

The largest assortment in the Dominion.

William Darling & Co.,

HARDWARE MERCHANTS,

MONTREAL, P. Q.

FREEMAN'S WORM POWDERS.

Are pleasant to take. Contain their own purgative. Is a safe, sure, and effectual destroyer of worms in Children or Adults.

THE GREAT CURE FOR

RHEUMATISM

And all complaints of a Rheumatic nature. RHEUMATINE is not a sovereign remedy for "all the ills that flesh is heir to," but for NEURALGIA, SCIATICA, RHEUMATISM, and complaints of Rheumatic nature.

IT IS A SURE CURE

Sold by all druggists. The Rheumatine Manufacturing Co., Niagara Falls, Ont. Messrs Northrop & Lyman, Wholesale Agts., Toronto

Burdock Blood Bitters

Every Subscriber at $1.00 a year gets

FREE! FREE!!

1 Magnificent Chromo, 20 x 28—"The Advance Guard."

3 Splendid Chromos, each 16 x 23—"Kiss Me First"—"Gee, Up"—"The Young Student."

2 Beautiful Chromos, each 8 x 22—"Sunset" and "Sunrise on the Lake."

A complete Outfit of all the above Pictures, with Sample Papers, &c., for Canvassing, by Mail, for 50c.

THE HOUSEHOLD JOURNAL

is a large 24 page MONTHLY MAGAZINE chock full of information of all kinds. It has a NEWS DIGEST, Country and Home Circle Departments, WIT and HUMOUR, SUNDAY READING, CHILDREN'S CORNERS, Valuable PRESCRIPTIONS, Practical Directions, TALES. Interesting Stories by the best writers.

THE LATEST FASHIONS, &c.

Everything is of the best description. No trash is allowed in its columns.

SUBSCRIBE YOURSELF.

AGENTS GET 50c. Commission on each of the first 100. 35c. on each of the next 100, 40c. each on the next 100, 45c. each on the next 100; and after that 50c. on each Subscriber.

A WATCH, SHOT-GUN OR REVOLVER

FREE

to every Agent who gets 100 Subscribers within 30 days from the date he gets his OUTFIT.

JAMES [illegible] & CO.,

517 Lagauchetiere Street, - - MONTREAL, P. Q.

Markdale monthly Cattle FAIR.

A regular Monthly Cattle Fair will be held in the Agricultural Grounds, Markdale, as follows :

—1883—

SATURDAY	.....	Aug. 4
Do.	.....	Sept.
Do.	.....	Oct.
Do.	.....	Nov. 3
Do.	.....	Dec. 8

MARKDALE Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats !

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and delivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23. 1882. 80-1y

Health is Wealth !

Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment, a guaranteed specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Fits, Nervous Neuralgia, Headache, Nervous Prostration caused by the use of alcohol or tobacco, Wakefulness, Mental Depression, Softening of the Brain, resulting in Insanity and leading to misery, decay and death, Premature Old Age, Barrenness, Loss of Power in either sex, Involuntary losses and Spermatorrhœa, caused by over-exertion of the brain, self-abuse or over-indulgence. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser a written guarantee to refund the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by A. Turner &Co., ole authorized Agent for Markdale Ont. John C. West &Co. sole proprietor Toronto.Ont.

ROBT. ASKIN,

MARKDALE,

Has opened out a First-Class

UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,

And therefore has supplied a want long felt,

COFFINS,

CASKETS,

SHROUDS,

and all

FUNERAL FURNISHINGS

supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse

for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—

PICTURE FRAMING

Done on short notice.

ROBT. ASKIN.

ALEX KAY

BooT & ShoE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and Positively cures Piles. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by A. Turner & Co

District Dashes.

Fire.—F. L. Brigg's Woolen mill in Stayner was burned on Saturday last, loss about $6,000, no insurance.

Platts' hotel, outbuildings, and stables at Rosseau, Muskoka, were destroyed by fire on Saturday morning last, nothing was saved.

The following circular has been issued to trainmen on the C. P. R.: "In future the use of all intoxicating liquors, either on or off duty, is strictly prohibited. Any violation of this order shall be severely dealt with."

An order has been issued regulating the traffic on the C. P. R. which prohibits the taking of any kind of a parcel into the passenger coaches, even a lunch basket being tabooed. There is no injunction restraining the size of the pockets.

Jumped Overboard.—About 11 o'clock on Saturday night last one of the men who left here for the C. P. R. works at Thunder Bay, jumped overboard from the Propeller Enterprise between Little Current and Clapperton Island. The Enterprise was immediately stopped, a boat lowered, and although it was a very dark night the body of the unfortunate man was recovered. The name of the man was Patrick Burns, of Buffalo, and he was suffering from delirium tremens at the time. His body was conveyed to the Sault Ste. Marie and interred at that place.—O. S. Advertisor.

They had an election for the Maitoba constituency of Verennes at Rat Portage on the same day as the Algoma election. Mr. Miller, the Conservative candidate, was returned by a majority of about 800.

MISCELLANEOUS

Dye Stuffs of all kinds at the Medical Hall, A. Turner & Co.

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate. It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

The Princess of Wales is becoming deaf. The best aurists are unable to suggest a remedy.

KRAM'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

A Japanese theatre was burned on Friday night during a performance. Seventy-five people were killed and a hundred injured.

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

Ram lambs for sale.—A choice lot of South Down grade ram lambs for sale at H D Irwin's and Thos. Irwin's a short distance East of Markdale.

WORTHY OF PRAISE.

As a rule we do not recommend Patent Medicines, but when we know of one that really is a public benefactor, and does positively cure, then we consider it our duty to impart that information to all. Electric Bitters are truely a most valuable medicine, and will surely cure Billiousness, Fever and Ague, Stomach, Liver and Kidney Complaints, even when all other remedies fail. We know whereof we speak, and can freely recommend them to all.—Ezch.—Sold at fifty cents a bottle, by A. Turner & Co.

If you are sick take Rejuvenator Bitters to make you well, and if you are well take the Bitters to keep you well, sold by Smith, the barber, and he is continually selling them.

FREE OF COST.

All persons wishing to test the merits of a great remedy—one that will positively cure Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, or any affection of the Throat and Lungs—are requested to call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption free of cost, which will show you what a regular dollar-size bottle will do.

A Conductor was recently chosen a decon of a church. When it became his duty to take up a collection, he surprised the congregation by starting out with the characteristic ejaculation, Tickets, gentleman!" The contribution that day was large.

GIVEN AWAY.

We cannot help noticing the liberal offer made to all invalids [illegible] by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. You are requested to call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store, and get a Trial Bottle free of cost, if you are suffering with Consumption, Severe Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Loss of Voice, Hoarseness, or any affection of the Throat or Lungs. It will positively cure you.

HOLLAND CENTRE SHOW.

When there is a Will there is a Way.

The above society held its first Fall Show at Williamsford Station on Thursday, the 4th inst, and resulted in a grand success. There was a larger exhibit than in many of the township shows, and in some respects outstripped the county fairs. There was the largest exhibit of butter we have yet seen, being 30 tubs and 33 baskets. The fruit was excellent, while the ladies' department did no discredit to the gentler sex. The grain was ahead of any local fair we have visited, and the roots, especially potatoes, were excellent. There was a large show of stock but the crowded state of our columns prevents going into particulars. This show, which was got up without any outside assistance by way of a Government grant, as is the case with regular township societies, shows to a demonstration what can be done when there is a will, when those who ought to will take an interest and give a helping hand success is certain. The following is the prize list:—

Horses—Span draught horses—Geo Yates. Span general purpose—James Farley. Span carriage horses—J H Henderson, John Marquis, John Lilburn. Mare with foal by her side—Robert Walker, John Hamilton, Watty Crawfory. Buggy horse—J R Trimble, Jas Laird. Saddle horse—P Hamiliton, P Matthews. Colt or filly, 2 years old, general purpose—Sam Howey. Wm Walker. Colt or filly, roadster—T Willcroft, Jas Bruce. Yearling colt or filly—Wm Henry, 1st and 2nd. General purpose colt or filly—P Matthews, P Hamilton. Spring colt—Wm Henry, John Hamilton.

Cattle—Bull over 2 years, with pedigree—Wm Foster. Geo Ptolmy. Bull under 2 years with pedigree—D C Taylor. Grade bull any age—Robt Givens, Jos Fanning. Cow with pedigree—Wm Robinson, Wm. Henry. Grade cow giving milk—A Adams, R Walker. Two year old heifer—Wm. Henry 1st and 2nd. Yearling heifer—Wm Henry, 1st and 2nd. Yoke working oxen—P Hamilton, Wm Robinson. Three year old steers—Thos Sowerby, F R Stafford. Two year old steers—A Crawford, R Givens. Yearling steers—Wm Henry R Clark. Spring calf—R Freeborn, S Doyle.

Sheep—Leicester, aged ram—D C Taylor, J Deavitt. Pair ewes raised lambs this season—J Cameron. Shearling ram—P Kelly. Southdown, aged ram—E Beatty. Shearling ram—E Beatty. Ewes, raised lambs this season—E Beatty. Ewe lambs—Thos Sowerby, E Beatty.

Swine—Berkshire, aged boar—R Freeborn Thos Anderson. Aged sow—D C Taylor, Jas Page. Spring boar—J Vise. Spring sow—J Vise, J Lyons. Suffolk, aged boar—J Page. Aged sow—R Irwin. Spring sow—James Farley, J Page. Pair spring pigs—J Vise, Robert Webster.

Poultry.—Collection barn-yard fowls—C Price. Psir geese—Wm. Foster. —— Welwood. Pair duck, large—Thos Anderson. Small—Jas Farley, Henry Roberts.

Grain—Bushel fall wheat—J Marquis, J Farley. Spring wheat, white Russian, Jos Jackson, J Cameron. Genessa, special by J Cameron, J Murray. Any kind, special by H Foster, J Marquis. Barley, Geo Shaw, P Kelly. Peas, large, J Cameron. Small, J Henderson, P Kelly. Oats, white, J Cameron, R McKissick. Black, Wm Norton, John Henderson. Half bushel timothy seed, P Kelly. Peck white beans, Wm Norton, Mrs. R Shunn.

Roots.—Collection of 6 varieties potatoes, J Deavitt. Bushel Early Rose, R McKissick, Wm Robinson. Any other kind, M Ward, J Bruce. Six Swede turnips, Thos Sowerby, R McKissick. Any kind turnips, G Ptolomy, R Watters, Six mangold wurtzels, R McKissick, Jas McVear. Blood beets, Wm. Greenaway, R McKissick. Field carrots, R McKissick, H Norton. Parsnips, R McKissick, Jas McVear. Celery, J McVear. Cabbage, Early York, R Givens, Thos Troughten. Any other kind cabbage, J Bruce, T Troughten Seed onions, J Marquis, T Anderson. Any other kind, onions, R Walker, J Hamilton.

Fruit.—Winter apples, J Farley, J Gillespie. Fall apples, P Kelly, A Stevenson, Variety 3 of each, A Neelands, A Stevenson. Crab apples, J Henderson, Moses Smith. Pears ——, J Murray. Grapes, J McVear, Jas Hare. Blue plums, Wm Norton, ——. Green gage plums, Wm Norton, Mrs. Rich. Shunn. Any other kind plums, Wm. Edwards, Jas Hare. Tomatoes, R Clark, J Hare Citrons, J Bruce, P Kelly.

Dairy.—Tub butter, T Troughten, John Henderson. Five pound rolls, Wm Norton, ——, Firkin butter, special by H. Foster, ——. Cheese, home made, H Norton, W Norton. Flour, McNabb Bros., J Hare. Home made bread, Wm Howey, J Laird. Honey in comb, T Anderson, J McVear.

Manufactures.—Plough, A McArthur. Iron harrow, John Spiers. Farmers' waggon, J Spiers, J Noble. Buggy, J McVear, 1st and 2nd. Double Sleigh, T Sargent. Men's coarse botts, J Gawley. Sett horse shoes from the hammer, J Spiers, R Abbey. Cabinet work, J Foster. Full cloth, home made, J Henderson, R Walker. Satinett, home made, R Walker. Fancy flannel, home made, W Howey, J Cameron. Plain flannel, J Cameron, J Hamilton. Pair blankets, home made, J Henderson, J Cameron. Horse blankets, W Howey.

Ladies' Work.—Woollen mitts, J Henderson, P Kelly. Socks, R Walker, J Henderson. Patchwork quilt, J Henderson, J Downey. Fancy quilt, J Downey, J Hare. Log cabin quilt, Wm. Norton, J Downey. Embroidery in cotton, P Kelly, J Farley. Embroidery in wool, T Willescroft, J Farley. Berlin wool work, raised, P Kelly, G Crowther Not raised, ——, A Shaw. Fancy knitting in cotton, R Walker, J Henderson. In wool, A Shaw. Braiding in cotton, McNabb, J Fanning. Knitted lace, M Smith, J Henderson. Collection Berlin wool T Willescroft, J Fanning. Hair work, A Williams. Rag mat, J Farley, D Taylor. Mat, any other kind, R Walker. Rag carpet, Wm Howey, R Walker. Collection flowers, J McVear, T Willescroft. Gents' fine shirt, hand made, special by H Foster, J Henderson.

Best looking baby under one year, special by Markdale Standard, Mrs. McMitchell, Mrs Hanbury, ——.

Sent Up.—Abram, son of Mr. Wm. Deaver, Holland towtship a boy of about 20 years, who has been subject to fits since his childhood and is growing worse of late years, was tried at Markdale on Monday for assult and sent to Owen Sound jaol for two months.

ARTEMESIA WAREHOUSE

FLESHERTON STATION.

Dry Goods, Hardware, Crockery, Boots and Shoes

Groceries, Provisions, &c. Stock kept full and well assorted with new goods recorved every week.

MY BRANCH STORE AT EUGENIA

replenished with new goods every week. For sale cheap for cash or produce.

My Saw mill, Shingle Factoty, and Lime Kiln

AT LITTLE FALLS, ARE IN OPERATION.

All kinds Saw ogs bought at the Mill or sawn on shares.

Lumber, Lath, Broom Handles, Shingles and Lime for sale.

WM. HOGG.

Robt. S. Rae,

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

—AT—

Bulmers Photograph Gallery

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we are not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

J. W. FORD

Is giving splendid satisfaction in

CRISTING,

By the New Process at the

Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

THOS. MATHEWS,

Harness Establishment

MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!

IN CONNECTION.

CALCINED PLASTER,

—OR—

Plaster Paris,

One car of Nova Scotia, all best and cheapest in the market.

Machine Oils and Paint

OILS AT CLOSE PRICES.

H. PARKER'S

Drugstore - DURHAM.

$500 Reward !

We will pay the above reward for any case of Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Constipation or Costiveness we cannot cure with West's Vegetable Liver Pills, when the directions are strictly complied with. They are purely Vegetable, and never fail to give satisfaction. Sugar Coated, Large Boxes, containing 30 Pills, 25 cts. For sale by all Druggists. Beware of counterfeits and immitations. The genuine manufactured only by JOHN C. WEST & CO., "The Pill Makers," 81 & 83 King St. East, Toronto, Ont. Free trial package sent by mail prepaid on receipt of a 3 cent stamp. For sale at Turner &Co. Drug Store.

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Chain Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

THE BEST PLACE

TO GET

A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery.

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

WAR IN CHINA

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Wilson Benson

—OF THE—

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,

CHEESE, SALMON,

LOBSTERS, SARDINES

In endless variety.

DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

WILSON BENSON.

July 6, 1882.

Advertise in the Standard

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 6. MARKDALE, ONT., OCT. 18. 1883. No. 162.

The Markdale Standard
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY THURSDAY EVENING,
At Markdale Ontario.
$1 Per Anumn
IN ADVANCE.
C. W. RUTLEDGE.
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,
WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-85

. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O. Physician and Surgeon, Priceville, raduate of University. Vict. College. ,, New York, and m. Graduate, of the same, ,, ,, Ayleth Medical Institute. ,, ,, Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y. ember Coll. Physicians & Surgeors, O. 104

P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST,
GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,
BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
FRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B. County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,
BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer &c.
A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Sydenham St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCERS, &c. &c.
OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in
MARKDALE;
over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
Funds to lend on reasonable terms.
HENRY CREASOR, Q. C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.
ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,
ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N.B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate at 6 per cent.

W. C. RICHARDS,
BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

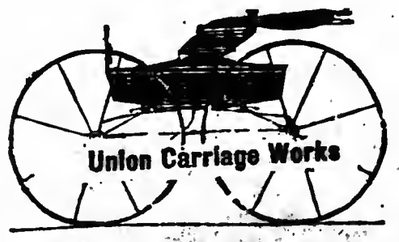
MISS. GREEN,
DRESS AND MANTLE
PARLOR.
Dunlop's building Markdale.
All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.
Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

ROYAL MARKDALE LODGE,
I. C. O. O. F. No. 78, will meet in their hall every Monday evening, Oct. 29th at eight o'clock p. m.
108 A. Turner, Sec'y.

JOHN NOBLE,
MARKDALE,
GENER'L BLACKSMITH
HORSE SHOEING
A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.
THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.



CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.
The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.
Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,
CONTRACTORS.
Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsontining in all Shades and Colors.
Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale. Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail

{BUTCHER!}
BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.
FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON
Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.
All work manufactured from
FIRST GLASS MATERIAL
In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with English Varnish.
Painting & Trimming Rigs
will receive prompt attention.
All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time consistent with good workmanship.
GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.
Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside
D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor
Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

STARTLING DISCOVERY!
LOST MANHOOD RESTORED.
A victim of youthful imprudence causing Premature Decay, Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, etc., having tried in vain every known remedy, has discovered a simple self-cure, which he will send FREE to his fellow-sufferers, address J. H. REEVES, Box 43 Chatham St., N. Y.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,
BANKERS,
Money Loaned
IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.
INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.
Allowed on Savings Deposits.
Drafts issued and Collections made on points, at lowest rates.
W.M. LUCAS,
Manager.
September 23, 1880. 2-ly

EUGENIA
Grist, Saw and Lath Mills
Having made extensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.
GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND
Chopping Done Every Day.
Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.
LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.
Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted
69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

MANHOOD
HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED
SEAL
We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.
Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.
The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.
This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.
Address
The Culverwell Medical Co,,
P.O. box 450 41 Ann St., New York
110-62.

SEEING IS BELIEVING.
GENTLEMEN,—
If you want a first-class
Buggie or Wagon
call at
MCKENNA & MASON'S
CARRIAGE WORKS
MARKDALE.
They can supply you with anything from a
Lumber Wagon
up to
Extension Top Phæton.
To buy from them is o
SAVE MONEY!
They are both practical workmen, and employ none but
PRACTICAL WORKMEN
They guarantee their work
Second to none for Lightness of Draught and Superiority of Finish.
They use nothing but First-class White Oak for Wagons, and thrice Extra Second Growth Hickory for light work.
The immense amount of work turned out of McKenna & Mason's shop is sufficien proof of the wide reputation they enjoy for doing good work.
THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END
Poor cheap work we positively will not take.
Special attention given to Re-Trimming and Repainting all classes of Carriage Work.
Satisfaction guaranteed (or No Pay) in
HORSESHOEING
SHOP—On Mill Street opposite to Sproule's Hotel.
McKENNA & MASON.

District Dashes.

Meaford council has decided to spend $1,000 in dredging their harbour channel.

R. Little, butcher, Hanover, killed and dressed a calf thirteen weeks old that weighed 400 lbs.

Frederick Mann, the murderer of the Cook family was hanged at L'Original, on the 12th October.

The Mt. Forest Advocate favours the numbering of houses in that town, also the enlarging of their Town Hall.

Mr. Samuel Robinson has presented the English church, Clarksburg, with a handsome marble baptismal font.

A by-law was carried last week in Meaford, by fifteen majority, to provide means for purchasing a steam fire engine.

The Shelburne Free Press is to be run by a joint stock Company in future. We shall now expect to see an improvement in the paper.

Mr. E. Wragge, late manager of the T. G. & B. Railway, entered upon the duties of his new situation, on Thursday last. viz: manager of the Western division of the G. T. R.

DEPARTURE.—Rev. Mr. Turnball is about to take his departure from Shelburne to labour in another parish. Before leaving he was presented with a purse of money and an address.

Mr. Chas. McConnell is a successful hunter. On Tuesday last he shot a very large otter measuring three feet six inches. The skin when stretched measured four feet ten inches.—Dundalk Herala.

DEAD.—Mr. D. J. Macdonald, a contractor well known in these parts, and for some time a resident of Collingwood, is dead. The deceased gentleman built most of the H. & N. W. R. R., and helped to build the T. G. & B., and many railroads in Ontario.—Collingwood Enterprise.

A sad death, supposed to be the effect of drink, occured last week at Horning's Mills. A man named Crawford was found lying dead near the sidewalk on the morning of the 1st., inst. He has been drinking heavily and as he is without relatives or friends was buried as quickly as possible. It is said that a sum of $5 was due him, and for this amount, some one undertook to furnish a rough coffin and perform the duties of sexton.

FIRE.—The barns of Mr. Morrison, 9th con. Derby, were totally consumed by fire on Wednesday the 9th. Mr. Morrison was threshing on that day and the fire spread so rapidly that the machine owned by Mr. Thomas Leslie was also burned with the other contents of the barn. The loss to Morrison is heavy as he lost his whole season's crop, and Mr. Leslie's loss is also a serious one. The origin of the fire is not exactly known, but is supposed to be the result of carelessness.—O. S. Advertiser.

Singhampton.

A Division of Sons of Temperance has recently been organized at Singhampton, and is numbered 317. Its membership embraces same of the most prominent young people of the district. The following officers were elected on the 28th ult., and installed on Friday night last by Mr. J. R. Sing, G. W. P.:—W.P.—Alex. McKinnon. W. A.—Miss Jennie Algeo. R.S.—W. D. Hugheon. Asst. R.S.—Miss M. Carr. Treas.—Chris. Chittick. F. Scribe.—Geo. N. Butcher. Chaplain—David Grant. Conductor—John Gosneld. Asst. Cond—Miss E. Sing. Inside Sen—Miss M. E. Taylor. Outside Sen—Wm. Thompson. P.W. Patriarch—Henry Spencer. G.W. P—J. B. Sing.—Enterprise.

Sows intended for breeding should be separated from those intended for the butcher, and fed a generous but not fattening diet. Select those with long bodies, straight backs, and having the largest number of teats, as these make the best breeders. When a good breeder is thus secured, she should have at least two or three litters, and as many more as she will breed without becoming unruly or getting any bad habits.

Osprey Council.

Ninth meeting. Council met at Singhampton on the 25th August.

Members all present. Minutes of last meeting read and adopted.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Provincial Board of Health on the disposal of sewage, &c. Co. Treasurer Tax Sale List for 1883. Crown Lands department stating that there are no Crown Lands in Osprey. J. Johnston, and fifteen others re Town line, Melancthon; Neil McKinnon, bill $2.50, mending scrapers; F. Whewell re bridge Town line at lot 1 con. 11; Tp. Treasurer Financial Statement; J. Hamilton, bills for flour to indigents, viz:—Mrs. McQueen, $1.25; O. Miller. $2.75; D. Buie, $2.50; J. Paul, bill coffin, $5, for A. Grant; D. McKinnon, certificate for performance of Statute Labour 64, 65, in 2 S., for 1882; Trustees S. S. 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and Clerk of Nottawasaga estimates for S moneys, Co. Clerk, county rates.

MOTIONS.

The Clerk was instructed to ask the C. T. to erase taxes for 1882 against 64 and 65 in 2 S.

The Com. of Division 3 was ordered to attend to bridges 1 in eleven and 20 in 14 and report both.

The Chairman of the R. and B. Committee stated that the Com. had examined the bridge at 16 in 2 S, and found it in a bad state of repair, and recommended that a small piece of land be bought for a deviation and do away with the old bridge altogether.

The bridge at 6 in 4, and recommend that the committee for the Div attend to it. The bridge on 10 S. R. con. 2 S. and found it too low, but do not recommend building a new one, owing to the low state of the finances and the lateness of the season.

This report was adopted.

Taylor, Speers—That the township be divided in two for collection for 1883, and that the gravel road be the boundary. Carried.

Johnston, McIntyre—In amendment, that the township be not divided in two for collection, but that one collector be appointed for collecting the rates for 1883. Lost.

By-law 218 and 219 to appoint collectors and levy rates were passed, and Wm. Suggett was appointed collector for the south and J Elliott for the north.

Speers, McIntyre—That J Johnston be authorized to survey and establish a road on lots 17 and 18, con. 3 S.

Orders were issued in favor of J Copeman, $15, building culvert; J. Hamilton $7.50, flour to indigent; D. Buie, $4, an indigent; J. Pane, $4, coffin, (A. Grant); W. McKinnon, $2.50, mending scrapers; J. Christie, $2, plank for road; John Taylor, $22, work on T. L. at 2 A; Council each, $2, inspecting inspecting roads and bridges.

Council adjourned to meet Oct. 15th.

TENTH MEETING.

Council met at the call of the Reeve in Maxwell, Sept. 10.

Members present, Messrs. McGirr, McIntyre, Johnston and Speers.

Minutes of last meeting read and adopted.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Ontario Bureau of Industries, Agricultural returns for August 1883; Inspector of Public Schools for East Grey; report of the Committee of County Council on the formation of a new School Section in Osprey; County Treasure 64 and 65 in 2 S.; C. W. Rutledge, bill $5.50 printing and binding one thousand tax receipts; W. Hamlin, bill $6, medicine to C. Miller; Co. Judge certified voters' list for 1883.

Johnston, Speers—That By-law 220 to notify the report of the committee of the County council forming a new school section be introduced and read a first time. This By-lay passed through the several stages and finally passed.

The new Section No. 3 is comprised of the following lots, the the first and last mentioned with all comprised in each case:—2 and 1 S and 1 N, lots 27, 44, 2 and 3 N; lots 21, 44, —, 5; lots 14, 24, —. 5; lots 17, 24, 7 and 7; lots 18, 25. Assessment including personal property $64,310, average of the 5 south sections $67,150, difference $2,840.

Bills paid, W. Hamlin, $4; C.W. Rutledge, $5.50.

Council adjourned to meet at Feversham on Oct. 15, next.

Thomas Stephenson, Singhampton P.O., has been appointed Inspector of Trees.

Any one having a copy of the printed minutes of Osprey council for 1870 to spare, will oblige by sending it to the Clerk of Osprey, Maxwell P.O.

WM. MILNE, Tp. Clerk.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

Messrs. R. Buchanan and David Walker have returned home from Manitoba. They do not speek very highly of that country.

There is some grain out here yet, the wet weather that we have had lately has not been very favourably for them that still have that kind of work to perform.

Very little threshing has been done here yet. Any who have threshed complained about the grain not yielding according to their expectations.

Messrs. A. Maloy and G. Glasford, of Flesherton, have been out in this neighbourhood putting up an addition to Mr. Kell's barn.

FARMER'S CORNER.

Cramming for the Shows.

Where size and weight are the standards by which animals are judged, we do not wonder that Englishmen, and Canadians, following the English example, take great pains to prepare their animals for the Fair. A friend who visited a noted sheep-raiser in Canada, a few years ago, gave us an amusing account of the manner in which the sheep-worlds were pampered for days before the exhibition. The animals were fed with their usual foods frequently and abundantly, but there were beds of lettuce and other attractive plants which had been provided for the purpose, and the animals were tempted with these, one more lettuce leaf being regarded as a great gain, if the animal could be tempted to eat it. A system of persistent stuffing was followed for a number of days, and when the animals started for the Fair, an abundant supply of vegetable delicacies was sent with them. So long as mere size and weight are considered in awarding prizes, exhibitors can not be blamed for meeting the requirements. The most important reforms needed in the management of our Fairs are: first, greater care in making up the schedules of premiums; and second, greater care in the selection of the judges who will award the prizes. The points which characterize purity of breed in a sheep, pig, or other farm animal, are of far more importance than the weight at a given age. But how many of the hastily made up "Boards of Judges," as these are usually appointed, know anything about "points" in the class of animals they are to judge? Small societies can not usually adopt the plan of the New York State Agricultural Society, but they should approach it as nearly as may be. An award by this society means something. The judges in every department are carefully selected long in advance of the time of the fair: they are written to, and their acceptance secured, and the expense of their attendance is paid by the society. This liberal action enables the society to command the services of the very best men in each department: and being selected long in advance, they have time to confer with one another, and decide definitely upon a plan of action.—American Agriculturist.

What Sheep to Grow—The Downs.

Down breeds are preferred for mutton. The Southdown, which ranks first, is of medium size, with short legs, a fine head, neck, round, deep body; and broad back. It is hardy, active, a quick feeder, matures early, and is easily fattened at any age. The ewes are prolific, and a flock of one hundred will average annually from one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty lambs, as they often produce twins and sometimes triplets.

The size, activity, and hardiness of these sheep especially fit them for short, rough pastures on which they will thrive fairly where the sheep-wool is mostly keep alive. They do better on the great Western plains than the finer sheep, as they are more industrious in digging down the snow for grass in winter, and to be the best of all breeds, East or West, on arid or rocky pastures, because they are less liable to disease than any other breed, save the tough Cheviots, and can be kept in large flocks, without the risk of foot-rot with common care, make a great improvement in the offspring over their dams, and the mutton commands higher sale at higher prices than most others. The best cross by long wool rams on best grade Merino ewes is to produce lambs nearer to give more fat, and to treat the ewes thus produced with Southdown rams, to ensue a larger production of juicy, savory flesh. Yet, on the large common ewes, and especially those not tainted with long-wooled blood, the Southdown male cross is decidedly superior.

The Southdown fleece is abundant, of medium fineness, and preferable to any other for certain kinds of goods. The wool, therefore, sells very quickly and at fair prices: while the wool contributes largely to profit, mutton is the great thing with these sheep. Early lambs can be more easily reared from Southdown ewes than from any other, and these bring high prices from Jan. to June. Though more difficult and expensive to produce such lambs at the North during those months, at the South it may be done, and easily done, and be a source of wealth to those who judiciously breed and rear them for Northern markets.

Glanders in Horses.

No horse-owner is more or less familiar with that loathsome disease, the glanders, and every one should be aware that it is both contagious and fatal, not only to horses, but also to mankind. The fact that the disease has to this day baffled all treatment, is sufficient reason why the detection of glanders in a stable is always looked upon as serious. If the disease always assumed the same characters, if every glandered horse presented the three special symptoms essentially belonging to it, namely, the greenish, sticky, and at times bloody discharge from the nose, the hard, painless, and inherent swollen glands at the jaws, and, above all, the peculiar and characteristic ulcerations of the mucous membrane upon the cartilage of the cavities of the nose, there would be no difficulties in recognizing the disease, and condemning the animal thus afflicted as most dangerous. But this is not always the case. This disease assumes many forms. Sometimes only a slight glandular enlargement, again discharges from the nostrils, while in a third animal neither of these will exist, and only small ulcers will be detected in the upper angle of the nostrils. Still the animal is just as dangerous as if it showed all the symptoms fully developed; in fact, even more dangerous, for, while in this condition, it may apparently be in perfect health, its skin presenting nothing unusual to the ordinary observer. The horse may remain in good condition, feel as well as ever, be able to do its work, and remain thus for months, and communicate the glanders to many animals who may come in contact with it. It is necessary to detect the disease at the start, and for this no one should be better qualified than the regular Veterinarian; he who has by his studies become familiar with the different aspects of the disease. If once detected, there must be no hesitation; certainty of the existence of the disease should mean death to the animal affected. Unless it is killed, most serious, even fatal consequences, may follow.

The duty of the owner of an animal in a suspicious condition is, to have it examined at once, if there is no doubt about the disease, the horse must be at once destroyed. If there is doubt, it should be isolated and rather than wait for the development of all the symptoms, which may take a long time, inoculation of the matter from the discharge can be made on an old horse, a dog, or a rabbit, but still better on an old mule or a donkey. This inoculation will produce glanders, no matter how small the quantity of the virus if taken from a glandered horse.

FAIR BATHERS AT BAY.

How an Untrained Dog Interfered with their Sport.

"Yes, sir," said Prof. Thomas W. Tobin to a Louisville Commercial reporter, "Crab Orchard Springs, Ky., is a very pleasant spot and there is a nice company of summer idlers there. I have been there some days, and I feel much invigorated. You cannot find a bar-room, but you can have drinks sent to your rooms. By the way, there was almost a fatal case of mistaken identity up there last week during the hot spell. Several of the most popular ladies of the Springs concluded to go bathing one afternoon. They took the greatest precautions as to their destiuation and safety from intrusion. They took Jim Robinson along to guard them—Jim, by the way, being a dog named after the late popular manager. They took along also some light netting and nun's veiling to improvise into bathing suits, there being no suits discovered at the Springs.

"Well, it went along very nicely for a while. Jim sat upon the bank and watched the clothes, and not a cloud was athwart the bathing horizon. The ladies, having pinned on the light draperies, made a dive into the pellucid waters. When they came to the surface and walked in the shallow water there was a change in Jim's demeanour. Jim had been instructed to keep men away, and when the ladies emerged the wet draperies were clinging so closely that Jim's mind became disturbed, and, having strict orders he took them for men and setting up a bark like a wolf's, went sailing fiercely into the water after the ladies. They tried to quiet him, but he snapped at them so viciously that they ran shrieking out of the water and up the bank. By this time some gentlemen fishing at a distance had become alarmed, and came rushing up to see what was the matter. This produced fresh screams; and Jim's barking fire was divided. The ladies hid behind trees and with difficulty and much disgust succeeded in persuading the gentlemen that they were merely romping with Jim. However, there was no more bathing that day and mosquito-bar bathing suits are at a discount at the Springs.

Stopping a Paper Does not Stop the Paper.

Ever since newspapers have been published, certain individuals have attempted to spite them by ordering their own particular copy discontinued. This has probably happened in the experience of every publisher at various times. Every editor who is manly and straightforward is apt to publish something in the course of every year which does not accord with the opinions of some of his readers, or, perhaps, a majority of them. Under our system of free thought and speech, this is expected and cheerfully tolerated by all reasonable people. But, occasionally, some one considers himself personally aggrieved by something published in his paper and hastens to "stop" it, thinking he has thereby given a retaliating blow to the publisher. There he labors under a mistaken idea. If the editor is consistent and guided by principle, he will listen to the complaints of his subscriber and give him the benefit of a reply to the offensive article: and furthermore, he is pretty sure to secure the friendship of two others by his consistency while he is losing that of the offended party. At any rate, the support of any paper—from the largest city daily down to the smallest country weekly—is not derived from its subscription list: a half-dozen subscribers more or less, are of little account to any publisher, as his support comes from the patronage of his advertising columns and job department. Of course, all editors desire as large a reading audience as possible, but their hearts are not broken by the loss of one or even half a dozen. Therefore, if you have a grievance, go to the editor like a man and explain it to him. Ten times out of ten, you will feel better about it, and have your trouble much more satisfactorily settled than if you hasten to secure his ill-will.—Woodstock (Ill.) Independent.

Volcano of Krakatoa.

Before the last fatal eruption of the volcano of Krakatoa it would seem that the mountain for some time past had been in a state of violent activity. The following graphic account of its appearance was supplied by an officer of the Almora to the Brisbane Courier:—

"The volcano was on the island of Krakatoa, at the entrance of the Strait of Sunda, and one magnificent blaze of light was proceeding from its height. Higher and higher the blaze seemed to mount as we drew closer to its base, while the sound had now become one continuous roar, like hundreds of blasts from some mighty furnace, and a volume of black smoke extended for miles from it, like a funereal pile. As we passed through, some of the fine dust and strong sulphurous fumes of the subterranean upheavals got into our eyes and filled our throats, causing us to keep under the awnings till we passed—glad to leave the island on our lee. We could then admire its splendid upheaval and listen to its mighty roar without fear. There seemed to be a strange vibration in the water and ship while we were passing. The flames looked grand, as, leaping high into the heavens with a mighty roar, they sent their sulphurous fumes apparently miles upward, and then, dying out till they seemed expended, would leap upward with renewed force and fury. This continued till the ship took us further and further away, the sound got weaker, and the light soon appeared like a lighthouse on the shore. We passed about three or four miles from it, and, had the wind been blowing from the southward, I dare say we should have felt considerable annoyance from it. As it was it only gave us a grand volcanic spectacle that will never be forgotten."

An Engineer's Reminiscences.

"Well, I've had a little experience in running an engine," said a long specimen of the genus Yankee, putting one elbow on the bar counter and holding his whisky straight up to the light, "and if it would amuse you I'll give you a yarn or two."

"Stave ahead," said his companion, "but I've been there myself. I used to run an engine from New York to Philadelphia."

"Oh, you did," said the Yankee. "Well, that just amounts to nothin'. I've been a special engineer for the last ten years, and there ain't a mile o' track atween here and 'Frisco I haven't travelled over. You see us specials are obliged to be ready for anything at a moment's notice, and when we travel we just get right over the ground, and don't you forget it."

"I've made some pretty good time myself," said the second engineer. "I took a train through from New York to Philadelphia in 80 minutes."

"Oh, that's child's play," said the first engineer. "Why, man, I've made that run myself, and with one piston rod gone at that. It was a lively trip, and don't you forget it. I'd just got back from a special run up through the coal regions, when word came that one of the big guns of the company wished to start at once for Philadelphia. I knew what that meant, so I jumped aboard long-legged Jim, hitched a construction car behind the tender and a drawing-room coach behind that, and reported for duty. I knew my engine, and I ran up forty pounds of steam more nor she was marked to carry. When the word came I let everything slide and the old boy just jumped into the air. Then he settled down to his work. Everything was clear in front of us, and I let him out for all he was worth at the start. In less'n five minutes you couldn't a counted the telegraph poles, they flew by us so fast. I had two firemen, un I just made 'em earn their passage from the word go. Old Jim must have eat up two tons o' coal inside ten miles."

"What!" ejaculated the second engineer.

"Sure!" said the first engineer. "And we hadn't been out of the station fifteen before every blasted boiler pipe was red hot, and we had to keep flooding the cab with water to keep from burning the darn thing up. Oh, we was just gettin' there my boy, and I didn't let up a pound. Every time we took a curve the outside wheels would be at least a foot up in the air, and once or twice the tender jumped clean off to the ties, but old Jim would yank her back again, and—"

"Ain't you kind of stretching a point?" asked the second engineer.

"Not a bit of it," said the first engineer. "Why afore we was half way to Philadelphia both 'o those firemen was down on their knees praying, and I had to do feeding myself until I swore 'em back to their senses again. Well, everything went well enough the first two-thirds o' the run, and I was just a-whistling to myself over the record I was pulling up, when there came a report like a rifle, and I knew one of the blasted piston rods had busted. There was nothin' to do but stop, and I lost ten minutes fixin' up The big gun left the coach and came down to see what was up. 'What's to be done?' said he, 'I've got one piston-rod left,' said I, 'and I'll take you through on time.' He knew me, and he just lit a fresh cigar and walked back to the coach as contented as a lamb. Well, I just set those praying firemen to work for all they was worth, and I had her up to 60 pounds over the limit in less 'an no time. Then I let her slide. Lord Harry, I thought old Jim would jerk the stullin' out of everything behind him. We just played hop scotch, and I don't believe we touched the rails four or five times a mile. I knew it was a hundred dollar check or nothin', an' I was after that check. Well, those firemen got to prayin' worse an' ever, an' I had to swear I'd throw 'em overboard afore they'd come to time. I tell you we was just movin'. Why, the towns got runnin' all together, an' we'd no more 'an get a squint at one station afore we was five miles past the next one—"

"Here! here!" said the second engineer, "that's laying it on too strong."

"True as you're here," said the first engineer. "I'd introduce you to the prayin' firemen, but they cut the business after that run, an' I kinder lost sight of 'em. Well we got within ten miles of Philadelphia, an' I begun to stop her."

"Stop her?"

"Yes; I knew I couldn't stop her inside o' ten miles, and I didn't fetch it at that, for when we ran into the station we smashed in the bumpers and ripped up about twenty feet o' the platform before old long legged Jim would agree the run was over; but I got the check," and the Yankee engineer thoughtfully drained his glass, as his friend ordered the barkeeper to "set 'em up again."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Invention of an Electric Gun.

One of the most interesting novelties at the Vienna International Exhibition is an electric gun. The powder is fired by means of a piece of platinum in the cartridge, and the electric current necessary for heating the platinum is obtained from a little accumulator, which must be worn in a belt especially devised for the purpose. Besides the accumulator and the belt, a glove and a shoulder strap are necessary. The glove is worn on the left hand, and is connected with one pole of the accumulator, the strap with the other. All this would, it must be confessed, be a rather formidable addition to a soldier's accoutrements, and one is hardly surprised to hear that the inventors do not expect their patent to be immediately adopted in all the European armies.

Meanwhile they point out that the electric gun affords several advantages besides the charm of novelty, which ought to commend it to the sportsman. In the first place, it is said to be very economical; and what new application of electricity is ever said to be anything else—at first? There is no great saving on the gun or the cartridges, but then only a quarter of the ordinary charge of powder is necessary. Moreover, the gun is economical of time and trouble. The cartridges serve many times over, and there is none of the bother of taking off the old caps. But the crowning merit which is claimed for the electric gun is that it is warranted never to "kick." If this warranty be really true, the application of electricity to sport ought not to be long delayed.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Jack Frost doesn't say anything, but he indulges in freeze peach.

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

YOUNG MEN learn steam engineering, and earn $100 per month. Send your name and 10 cents in stamps to P. KEPPY, Engineer, Bridgeport, Ct.

A FORTUNE.

Any one who will return this slip to the address below, with 50 cents in stamps or coin, will receive 4 articles worth 10 times 50 cts., which will enable them to clear from $5 to $20 per week. Money refunded to any one dissatisfied.

JAMES LEE & CO.,
MONTREAL, CANADA

PAINT PAINT!

To Painters and those Painting

Ramsay's Concentrated Zinc

has three times the body of lead and wears for years. One pound will cover more work than three pounds of best English Lead. Guaranteed and manufactured by

A. RAMSAY & SON, Montreal.

Should be Sold by All Paint Dealers.

WELLS' WINDOW SHADE CLASP

PATENTED 1875.

Used for holding WINDOW BLIND SHADES without rollers, pins, or cords. Saves blinds, money and patience. Looks neat and neat. Is durable and Cheap. Retailed by all dealers everywhere. Trade supplied wholesale by the manufacturers, The TORONTO NOVELTY WORKS CO., 96 Church street, Toronto.

WANTED STEADY EMPLOYMENT and good pay given to every Lady owning a sewing machine. Material sent and returned by mail. Send one dollar with your application as a guarantee that the material we furnish will be returned when finished. FINDLAY & CO. Manufacturers, Detroit, Mich.

Dr. FOWLER'S
EXTRACT OF WILD STRAWBERRY
CURES
CHOLERA
CHOLERA INFANTUM
DIARRHŒA,
AND
ALL SUMMER COMPLAINTS
SOLD BY ALL DEALERS.

HOW TO MAKE MONEY FAST

OVER 5,000 SOLD!

A Book containing 25 very valuable money making secrets, sent to any address in a sealed envelope, on receipt of $1.00.

N. W. LOYD, Knowlton, P. Q.

Dominion Line of Steamships

Running in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec every Saturday during the summer months, and from Portland every alternate Thursday during the winter months. Sailing dates from Quebec:

Toronto, 1st Sept.
Ontario, 22nd "
Sarnia, 8th "
Oregon, 29th "
Montreal, 15th "
Dominion, 6th Oct.

Rates of passage: Cabin, Quebec to Liverpool, $50, $60, $65, $80; return, $90, $100, $110 according to steamer and berth. Intermediate, $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and staterooms in steamers marked thus: ' are amidships, where but little motion is felt, and no cattle or sheep are carried on them. For further particulars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway agent or local agents of the Company, or to

DAVID TORRANCE & CO.,
General Agents, Montreal.

OAKLAWN FARM,

The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in the World.

Percheron-Norman Horses

WORTH $2,500,000.00

Imported from France and Belgium since 1871, by

M. W. DUNHAM,
Wayne, DuPage Co., Illinois.

Prices low for its class. EVERY STALLION GUARANTEED A BREEDER.

390 Imported the Past Three Months, consisting of Prize Winners, Registered in the French Stud Book and the Percheron Stud Book of the United States. Write for Catalogue.

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS

WHITE STAR LINE

Are all of the Largest and Fastest Ocean Steamers, combining more speed, comfort or safety than any other line.

SUTHERLANDS

TRADE MARK

RHEUMATINE

THE GREAT CURE FOR

RHEUMATISM

RHEUMATINE

"IT IS A SURE CURE

Sold by all druggists. Manufactured by the Northrop & Lyman Co.

THE BEST

HORSE REMEDIES

TRADE MARK

THE ELLIS SPAVIN CURE CO.

Every [illegible] a large assortment of [illegible] on hand a [illegible] dies, and to supply [illegible] ammonia or that will [illegible] express on receipt of [illegible] return charges.

Medicated Food, $1.
2 boxes Large Condition Powders, $1.
Worm Powders, $1.
1 box Colic Powder, $1.
50c.—$6.50. J. H. W[illegible] Y., says: "We have used [illegible] in our stables for [illegible] on the following [illegible] curbs, ring bones [illegible] ankles, also quitter [illegible] stable liniment [illegible] ever used." For [illegible] books, etc., write to

ELLIS SPAVIN CURE COMPANY,
50 Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.
or 276 Fulton Avenue, New York.

GOLD WATCHES, RINGS, AND REVOLVERS!

Given Away! Given Away!!

To every one who buys one of our GOLD WATCH STATIONERY PACKAGES price only 60 cents. Contents:—6 Sheets Commercial Note, 6 Sheets Superfine Tinted Note, 6 White Commercial Envelopes, 6 Beautiful Tinted Envelopes, 1 Reversible German Silver Penholder, 1 Gold Water Pen, 1 Imitation Gold Pen, 1 Lead Pencil, 1 Key Ring, 1 Boot Button-hook, 1 Glove Buttoner, 1 Magnificent Chromo, size 16x22, 1 Beautiful Crayon Drawing, 10 Popular Songs, 10 Beautiful Chromo Cards (blank) and a cash present of from 5 cents upwards. No Lottery. Every one gets a Cash Present who buys a package. Read! Read! Read!!! With every 5,000 packages we give away FREE 1 Gold Hunting Case Watch, 1 Lady's Silver Watch, 1 Gent's Silver Watch, 1 Nickel Stem Winding Watch, 6 Solid Gold Rings, 6 Rolled Gold Vest Chains, 6 Pearl Shot Nickel Plated Revolvers, 12 Gold Plated Neckchains, 24 pairs Alaska Diamond Earrings, 25 Beautiful Stone Engravings, Gold Dollars 50, 25, 10, and 5 cent pieces. Therefore by sending us 60 cents you will get more than 60 cents worth of goods, and perhaps one of the above handsome presents. Our profit is so small that we can give no discount whatever, no matter how many packages are ordered. DON'T BUY any Stationery till you have sent for one of our Gold Dollar Packages, as we know you will always after buy of us. REMEMBER: The Stationery and other items contained in the package are well worth 60 c., without the cash prize which is in every package, and you also stand a chance of getting a handsone Watch or Gold Ring. When you want some nice stationery order of us and you will be sure to get value for your money, and probably a great deal more. A Complete Sample Package with a cash present of from 5 cents upwards in every package. By mail, post paid, for only 60 cents. Order now.

JAMES LEE & CO., 517 Lagauchetiere-st, Montreal, P.Q.

SPY-GLASSES.

This is an article invaluable to every farmer. With it he can bring up his farthest field and lay it at his feet. It is also useful to the Tourist, at Fairs, at Horse Races, etc. They are made with brass frame, and will last a life-time. Sent prepaid for $1.00 each: three for $2,50

JAMES LEE & CO., MONTREAL, P. Q.

A FAIR OFFER!

If you will send us with this slip 35c. or three cent stamps, we will mail you post-paid a sample package containing 100 useful articles which are required in every house, with instructions by which you can make from $2 to $5 per day. Suitable for both sexes. This is no humbug, as the samples are well worth the money, and may be returned if not satisfactory. Show this to your friends.

JAMES LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q.

OUR TENANTS.

My wife and I had given much thought to the question of house and rent, and had decided that we should not be justified in exceeding £120 a year, but we hoped to find a pretty little place in the country at that rent. "Give me a well-cooked chop and a glass of sherry, and I can rough it anywhere," said the intending traveler. We only wanted a thoroughly pleasant house within easy access of a country town where there was good society, a really good garden, a stable and coach-house, and a few fields. We had looked at many houses, when one day, after a morning of disappointment, we saw a charming one standing some little distance from the road, and a notice informed us that it was to be let. We went to see it. It was simply perfect, and was surrounded by a garden which I loved at first sight. It was sheltered from every cold wind, open to every benign influence, and full of the most beautiful old-fashioned flowers, all growing as if they had been at home there for years. A single glance showed me that some which I had long been vainly trying to cultivate were flourishing here with happy indifference to human care. My wife was delighted with the house—so was I,—but it was the garden which completely carried me away. It was not very large, but there were wide open walks, and pretty, secluded nooks, and rose and fruit trees, a lawn, and magnificent flower borders. Having once seen that garden, I never could be satisfied with any other.

"Its pretty, sir," said the housekeeper, observing how lovingly my eyes dilated. "Many pretty flowers grows here. They grow of their own accord like, for the gardener has little trouble with them."

"The gardener!" I exclaimed; "I never let people of that kind run riot among my flowers."

"Lor, sir; well to be sure! But there has always been a gardener here. That's his cottage there, behind the trees." And she pointed out a pretty red cottage across the lawn. Little was visible but the tops of some dormer windows, for a high trellis covered with roses screened it from view.

"What's the rent of Fairlawn?" I asked with sudden fear, for the little bit I saw of the gardener's cottage was so well built that it alarmed me.

"One hundred and sixty pounds, sir."

My wife's countenance fell. With prompt decision she took off her spectacles and put them carefully in their case, and stowed them away in her bag as no longer needed.

"One hundred and sixty pounds," I repeated sadly.

"Yes, my dear, that settles it," said my beloved wife; but she had no idea what relief I was feeling.

"I suppose it's no use thinking of it," said I, with a sigh, "but I never saw flowers do so well in any garden before."

"Come, John," said my wife. "It's only losing our time yes for no purpose—we had better go. You know as well as I do that we ought not to saddle ourselves with such a high rent."

"Stop! I have an idea," said I, joyously. "We might reduce the rent by letting that cottage."

"So you might, sir," interposed the housekeeper. "It has six good rooms and a kitchen; it was let a little while back to the present gardener's father, but it's only the last year or two the gardener has had it."

We went to the cottage, and when I saw what an excellent house it was I decided to take Fairlawn. I settled the matter at once, and in ten days began to move in. I gave the cottage a name likely to inflame ardent and poetical minds, called it Eglatine cottage, and advertised it freely. It had a veranda covered with roses, and a pretty little garden of its own in front, sloping down to the high road. We had established ourselves at Fairlawn, brought our only daughter home from school, and returned most of the calls made on us by the resident gentry, before we had an application for the cottage. At last a gentleman came—a man of 35, with bushy, brown hair, keen, twinkling, gray eyes, and a singularly intelligent face. His name was Shute. He had studied for the bar, but was forced to live in the country on account of his wife's health, and now devoted himself to art. They had no children, and did not object to a rent, though I myself had feared that it was rather too much. All was soon settled, provided the references he gave me were satisfactory.

They were most satisfactory. Each of the two responsible and well to-do gentlemen to whom I wrote had the greatest pleasure in testifying to the high character of the gentleman who wished to be my tenant, and each concluded by saying that such testimony on his part was almost unnecessary, seeing that the said gentleman was one of the Shutes of Sheffield. I read this, and straightway a fine flavor of respectability attached itself to my tenant—he was one of the Shutes of Sheffield. This being the case, I dedicated to his enjoyment the larger part of a large number of fine ferns which had been sent to me from Cumberland, and went and planted them myself in telling spots. That done, I tied up his roses so that his wife might have the full benefit of their beauty. And now all care was over, and we were really happy at Fairlawn. My wife had her pony carriage and explored the neighborhood, and I had my garden and my box of books from the library. Mr. Shute's furniture began to arrive, and Mr. Shute himself came to see all made ready for his delicate wife. He staid with us, but he was so busy that we did not see much of him. He was however, a very pleasant fellow, and we liked him.

"I won't trouble you with my furniture-arranging difficulties, my dear Mr. and Mrs. Peverill," said he, "but there is one little favor I would like to ask of you. Would you mind having that trellis lowered a little? It would be such a treat to my poor wife to have just a glimpse of your exquisite garden from her sofa. She is so unfortunate as to be almost a confirmed invalid."

"I shall be very glad—" I began.

"Thank you! Thank you! I felt sure you would be kind. Shall I give orders to have the trellis removed or will you?"

"Removed?" I had imagined that he said "lowered!" Now I like to throw off my coat and waistcoat when I am in my garden—but one can't behave ill to a delicate woman.

"She is coming home to-morrow," said he, "there is no time to lose."

I had not the courage to plead for its only being lowered, and now the windows of Eglantine cottage raked my happy hunting-grounds where I had hitherto been so full of liberty, and so alone. My heart ached for the poor roses which had been thrown down with the trellis. Mr. Shute began to pluck them, and said he would put them in water to help make the house gay for his wife. Then he threw them down, exclaiming: "After all, she won't be here till to-morrow. I'm sure you will give me a handful of fresh ones in the morning."

"You have roses of your own," said I impatiently, for he had flung down all those he had just gathered—and it infuriates me to see flowers ill-treated.

"I know I have," said he calmly; "but I don't want to touch mine." I looked at him in astonishment; and unable to answer him, turned away, and so the matter ended.

In due course his wife arrived. She was a tall, pale, languid sort of woman, with fair hair—which was not, however, her own—and dull blue eyes. She was, Mr. Shute informed us, one of the Wilmotts of Taunton, and was a "creature of impression," and spent most of her time on the sofa.

"How I wish that we had a little balcony to our house," said Mr. Shute to my wife, one day, "if it were ever so small. My wife never gets out; she can't sit in our garden, for it is too near the road; and being so much in the house is very dull."

Having said this, he looked anxiously into her eyes to see how much Christian charity she possessed.

My wife, poor dear woman, was taken by surprise, and replied: "I wish Mrs. Shute would use our garden sometimes—when my husband is not working in it, I mean, for, when he is busy he likes to be careless about appearances."

"Oh! thank you. How truly kind!" exclaimed Mr. Shute. "Then we shall have a key made. You know there is a door from our back-yard into your garden, and we will have a key made at once, unless you have one you can lend us."

And now my poor wife knew what she had done, for, of course, it was out of the question for an invalid like Mrs. Shute to walk all the way around by the lane to the proper entrance, and yet, if she had a key and could come and go when she liked, all my pleasure in my garden would be gone. "You won't go when my husband is at work?" she said in desperation to Mrs. Shute, and then trusted to her delicacy. What a poor weak thing to trust to!

They got the key—they used it. Mrs. Shute who was not strong enough to go around to the proper entrance, meandered for miles along our gravel paths and lawn. I could always trace her presence. For she plucked every flower she fancied, and flung it as quickly away, and I saw my slaughtered innocents lying bruised and withered in the sun, and could have slain her in turn. Mrs. Shute might be a creature of impression, but the flowers were the creatures of impression, too, and bore the marks of her ridiculous high-heeled shoes as she crushed them down in her indifference and passed on.

Some little time she respected my feelings and never entered the garden when I was at work. Soon, however, she came when she chose; and frequently I, hard at work in my grey flannel shirt, would see a sylph-like form arrayed in spotless white glide towards me, and seemed determined to enter into a prolonged conversation. If I moved away Mrs. Shute was certain to follow me. It was best to try not to mind her being there, and let her sit admiring her pretty feet and open-worked stockings, and uttering weak little remarks.

She was always affable. "I see, Mr. Peveril, you are quite au bout des doigts with all your flowers!" said she one day, most kindly.

"H'm," I replied. "Yes, I like flowers."

"So do I; I worship them! I even admire a lot of ugly ferns we have in our own garden." Thus, did the creature of impression speak of the lovely rare ferns which I had sacrificed to the tenants who were to help me pay my rent.

"Don't you like ferns?" I said, half inclined to make an effort to get them back again.

"Well, yes, in the woods; but I like Pelar-r-rgoniums in gardens; nothing looks better. If I had money I'd just put hundreds of them in front of our house. What a thing money is, Mr. Peveril! and there are actually some people so crowded with it that they don't know what to do with it but make an ostentation of it."

"I am very sure I should know what to do with mine, if I had a little more," was my thought—for I was forced to endure this lady's company for a miserable £40 a year.

She perhaps found me unusually dull, for she said she would "stroll about a bit," and, hastily knotting up a "guinea switch of hair" which was rolling down her back, she swept away. Presently she returned with the Grosvenor book which I was looking forward to the treat of reading when my work was done. She had obtained it by thrusting in her arm at the open window and removing it from the table where it was lying awaiting my return. She and her husband, too, were extremely fond of possessing themselves of whatever they happened to want. She borrowed a book in this nefarious way. He came in a panic—his wife was ill; would we let him have a half dozen bottles of old port? Or he was suddenly seized with admiration of one of our water-colors. We had three good ones, but he was not satisfied with anything less than our Turner, and asked if we would allow him to take it to the cottage for an hour or two, and place it on a easel near his wife's sofa—it would help to while away the weary hours, and she was the——

Rather than hear him say that she was the creature of impression I hastened away to get the picture from him. His wife did not care for pictures; why did he borrow them for her? She did not care for books, either. She was entirely uneducated; and though possibly a Wilmott of Taunton, she certainly was not a lady. She wished to be pleasant, though, and was very fond of sympathising with me whenever she happened to observe certain small green insects which she called "nasty afrites" on my roses. Had she been reading "The Persian and Turkish tales?" I wished an ill-disposed afrite would carry her off—but nothing ever did carry her away from my side but the sight of the gardener going toward the kitchen garden. Then she said in a moment: "Dear Mr. Peveril. Edward and I are so fond of fresh vegetation, may I go and ask that man to cut off some little trifle for the cottage?" and I, rejoicing at this momentary good fortune, always said, "Oh, pray do." And she went and commanded him to convey to her abode cauliflowers and peas, lettuces, apricots, or whatever else was agreeable to the palate of a creature of impression. For my part, I should not have cared what went to the cottage so long as nothing came from it—to sit by my side I mean. But my wife said too much went! They had new-laid eggs, milk, cream, and more butter than we could well spare, and they did not pay as they got it, but let the accounts run on.

"Be patient," said I; "don't complain and don't offend them. We should have been very hard up without the Shutes, for I have spent more than I ought on the house and garden, and it is an immense comfort to have such rich tenants. They must be rich, for those pictures on their walls are worth thousands. Don't let us think of the Shutes. Let us enjoy our happiness."

Our dear daughter had got a lover—not a declared one, but one who was evidently in earnest. He was a thoroughly conscientious, upright man, and had a small estate which had been in his family for a couple of centuries. Our joy about this made us tolerant of the Shutes. The young folks met constantly, and the more we saw of Mr. Ducle the more we liked him. Perhaps it was a lucky thing that Mrs. Shutes liked sitting on my lawn better than driving with my wife, for if she had used our pony carriage my daughter would have had to stay at home, and Mr. Ducle would have had fewer opportunities of seeing her.

One day, after irritating me by calling my penstemons antirrhinums, when I should have liked to hear her bestow such an appellation on my snap-dragons, she, who knew nothing of our secret hopes, suddenly exclaimed: "Mr. Peveril, don't you think that Mr. Ducle who comes to your house is a very charming young man? We have asked him to the cottage, and he is coming! There are a great many nice young men in this neighborhood! I am going to invite my sister to come and stay with me—she is such a nice girl, and so beautiful!!"

I could see the connection of ideas. She was going to invite her sister to the cottage in the hope of her fascinating some one—most probably our Mr. Ducle? This was fatal, for if Mrs. Shute made up her mind to deprive us of anything which seemed good in our eyes, nothing remained to us but to resign ourselves to letting her have it.

My poor Dorothea! I sighed heavily! That marriage on which we had set our hearts was not to be. Mrs. Shute's sister, a Wilmot of Taunton, and probably also a creature of impression, would come and win away Mr. Ducle's affections from my daughter, and my wife and I would be such fools that even we would allow ourselves to be drawn into doing our part toward producing that result. I was silent for some time; I was afraid she would notice it; I did not want her to know how we felt about Mr. Ducle, so I said: "I suppose your husband is hard at work this fine morning?"

"Yes, he is busy copying—painting, I mean," she said in confusion.

"Copying nature, I suppose," said I; but it occurred to me considering he was a landscape painter, Mr. Shute staid a great deal indoors.

Miss Wilmott came. She was as bright and rosy as Mrs. Shute was pale, and hardly had she arrived than the Shutes began to borrow our pony-carriage freely, and asked us to lend them our lawn for a tennis party they wished to give, to introduce her.

"They want to invite Mr. Ducle!" I exclaimed, when my wife told me this. "It is too much! It is like seething a kid in its mother's milk!"

"And we shall have to supply the strawberries, and the cream, and lend the teacups and teaspoons, and a couple of servants. And she wants to borrow our long dining-table to place under a tree on the lawn, and has not got a table-cloth long enough to cover it, but is sure we have, and won't mind lending it, and——"

"Say no more," said I, decidedly. "We must draw the line somewhere, and draw it at giving up Mr. Ducle to them."

He was there even while we were speaking; he told us of his visit afterward, and said he thought Miss Wilmott a very charming girl, though it was easy to see that, like the fat boy in "Pickwick," "he knew a nicer;" but how long would he continue to put Dorothea in the first place if those Shutes began to angle for him in earnest? Our experience was that they always managed to get what they wanted. He began to go to the cottage a great deal more than I liked. My wife said it was because from the Shutes' windows he could sometimes see Dorothea walking in our garden. I did not know. Why did he come to us?

He did come to us, and sometimes asked Dorothea to stroll with him to the garden, but no sooner did they go out than Mrs. Shute and Miss Wilmot joined them. I called the latter "the Abominable, that uninvited came," but how could the mind revert to poetry in the midst of such vexation as this?

While everything was in this wretchedly uncomfortable state I received a letter from my uncle—the uncle I did not want to offend. It was rather cold, and it ended thus: "I think, John, you must now see that I have every reason to warn you against taking that foolishly expensive house of yours, but you need not have sold your 'Turner,' and you ought to have had at least another hundred for it. Besides, I would infinitely rather have lent you some money myself than have that exquisite drawing go out of the family!"

It had not gone out of the family—I had not sold it, and never meant to do so! It had been an act of great self-sacrifice to let it go to the cottage for a few days, but now I had got it back an would keep it. My uncle's letter made me feel inclined to go and look at the drawing. I took it down to enjoy it thoroughly. It had been taken out of its frame. Why had that been done? I at once went to the cottage to ask the question. The ladies were out. They had hired a carriage and gone to spend the day with Mr. Ducle's mother. They were evidently in terrible earnest about that affair, and it was a most significant feature that they had hired a carriage, instead of insisting on having ours.

"Mr. Shute is in the studio, sir; will you walk up stairs?" said the servant.

I walked up stairs but he was not there. On the tables and easels I saw a number of water-color drawing in various stages of progress, all of which he was copying from others. Mr. Shute copied Turner drawings and sold them as originals! I saw it in a moment. And he had copied mine! Or he had, perhaps, sold the original and sent me back the copy? Then the drawings on his walls were copies, too, and I had not such a well to-do tenant after all, for those Turner's on the wall had been my sheet-anchor of safety. Perhaps the rent of this cottage, for which I had sacrificed so much, would never be paid, and my cream and new-laid eggs, my fruit, my vegetables, my peace of mind, even my hopes for the future, were all to be as nothing. Letters with foreign stamps lay on the table, doubtless orders from the antipodes for valuable drawings, which my clever tenant had no difficulty in supplying, and even now his wife and her sister twining their meshes round——

I looked up suddenly, and saw from the Shutes' window my Dorothea and Mr. Ducle walking in the garden below, hand in hand. Joy took possession of my heart. He had fled from the two Wilmott sirens in search of my Dorothea.

We never saw the Shutes again. The same evening they left Eglatine cottage. Next morning two emissaries of the law took possession of it. Mr. Shute was deeply in debt, but he had taken away nearly everything that was valuable. All that had remained to satisfy his creditors was a certain amount of Indian matting, two pairs of flimsy curtains, a few rush-bottomed chairs, empty picture frames, and some furniture too heavy to be moved. The china plates which had looked so imposing were cracked in every direction and neatly mended. Not one of them was worth a shilling. Everything else was much the same. This little paradise of æstheticism had faded away in a hour or two.

My wife and I were so happy, that we did not grieve over our lost rent. My uncle lent me £100, and three months afterward came to Dorothea's wedding, on which occasion he satisfied himself, and me, too, that my Turner was still on my walls, and that the estimable Mr. Shute, of Sheffield, had contented himself with making a copy.

A Wise Tailor.

"Yes," said the young man. "I made my tailor knock off five dollars on the price of the suit before I ordered it, I thought it better not to owe so much money, and I guess he finally came to look at it in a similar light. He doubtless made up his mind that it would be better to lose $45 than $50, which was where his head was level."

Victor Hugo has been taking an outing at the Hotel Byron, on Lake Leman, near Villeneuve.

When off the stage Salvini impresses one as entirely lacking in that subtlety which so distinguishes him on the boards. Neither his conversation nor his face suggests in the slightest degree the delicate and fine intellectual resources of his interpretation of Conrad or Othello. Great as an actor, as a man he seems ordinary, save for his size.

The body of a man has been floating in the Niagara river opposite Queenstown. It was entirely nude excepting a bluish grey wool sock on one foot. It was that of a young man apparently about 29 years of age, 5 feet 8 or 9 inches in height, light brown hair cut short, and light sandy moustache. There was a deep gash about two inches long over the right brow, running downwards and outwards, also a deep cut one inch in length beneath the chin.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL

FIVE MINUTES SELECT READING.

Summary of Foreign, Domestic and War Items—Concise, Pithy, and Pointed.

Preparations are being made in Montreal for the holding of a winter carnival similar to that of last year.

Gen. Campion, French Minister of War, has declared himself in favor of forcing throughout France a three-years' military service.

A despatch from Govi Kanuka, Japan, states that the threatre at that place was burned during a performance. There were 75 persons killed and 100 injured.

The Paris Temps says that owing to the resignation of the Spanish Minstry France now considers the difficulty arising from King Alfonso's reception in Paris ended.

A Hong Kong despatch says:—It is reported that the Black Flags have quarrelled with their allies, the Chinese Regulars, in the provinces of Yun Nan and Kwang Si.

The cotton opeartives in Lancashire have been holding meetings and voting against the proposed reduction of ten per cent in wages, and also subscribing funds in case a strike should be necessary.

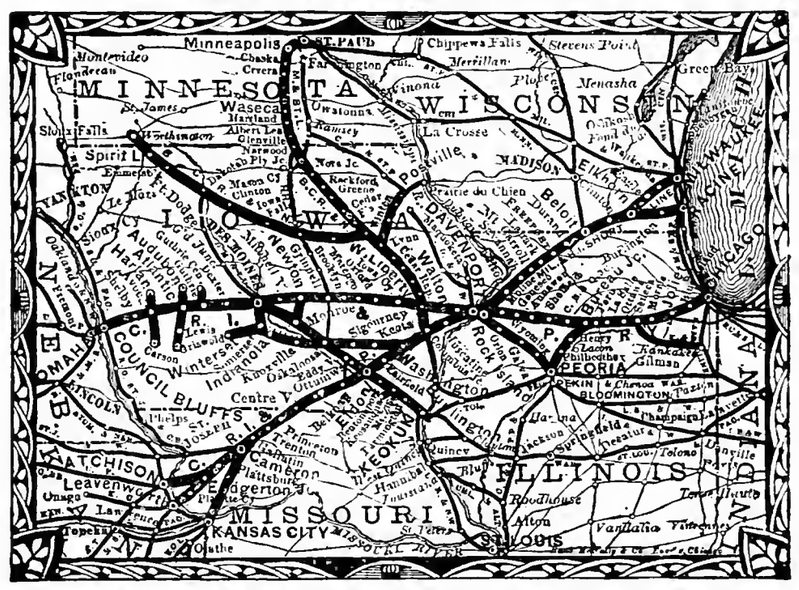
Two quarry men report finding in a cave in a quarry at Capertown, Va., an old iron chest containing coins and tools, apparently of some ancient race. The discovery has caused some excitement.

An outburst of a land spring occurred recently on the Monmouth side of the tunnel under the river Severn, causing the workmen to flee to the Gloucester side. The pumps failed to check the rising waters.

Missionary Shaw stated before the Congregational Union that he wants redress for himself and the Madagascar churches rather than compensation, Whatever France might do, she could not compensate them for their losses.

James P. Love, Danville, Va., angered because his father-in-law pulled the tail of Love's dog, shot his father-in-law, brother-in-law, and his brother, Chas. Love, and a general fight ensued. All three will probably die.

A Dublin despatch states that informer Lamie has been gaoled, it having been ascertained he was about leaving the country to evade giving testimony against his brother-in-law, Poole, in the approaching trial of the latter for the murder of Kenny.



An unusual incident happened at Belleville recently. When the case of Lawrence v. Spencer was called, which was an action for breach of promise, it was stated to have been settled, and it transpired that a minister was actually engaged in marrying the parties.

Lord Loftus, the Governor of New South Wales, in opening the annual session of Parliament, stated that delegates from all Australian colonies had agreed upon holding a conference in Sydney in the latter part of November, to consider confederation.

Much irritation is felt in the Foreign Office at the fact that the German colony on Angra Pejuena, a small bay on the west coast of Africa, is in the habit of selling ammunition to the natives, while two British colonies situated on either side are not permitted to do so

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Callatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

The Standard.

MARKDALE, OCT. 18TH, 1883.

A RIDDLE.

(By Special Request.)

A natural production, neither animal, vegetable or mineral, neither male or female, yet often produced between both and exists from two to six feet high, is often spoken of in romances, is strongly recommended by precept, example and holy writ.

We will receive answers to the above up to Tuesday next, and will publish the names of those correct as also the answer to riddle next week.

AUTUMN.

Another summer is numbered among the past, soon the earth will assume her white mantle and all nature will be sleeping.

Autumn, or as it is more naturally expressed—the fall—has a loveliness peculiar to it. The exquisite clearness of the atmosphere, the grand serenity in the gorgeous tinted woods, rich, even in the very signs of change and decay, insensibly sheds a feeling of calmness and awe, not regret, over us.

To portray the innumerable shades, from the deepest copper to the brightest scarlet, the darkest orange to the most brilliant yellow, with varied tints of vivid green, baffles the most dexterous painters or skilful poets; it is then the forest has the appearance of one gigantic flower garden.

We are now in the midst of and enjoying a beautiful fall, but a short time ago it was summer, and almost before we are are, the dazzling snow of winter will be with us, only to be succeeeded by another spring. The fall, more than any other season, is one of the most solemn reminders of the brevity of time. The rapidity with which the seasons steal over us, one after another, leads us to exclaim tempus fugit!

COMMENDABLE ENTERPRISE.

Moffatt Bros', of the Markdale Foundry are pushing their business with energy and skill, which is sure to bring satisfactory results. Their work in the machine department, of which they make a speciality, is giving general satisfaction, and their business largely increasing. They have recently cast a large driving pulley which measures seven feet in diameter, 15½ inches face and weighs about 2,000 lbs., this pulley is now being turned in their large lathe and will in a few days be ready to send out together with a 40 horse power engine which they are overhauling and refitting. They have recently enlarged their furnace so that a casting from 4,000 to 6,000 lbs. can be now made in their foundry. The building is in some degree hampering their operations but they hope soon to surmount this difficulty by erecting a substantial building of stone or brick.

In the mean time we can cheerfully recommend them to the confidence of the public as men of honor and rare mechanical ability.

Movements Round Town.

Mrs. Poppim into Peter McArthur's house.

M. Sullivan, to Mullarky's cottage on Queen st.

R. D. Biggar has moved into T. Hall's house.

Charlie Richards, to Reid's house, on George st.

D. McFarlane has moved to S. J. Coleman's new house.

Mrs. Boyd will occupy Benson's new brick as soon as completed.

T. D. Smith to Abbott's house recently occupied by Mrs. Poppim.

D. J. Shanahan, to the brick house recently occupied by Mr. Biggar.

J. W. Leavens, to Mrs. Richardson's house now owned by John Hill.

What we Would Like to See.

More efficient road commissioners appointed next year.

The question of reducing the number of members in the County Council pressed on candidates by ratepayers, and tree planting encouraged.

What we Would Like to Know.

What our village fathers are doing.

If anything towards incorporation.

When those street lamps will be erected.

Who are in the field for municipal honors in Holland, Glenelg, Artemesia, Osprey and Euphrasia.

Personals.

Rev. N. A. McDiarmid dropped off a day in Markdale when passing through last week.

Mr. R. H. Byers, with wife and child, from Rochester, arrived on Tuesday and will spend a couple of weeks with their many friends in this place.

The Misses South of Rochester, returned home this week after visiting friends in this vicinity.

W. F. Doll spent a few days in Markdale this week, and will leave Friday for the North West.

Mrs. L. Anderson, of Holland, returned Tuesday, from Markham, where she spent a week visiting.

W. R. Walker, tinsmith of Cookstown, and wife, are visiting friends in this place.

Sabbath School Anniversary.

The Methodist S. S. Anniversary, was held in the church, on Tuesday evening and was well attended. The entertainment consisted of dialogues, recitations, music and addresses. Master Harry Large gave the opening address in a vigorous and masterly manner, giving a comprehensive synopsis of the working and present standing of the school. The children who took part acquitted themselves very creditably. Nettie and Mable Clark are specially worthy of mention having recited exceedingly well. Special credit is due the superintendent Mr. G. S. Bowes, for his patience and indomitable perseverance in training the school. The entertainment was a decided success, and that without the usual trouble of providing and serving refreshments.

Osprey Fall Show.

The annual fair of the Osprey Agricultural Society was held at Singhampton, on Tuesday Oct. 9th. Fortunately the day was the most delightful of the season and the people, although not more than half of them were done harvesting, turned out in unusually large numbers.

The exhibit of horses was particularly fine surpassing it is said, in numbers and quality the show at the great Northern, in Collingwood, or even the East Grey at Flesherton.

Most remarkable among the equine species was the thoroughbred colt 16 months old, owned by Andrew McGirr & Son, of Feversham, this splendid animal is symmetrical throughout and of enormous size, for his age weighing 1,300 lbs, measuring 25 inches around the fore arm, and 12 inches around the smallest part of the bone. The show of cattle, sheep, and pigs might be improved, although many of them were fine animals.

The display of agricultural implements was poor, some excellently finished carriages were shown. In the Orange Hall, which was wrechedly inadiquate for the occasion there were crowded together in infinite varieties the cereal products; lady's fancy work; roots and all kinds of vegetables, together with the products of the dairy and apiary, Most note worthy among the ladies work of the art, were the shell, needle, and feather works, of Mrs. Spence. Also the seed frame, and other fancy work of Mrs. J. Taylor, were particularly nice. The days proceedings was brought to a pleasant termination by a fine exhibition of beautifully dressed and healthy looking babies, the laurel however was awarded to the infant son of Jas. Christie, of Singhampton, who was the best pleased man on the ground, The following is the prize list :—

HORSES.—General Purpose Team, Thomas Hawton, D C McFarlane. Brood mare, Sam Curran, M McDonald. Two year old colt, M McDonald, R McConnell. One year old colt, Jas Thompson, J McIntyre. Spring colt, T Saidgeon, J Taylor. Two year old roadster, J Richmond, D McDonald. One year old roadster J McKinnon. Spring roadster, Wm Loughead, J R Sing. Mare or Gelding in harness, J Chisholm, N McLean. Draught team, Wm. Bristow, M Cameron, W R Carscadden. Extra Saddle horse, D Madill. Saddle horse, W H Johnston Two year old entire colt, D Madill, W H Johnson. Entire colt one year old, R McGirr.

CATTLE.—Bred bull, Jos Taylor, D McDonald, Bred cow, Wm Pearson. Grade cow, J R Sing. Wm Pearson. Working oxen. D McDonald. Yearling heifer, J R Sing. Two year old heifer, D McDonald. Spring bull, J R Sing.

SHEEP.—Aged ram, J Hudson. Ram lamb Jos McMorris 1s and 2nd. Aged ewes, Jos McMorris. Shearling ewes, J McMorris. Ewe lambs, J McMorris.

SWINE.—Aged sow, Wm Pearson. D McDonald. Aged boar, R Jakes, J Curnin. Spring boar, W Pearson. J McMorris, Spring sow. H McDonald, Marshal Morrison.

FOWLS.—White Leghorn, Wm Guy, 1st and 2nd. Plymoth Rock, Wm. Guy, N McKinnon. Hamburgs, M Morrison, Kerton, Barn yard fowls, Wm Hamilton 1st and 2nd. Geese, Wm Hamilton 1st and 2nd.

GRAIN,—Fall wheat, J Hickling. No entry in spring wheat or barley. Black oats, John John Wheler. White oats, John Wheler, W Hamilton. Wm Hamilton, Jos Taylor. Timothy seed, J Hickling, Wm Spencer.

ROOTS.—Aberdeen turnips, Jos Taylor. Swede turnips, Jos Taylor, S Taylor. Potatoes, M Morrison, J Hickling. Blood beets, J R Sing, H McDonald. Mangold wurtzel, J R Sing. White carrots, J McKinnon, A McIntyre. Orange carrots, W Hamilton, Jos Taylor. Parsnips. J Wheler, W Hamilton. Potatoe onions, J Taylor. H McDonald. Seed onions, W Hamilton, H McDonald. Top onions, J Wheler, S Taylor. Cabbage, R Y Burk, J Wheeler. Corn, J Taylor, Wm Hamilton. Citrons, W Hamilton. Pumpkins, J Wheler. Squash, Wm Hamilton.

FRUIT.—Apples. R Jakes, W Hamilton. Assortment fruit, R Jakes.

VEHICLES.—Democrat waggon, Thos Rush Open buggy, Alcock & Fleming 1st and 2nd. Top buggy, W B Tupper.

DAIRY PRODUCE, ETC.—Butter, Mrs J Hickling, Mrs J R Sing. Mrs W Spencer. Chesse, J Taylor, W Hamilton, Maple sugar W Hamilton, S Taylor.

MANUFACTURES.—Horse shoes, W Ramsey. Bureau, D Grant. Satinett, R Heron 1st and 2nd. Full cloth, R Heron, J Hickling. Flannel, R Heron, W Pearson. Blankets, R Heron, J Hickling. Patch quilt, Mrs. J Little. Quilt any other kind, Mrs R Y Burk, Mrs W Spencer. Pair socks, Mrs. Wm Hamilton, Mrs. J Little. Mitts, Mrs J Little, Mrs. R Brown. Berlin wool, Mrs. Wm. Spencer. Fancy Knitting, Mrs H Tomkins. Braiding, Miss J R Sing. Tatting, Miss J Hickling. Hooked rug, Mrs J Little. Artificial flowers, Mrs Wm Spencer. Shell work, Mrs Wm Spencer. Feather wreath, Mrs H Tomkins. Motto, Mrs J Taylor. Mat any kind, Mrs J Little. Pillow sham, Miss J R Sing. Seed frames, Mrs J Taylor.

Special by C W Rutledge, editor STANDARD, Markdale, for prettiest baby, Mrs James Christie.

The following articles were highly recommended:—Pencil drawing, Miss J R Sing. Chromo bracket, Miss Stinson. Minature cottage, Mrs. Alex Greensway. Putty frame, Mrs J Taylor. Sofa Pillow, Miss R Y Burk

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

A. O. U. W.—The A.O U.W. of this village intend having a grand concert shortly in the town hall.

ANNIVERSAY.—The members of the Methodist church intend celebrating the anniversary of the opening of the church about the middle of next month.

VERY ILL.—Mrs. R. J. Sproule was taken very ill on Friday evening last. Drs. Christoe and Sproule were in attendance and through their medical skill Mrs. Sproule is slowly recovering.

NEW CHURCH.—The new Presbyterion Church will soon be completed, when finished it will be one of the finest buildings in this part of the country. The committee intends heating it throughout with hot air pipes.

RICHARDSON'S BLOCK.—Richardson's new brick block is progressing very satisfactorily. The workmen are now on the third story, when finished it will be a credit to Flesherton and to our enterprising citizen Mr. Richardson.

NEW READERS.—Flesherton public school has now introduced Gages Canadian Readers We are pleased to notice this; in our opinion they are far ahead of any other book before the public for teaching reading.

A. F. & A. M.—The Free Masons moved into their new refreshment room on Friday evening last. To judge from the numher of empty oyster cans and the look of some of the members the next day, we think they intend using it for the purpose for which it was built.

The Different Classes of Printing.

Printing may be divided into four classes as follows:

First—The customer brings in his order in a quiet, gentlemanly way with "good morning," or "afternoon," and says: "here is a job which please get it up in good style." He does not ask the price—requires no proof his copy is good, and he gives no trouble. His order claims immediate attention—it is set up in the best style, and printed on the best paper. There are no errors, for the printer has confidence in himself and in his customer. The work gives great satisfaction, and when the bill is sent around he is perfectly satisfied and pays the money charged with pleasure. He believes in the printer, and the printer believes in him. This is first-class printing.

Second—The customer stalks into the office with an unhappy cast of countenance, "Could such and such a job be printed at once?" "What will it cost?" "How long will it take?" "Send me a proof." The copy is average bad, the customer has but little confidence in himself, and none in the printer. A proof is sent, two or three blunders by the printer are found, and a dozen alterations from copy are made by himself. He returns the proof himself and will wait while the corrections are made. The customer thinks cheap paper will do, and the job when done looks decidedly second-class. He is not satisfied with it, and when the bill is sent in he pays it reluctantly. This is second-class printing.

Third—"You don't mean to say you are going to charge me three dollars and a half for this job—why I am sure I can get it done for less?" The printer then knows his customer, throws off fifty cents and saves that amount by using cheap stock. The bill is sent in month after month, and he finally takes $3.50 to settle the account. This is third-class printing.

Fourth-class printing is never paid for. Every printer has had more or less experience in all these classes.

WANTED,

An an apprentice at the Sash and Door Factory.

Apply to GEORGE GRANT & CO.,
Markdale.

FARM FOR SALE.

Lot 89 and 90 second range west of T. & S. Road, Glenelg, 100 acres, 85 of which are cleared and under cultivation fit for reaper and mower to work on. Buildings and fences in good repair, soil clay loam, well watered, and in a good state of cultivation. This is a desirable farm and well located being 2½ miles from the flourishing village of Markdale. For further particulars apply on premises or by letter to

162-64 WM. MUTRIE,
Markdale P. O.

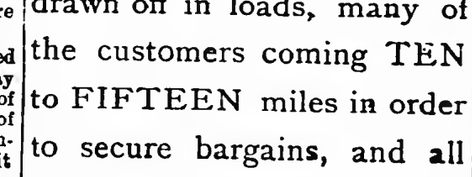
FARMS FOR SALE.

Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are clearsd and under ultivation. Lot S part 15, con. 12, Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to

J. G. IRVING,
Markdale.

Oct.16.1883. 162

HAULING GOODS!



There are large stacks of Goods at

TRIMBLE & WRIGHT'S
MARKDALE,

Notwithstanding the immense quantity being purchased and drawn off in loads, many of the customers coming TEN to FIFTEEN miles in order to secure bargains, and all leave highly pleased with the results.

Every department is crammed with fresh goods, and new arrivals daily being opened.

TRIMBLE & WRIGHT,
MARKDALE.

THE CRADLE.

GIBSON—In Markdale, on the 16th inst., the wife of Mr. Jos. Gibson, (contractor,) of a daughter.

DUNLOP—In Markdale, on 12th inst., the wife of Mr. A. Dunlop, of twin boys, one still born.

MCCONNEL.—In Rocklyn, on Tuesday the 9th inst., the wife of Thomas McConnel, hotel keeper, of a daughter.

THE ALTAR.

MOORE—MOORE.—At the residence of the bride's father, in Bentinck, on the 11th inst., by the Rev J. C. Dunlop, Mr. Ben B. Moore, of British Columbia, to Miss Agnes Moore, daughter of Wm. Whiteford, Esq.

BROWNE—WHITEFORD.—At the same place on the 11th inst., by the Rev. Mr. Dunlop, Mr. John L. Browne, Photographer, Markdale, to Miss Barbara Whiteford, daughter of Wm. Whiteford, Esq.

ROBINSON—IRISH—At the Methodist Parsonage, Owen Sound, on Tuesday evening, 9th inst., by the Rev. J. E. Howell, Mr. Thos. Robinsen, of Proton, to Miss Margaret Jane Irish, of Osyrey.

THE GRAVE.

MCCUTCHEON—In Euprasia, on the 14th inst., Charles Aubrey, only child of Mr. Wm. McCutcheon, aged 4 months and 10 days.

MCLEAN.—In Moosejaw, N. W. T., on the 13th inst., Elizabeth, wife of Mr. Donald C. McLean, and sister of Mr. Joseph Lamb, of this village, aged 29 years.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.70 to $1.95; Spring $0.70 to $1 95; Barley, 50 to70; Peas, 60; Oats, 30c Butter, 15c; Eggs, 20c; Potatoes, 40c; Hay, $6 .00; Pork, 7.00 to 7.50; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20.

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.10; Spring, $1.00 to $1.12; Barley, 50c to 70c; Oats, 37c to 38c Peas, 70c to 73c; Hogs, $8.00 to $8.25; Potatoes, per bag, 90c to $1c; Butter, dairy, 15c to 17c; eggs, 18c to 20c.

325 ACRES Fonthill Nurseries 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address

STONE & WELLINGTON,
161-75 Toronto, Ont.

William McLeod,

BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,
MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms, strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Mathews' harness shop.

159-3m

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.
Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

$500 Reward!

We will pay the above reward for any case of Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Constipation or Costiveness we cannot cure with West's Vegetable Liver Pills, when the directions are strictly complied with. They are purely Vegetable, and never fail to give satisfaction. Sugar Coated, Large Boxes, containing 30 Pills, 25 cts. For sale by all Druggists. Beware of counterfeits and imitations. The genuine manufactured only by JOHN C. WEST & CO., "The Pill Makers," 81 & 83 King St. East, Toronto, Ont. Free trial package sent by mail prepaid on receipt of a 3 cent stamp. For sale at Turner &Co. Drug Store.

In the Goods of
MARGARET IRETON
(DECEASED)

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to Section 34 of Chapter 107, R. S. O., the creditors of Margaret Iretin, late of the township of Glenelg, in the county of Grey, deceased, who died on or about the 5th day of May, 1883, and all parties having claims upon her estate are on on before the next, to send by post prepaid, to Benjamin Coleman, of the Village of Markdale, in the county of Grey, one of the Executors, of the personal estate and effects of the deceased, (or to James Masson, Markdale, solicitor for the executors,) their Christian and Surnames addresses and description, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and nature of the securities (if any) held by them, and in default thereof the assets of the said deceased will be distributed, having regard only to the claims then received or those of which the executors then have notice.

FIFTEENTH DAY OF NOVEMBER

BENJAMIN COLEMAN } Executors.
JOHN WM. [illegible],
J. Masson,
Solicitor for Executors.

Dated this 1st Day October, 1883.

Supplement to The ...

MARKDALE, OCTOBER ...

Artemesia Show.

PRIZE LIST.

[NOTE.—The names are given in the order of merit.]

HORSES.

Span draught horses—A Currie, D McMillan. Span general purpose horses, 1st, plow by Alex Webster—A McMillan, J McMillan. Span carriage horses, 1st, neck-yoke by Michael Riely—W Reid, James Brodie. Saddle horse, special by R Oliver—J Burnett, J White. Hack horse—1st & 2nd J McMillan. Brood mare—J McLean, C McKinnon. Two year old gelding or filly—J Fletcher, J Stewart. One year old gelding or filly—J Gillies, C McKinnon. Spring colt—D Harrow, D McDonald. To parties taking most prizes in Class 1, special by M Sullivan, $1, J McMillan.

CATTLE.

Durham bull—R Plant. Devon bull—1st and 2nd Robert Oliver. Devon cow—R Oliver.

GRADES.

Bull—J White, D McDonald. Milch cow—Henry King, Jas Haney. Two year old heifer—W Trimble, Henry Huddy. One year old heifer—C C James, Henry King. Heifer calf—J Haney. Yoke of oxen—R Oliver, A McLean. Yoke 3 year old steers—J Simpson. Yoke 2 year old steers—C McKinnon, H McLean. Yoke 1 year old steers—R Oliver, Jas Vause. Special by T Conkey, $5, best herd consisting of 1 thoroughbred bull, and not less than 4 heifers and cows—Robt Oliver.

SHEEP, LONG WOOL.

Aged ram—Robt Oliver, H McLean. Shearling ram—Geo Swanton. Ram lamb—1st and 2nd R Oliver. Pair aged ewes—1st and 2nd Geo Swanton. Pair shearling ewes—Geo Swanton, R Oliver. Pair ewe lambs—Geo Swanton, R Oliver.

LEICESTERS.

Aged ram—D McMillan. Shearling ram—J H Stewart, J Stewart. Ram lamb—J Stewart, J H Stewart. Pair aged ewes—J H Stewart, R Oliver. Pair shearling ewes—J Stewart, R Oliver. Pair ewe lambs—Jas Haney, J H Stewart. Special prize by John McLeod, $4 worth of building material for the best pen of sheep of any class owned by one man—Geo Swanton.

SWINE, BERKSHIRE.

Sow—J Watson, J White.

SUFFOLK.

Aged boar—D Stinson. Sow—D Stinson.

POULTRY.

Pair game—Thos Conkey. Pair hamburgs—1st and 2nd Jas Brodie. Pair brahmas—Geo Swanton. Pair Leghorns—1st & 2nd Wm Trimble. Pair Plymouth rocks—Jas Fletcher, Jas Brodie. Pair ducks—Geo Swanton, Alex Stewart. Pair turkeys—Jas Brodie. Pair geese—Wm Trimble, Robert Oliver.

GRAIN.

Best bushel fall wheat, Clawson—James Brodie. Bushel wheat White Russian—Jas Brodie, Jas Stewart. Bushel spring wheat, white fyfe, $2.50, by T Atkinson—Jas Stewart. Jas Brodie Bushel any other kind spring wheat—Jas Stewart, Jas Brodie. Bushel barley, 6 row—Jas Brodie, J Stewart. Bushel white oats—James Stewart, D Stinson. Bushel black oats—Henry Matthewson, D Stinson. Bushel peas, large—Jas Brodie, J Stewart. Peck timothy seed—Jas Brodie, J Stewart. Collection beans—J Brodie. Special by R Robertson, $5, for best bag Egyptian oats—Henry Matthewson.

ROOTS AND VEGETABLES.

Bushel early rose potatoes—J Simpson, D McMillan. Bushel any other potatoes—Jas Brodie. Collection 6 varieties, 1 peck each—Jas Brodie. Six swede turnips—H Matthewson, Geo Swanton. Six turnips any other kind—Geo Swanton, H Matthewson. Six mangolds—H Matthewson, Mrs Thomson. Six beets—A Brown, Dr. Ghent. Six heads cabbage—Mrs Thomson, A Brown. One quart potato onions—John Cowie, Mrs Thomson. Twelve onions raised from tops—Mrs Thomson, David Harrows. Six field carrots—John Simpson, J Henry. Six table carrots—Geo Swanton, T Conkey. Two squashes—Mrs Jas Thomson. Three roots celery—Wm Trimble, J Tryon. Three citrons—Mrs Thomson, H Matthewson. Six tomatoes—Mrs Jas Vause, Jas Brodie.

FRUIT.

Six winter apples—Jas Brodie, Adam Hislop. Six fall apples—Jas Brodie, Adam Hislop. Three varieties of apples, 3 of each—A Hislop, J Brodie. Twelve crab apples—A Hislop, J R Plant. Six plums—George Swanton, J Stinson. Six pears—A Hislop, Wm Watson. Three bunches grapes—Wm Watson, J Watson.

FLOWERS.

Special by Dr. Ghent, collection house plants—Dr. Ghent.

DAIRY AND OTHER PRODUCE.

Five lbs. honey in comb—Joel Worts, W Watson. Five lbs roll butter—Mrs King, Mrs McLean, R Oliver. Fifty lbs tub butter, prizes by John Brown—Jas Vause, R Oliver, H King.

MANUFACTURES.

Set horse shoes—M Riley. Set iron harrows—R Cook, M Riely. Set team harness—J Gordon, C C James. Pair men's boots, sewed or pegged, 1st, by J Dennis, $5—T Conkey. Pair women's boots—T Conkey. Five yards fullcloth, home-made—A McMillan. Five yards plain flannel—John McLeod, Wm Reid.

LADIES WORK.

Pair mens' socks, home-made—Mrs R Oliver, Mrs John McMillan. Pair mitts, home-made, special by A Brown—Mrs John McLeod, Mrs H King. Pair mens' gloves, home-made—Mrs Brodie. Quilt, patchwork—Mrs Brodie, Mrs R Plant. Quilt, any other kind—Mrs John McArthur, Mrs Brodie. Two loaves home-made bread, 1st, copy Flesherton Advance year, 2nd do 6 months—Mrs Plant, Mrs Hector McLean. Berlin wool work, raised—Mrs Jas Watson, Mrs Riely. Col. Berlin wool work—Mrs Simpson, Miss Brodie. Gents' shirt, home-made, 1st, by John McArthur—Mrs Matthewson, Mrs John McArthur. Hooked mat—Mrs Wm Trimble, Mrs King. Crotchet work in cotton—Mrs John McLeod, Mrs Burnett. Crotchet work in wool—Mrs Fletcher. Fancy knitting in cotton—Miss Brodie, Mrs King. Braiding in cotton—Mrs Conkey, Mrs King.

JUDGES.

Horses and cattle—R Myles, D McCormick, and Wm Lawson. Sheep and swine—D R Ellis, John Whitby and Henry Tucker. Grain, Roots, etc.—R J Sproule and Jas Burnett. Ladies' Work and Domestic Manufactures—Mrs Johnston Millner and Mrs Turner.

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK

DressStuffsTweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN

Messrs. DOLL & BROWN

THE PEOPLES JEWELLERS OF

MARKDALE & CHATSWOSTH,

ARE AWAY AHEAD

When in town do not fail to call and see their immense new stock.

THEY have the ONLY GOOD stock in this section of Country. THEY buy for CASH, IMPORT Direct, and are not FRESH at the Business. Mr. Brown's Watch repairing is giving

FIRST CLASS SATISFACTION.

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

Sir John A. McDonald was unseated last week.

Mr. A. Gill is going to paint McFarland's elevator.

Mr. C. Price of Williamsford station has again opened a general store.

A skating rink is being built in Thornbury, it is 190 feet long and 90 feet wide.

Attention is directed to the advertisement of George Grant & Co. of the Markdale sash and door factory.

Two of the Canada Pacific line steamers for the Lake Superior traffic, the Alberta and Algoma, arrived at Montreal last Friday, from Glasgow.

Accident.—On Monday last, Ruben Wallace, a brakesman on the T. G. & B., fell off the train near Bolton and was seriously injured. He is recovering.

We are looking forward with hopefull anticipations for a long and lovely Indian summer. If it don't beat the white man's summer this season it will be no great shakes.

Mr. Jos. Manarey, Euphrasia, will have an auction sale of farm stock implements, &c., on Thursday Nov. 1st, at his premises lot 18, con. 10. Twelve months credit on approved paper. See posters.

Painting.—Mr. A. Gill, painter, who had to change his occupation during the summer months, owing to poor health, has now returned to his trade and is prepared to execute all work entrusted to him in painting papering &c., in a workmanlike and satisfactory manner.

Notice.—The pews in the Methodist church will be re-let at 2 o'clock on Thursday, Novembr 1st. Pew holders who wish to retain their seat another year can secure it at the old price by calling at the office of C. W. Rutledge and settling for the same any time up to the above date, otherwise they will be let to the highest bidder.

Organized.—Rev. Mr. Manley, travelling agent for the Upper Canada branch of the British and Foreign Bible society, preached in the Presbyterian church last Sabbath morning and in the methodist church the same evening. On both occasions he gave interesting information relative to the above society and its working. A branch of the societo was re-organized as follows: Wm. Lucas, President; W. A. Brown, (Jeweller,) Secretary; Wm. Douglas, Treasurer; William Brown, (merchant) Depositor; Committee—The resident ministers with Mr. Moffatt, B. D. Biggar, and C. W. Rutledge.

And now the small boy goes forth in search of beech nuts, etc.

We acknowledge receipt of subscription for Standard from B. J. Smith, Lisle P. O.

Mr. Arch. Donaldson, of Muskoka, will please accept thanks for $1.00 for Standard.

Eight girls wanted at Miss Green's Dress Making Parlor, six, apprentices and two assistants. 161tf

The Meaford Mirror says, in last weeks issue that the Canadian Farmer and Grange Record, which is published in Welland has came out as a weekly. Wonder when did our cotem learn the fact? The above paper has been published weekly the past two years.

Our lady readers who belong to the Methodist Church, and who have not yet fettered themselves by marriage, will learn with interest that the United Methodist Conference of Canada has, in adopting a marriage ritual, left the word "obey" out of the questions asked of the woman to be wedded.

Accident.—On Wednesday evening as the mixed train went North. at Chatsworth, Thos. Hazard, a brakesman fell off at the cattle guard, the cars passed over one leg breaking it several places below the knee. He is lying in a precarious condition at Chatsworth.

Sad News.— Mr. Joseph Lamb of this village received a telegram on Monday morning bearing the sad tidings of the death of his sister in Moose jaw N. W. T. Saturday the 13th inst. She had moved to the above place about a year since with her husband D. C. McLean and family from Priceville. This is the third death in the family in three years.

The reports of the yield of grain from farmers who have threshed are generally of a good character. S. Coleman, whose farm adjoins this village, threshed last week, and will have a yield of 25 bushels of spring wheat per acre and between 40 and 50 of oats, while the grain is of a good quality. In Glenelg we are told that while there will be a falling off in the wheat crop, the coarse grains will more than make it up, as there is an abundance of all kinds of the latter.

Merited Success.—The Dundalk Herald has entered upon its second year of publication under its present proprietor Mr. T. Hall, and is, we are pleased to learn, constantly growing in the popularity of the residents of that village and district. The paper is newsy, spicy, and ably edited, has a high moral tone and is untrammelled by political bias or sectarian prejudice. We have no doubt it will receive the liberal support which it richly deserves. Very few have any idea of the amount of expense as well as other difficulties a country editor has to contend with. We bespeak for the Herald that success which is its due.

One of our exchanges, in speaking of newspapers, and what is expected of them, very forcibly remarks that "there is no business in all the wide world so subject to sponging as a newspaper. It really seems to us that public corporations, societies and associations in general have peculiar ideas about printers. They think we ought to print, puff and publish all for nothing, in other words, they seem astonished if we ask half price only for obituary notices, cards of thanks, tributes of respect. personal commutications, or anything else that only interests a few persons, and not the general readers. They think it costs no money to advertise, puff, &c. And this one and another will sponge. They forget that this business makes them known; they forget that printer's ink makes nine tenths of their immense fortunes; they forget that it takes money to pay compositors—to buy ink, type and paper; and lastly, they forget even to thank you for gratuitously puffing their business and serving the public,

Trimble & Wright has an immense stock of fall and winter goods which are going off like hot cakes. They can scarcely attend to the wants of their numerous customers, they are now shipping their butter and you can see by their new advertisement this week every thing is upside down.

The annual thanksgiving services of Christ Church, Markdale, were held on Sunday last. The decorations in the church were of evergreen, flowers and of various kinds of fruit, and displayed great taste. Rev. Mr. Ward preached an able and impressive sermon in the morning, from the text, "The end of the world is the harvest, the reapers are the Angels."

Mr. Doll has a display of handsome jewellry now at Doll & Brown's jewellry store, part of which he will take with him to the North-west. He has two cases of beautiful solid gold watches of the latest design and also a consignment of diamond rings valued at $1,400. This is indeed the finest display of jewellry ever offered for sale in this town. Be sure you call and see them before he is gone, which will be on Friday.

An Agreeable Surprise.—A paragraph appeared in the press last Monday to the effect that robbers were at work in the city. Late in the evening of that day there appeared a suspicious-looking person at the residence of the Rev. A. Wilson, pastor of the Carlton street Presbyterian church, who seemed not to know very well what he wanted, but muttered something about a carpet. The servant who answered the door called her mistress who, thinking the man was some evil-designing person, wanting to get some knowledge about the house for an evil purpose, spoke sharply to him, telling him he must be mistaken, and that this was not the house. Not moving away at once, and the lady being somewhat alarmed, she called to the servant to go and bring Mr. Wilson, who, however, was not in at the time. With this the man made off. Shortly after Mr. and Mrs. Wilson left their home to spend the evening at the house of a friend. No sooner had they left than the man entered their house with a large roll of carpet on his shoulder. Soon the parlour was cleared, and a beautiful and costly Brussels carpet was quickly laid. The man who thus caused such alarm turned out to be the agent for the time, of a few friends in the Rev. gentleman's congregation, and the surprise that awaited him and his lady on their return home may well be imagined. Such surprises tend greatly to make a happy and prosperous pastorate.

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

The stables for McCullough's new hotel were raised on Tuesday.

Mr. Skeffington Bell has been reappointed collector of taxes for Proton.

Mr. S. McDowell, sr., has purchased Mr. Langley's hotel, near Dundalk, and took possession on Tuesday last.

The municipal situations does not appear to be much changed. It is certain our present reeve will not seek re-election.

It is rumoured that J. J. Middleton has sold his business at Melancthon station and is about to open a branch store in Toronto.

The oat meal mill is now in working order, but oats are rather slowly coming in. The late harvest is probably the cause.

The drainage contractors are pushing the work as well as they can, but experience great difficulty in getting men to work on the drains. Good wages are offered. If there are any surplus laborers around Markdale, they could readily find employment here. The main drain passing through the centre of the village will be about ten feet deep.

MARKDALE

PLANING, SASH, DOOR AND FURNITURE

FACTORY.

Lumber Planed or Matched While Waiting.

Sash, Doors, and Mouldings always on hand or made to Order. All kinds of lumber, Lath and Shingles kept in stock. Furniture of all descriptions to be seen at our Warerooms. Lumber and cordwood will be taken in exchange for Furniture.

George Grant & Co.,
Proprietors.

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

J. W. FORD

Is giving splendid satisfaction in

CRISTING,

By the New Process at the

Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

New FALL Importations

——arriving daily at——

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats. Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in a th e latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

STELLA;

OR, AT CROSS PURPOSES.

CHAPTER XXXI. (CONTINUED.)

LADY HONORIA DOES HER DUTY.

"I shall get over it very soon," she said to herself once more, "and I am glad no one need ever know the truth—everybody will believe that I jilted him—that is bad enough, but not so bad as the truth. I could not bear to be pitied as a forsaken damsel—that would kill me!"

It will be seen that it was Lady Honoria's vanity that suffered throughout far more intensely than her heart.

Presently Mrs. Norton came into the room.

"Is Sir Edward gone already?" she asked her, kindly.

Lady Honoria did not lose a minute in telling the truth to her hostess.

"Yes, he is gone. He will not dine here to-night, Mrs. Norton. The fact is, I have just broken off our engagement altogether."

"Oh! my dear!" cried Mrs. Norton, aghast, "how dreadfully sorry I am for you?"

"You need not be sorry for me," said Lady Honoria, quietly, "because it is entirely my own doing. We found that we were not likely to make each other happy, so I thought it best to break everything off. I have done quite right, and require no pity at all. Will you please tell your husband and daughters, Mrs. Norton; and would you kindly send these letters to the post for me?"

And that was all the information the family at the Rectory ever received concerning Lady Honoria's broken engagement. Only long afterwards, when they heard of another event, which as yet was in the dim future, then the two girls, talking the matter over to each other, thought that they could put two and two together, and a little more of the truth of the business became clear to them.

Meanwhile, in the desolate little sitting-room in Mrs. Wilson's green-shuttered lodging-house there were that morning two people who were very happy indeed, in spite of many stabs of conscience for the mistakes of the past on one side, and for sundry misgivings concerning the troubles of the future on the other.

"I think I have behaved abominably throughout both to you and to her," said Edgar to the little head that lay safe and happy upon his shoulder. "I wish I could feel more penitent and more unhappy; but just now, I can only feel insane with joy and delight!"

"Oh! what will Lady Dyson say!" cried poor Lily, for the hundreth time.

"Well, I think she will forgive you, Lily. Do you know, that I believe she got very fond of you during your illness?"

"She was very good to me," murmured Lily.

"And now, my little drrling, I must go—I shall leave Sandyport this afternoon; and when you are quite strong again, and the whole of this business has blown over, then you will come back to Barfield, and then—and then——"

"Please do not do that any more," was Lily's only rejoinder to a course of action which, to people accustomed to the manners and customs of lovers, may be better imagined than described.

He left her and went back to the inn, and there, upon his table, lay a telegram awaiting him.

He tore it open. It was from his mother, and ran thus:

"Please come home at once. Your brother has left home with Miss King."

CHAPTER XXXI.

HER LAST CARD.

Old Mr. King left his bed unusually early on the morning of the 1st of May, wrapped his dressing-gown about his lean figure, and went eagerly to the window and looked out. It was a lovely spring morning; the trees were all covered with tender green leaves, the dew lay thickly upon the grass, the hawthorn and laburnums were fast bursting into bloom, and the birds carolled gayly their greeting to the new-born summer.

Never had Mr. King felt happier or in better spirits. It was Norman's wedding-day. Everything had been settled according to his wishes; there had been no hitch and no disturbance in the programme he had laid out for his grandchildren's lives. Within a few hours he would stand within the flower-decked chancel of the village church, and he would give Cecily away to her cousin, and the "Wedding March" would strike up, and the wedding-bells would ring, and the darling wish of his old age would be fulfilled; and then the bride and bridegroom would be whirled off in a carriage-and-four to the station, on their way to the Continent, for their wedding-tour, and he and his Stella would be left alone in the big house together. He would send Harriet Finch away, and Stella should keep house for him.

"It has all gone off well," said Mr. King, to himself; "but I am glad I put that codicil into my will—it will do no harm—by twelve o'clock to-day it will be invalid, and it has kept my mind easy all this time, for I had a misgiving that the girl was going to play me false, but I suppose I was mistaken; still it has kept me from fretting, and, as Graham is always telling me, if I want to go on living I must not fret myself. Ah, well, I am happy enough now! Everything has turned out just as I wished it!"

At that minute a slender figure, wrapped from head to foot in a long cloak, and wearing a thick veil, was creeping slowly and cautiously across the dew-drenched grass at the back of the house.

She went very slowly, turning round every now and then to listen and look back at the house. It was quite early—only about half-past six—and nearly all the blinds of the house were drawn closely down. Only from one distant window there was somebody with sharp eyes, and a keen, eager face, who saw that solitary figure stealing along under the shadow of the orchard wall. And the owner of those sharp eyes, who had only just got up out of bed, straightway began to huddle on the first clothes that came under her hands at her utmost speed.

But Cecily, who was creeping along under the shadow of the orchard wall, did not know this.

Cecily was playing her last card. She had come to the end of the serio-comedy she had been acting so long, and now she was ready to stake everything she had so long striven for upon this last desperate action. Last night the will that was to make so much for her was signed. So far all was safe. Now nothing was left to her save to deal the death-blow to the old man whose house had sheltered her treacherous and wicked self for so many months! All night long she had sat up writing—writing the letter that she had laid on his library table before she stole forth from the house, so that he might see it the first thing when he came down-stairs—and writing too, to Stella, to tell her the truth of everything. As to Norman, she had not even gone through the form of writing to him—"Norman," she said to herself scornfully, "will console himself very easily; he and Stella will never be rich—but then they are the kind of people who do not care in the least for money; they will be perfectly content to be poor all the days of their lives—whereas I—I could not have done without it. I have worked hard for it too—oh! what hard work it has been!—but thank goodness, it is all over now!"

She had got safely round the corner of the orchard wall by this time, and she was out of sight of the house. She walked quicker and breathed more freely now. She carried a heavy dressing-bag in her hand; into it she had crammed all the jewellery that had been given to her as wedding presents, including the family diamonds from her grandfather, and the set of pearls and rubies that were Norman's wedding-gift to her. Cecily had no remorse of conscience at all in doing this. She had also a little money, about ten pounds, with her.

Presently she reached a low wooden gate that led out of the park into the road; here, behind a clump of trees that had hidden it from her sight until she came close to it, stood a Stanhope phaeton with the hood drawn up. As she reached the gate, Walter Dyson's face peered out from behind it.

"Here you are at last," he said, in a whisper. "I thought you were never coming—is everything right?"

"Yes, so far all has gone well—the will was signed last night."

"Is this all your luggage!"

"Oh! my boxes are ready packed; I dare say I shall get them to-morrow. I have got the diamonds here!" tapping the bag with a laugh.

"You are an uncommonly clever girl, and I must say I am very glad to get hold of you at last. Now jump up quickly, and let us be off before the alarm is given; and besides, we have not too much time to catch the train at the Junction—it is ten miles at the very least."

There was no servant, and he helped her up into the phaeton. She drew herself as far back as she could into the shadow of the hood, and Walter Dyson took his seat by her side.

"Off at last, my dear wife!" he said, bending down to her with an affectionate smile, for he was fond of her after a fashion.

And then Cecily uttered a cry.

"Good gracious! there is Mrs. Finch!" she exclaimed. "Drive faster, Walter, or we shall be stopped!—hateful woman! she must have followed me!"

The phaeton dashed off rapidly, and was soon whirled out of sight round a sharp corner of the road.

And there stood Mrs. Finch by the gate, in the long damp grass, in a short, dark woollen petticoat and a red flannel dressing-jacket, with her scanty hair all flying loosely in the wind about her thin neck, shouting and waving her hands vainly after the departing couple.

But for all her shouting she was not able to stop them. When the phaeton was quite out of sight, Mrs. Finch turned round and fled to the house. There was a glance of malicious delight upon her face.

"Wicked, abandoned girl!" she cried to herself, triumphantly; "I always knew she was false and deceitful. She has eloped with one of the Dysons! I could not see which, but I know the gray horse and harness well enough. And now, at last, I can be revenged upon the old man who has ground down my life for so many years, and treated me like an upper servant instead of a relation! Now, at last, I can repay him all the rough words and the insulting sneers he has cast at me for so long! Oh! what a blow this will be for him!—his darling schemes overthrown—his nephew tricked out of his bride—his beautiful plans for everybody all shattered at a stroke! How delighted I am to think I shall be the first to tell him—perhaps even he will be grateful to me for revealing to me this inquitious proceeding to him, and he will add something to his will in acknowledgment—who knows!"

And this latter thought still further quickened Mrs. Finch's returning footsteps towards the house.

In another minute she was knocking loudly at Mr. King's bedroom door, quite oblivious, in her excitement, of her own very remarkable, and not very presentable costume.

"Mr. King, I must speak to you at once!" she cried.

"My good woman, I am just out of my bed—you must wait."

"I cannot wait a moment, my dear cousin—I positively must speak to you! I have something of the utmost importance to reveal to you!"

"What a nuisance an impatient woman is!" grumbled the old man from within. "Wait a moment, then, and I will open the door."

After a few seconds he did so, and appeared enveloped in a long flowery dressing-gown, in which his gaunt figure looked leaner and more attenuated than ever.

"Now what on earth is it?" he began, confronting the strangely-attired figure who came in as he opened the door, "what have you got to say that you couldn't wait till I was dressed? I suppose the confectioner hasn't sent the cake, or the cook has spoilt the jellies, or some such rubbish?"

"Mr. King, it is no rubbish at all," said Mrs. Finch, eagerly. "I have a very terrible piece of news to tell you!"

The old man frowned uneasily; but he had no serious apprehensions as yet.

"You women think everything terrible—there is no end to the fuss made about every trifle. Out with it, then!"

"I assure you this is no trifle," she said, earnestly, and with such evident agitation, that his attention was arrested to it. "You must prepare yourself for a great shock, Mr. King."

The old man trembled.

"Don't go beating about the bush," he said, hoarsely, "but in Heaven's name tell me what has happened at once! Is it No—is it Norman?"

"Norman is quite well. It is Cecily King who has gone away."

"What!" shouted the old man, wildly, catching hold of her hands.

"She has run away with one of the Dysons—I am not sure which—I could not see; but they have driven off together not ten minutes ago."

The old man was livid.

"They must be followed at once—instantly; they can be stopped! Where is Norman? Ring the bell, What are you standing staring here for? Let me go!" He was struggling to reach the door: he shivered from head to foot. Mrs. Finch tried to quiet him; he shook her off wildly. "They must be followed at once," he repeated. "It is not too late; they can be stopped."

And then suddenly Stella, white as a sheet, stood behind them on the threshold, holding an open letter in her hand.

"Oh! grandpapa—dear grandpapa—it is no use!" she cried; "they cannot be stopped—it is too late. Cecily has deceived us all; she has been married to Walter Dyson ever since she came here!"

He stopped short and gasped for breath; the blood rushed back in a flood to his face, his eyes stared blankly for one minute before him. Then he flung up his arms wildly into the air; one short gasping cry burst from his lips; and he fell face forward all his length upon the floor.

Cecily's evil work had prospered. She killed her granfather, but it was Stella's loving lips that all unwittingly had given him his death-blow.

From that instant all was confusion and terror; the fugitive couple were forgotten; there was a wild hurrying to and fro through the flower-decked house. Instead of the merry laughter, and the good wishes, and the happy faces that were to have filled Wrexham Hall that bright May morning, there were scared locks and terrified whispers, and the grave face of the hastily-summoned doctor pressing through the frightened cluster of servants towards the chamber of death.

By and by Sir Edgar came over from Barfield, in great distress of mind concerning his brother's conduct, but the greater anxiety about the master of the house had absorbed all lesser troubles.

They had got the old man into his bed; he did not die at once; he lingered till the afternoon, but he was never conscious again. At three o'clock he died, and Norman led the weeping Stella away from his death-bed.

These two, who had comforted each other throughout these terrible hours of horror and misery, had no other consolation upon earth now save each other.

Oh! how horrible it was to Stella to pass along the passages and staircases all wreathed for the marriage festivities with satin ribbons, and trails of flowers and greenery: to see the long table laid out in the great dining-room below, and the waiters, with white and horrified faces, clearing away the preparations for the wedding-feast! And then there was the open door of Cecily's room, and her boxes standing already packed in the middle of the floor.

"She has killed him—she has killed him!" moaned Stella in her misery. "Oh! Norman, what did she do it for? How could she deal him such a cruel blow?"

Stella, in the absorption of her grief, did not even think of how great an alteration in her own life Cecily's conduct was likely to effect.

"She could not have known that he had heart disease," said Norman, gravely; "She could never have realized that such a shock would kill him."

But Dr. Graham, who stood by the sorrowing cousins, and who heard the words, remembered very well that Cecily knew all about her grandfather's heart-disease, and he could have told them so, had he not been too kind-hearted to make unnecessary mischief in the already afflicted family.

"What did she say to you in that letter?" asked Norman of his cousin, as he stood at the door of her room with her.

"I think you ought to read it," said Stella.

She went into her room and found it, and bringing it out to him, placed it in his hands.

"Thank you," said Norman, simply.

And then he took the letter out-of-doors and read it by himself in the garden among the budding trees and the carolling birds, and all the bright summer sights and sounds that were going on without, just the same as if death and sorrow did not come to visit Wrexham Hall.

CHAPTER XXXII.

BY THE FOUNTAIN.

This was Cecily's letter to her sister:

"MY DEAR STELLA,

"I suppose you will be very much shocked and horrified at me when you find out that I have run away from home with Walter Dyson. I think long ago you must have guessed that I had some secret which I was keeping from you, and now the time has come when I must tell you the truth. Last winter, when I stayed with the Haleys, I met Walter Dyson in Paris. We fell in love with each other, and he proposed to me. But Walter is a younger son, and I had nothing. Marriage under such circumstances would have been folly. To be poor, you know, would never have suited me; the most devoted husband would weary me out in six weeks had I to live in a cottage with him. Yet I was fond enough of Walter to be unwilling to give him up. Then it came into my head that I had only to promise to marry Norman in order to get our grandfather's money. I did not much think about the future, nor where it would lead me to: but I proposed to Walter that we should cancel our engagement, and that I should go to Wrexham, and feign to consent to marry our cousin—for I knew that you had refused him, and therefore it would not be taking anything from you. Well, Walter did not like the plan at all, not from any scruples of conscience, but because he is very jealous. The only way in which I could gain his consent was by agreeing secretly to marry him at once, in order that, he said, I might be bound irrevocably to him. We were married at the English Chapel in Paris. I left Madame Halevy's [illegible] on the very day of my wedding.

"Two college friends of Walter's witnessed the ceremony, and one of them gave away. Afterwards we crossed over to England, and spent three days in London together. Walter and I came down home together, and on the evening of my strange appearance at Wrexham, when you were so startled and puzzled at my unexpected arrival on foot outside your window, my husband had just dropped me, not a hundred yards from the house, from the fly in which he was going on to Barfield.

"Well, now, you can easily guess the rest. I have not had a very happy time of it, as you may imagine. What with working out my plans, and pretending to be fond of Norman, and having to meet Walter at all hours of the day and night, to keep him in good temper; and then having to elude Mrs. Finch, whose keen eyes began to suspect me; you may imagine that I have had my hands pretty full. Do you remember the night we dined at Barfield, when Walter took me in for dinner? You may guess what a good joke the whole thing was to me; and yet, I assure you, I have had many a sleepless night and many an anxious day, especially since that horrible Finch has taken to watch me; for if she had found me out and betrayed me to any of you, all my trouble would have been thrown away.

"Well, now it is all over, and grandpapa's will is signed; and by the time you get this letter, Walter and I will be away on the road to France, and Norman will have learnt that the whole of my engagement to him has been a farce. As he does not care a farthing about me, and is over head and ears in love with—well, I won't say whom!—I don't think it even necessary to apologize to him for taking myself off.

"And now, Stelle, I have only to ask your forgiveness. Don't think worse of me than you can help, and when all this has blown over, I hope some day to come over to England and to have a good laugh with you over the whole story.

"Your affectionate sister,

"CECILY."

The letter fluttered from Norman's hand to the ground, and a strong feeling of disgust took possession on him. Selfish, unprincipled, and shameless—how different was Cecily from Stella! Not a vestige of remorse for her duplicity and her deceit—not a particle of shame for her love of wealth and the greed with which she had grasped at the money of which she was in truth defrauding Stella—only a light wish that they might enjoy a "good laugh" over the discreditable story, and an unseemly reading of the "joke" it had been to outwit and deceive all her relations and friends.

Nothing could exceed the contempt which Norman felt towards her, excepting his own deep thankfulness for having escaped from such a wife.

Cecils had in a postcript given an address to which she entreated her sister to write, within the next few days, to tell her what had happened at Wrexham after her departure. It was at an hotel at Rouen, and there she stated that she and her husband would remain for a fortnight, and look anxiously for news from home.

In point of fact, the success of Cecily's whole scheme depended upon the news she was to receive from Wrexham; if her grandfather lived, he would certainly alter his will. But if he died—Cecily was ashamed to own even to her own heart, how earnestly she desired that her wicked scheme might have succeeded.

There came a telegram from Stella to the hotel at Rouen on the very day after their arrival there. Oh! how Cecily trembled as she opened it—and how the words danced before her eyes before she could read them!

But there they were, as plain as daylight before her:

"Grandpapa is dead—the news has killed him—the funeral will be on Friday—will you come home?"

"Everything is safe!" said Cecily, white with agitation, to her husband, "but I won't go home for the whole world—I should feel like a murderess!" she added shuddering.

"Nonsense," said her husband "you have nothing to do with his death at all; an old man with heart-disease may drop down dead any day. You must not think of it any longer—the money is all right, they will telegraph to us again, of course, as soon as the will is read."

So Mr. and Mrs. Walter Dyson waited at the pleasant city on the Seine, and beguiled the days of waiting by many excursions in the neighborhood, and many rambles through the streets and churches of the interesting old town.

On the Friday, there was, however, no telegram, and Cecily began to feel uneasy.

"You will hear to-morrow morning; they will write," said her husband, consolingly. "Don't fidget yourself about it—it is quite sure to be all right—there is nothing to be anxious about—you are sure to have a letter in the morning."

Saturday morning came, and with it a black edged envelope with the Loughton postmark. Cecily tore it open breathlessly, and remained speechless, staring at it.

"Well, what is it?" said Walter, taking it from her hand.

And then Cecily uttered a wild cry of despair, flung up her arms madly into the air, and then fell down prone and unconscious into a heap at her husband's feet.

This was the letter:—

"MY DEAR MRS. DYSON,

"I have great pleasure in writing to tell you that your dear sister has inherited the whole of your grandfather's fortune, with the exception of the house, furniture, pictures, plate, &c., and twenty thousand pounds which are left Mr. Allingham. The greater portion of his fortune was originally left to you, but by a codioil to the will, it was so left conditionly only upon your marriage with your cousin; failing that, it reverts to your sister; under the circumstances, of course, you are quite unprovided for.

"Your sincere friend,

"HARRIET FINCH."

* * * *

Two months have passed away since Mr. King's death, and Stella King and Mrs. Finch now are the only inhabitants of Wrexham Hall.

Directly after the funeral, Norman had gone away. He had expressed a wish that Stella and Mrs. Finch would continue to make Wrexham their home for the present, but had said no further word about his future plans.

Stella remained therefore all alone. She sorrowed at first deeply for her grandfather and for her sister's treachery; but by and by another grief began to settle at her heart.

Why did not Norman come to her—what was there now to keep them apart! Had he forgotten his old love to her, and the passionate words he had spoken to her that day when he had rescued her from the gypsy on Loughton Common! Was all that a dream that is past to him? or had he been so thoroughly disgusted by her sister's conduct, that unconsciously he had recoiled from her also, and had included her in the just blame due only to Cecily?

Stella could not answer these questions to herself; but she was very sad, for Norman remained up in London, and neither wrote or came to her.

By and by an event happened which threw a little brightness and pleasure over her monotonous life. There was a wedding at Barfield, and Lily Finch was the bride; and no one rejoiced more sincerely in her happiness than did Stella, although her deep mourning precluded her from being at the ceremony. Lady Dyson had at last given her willing consent to Sir Edgar's marriage. It had been a great blow to her when his engagement to Lady Honoria had been broken off; but as she never quite understood the rights of it, she believed to her dying day that the Earl's daughter had behaved very badly to her son; and she felt such a sincere compassion for his supposed disappointment, that she was the more ready to listen patiently to him when he spoke to her about Lily.

"I suppose it is fate," said Lady Dyson, resignedly. "It is evident that it is to be, so I had better make the best of it. And after all, Lily is a dear girl, and she behaved wonderfully well during her illness."

So one fine June morning Lily was married to Edgar in Barfield Church, and amongst the handsomest of her wedding presents, there figured a diamond locket from Lady Honoria Rosett.

Mrs. Finch, of course, was very great on the occasion, and talked so incessantly afterwards of "my daughter Lady Dyson," that Stella got very tired of the subject. Mrs. Finch, of course, forgave her old scores against the Dysons in consequence of her daughter's marriage.

"I never thought he would have married her, you know," she explained to Stella; "and though I could see that Lily was foolish about him, I discouraged it in every way, thinking he meant nothing serious. However, I must say the girl played her game better than I gave her credit for.'

"I think her own sweetness and goodness is the only 'game' Lily has ever been guilty of," said Stella, a little indignantly.

Then, when the wedding was over, and the newly married couple gone away, and the neighborhood had settled down again after the commotion, Stella became very lonely and very sad. She received frequent letters from Cecily, but they were very unsatisfactory ones. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Dyson were drifting about from one gambling-place to another upon the Continent. Walter, apparently, had taken to Rouge-et-Noir as a profession—sometimes he won, but oftener he seemed to lose; and then Cecily wrote very despondingly. She was evidently far from happy—the love founded on selfishness and want of principle, which might have flourished and increased in sunshine and prosperous conditions, was fast perishing utterly under the cold winds of poverty and adversity.

Stella at last determined to do something substantial for her sister and her husband. Out of her own abundance she would provide for them. It was however, impossible to do this without consulting Norman; and so, after a great deal of hesitation, one day she wrote to him to his club in London, propounding her scheme of making to Cecily an annual allowance out of her own ample fortune, that might enable her to live in comfort if not in luxury, and she begged him to come down and see her, that she might consult with him about it.

The letter was sent, and two days went and no answer came. Stella was very unhappy.

One afternoon she sat alone on the edge of the stone basin in the garden. The fountain was still, and the clear pool shone in the sunshine—every little gold-fish looked like a jewel as it darted across the transparent water.

Stella looked down lazily at them, and dipped her white fingers into the basin. She did not hear the approaching footsteps across the lawn behind her, only all at once a shadow was thrown across the fountain, and looking up quickly, she found Norman standing by her side.

"Oh! Stella, what a long time you have been in sending for me!" he said reproachfully, as he took her hands in his; but his face was beaming with delight and happiness.

"In sending for you, Norman!" she repeated, wonderingly. "Did you expect me to do that!"

"Of course I did. Do you think I would have obtruded my own selfish hopes into your days of mourning for the old man you loved so well? I waited for you to write to me. Besides, you are a rich woman now."

"Oh, hush!" she interrupted, quickly. "Do not pain me by saying that!" and then, with a deep blush, she added, slowly, "Now, man, I would like to share all that money with you!"

"I only know of one way in which you can do that, my darling!" he said, with all the glow of his love in his eyes; and then he knelt down beside her, and put his arms around her, "Stella, will you not give me that long waited for kiss now, and with it your dear self?"

She bent her face, rosy as any flower, towards him in silence, and their lips met in a happiness too deep for words.

"Oh! Stella," he said, presently, "how much of our lives you and I have wasted! We might have been happy long ago!"

"Yes," said Stella, smiling out of the fullness of her content. "But then, we were playing in the dark, for we have all been at 'CROSS PURPOSES!'"

[THE END.]

Sir John Macdonald has subscribed twenty-five dollars towards the erection of new barracks at Kingston for the Salvation Army.

OUR SILK INDUS

The following interesting a ture and of silk manufactu given by the Montreal Her
The silk moth lays its eggs the mulberry tree upon whi lar feeds, and these caterpill coons from which the silk
ved. The eggs are hatched ent heated to the proper te ature. When the hatching ences, as soon as the youn ake their appearance a pape ith holes, and covered wi ves, is spread over the bas gs are placed, and in passing les to get at the mulberry ve themselves from their orms speedily settle on the igs of mulberry, and are thu ed to trays, and removed to illed

A NURSERY.

his is a dry room, the ter hich is regulated, and whic ated to purify the air from halations produced by the the caterpillars and the dec hich are not unfrequently ecautions are taken, fertile eases amongst the worms om wicker shelves are arra nient distances, lined wit hich the worms are placed.
rry leaves presented to the e chopped. Four meals a da rule, and luncheons betwee orms are particularly voracio al allowance for their subsist
The silk worms live in the m six to eight weeks, during moults or changes its skin t easing its size and voracity ult, and when fully grown i ches in length. When about kworms are provided with broom, heath, or other flexib om which they suspend the mming a few threads. By isting their bodies they grad emselves into a thick, silken

OVAL SHAPED COCOO

Specimens of these bushes coons appeared in the Londo 1851, like diminutive trees l uit.

The silk itself is a secretion bes, which terminate in a pr spinneret on the under lip illar. The two fine filamen gether by another secretion and, so that the apparently hich forms the cocoon is reall
The cocoons, when completed to warm water, which disso ous matter, causing the thre nd separate them. The end then found and placed upo e silk wound from off the coc called a bank. The length read obtained from a silke metimes from 750 to 1,150 le average length of 300 ya ounds of cocoons yield one p lk, from 200 to 250 cocoons und weight. About

ONE OUNCE OF SILK WORM will produce one hundred pound 6 pounds of mulberry leaves ar nt for the production of one oons, and each mulberry tree

00 pounds of leaves.

The Chinese were the first stood how to rear silkworms, hreads spun by them, and mar ilk thus obtained into articles rnament. Silk appears to hav y the Chinese and Japanese f memorial—even 2,000 years ag ncestors were naked savages orm moth and the mulberry act both natives of China, whe rought to Europe during the s n the reign of the Emperor Ju irst the culture of silk was Greece, particularly to the here it spread so much that Greece derived its modern Latin morus, a mulberry) from stance.

From Greece

THE SILK MANUFACTURE

nto Sicily, Italy, Spain and fi
As the breeding of this valua nly possible in warm climates ere is necessarily confined i taly, the south of France, and hese countries it is exported he United States and now here it is manufactured into extile fabrics.

In 1863 the firm of Belding
o. commenced the madufact ilks and twist at Rockville, hey have two mills, each 300 our storeys high. They have Northampton, Mass., for the f silk fabrics and hosiery, wit
New York, Boston, Philade
o, Cincinnati and St. Louis. mong the largest houses, i ctually the largest house, in t facture in the United States an ear the highest reputation.

In 1867 a branch of this estab
rganized in this city. Mr. F. esident member of the firm an he establishment, the business s under the style of

BELDING, PAUL AND C

for the purpose of manufact ilks, threads, ribbons, and h
At this time the production w he intention was so to speak way," the manufacture being f ounds per week. From this as rapidly developed into w ermed a nice business, no
,000 lbs. per week with a rap
tantly increasing demand fo arged production. At the c ecessary to observe caution, act that the fashions change as undesirable to have manuf n hand. No apprehension is his account, inasmuch as th eeds the supply. At first it as to procure skilled labor he ound necessary to import it f t Brockville, Conn., but, one radually returned to the Sta ese operatives, with the exc rman, consist of those engag d here. These consist of r of all nationalities, but princip
Canadians, who are found to b docile and excellent operatives.

THE BUILDINGS NOW I re two in number. One of

SILK INDUSTRIES.

The following interesting account of silk culture and of silk manufacture in Canada is given by the Montreal Herald:

The silk moth lays its eggs on the leaves of the mulberry tree upon which the caterpillars feeds, and these caterpillars form the cocoons from which the silk is manufactured. The eggs are hatched in an apartment heated to the proper temperature by artificial means. When the hatching process commences, as soon as the young caterpillars appear their appearance a paper perforated with holes, and covered with mulberry leaves, is spread over the basket in which the eggs are placed, and in passing through the paper to get at the mulberry leaves they free themselves from their shells. The worms speedily settle on the leaves and pieces of mulberry, and are thus easily transferred to trays, and removed to a cooler room which is a dry room, the temperature of which is regulated, and which is well ventilated to purify the air from the noisome exhalations produced by the excrements of the caterpillars and the decayed leaves. These are not unfrequently, unless due precautions are taken, fertile sources of diseases amongst the worms. In this room wicker shelves are arranged at convenient distances, lined with paper, on which the worms are placed. The mulberry leaves presented to the caterpillars are chopped. Four meals a day as a regular rule, and luncheons between, when the worms are particularly voracious, is the liberal allowance for their subsistence.

A NURSERY.

The silk worms live in the larval state for six to eight weeks, during which period they moult or changes its skin four times, increasing its size and voracity with every change, and when fully grown is about three inches in length. When about to spin, the silkworms are provided with little bushes of broom, heath, or other flexible substance, in which they suspend themselves after spinning a few threads. By continually moving their bodies they gradually envelop themselves into a thick, silken

OVAL SHAPED COCOON.

Specimens of these bushes laden with cocoons appeared in the London Exhibition of 1851, like diminutive trees bearing golden fruit.

The silk itself is a secretion of a pair of glands, which terminate in a prominent pore in the spinneret on the under lip of the caterpillar. The two fine filaments are glued together by another secretion from a small gland, so that the apparently single thread which it forms the cocoon is really double.

The cocoons, when completed, are thrown into warm water, which dissolves the gluey matter, causing the threads to adhere, and separate them. The end of the thread is then found and placed upon a reel, and the silk wound from off the cocoon into what is called a bank. The length of the silken thread obtained from a silken cocoon is sometimes from 750 to 1,150 feet long, or of an average length of 300 yards. Twelve pounds of cocoons yield one pound of raw silk, from 200 to 250 cocoons going to the pound weight. About will produce one hundred pounds of cocoons; 1,000 pounds of mulberry leaves are food sufficient for the production of one pound of cocoons, and each mulberry tree yields about 100 pounds of leaves.

ONE OUNCE OF SILKWORMS' EGGS

The Chinese were the first who understood how to rear silkworms, unravel the threads spun by them, and manufacture the silk thus obtained into articles of dress and ornament. Silk appears to have been worn by the Chinese and Japanese from time immemorial—even 2,000 years ago, when our ancestors were naked savages. The silkworm moth and the mulberry tree are in fact both natives of China, whence both were brought to Europe during the sixth century in the reign of the Emperor Justinian. At first the culture of silk was confined to Greece, particularly to the Peloponesus, where it spread so much that this part of Greece derived its modern name Morea (Morus, a mulberry) from that circumstance. From Greece to Sicily, Italy, Spain and finally France. Though the breeding of this valuable insect is only possible in warm climates the silk culture is necessarily confined in Europe to Italy, the south of France, and Spain. From these countries it is exported to England, the United States and now to Canada, where it is manufactured into threads and other fabrics.

THE SILK MANUFACTURE SPREAD

In 1865 the firm of Belding Brothers & Co. commenced the madufacture of sewing silk and twist at Rrockville, Conn., where they have two mills, each 300 feet long and four storeys high. They have also mills at Northampton, Mass., for the manufacture of silk fabrics and hosiery, with warehouses in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cincinnati and St. Louis. They rank among the largest houses, if they are not actually the largest house, in the silk manufacture in the United States and their goods for the highest reputation.

In 1867 a branch of this establishment was organized in this ciyt. Mr. F. Paul beoming resident member of the firm and manager of the establishment, the business being carried on under the style of

BELDING, PAUL AND CO.,

for the purpose of manufacturing sewing silks, threads, ribbons, and handkerchiefs. At this time the production was limited as the intention was so to speak "to feel, the way," the manufacture being from 50 to 100 pounds per week. From this, however, it has rapidly developed into what may be termed a nice business, now producing 1,000 lbs. per week with a rapidly and constantly increasing demand for a more enlarged production. At the outset it was necessary to observe caution, owing to the fact that the fashions change rapidly and it is undesirable to have manufactured stock on hand. No apprehension is now felt on this account, inasmuch as the demand exceeds the supply. At first it was impossible to procure skilled labor here, and it was found necessary to import it from the mills at Brockville, Conn., but, one by one these gradually returned to the States, and now the operatives, with the exception of the foreman, cousist of those engaged and trained here. These consist of representatives of all nationalities, but principaly of Frenchcanadians, who are found to be very quick, docile and excellent operatives.

THE BUILDINGS NOW IN USE

are two in number. One of these, built of brick and iron, fronts on St. George street, being number 30. It is 45x75 feet, four storeys high, with basement. The basement is used as a machine shop and storeroom, the ground floor as an office and sample room, the second floor as a spinning room, and the fourth as a weaving room. The machinery is operated by steam power, which is obtained from the adjoinang establishment of Messrs. Rogers & King. The second building is located at St. Gabriel Locks, on the south bank of the Lachine Canal, adjacent to the McGee Bridge. It has a frontage on the canal of 100 feet, with a depth of 45 feet, is of brick and is four storeys high. It was formerly used as Tees' chair factory, and has been altered and fitted up for its present purpose.

THE MOTIVE POWER

here is derived from the canal, the machinery being operated by a water wheel. Great inconvenience is experienced from having the works thus divided up, and to obviate this the firm is now erecting a new building at the cnnal, running parallel with the one it now possesses there. This will be 160 feet long by 45 wide, four storeys high, with an entrance tower in the centre, in which will be placed closets, wash rooms, &c., &c., for the use of the operatives. Between the new and the old building there will be a clear space serving as a passage 47 feet long. Each floor will be unobstructed from end to end so as to secure a perfect light, the floors above being supported by two rows of pillars which will form an alley, on each side of which will be ranged the different machines. The first floor will be devoted to spinning, the second to winding, the third to doubling, and the fourth to weaving. While the building will by a plain structure in so far as appearance is concerned, it will be fitted up with the latest and most approved appliances. There will also be a dye house on the canal front, separate from the mills, covering a space of 2,200 square feet. There will be two boilers, 5x16 feet, for supplying the necessary steam required in the operations.

Having described the buildings, the next and by far the most interesting is

THE MANUFCTURE.

The raw silk is obtained from the New York House. On its arrival here the raw threads are sorted, an operation which requires a quick eye and proficiency. This is done by the eye. All the threads of the same cocoon are not alike but vary considerably at times. It is then soaked in water at a temperature of 110° F. to soften the natural gum and facilitate the process of winding. This done, it is wound on bobbins, an operation which though apparently simple requires great care, owing to the fact that the silk thread is very fine. It is then doubled, that is two or more threads according to the purpose for which it is intended, are joined together. It is then put on the spinning machine and spun, after which it is twisted, which consists in doubling and spinning three of these threads, the twist being reversed to make the thread stronger. The number of threads depends upon the

FINENESS OF THE RAW SILK, and also upon the character of the goods to be woven. It is then taken to the stretching machine, the patent for which is controlled by the firm, to remove the rough or knotty appearance which appears. It does not, as its name might imply, stretch the silk, it evens it out, removing the lumpy appearance, and imparting to it a uniform tension. It is made up into skeins preparatory to being dyed. This is done by reeling, each skein consisting of 350 yards. It is then put upon delicate scales, and its weight marked, after which it is ready for the dyer. It has now reached the condition of thrown silk and the process is completed. The is the next adopted. In this there are three hundred colors, requiring a large stock and assortment of dyes to be kept on hand. From the dye-house the silk is again taken to be spooled in the lengths and sizes required. The dyer first boils the silk in soap and water, to free it from any remaining gum, and to give it a more lustrous appearance. By the boiling process the silk, if pure, looses about 24 per cent. of its weight, so that a pound of silk will weigh about 12 ounces. This is the reason that American silk is put up in 12 ounces to the pound. Sewing silk thread runs from 150 yards to 1,800 yards to the ounce, while silk for ribbons, which is much finer, runs from 6,000 yards to 10,000 yards per ounce.

DYEING PROCESS

THE COLORED DYES.

The ribbon manufacture is one from which more is expected than that of handkerchiefs, plain goods in the latter article being only now made up.

The operatives employed average 300. The remuneration to these is $2 per week for green hands from the day of engagement, to $6 and $7 per week for more advanced ones.

The Montreal firms derives no little advantage from its connection with the American house referred to, from the fact that they can procure from them the newest and latest patterns and all desirable information, in addition to which they allow the American firm to test new appliances and when success attends them they avail themselves of the others experience.

This firm manufactures here the same brands of sewing silks that have become so universally popular in the States, and if ladies see that Belding, Paul & Co's. name is stamped in the end of the spool they may depend on getting an excellent article.

Nearly all the silk manufactured is for the Canadian market, the remainder being sent to Newfoundland, where there is an excellent market, considering the number of the population.

The firm have had samples of their silk manufactures on exhibition at Toronto and St. John, where we understand they took high honors.

The distinguished Arctic explorer Sir George Nares thinks there is still hope that Lieutenant Greely may have reached Port Faulke late in the season.

A Chicago maiden has embroidered the motto, "Walk in Love" on tarleton, done with 100 cotton, very fine. After she gets a fellow she will embroider in a comma after the "Walk in," and then it will be superfine.

SHOCKING ACCIDENT.

A Grand Trunk Employee Instantly Killed at Toronto—A Most Horrible Spectacle.

An accident of a shocking nature recently occurred in the old Great Western Depot, at the foot of Yonge street, Toronto, by which a Grand Trunk employee named John Johnston was instantly killed. A short time ago a bridge was constructed inside the depot, about half way between the two ends and extending from one platform to the other across the building. Underneath this structure the trains, when shunted into the depot, pass, leaving not quite five feet of standing room for brakesmen on the top of the trains. Johnston, who was employed as Esplanade conductor for shunting trains, was standing on a car near the centre of a train which was moving out of the station. His back was turned toward the engine, and not thinking he would have to stoop so as to avoid striking the bridge he stood erect until WITHIN A FEW FEET OF THE DANGER.

The shouts of some workmen who were standing on the platform aroused him, but as he was just in the act of turning and making a stoop the girder of the bridge struck him on the side on the head. The force and suddennness of the blow knocked him off his feet and precipitated him between two of the cars. He managed to cling to the coupling works for a second or two, but soon he dropped underneath on the right track. Several wheels passed over his body in the region of the abdomen, severing it almost in two, and spattering the track in the vicinity with his blood. Death was instantaneous. When the train had passed was presented to the horrified bystanders who crowded around. The unfortunate man was almost completely cut in two, the two portions hanging together by shreds of flesh and clothing. The remains were taken up and removed to the morgue. The deceased was a man well up in years, and leaves a large family of children most of whom are grown up. He was during his whole lifetime a railroad man, beginning life on English roads. For twenty-seven years he has been in the employ of the Grand Trunk Railway, and was also a trusted and painstaking employee.

A REVOLTING SPECTACLE

THE INQUEST.

An inquest was held yesterday evening at the morgue, at which Coroner Duncan presided. A number of persons were examined, the majority of whom were employees of the Grand Trunk. The most important evidence was given by Edwin Till, David N. Black, and J. Thompson, driver of the engine attached to the train. Till stated that he saw Johnson standing on top of the train as it was moving out of the station. Seeing that he did not appear to notice the bridge, he and some fellow-employees shouted to him. He was, however, warned too late; he was struck by the girder and knocked between the cars and killed almost immediately. Other eye-witnesses were examined whose statements were similar to Till's. The Jury, after retiring, brought in the following verdict:—"That the said John Johnson came to his death by accident by being struck by an overhead bridge at the Great Western Station, and that the jury find that the said bridge was too low to allow a man on a car to pass under, and that the bridge should be raised higher."

Testimony to Darwin.

Dr. W. B. Carpenter, the great physiologist, in the Modern Review, says:—There is no need to go back now over the melancholy story of the slanderous attacks which were made on the greatest interpreter of the "order of (organic) nature" who has ever stood between its author and man; but they ought to be remembered as a lesson to the theologians of the future. No one has now ventured to throw a stone at Darwin's grave, since were any to do so it would bring upon him general condemnation. The revolution in public feeling of this country, which has been silently and almost insensibly going on, but of which his departure from among us has brought out the manifestation, has been a surprise no less to his friends than it must have been to his former opponents. The highest eulogies have been pronounced upon him from pulpits in which he was once reviled; and his life no less than his word has been held up as a model for imitation where his character as a man was formerly included in the depreciation of his achievements as a philosopher. . . Those who knew Charles Darwin most intimately are unanimous in their appreciation of the unsurpassed nobility and beauty of his whole character. In him there was "no other side." Not only was he the philosopher who has wrought a greater revolution in human thought within a quarter of a century than any man of our time—or, perhaps, of any time—and has given what is proving the death-blow to theological systems,—which had been clinging yet more tenaciously to men's shoulders because of the efforts made to throw them off—but as a man he exemplified in his own life that true religion which is deeper, wider, loftier, than any theology. For this not only inspired him with the devotion to truth, which was the master passion of his great nature, but made him the most admirable husband, brother, and father, the kindest friend, neighbor, and master, the genuine lover not only of his fellow-man, but of every creature.

He Was Such a Fresh Young Man.

"Aw, yas, Miss Eveline, you knaw I came to the sea shoah because, you knaw, I felt that I needed such a twip, you knaw."

"Ah, indeed, Mr. Du Dee?"

"Yas, Miss Eveline."

"No doubt you will be benefitted. Some people need salt air more than anything else."

Then everybody snickered, and Mr. D. wondered what was funny in a simple health report like that.

Gone Never to Return.

GARDINER, ME.—Mr. Daniel Gray, a prominent lumber merchant writes that his wife had severe rheumatic pains; so severe as to render her unable to sleep. From the first application of the famous German Remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, she experienced unspeakable relief, and in two hours the pain had entirely gone.

FORTY BILLION GERMS.

A Wonderful Theory that Concerns the Welfare, Happiness and Life of Everyone.

In his quiet and cosy library at the close of a busy day sat a gentleman and his wife, he absorbed in a new book and she in the newspaper. Quickly glancing toward her husband, she asked, at a certain point in the article,

"John, what is the germ theory?"

"The germ theory—well—yes; just look in the encyclopedia under 'Germ,' that will explain it so much better than I can."

Accordingly his wife opened the book at the word named and read: Germ Theory of Disease—A theory advanced by the ablest and best investigators and scientists of the times. It supposes the surface of the earth, the air and water to be inhabited to a greater or less extent with a peculiar growth of the lowest form of fungi—commonly termed bacteria, whose power of reproduction, under favorable conditions, is so great that a single germ will increase to fifteen million in twenty-four hours time, and unchecked in its increase would grow to a mass of eight hundred tons, in three days' time, if space and food be furnished. There is no condition under which it can be said to be absent, unless it be from fire or air filtered through cotton-batting in numerous layers. A single drop of water containing a germ, put into water, boiled, filtered and thus freed from bacteria, will grow murky in a day or two from the development of new germs. When it is considered that it requires about forty billion to weigh one grain, some remote idea can be had of the capacity of germ reproduction. Professor John Tyndall, in a late work, elaborately treats of the influence of germs in the propagation of disease and charges upon this cause, the inception and development of very many of the ailments most injurious to man. Professor Pasteur, an eminent French savant, has carried his original and beautiful experiments so far, and from them deduced such practical results as very greatly to diminish the number of cases of anthrax among sheep and chicken cholera among fowl,—proving his theory that these are essentially and actually germ diseases. These germs are carried into the system through the lungs, the stomach and possibly the skin, but through the lungs chiefly. Once in the system, they begin to develop, poisoning the blood, invading the nerve centres, disturbing the functional activity of the great organs of the body and inducing a general impairment of the vital processes. They are the cause of fevers, rheumatism, Bright's disease of the kidneys, pneumonia, blood poisoning, liver disease, diphtheria and many other ailments. Lately Professor Koch, a famous German physician, has proved that consumption of the lungs is due to this cause—the presence of a peculiar germ.

When the circulation is bounding, the nerves elastic and the system all aglow with life and energy, the germs seem to develop poorly, if at all. But with weakened nerves, poor digestion or malassimilation of food or a lowering of vitality from any cause, a change ensues, and in this impoverished and weakened fluid the germ finds a genial home and develops until symptoms of disease are distinctly manifested. This is seen in the everyday experience of all. The healthy man resists the influences around him and does not take cold, while those whose systems have become weak from any cause readily contract colds. This is on the same principle as the germ theory. The germs attack any weakened spot in the body, and fixing themselves upon it, begin their propagation. It is plain therefore that it is only by fortifying the weak portions of the body that the germs of disease can be resisted and driven from the system. But this has proved almost an impossibility heretofore, and it has been the study of physicians for years how best to accomplish it. Within the past few years, however, a preparation has been attracting great attention, not only throughout the entire land, but among the medical profession and scientists generally, which is based upon this theory, and it may safely be said, no remedy has ever been found which can so successfully place the system in a condition to resist the germs of disease as Warner's Safe Cure. This article is unquestionably the best and most efficient that has ever been discovered for this purpose, and—

"John, say, John! does the encyclopedia advertise Warner's Safe Cure?"

"I should not wonder, dear, it's a grand remedy, and that pamphlet we received the other day stated that Dr. Gunn, of the United States Medical College, endorsed it. At all events the wonderful cures it is accomplishing entitle it to be honorably noted among the great discoveries of the present century."

However the facts above stated may be, the truth remains, that the germ theory of disease is the correct one and that the great remedy mentioned is the only one which has ever been found that can put the system in a condition to kill these germs before they obtain a hold upon the body, and undermine the life.

Canon Farrar has been a total abstainer from wine and spirits for six years, and John Bright has been for ten.

True merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increasing sales; as a prominent druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits." It is the grand specific for diseases of Blood, Liver and Kidneys. 25,000 bottles have been sold, during the last three months. (34)

There is as much variety in millinery ornaments as there is in shapes and materials.

There is no remedy known to medical science that is more positive in its effect, to cure Cholera Morbus, Colic, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cholera Infantum, and all Bowel Complaints than Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. (35)

The baton used by Sir Michael Costa for years, and tipped with a coral effigy of Garibaldi, together with the manuscript scores of five operas and four ballets, has been given by him to the Naples College of Music.

It is a fact that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has more well-earned testimonials of praise for its virtues in curing Cholera, Colic, Cholera Infantum, Dysentery, etc., than all other remedies of that class combined. It will stand investigation. (36)

From MR. WILLIAM MAGRATH.
Erindale, Credit P. O., Jan. 8th, 1883.

MY DEAR SUTHERLAND: Some two months since I became so afflicted with Rheumatism of the neck and right shoulder as to render my right arm nearly powerless. I determined to try your "Rheumatine" and the result is that I am now free from pain, and enjoy the full use of my arm. My general health is also much improved by the use of the medicine. The first two bottles relieved me—the third bottle freed me from all pain.

WM. MAGRATH

J. N. Sutherland, St. Catharines.

Judge Black left by his will $2,000 to his grandson on condition that he should drop the name of Jeremiah Sullivan and assume that of Henry Vantriess.

C. S. Judson, Wallaceburg, says Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, for Summer Complaints is a splendid preparation, and I do not know of a single case in which it has not given satisfaction, but on the contrary have had many testimonials to its efficacy. (32)

Mr. Du Maurier so dislikes to be personal that if he finds he has a particular individual in mind while drawing, he immediately makes a thorough sketch of that person, so as to be able to avoid a likeness in his subject.

Age should always command respect. the case of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry it certainly does, for 25 years that has been the standard remedy with the people, for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery. Diarrhœa, Colic and all Bowel Complaints, (33)

Goes without saying—the deaf and dum alphabet.

The use of Pills, Salts, Castor Oil, &c. and other nauseous, griping Cathartics is unnecessary, as a pleasant substitute is found in Dr. Carson's Bitters, which act as a Cathartic without griping or causing nausea. All druggists sell it. 50 cents a bottle.

The Queen has had telephone wires run from Balmoral to Abergeldie, the Scotch place of the Prince of Wales, and to adjacent places, and between Windsor Castle, Frogmore Garden, and the Farm.

Show is not substance, realities govern wise men and the numberless certificates of wise men show that the great petroleum Hair Renewer and Dressing Carboline is a stern reality.

Tom Hughes, who, by-the-way, is now sixty years old, says that eventually everybody on the other will come over to America to make money, and everybody here will go over there to spend it.

The navy blue, seal brown, olive green and other rich dark colors of the Triangle Dyes are as perfect as the bright shades. They never disappoint the user. 10 cents.

The Chinese Minister to France, Marquis Tseng, having seemed disinclined to treat with the French Ministers, believing them insincere, M. Ferry arranged with the English Earl Grenville to act for them.

THE MOST SALEABLE HORSE.—Mr. Joseph Lamb, one of Chicago's best known extensive horse dealers, in paying a tribute to the superiority of the grade Percheron-Norman horses, said: "Most of my trade is with lumbermen and in the city. I handle more Normans than of any other breed, because they are more salable and eagerly sought after, the only drawback to the business now being that I cannot get them fast enough. They are possessed of more endurance than other breeds, give good satisfaction, and wear well; have better feet, last better on our pavements, and are more easily acclimated than any other breed. It is very rarely you get a Norman horse with bad feet. They are good, cheerful walkers, and more attractive and finer looking, with better action, than the other large breeds."—Chicago Tribune. M. W. Dunham, Wayne, Ill., has imported from France and bred in their purity about 1,400 Percheron-Normans, and 390 of them within the past few months, particular attention being given to pedigree and French record.

Miss Booth, of the Salvation Army, was forbidden to hold services in Geneva. She violated the order twice in twenty-four hours, was arrested in each instance, and conducted by the police to the frontier of the canton.

WHAT! LIMPING YET? Why should you go limping around when Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor will remove your corns in a few days. It will give almost instant relief and a guaranteed cure in the end. Be sure you get the genuine Putnam's Corn Extractor, made by Polson & Co., Kingston, for many substitutes are being offered, and it is always better to get the best. Safe, sure, painless.

The Comte de Chambord's will began as follows: "I die a good Christian and a Catholic. I feel no hatred for any one. I forgive all those who have injured me, and I beg all those whom I have wronged in any way to pardon me. I pray Almighty God to save my soul."

Mrs. J. McPhee, Appin, writes:—During the last eight years I have used almost every medicine recommended for Biliousness, but found nothing equal to Carson's Bitters. If you suffer try it. Price 50 cents.

The ordinary restaurant waiter measures all his customers from tip to tip.

They all tell the same story. Mr. W. Thompson, Jeweller, Delhi, suffered for years from Dyspepsia, got no relief until he used Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. He says "it was just the medicine I needed. It has cured me."

A.P 147

St. Jacobs Oil

THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY
FOR PAIN.
Relieves and cures
RHEUMATISM,
Neuralgia,
Sciatica, Lumbago,
BACKACHE,
HEADACHE, TOOTHACHE,
SORE THROAT,
QUINSY, SWELLINGS,
SPRAINS,
Soreness, Cuts, Bruises,
FROSTBITES,
BURNS, SCALDS,
And all other bodily aches and pains.
FIFTY CENTS A BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists and Dealers. Directions in 11 languages.
The Charles A. Vogeler Co.
(Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.)
Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

Mrkdale monthly Cattle FAIR.

A regular Monthly Cattle Fair will be held in the Agricultural Grounds, Markdale, as follows:

—1883—

SATURDAY	.....	Aug. 4
Do.	.....	Sept.
Do.	.....	Oct.
Do.	.....	Nov. 3
Do.	.....	Dec. 8

MARKDALE Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats!

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and delivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23, 1882. 80-1y

Health is Wealth!

Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment, a guaranteed specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Fits, Nervous Neuralgia, Headache, Nervous Prostration caused by the use of alcohol or tobacco, Wakefulness, Mental Depression, Softening of the Brain, resulting in Insanity and leading to misery, decay and death, Premature Old Age, Barrenness, Loss of Power in either sex, Involuntary losses and Spermatorrhœa, caused by over-exertion of the brain, self-abuse or over-indulgence. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser a written guarantee to refund the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by A. Turner &Co., sole authorized Agent for Markdale Ont. John C. West &Co. sole proprietor Toronto.Ont.

ROBT. ASKIN,

MARKDALE,

Has opened out a First-Class

UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT.

And therefore has supplied a want long felt,

COFFINS,

CASKETS,

SHROUDS,

and all

FUNERAL FURNISHINGS

supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse

for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—

PICTURE FRAMING

Done on short notice.

ROBT. ASKIN.

ALEX KAY

BooT & ShoE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions and Positively cures Piles. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by A. Turner & Co

AUCTION SALE

—OF—

Valuable Village Property

—IN THE—

VILLAGE OF HOLLAND CENTRE

—IN THE—

County of Grey.

There will be sold on Friday, the

Second Day of November,

1883, at One o'clock in the afternoon, on the premises, in the Village of Holland Centre, by virtue of a Power of Sale, contained in a certain mortgage, which will be produced at the Sale, the following property:—

Under mortgage from George Skene, village lot No. 25, on the west side of the Toronto and Sydenham Road, in the Village of Holland Centre, containing one fifth of an acre, more or less, being part of lot 31 in the 1st Range, south-west of the Toronto, and Sydenham Road, in the Township of Holland, in the County of Grey.

The following improvements are said to be on the premises: A frame dwelling with outbuildings.

Terms—One tenth of the purchase money to be paid down on the day of sale. For balance terms will be made known at the sale.

For further particulars apply to

JONES BROS. & MACKENZIE,
Solicitors, Masonic Hall, Toronto.
or to John Lyons, Esq., Markdale.

Toronto, Oct. 4th, 1883.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Wilson Benson

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.
DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

WILSON BENSON.

July 6, 1882.

THE BEST PLACE

TO GET

A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery,

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NTH. GOING SOUTH

Read Down. A.M.	P.M.		Read Up. A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	Toronto	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	Cardwell Junc.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	Orangeville...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	Mount Forest..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	Teeswater	5 00	2 45
11 50	8 20	Flesherton	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 35	Markdale,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	Owen Sound....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNicoll, Gen. Pass. Agt. — Edmund Wragge, General Manager

CARD OF THANKS.

As I am now about leaving Priceville and having been engaged in various branches of business for over twenty years, in this village, I take this opportunity of kindly thanking all my old friends and the public generally, for the very liberal amount of patronage they have bestowed upon me in all the various branches of business in which I have been engaged. I hope you will give my successor in business a hearty welcome when he comes among you, and I also wish that he may prove himself worthy of all the support you may favor him with, and at the end of twenty more years he may be able to do what I am now doing, viz.: thanking you again for your very great liberality.

I remain, dear friends,
Yours very truly,
ALEX. WEBSTER.

Priceville, Oct. 3, 1883.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Obligation is thraldom, and thraldom is hateful.—Hobbes.

Quick, Now.—You can have either the weekly Mail or Globe with the Standard to the end of 1884 for $2, Cash. Be alive and secure the balance of the year free which is worth 50 cents.

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate. It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

The worst of all knaves are those who mimic their former honesty.—Lavater.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

The weakest spot of any man is where he thinks himself the strongest.—Emmons.

Ram lambs for sale.—A choice lot of South Down grade ram lambs for sale at H D Irwin's and Thos. Irwin's a short distance East of Markdale.

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

He that calls a man ungrateful sums up all the evil that a man can be guilty of.—Swift.

If you are sick take Rejuvenator Bitters to make you well, and if you are well take the Bitters to keep you well, sold by Smith, the barber, and he is continually selling them.

FORTUNES FOR FARMERS AND MECHANICS.

Thousands of dollars can be saved by using proper judgement in taking care of the health of your self and family. If you are Bilious, have sallow complexion, poor appetite, low and depressed spirits, and generally debilitated, do not delay a moment, but go at once and procure a bottle of those Electric Bitters, which never fail to cure, and that for the trifling sum of fifty cents.—Tribune. Sold by A. Turner & Co.

People seldom improve when they have no other model but themselves to copy after.—Goldsmith.

If you wish to subscribe for the Globe, Mail, Star, Farmer's Advocate or Montreal Witness or renew your subscription for any of the above papers hand in your name and subscription to this office.

WOMAN'S TRUE FRIEND.

A friend in need is a friend in deed. This none can deny, especially when assistance is rendered when one is sorely afflicted with diseases, more particularly those complaints and weakness so common to our female population. Every woman should know that Electric Bitters are Woman's true friend, and will positively restore her to health, even when all other remedies fail. A single trial always proves our assertion. They are pleasant to the taste, and only cost fifty cents a bottle. Sold by A. Turner & Co.

Society is the atmosphere of souls; and we necessarily imbibe from it something which is either infectious or healthful.—Hall.

True merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increased sales, as a prominent Druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits;" It is the grand specific for diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys, 25.000 bottles have been sold during the last three months. For sale by A. Turner & Co. Markdale.

NEVER GIVE UP.

If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the rapid improvement that will follow; you will be inspired with new life; strength and activity will return; pain and misery will cease, and henceforth you will rejoice in the praise of Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by A. Turner & Co., Markdale.

The Guelph "Mercury" says that Mr. Duncan Martin, Badenoch, has quite a curiosity in his orchard, being an apple tree containing fifty-two varieties of apples. On some of the limbs there are from four to five different grafts. One spring, a good four or five years ago, Mr. Martin was sick and not able to work, and this was how he employed himself.

A Virginia sheep-breeder, who prefers Shropshire Downs, had ninty lambs from sixty-seven ewes, and the previous year he had one hundred and twenty-one lambs from eighty ewes raising one hundred and fourteen of the lambs. The secred of his success is that he never allows a ewe to breed before she is two years old, and he disposes of her when she reaches the age of six years.

ARTEMESIA WAREHOUSE

FLESHERTON STATION.

Dry Goods, Hardware, Crockery, Boots and Shoes

Groceries, Provisions, &c. Stock kept full and well assorted with new goods received every week.

MY BRANCH STORE AT EUGENIA

replenished with new goods every week. For sale cheap for cash or produce.

My Saw mill, Shingle Factoty, and Lime Kiln

AT LITTLE FALLS, ARE IN OPERATION.

All kinds Saw ogs bought at the Mill or sawn on shares.

Lumber, Lath, Broom Handles, Shingles and Lime for sale.

WM. HOGG.

Robt. S. Rae,

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

—AT—

Bulmers Photograph Gallery

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we are not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

CALCINED PLASTER,

—OR—

Plaster Paris,

One car of Nova Scotia, all best and cheapest in the market.

Machine Oils and Paint

OILS AT CLOSE PRICES.

H. PARKER'S

Drugstore - DURHAM.

THOS. MATHEWS,

Harness Establishment

MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!

IN CONNECTION.

Agents 1884 Wanted

READ THIS.

THE GREAT DOLLAR PAPER,

The Weekly Globe

FROM NOW TO END OF 1884

ONLY ONE—$1.00—DOLLAR.

THE * DAILY * GLOBE

THE GREAT CANADIAN PAPER.

Has the most extensive and influential circulation in British America, is noted for its extensive Cable and Telegraphic News, and is the great authority upon Commercial and Financial Matters throughout the Dominion.

SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year, ... $7.00 | Half Year, ... $3.50
Quarter Year, ... $1.75.

In order to increase our already large list of yearly subscribers to The Weekly Globe, we make the following liberal and magnificent offer to every reader of this advertisement who wishes to take advantage of it at once.

For $3.50 we will send to any address in Canada or the U. S.,

THE WEEKLY GLOBE

from now to end of December, 1884, and in addition, A HANDSOME NICKEL OPEN-FACED STEM-WINDING WATCH.

The Watch is of convenient size; it is neat in appearance; it is a stem-winder, consequently requires no key; it is dust-proof, and a good time-keeper.

The above price includes postage upon Watch to any address in Canada or the United States. This offer only holds good until January 20th, 1884. We will start shipping watches on October 15th. Remittances should be sent at once, so as to enable us to procure necessary supply and fill orders with as little delay as possible. Address,

THE GLOBE PRINTING CO, (Limited),
TORONTO.

The Foremost Journal in the Dominion. The Great Dollar Paper. The Paper for the Farmer.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 7. MARKDALE, ONT., OCT. 25. 1883. No. 163.

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY THURSDAY EVENING,

At Markdale Ontario.

$1 Per Anumn

IN ADVANCE.

C. W. RUTLEDGE.

EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Sunder's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

J. Ghent. M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O. Physician and Surgeon, Priceville, Graduate of University. Viet. College. " " New York, and " Graduate, of the same, " " Ayleth Medical Institute. " " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y. Member Col. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.

DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Eugenia, the day following the 1st Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.

January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.

JAMES FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B. County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block First Sat. Branch office in Markdale, over Farmer's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCERS, &c.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolff's Store and in

MARKDALE;

over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.

Money to lend on reasonable terms.

JAMES CREASOR, Q. C. DUNCAN MORISON

Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farms, Tenements, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate. Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.

Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.

N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

MISS. GREEN,

DRESS AND MANTLE PARLOR.

Dunlop's building Markdale.

All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.

Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

ROYAL MARKDALE LODGE,

A. F. & A. M. No. 78, will meet in their hall on Monday evening, Oct. 29th at eight o'clock p. m.

105 A. Turner, Sec'y.

JOHN NOBLE,

MARKDALE.

GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING

A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,

MARKDALE.

M. BYRNES

PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE

(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)

CHATSWORTH, Ont.

C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.

PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's

THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,

CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of

BRICK AND STONE WORK,

Plain Ornamental Plastering.

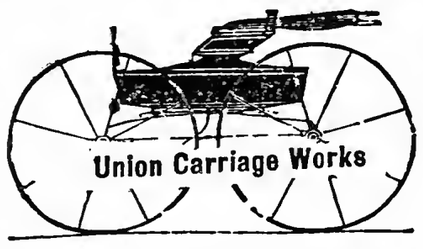
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.

Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

GEORGE WILSON,

Wholesale and Retail



{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.

FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.

Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from

FIRST CLASS MATERIAL

In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with

English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs

will receive prompt attention.

All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time consistent with good workmanship.

GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.

Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside

D. J. SHANAHAN,

Proprietor

Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

STARTLING DISCOVERY!

LOST MANHOOD RESTORED.

A victim of youthful imprudence causing Premature Decay, Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, etc., having tried in vain every known remedy, has discovered a simple self cure, which he will send FREE to his fellow-sufferers, address J. H. REEVES, 43 Chatham St., N. Y.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,

BANKERS,

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.

Allowed on Savings Deposits.

Drafts issued and Collections made on points, at lowest rates.

W.M. LUCAS, Manager.

September 23, 1880. 2-ly

EUGENIA

Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made extensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.

GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND

Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.

LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.

Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted

69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Address

The Culverwell Medical Co,.

P.O. box 450 41 Ann St., New York

110-62.

SEEING IS BELIEVING.

GENTLEMEN,—

If you want a first-class

Buggie or Wagon

call at

MCKENNA & MASON'S

CARRIAGE WORKS

MARKDALE.

They can supply you with anything from a

Lumber Wagon

up to

Extension Top Phæton.

To buy from them is to

SAVE MONEY!

They are both practical workmen, and employ none but

PRACTICAL WORKMEN

They guarantee their work Second to none for Lightness of Draught and Superiority of Finish.

They use nothing but First-class White Oak for Wagons, and thrice Extra Second Growth Hickory for light work.

The immense amount of work turned out of McKenna & Mason's shop is sufficien proof of the wide reputation they enjoy for doing good work.

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END

Poor cheap work we positively will not take.

Special attention given to Re-Trimming and Repainting all classes of Carriage Work.

Satisfaction guaranteed (or No Pay) in

HORSESHOEING

SHOP—On Mill Street opposite to Sproule's Hotel.

McKENNA & MASON.

District Dashes.

A Roman Catholic Bazaar at Port Arthur has realzed $15,000.

Good wages are offered on the Proton drains, but help is scarce.

Special revival services are being held with good results, in Durham.

Meaford school teachers have been re-engaged for 84, at advanced salaries.

The Ball Jubilee singers entertained a Durham audience satisfactorily, last week.

The ladies of the M. E. Church, Mt-Forest, are having an apron social this week.

The Port Hope express office was relieved of $10,000, last week, the thief escaped.

The Shelburne Free Press came out last week in a new dress, and otherwise much improved.

Woodbridge fair last week was a success, a large number from Toronto were in attendance.

A girl named Mariah McCabe, is sentenced to be hanged in Hamilton, for drowning her infant child.

Mr. John Madill, of Shelburne, had his leg broken while loading telegraph poles at that place, last week.

A masked burglar entered a house in Weston, one night last week but had to leave suddenly without any booty.

The sum of $282 was recently cleared by a bazaar held at Woodstock in in connection with the Methodist Church.

One Francis Antony Harte, a mail porter on the steamer City of Owen Sound, has been arrested for stealing money from the mail bags, he pleaded guilty and was sent to Barrie jail to await his trial.

The scheme for the formation of a new city to be known West Toronto, and comprising the district between the Brockton boundaries and the Humber river. including Lambton village is said to be growing in favour among the people of Brockton.

C. P. R. STEAMSHIPS.—The three steamships recently ordered for the C. P. R. have all arrived in Montreal, where they are to be taken apart and towed through the Welland Canal. It is understood they will be put together again at Buffalo, and will then come to Owen Sound to have the cabin work put on. The work will be prepared at the C. P. R. shops in Montreal and shipped west by rail. The steamers are named Arthabaskee, Alberte and Algoma.—C. S. Advertiser.

Chatsworth.

From a correspondent.

Green, the would-be assasin has absconded.

Next Thursday will be division court day here.

J. Duffy has a well stocked hardware store and is doing well, everybody would like to see Joe succeed.

Mr. McGill has completed grouting his machine shop, which will make it very comfortable for the cold weather.

Mr. Sutherland, of Owen Sound has put a man on our market to buy grain, which will give a healthy competition.

J. W. Elliott has his new shop opposite Campbell's hotel, well on the way and expects to occupy it about the first December.

Dr. Lenhart has left this place, and now practices in Owen Sound, Dr. McCullough, of Georgetown is his successor and is taking well.

Mr. W. F. Doll has this week opened a jewellery store in Mr. Freeman's shop opposite post office Mr. J. Munshaw is manager. Quite a variety of fine looking jewellery are now to be seen in the large show cases, and we have no doubt a good business will be done.

Mr. R. McNally, who located here last spring, and opened a carriag shop is turning out good work, and is destined to do a largely increasing trade. He must be something extra when the person who purchased his business in Hanover, bound him not to start business within 40 miles of that place.

Kimberly.

The united Methodist people are making preparations for building a large church in Kimberley the coming summer.

Mr. Christopher Knott moved into Kimberly on Thursday last, having bought three town lots from William Stuart, he intends building the coming summer.

Municipal matters quiet, we hear of no opposition to present Reeve, Mr. T. Gilray, nor to the deputy, Mr. Erskine. For council men there will be quite a number in the field, we believe the present members will seek re-election with the exception of Mr. Patterson.

The annual shooting match came off last Friday in the valley. J. McGee and C. Wickens being chosen captains, with about ten men each, they made quite a noise slaughtering their game. The loosing party having to pay for the entertainment in the evening, which was provided by Mr. Thurston, hotel keeper, as the count proceeded in the evening it became evident that the cheerful little squrrel had suffered most. J. McGee was declared winner. After the party partook of a splendit supper they finished up with a dance in the Orange hall.

Euphrasia Council.

A meeting of the Township council of the Township of Euphrasia, was held pursuant to adjournment on the 6th day of October, 1883.

Members all present.

Minutes of last session of council read and approved.

Mr. Patterson was authorized to act in conjunction with the commissioner of St. Vincent, to get culvert built on town line Euphrasia and St. Vincent.

The Reeve and Mr. Boyd were appointed to act as they may deem prudent in reference to making repairs on 18 and 19 side road in 2 concession.

The Reeve was instructed to get the road repaired at lot 19 fourth line.

Mr. Boyd was instructed to get the bridge over Foys creek 9th line, repaired.

The sureties offered by Mr. Manary and Mr. Jordan, as collectors were approved, and the clerk instructed to get the necessary bonds executed.

The Treasurer was instructed to take credit for 50 cents, commission on draught paid by him.

The Treasurer was authorized to invest $6,000 of the railway sinking fund, in the Canada Permanent, Loan Company, debentures for five years.

The Treasurer was instructed to remit as follows, viz:

Messrs. Carmichael & Grier, $39, printing Voters' List; J. Farewell, printer, $9, as per account rendered; T. McKenney, $20, land taken for road; J. B. McLaren, $2, for advertising; Messrs. Hart & Co., $9, for consolidated municipal statements.

The Reeves orders were issued on the Treasurer to pay as follows, viz:

George Booth, $2.50, work on Heathcote bridge; James Yelland $3, fence viewing, and the clerk instructed to place said amount against W½ Lot 15, con. 6; Christopher Kelley, $5, work on 7th line; Thomas McAfee, $5, repairing culvert on 7th line; John Pentland, $20, for work on roads and bridges; Robt. Dunlop $25, making Voters' List; Charles Howard, $54.50, road work in several places; James Reekie, $2, repairing road scrapers; Richard Carefoot, $19, work on 6 and 7 side line, con. 1; W. J. Blakely, $60.70, covering crosway on 11th line; John Pentland $8.50, work on Kerr's bridge; Dan. Patton, $10 building culvert and filling approaches; John Blair, $125, work on town line Artemesia and Euphrasia; John Clugston, $10, gravel taken for road purposes.

On motion being made and seconded the council adjourned until the first day of November next.

ROBT. DUNLOP, Clerk.

FARMER'S CORNER.

Packing and Storing Apples.

In the majority of cases the reason why an apple orchard is not profitable is frequently because sufficient care is not exercised in harvesting and storing the fruit. Aside from the general precautions regarding knocking off apples, picking when too green or too ripe, and mixing different varieties in one barrel, there are other and more important points in regard to the harvesting to which the attention should be often called.

The sorting of apples is a matter upon which many farmers are either ignorant or negligent. If a crop is worth raising at all it is worth sorting properly at the harvest. All apples should be carefully graded into three grades. The first or A grade should contain fruit of the finest quality, fit to be put upon good markets and to be kept until spring. The second grade may be disposed of in the fall and early winter sales, may supply the local market, or be used largely for home consumptson. The third grade includes those popularly known as "cider apples," but which should be used more properly for drying and immediate consumption. There are always plenty of neighbors who are ready to pay a fair price for the "culls." If these are to be used for cider they should be again sorted, and the partially decayed or very wormy ones thrown to the hogs.

Very few farmers know what constitutes a first-grade apple in city markets. In general, it may be said, that first grades should not be over-ripe, neither very green and undeveloped as those which often grow in the centre of a thick tree, should not be one-sided or "scabby," not jammed or dirty, and, above all. not wormy. There are certain worm-holes, however, which do not make an apple second class, but they are not common. If the worm hole be recent, small and through the apple from end to end, it does not usually lessen the keeping qualities or appearance. If the "blow end" or "stem end" of the apple be filled with chips, however and the portions adjacent to the openings of the worm hole be red and discolored, or if an opening is made anywhere in the side of the fruit, then the apple is second class. Apples apparently sound, but which have lain under the tree until they have become withered or dirty, are not first-class. Some uniformity in size among first-class fruit should be secured. Very small apples are apt to be green and immature; very large ones, especially if highly colored, are usually over-ripe and will not keep long. Baldwins and others which are attacked by the dry rot are second or third class. No spot, spongy apples should be packed with the first grade. As far as possible first grades should have the stems on, and should be free from all rust and leaves. It may be true that very few of the apples in an average orchard are first-class fruit, but it pays to pack those few by themselves, nevertheless. If not sorted the whole crop will sell for second class fruit. The fruit put upon the market by farmers as first class fruit often contains much that will rank as third class.

In making the second grade the apple grower is left more to his own liking. He should know how long he wishes this fruit to keep and should sort and pack accordingly, being guided by experience and good sense as to how good or bad an apple must be to keep in good condition for a certain length of time, It is a mistaken notion that commission men and apple dealers take the packer's word for the contents of the barrel, unless indeed the packer has established his reputation. Barrels are opened and the contsnts examined. The fruit sells upon its merits.

When the apples are packed in the barrels the lower head should be faced with two or three layers of aversge sample apples placed in circles and with the stem end down. The fruit may then be put in in small quantities at a time, taking care that it is settled down firmly. The barrel should be lightly shaken two or three times at intervals during the packing. On the upper end alse place a facing of fruit with stem ends up. The barrel should be a little more than full. Squeeze it down with a screw press and put the head in neatly. A neat, clean barrel is worth ten per cent. more than a dirty and bungling one. Use new, clean apple barrels. The barrel should be so tightly packed that its cootents will not rattle when it is rolled.

It is not a good plan to pile apples in heaps or to cart them into the barn to "sweat" before they are packed. The extra handling is expensive and injures the fruit. Before being stored for winter, however, the barrels should be put under an open shed, or turned on their sides and left in the orchard. They will need a rough protection of canvas or boards during a heavy rain. Having lain a few days they are ready to be stored. The third-class fruit, which will not be barrelled, may be left in piles under the trees until the remainder of the fruit is disposed of. It is a good plan to bury Golden Russets. Unless the cellar is an exceptionally good one, they will wither and become almost worthless by spring. Bury in much the same way as potatoes are buried, using plenty of straw. They will keep till April, when they will be fresh, plump and crisp, and worth the highest price.

Apples should not be stored too soon. If barreled for a couple of weeks or more before storing shey will keep as well or better. The only secrets in storing are to keep the fruit dry and cold. Few cellars are cool enough to keep winter apples well. The colder they can be kept and not freeze the better. A cellar with stone walls built in gravel soil, and with a good ventilation, is the best for keeping apples. Few cellars which have to be drained keep them well. If the bottom of the cellar is the natural gravel, and is never wet, so much the better. Cement floors are not usually desirable. Next to a good natural gravel floor, a brick floor laid without mortar is best. If the walls and articles in the cellar get mouldy, it is no fit place for storing apples. If the fruit is kept dry but warm, it loses its crispness and flavor and keeps poorly. The temperature should be even. If the temperature of the cellar can be regulated by letting in or excluding air, a thermometer should be had, and it should be kept as near freezing as possible. If apples are to be kept for very late spring and early summer markets, ice should be supplied to the cellar after the weather becomes warm. Set the barrels on bricks or blocks, two or three inches from the floor, keep the cellar dry and cold, and if the apples are well packed they will keep until April or May.—American Cultivator.

Apparitions of Dying Persons.

A correspondent writes: Twenty-six years ago, during the siege of Delhi, there was a bandsman in the same regiment as myself, remarkable as being the second tallest man in it, and a very good Christian of the Roman Catholic faith. On the day I refer to our regiment was off picquet duty, and taking a much needed rest in camp. The bandsman—who, like his fellow musicians at the siege, had to use a rifle instead ot a musical instrument—suddenly awoke from a disturbed sleep, sat up in his bed and exclaimed, "Oh, dear! what a dream I have had!" Our camp color man and myself were in the same tent with him, and the former asked him what he had been dreaming of. He replied, "I have just dreamt that we were engaged and that I was hit fair in the throat with a bullet; I'll take it as a warning, for I feel confident the first skirmish we have that I shall be done for." The camp color-man remarked, "Why, man, there is no use taking notice of dreams." The bandsman replied that he would take notice and go at once to the priest, which he accordingly did. The next morning about 4 o'clock the alarm sounded to arms, as the enemy had made a sortie from the city in force, and a determined one it was (9th July, 1847). The bandsman was in the same company as myself, and went through the day's work safely until about three o'clock in the afternoon. My company at that time had retired back to our own position, and were standing formed in close order, each man falling out as his name was called to drink a glass of grog, and then taking his place in the ranks again. The bandsman had just resumed his place again on the right of the company when a bullet struck him in the apple of the throat and he fell dead. During the siege, which lasted from the 8th of June till the 14th of September, we used to send our wounded and sick men every month to the depot on the hills where the wives and children of the regiment had been left when the mutiny broke out. Strange to say the wife of the bandsman had told the other wives that she knew her husband was killed, as he had appeared at her bedside on a certain date, and that he was pointing to his throat, which seemed to be covered with blood. She was so convinced that her husband was amongst the slain that while waiting for news from headquarters she donned widow's weeds at once. When she received the usual monthly letter she found by it that the time of the appearance of the apparition and the date of her husband's fall corresponded.

Found By a Dream.

Recently, says the Memphis Avalanche, Samuel Dreyfus, for many years deputy sheriff in charge of the Criminal Court, died at his residence in this city of an affection of the lungs. Three days afterwards one of his sons visited Dr. Goodyear and inquired if his father had left any of his private papers with him, as it was well known the deceased had been a member of several benevolent institutions in Memphis, and a look over those papers found at home revealed but one policy on his life, and that was in the order of the Knights and Ladies of honor. It was known to his family and relatives that he had left policies in other organizations of a similar order to the amount of $10,000. Dr. Goodyear, who had been on intimate terms with the deceased, did not remember his having left any papers with him, but to be certain, carefully examined the contents of his safe, but failed to find any. Benjamin K. Pullen, formerly chief clerk in the sheriff's office, was also questioned by the son of the deceased, but he, too, did not remember any papers being left in his care. Three days afterward the brother-in-law of the deceased called on Dr. Goodyear, and made the same statement regarding the missing policies as had the son. Another search was made, but it, too, proved fruitless. One recent afternoon, so relates Benjamin K. Pullen, he fell asleep in his office and dreamed that Samuel Dreyfus appeared before him and asked:—"What has become of my papers which I gave you while you were in charge of the sheriff's office?" He answered, "They are safe where I placed them," and, suddenly awaking, proceeded at once to the sheriff's office, which is on the floor above, and found the missing package intact, where he had placed it many months ago.

The package was without delay turned over to the family of the deceased, and in it were the missing policies.

A Boy of the Period chooses his Profession.

A young Austin man recently married a rich widow, who died shortly after the ceremony, and left a bereaved widower and a large amount of property. One day he was visiting at the house of a friend who had a family of four little boys, and the widower began quizzing them.

"Well, George, what are you going to be when you grow up?" he inquired.

"I guess I'll be a poet," answered the little fellow.

"And what are you going to try and do, Willie?"

"I'm going to be an artist."

"An artist, ah! And what do you think you will adopt as a profession, Eddie?"

"Pa says he is going to make a minister out of me."

"That's good, very good. Now, Frankie, let me hear what you intend to be."

"I'm going in for money."

"Going into a money-making business. Well, what is it?"

"I'm going to be a rich widower, I am."

Who Were There.

Two dogs, which ought to have known better, got into a fight in the alley in the rear of a hotel yesterday, and in two minutes there was a jam of people around them. A servant in the third-story window raised the sash and upset a pan of flour with such aim that not over four or five of the crowd escaped marking. Among the "floury" afterward indentified on the street were two judges, two doctors, three lawyers, four city officials, five merchants, two insurance men, and a banker. Canines having a mill in prospect will be reasonably sure of a respectable crowd in attendance.

Mr. Tennyson has been reading his poems to the Czar at Copenhagen.

The Baby Walks.

I received a very important letter this week: It contained the announcement that "The baby walks." It is with no desire to pun that I say that this is a great step forward for the baby.

Of course this event has not been entirely unexpected in our family. I have been looking every day for the news for some time past. Our baby has been a remarkable baby from the very first, and a large number of his immediate relatives have been waiting with bated breath for the tidings that his long journey had commenced. The particulars of the auspicious ovent are not to hand but I can see in my mind's eye just how the wonderful occurrence took place. The baby is out in the country staying with his "sisters and his cousins and his aunts" and I suppose if they had been near enough to a telegraph office they would have sent me a dispatch about the supreme event. Although the baby's fat legs are ridiculously sturdy, he has had all along a great diffidence in trusting to them. Now, last Sunday I held, and till maintain that the baby took one distinct step towards his devoted father. The news was incredulously received as being too good to be true, and the whole family, from his grandmother to the kitchen girl, collected around to see if he would take another, but the little rascal seemed to think it was the biggest kind of a joke to bring his father's reputation for veracity into question by laughing and holding on to a chair, but refusing all the while to move away from it. It was all in vain that I held out my hands and all the endearing inducements I could to get him to take the necessary steps to come to me. He would keep one hand on the chair and reach out with the other but not until he had clenched his pudgy hand around my finger would he let go the chair. Once I had enticed him in this manner to quit the chair, and then suddenly withdrew my hands from his, leaving him standing alone. He hovered a moment in wavering indecision and then instead of stepping forward set emphatically down and resumed his favorite style of locomotion. He never crept as an ordinary baby would have done, but sort of hitched along. He would sit down, and, putting a hand now one side of him and again on the other, his fat little body swaying this way and that would hitch along with his little dumplings of feet ahead of him like a railway cowcatcher, and in this way he moved over the floor in a sitting posture at a speed that was wonderful. Practice had made him so perfect at this sort of movement that he evidently came to look on walking as an ornamental superfluity. It was most comical to see him forge ahead, as the boat racers call it, with both hands full holding them up from the floor and swaying forward without any help from them. He occasionally took to his feet, and with breathless haste would work his way along the wall in a hand in hand fashion until getting too elated at his new excitement, would upsed and roll helplessly over on the carpet. These accidents shook his confidence for the time being in the stability of things but happily a baby's memory is as short as a baby, and the perils of pedestrianism were braved again and again. Often the poor little fellow looked like a battle-scarred veteran after his tumbles, but it is a lucky thing that babies are exceedingly elastic, otherwise the population of this country would not be as great as it is now. Anyhow, another competitor has entered into the great walking match: "The baby walks."—Detroit Free Press.

A Boot-Black's Eulogy.

"Brandy is dead!"

So the men said, so the women said, and so the children called to each other as a piece of news.

A drunken, good-for-nothing. A so-called man whose brain had become dissolved in liquor, whose mind was enfeebled, and who had disappointed everybody by not dying in the gutter, instead of having the roof of a tenement house over his head.

Why should anyone grieve when such a vagabond passes away? The world may owe him room for his bones to rest, but nothing further. So in "Brandy's" case men said that he was well out of the way, and women clattered their dishes in the rooms below, and cared not for the presence of the dead.

When the undertaker came to bear the body away a dozen people crowded into the room, and among them was a boot-black. Some said that "Brandy" looked well in a coffin; others spoke lightly about his face having at last lost its ruby color, and the dead pauper was no more than a dog in their minds, and why should he have been? One can be a man or he can be a vagabond. If he becomes a vagabond let him lose the respect of men. All had a heartless remark except the boot-black. He stood at the head of the coffin and looked from face to face and said:

"Brandy was low-down, and he died like a beast, and you are all sneering at him! Did any one among you ever give him a chance? Did he have a home when he was a boy? Did men try to encourage him and guide him aright? Is there a man in this room who ever took him by the hand and spoke one kind word? Didn't everybody abuse and ill-treat him? Didn't everybody look upon him as a dog?"

There was no answer.

"Aye! Brandy was low down!" whispered the boy as he laid his hand on the coffin. "He was ragged and hungry, and poor and homeless, and without one single friend. What man among you could have stood out against it any better? Poor old man! They know all about it in Heaven! Let me help to carry him down."

And when the dead had been driven away, and the boy had disappeared, more than one man said:

"After all, we might have made it easier for the poor old man. I wonder that some of us never sought to make a man of him, instead of helping him down."

Paris Pavements.

After numerous experiments with different kinds of pavement in Paris the plan finally adopted is to form a bed of lime concrete for base, and then deposit on the narrow side blocks of pinewood, previously steeped in tar, and of the size of ordinary bricks. Between every row an interstice is left, one-quarter of an inch wide, filled up by gravel and sand, well rammed in, the whole being coated over with another concrete where tar is the binding medium. Experience has tested this plan to be next to perfect.

Business Wisdom.

It is an encouraging indication to notice that many of the great industrial corporations of the country, "with no souls to save," are earnestly working for the prohibition of the drink traffic, from purely business considerations. The hard logic of facts has demonstrated to them that it does not pay to employ men who drink, if abstainers can be obtained. The only wonder is that any business man, employing labor, should ignore this fact.

The Grand Trunk railway encourages all its employees to sign the pledge, and all are prohibited from drinking at all while on duty. The Hon. Minister of Railways for the Dominion issued an order to discharge any employee of the Intercolonial railway found intoxicated at any time, whether on duty or not. Several of the leading American railways require total abstinance of all those in their service. The Grand Trunk officials prohibit the sale of spirituous liquors at all the refreshment rooms under it control, and they are using all the influence they can to prevent the License boards in the Province from granting any liquor licenses near any of their stations, because of the increased danger to the passengers and to the road.

The Kingston and Pembroke railway company have, this year, set themselves earnestly at work to prevent any tavern licenses being issued along their line, but have not been, as yet, entirely successful. Within a mile or so of one licensed house on this line two unfortunate men have laid down on the track while inebriated, within a few weeks. One of them was badly maimed for life and the other was killed. In both cases there are wives and children left in poverty, unprovided for. Surely such causes, producing such effects, must yet be removed by the strong arm of the law.

A Wonderful Street.

Ex-Secretary of the Treasury Windom is now in London trying to raise money for building an arcade under the whole length of Broadway, New York. If he succeeds, that will be the most extraordinary thoroughfare known to the history of cities. The scheme is to make a new street under the present surface of Broadway, extending to the houses on each side, and lit by electric lights at night and glass reflectors in the daytime. The middle of the street would hold railway tracks, not only for city travel, but to accommodate in-coming trains from every part of the country. The traveller in San Francisco or St. Paul would not only buy his ticket for New York, but the hotel on Broadway where he intended to stop. Freight and baggage would be conveyed directly to the warehouse or be received by the express car which was to convey it to any part of the country. Then traffic of all kinds could be carried on on each side of the arcade. There would thus be a double tier of stores. Provision could be made for sewers, water mains, gas pipes, and heating tubes, In short, it would become a double street and the value of the property quadrupled along the route. Engineers say the scheme is entirely practicable. There is business enough now on Broadway for two thoroughfares.

Where to see the Great Trotters of New York.

(Cincinnati Times-Star.

No two men in America have had more experience with fine trotting stock, and none are better judges than Calvin M. Priest, of the New York Club Stables, 28th street near Fifth avenue and Dan Mace, of the Excelsior Stables, West 29th street, New York the champion double-team driver of the United States. Both of these gentlemen say, that for painful ailments in horses, such as cuts, bruises, swellings, lameness, stiffness, St. Jacobs Oil is superior to anything they have ever used or heard of. This is also the opinion of Prof. David Robarge, the celebrated horse-shoer of the metropolis, and thousands of stock-owners throughout the country. As a pain cure for man and beast St. Jacobs Oil has no equal. Mr. Priest recites the case of a valuable trotter, so stiff from rheumatism, that he could not move an inch. By one thorough application of St. Jacobs Oil at night, the animal was completely cured, and was fit for the race-track the next day.

The "Woman's Kingdom" is what George Augustus Sala calls the United States.

The use of Pills, Salts, Castor Oil, &c., and other nauseous, griping Cathartics is unnecessary, as a pleasant substitute is found in Dr. Carson's Bitters, which acts as a Cathartic without griping or nausea. All Druggists sell it. 50 cents a Bottle.

Madame Albani and her husband, Mr. Ernest Gye, were recently "received" by the Queen at Balmoral.

From MR. WILLIAM MAGRATH.

Erindale, Credit P. O., Jan. 8th, 1883.

MY DEAR SUTHERLAND: Some two months since I became so afflicted with Rheumatism of the neck and right shoulder as to render my right arm nearly powerless. I determined to try your "Rheumatine," and the result is that I am now free from pain and enjoy the full use of my arm. My general health is also much improved by the use of the medicine. The first two bottles relieved me—the third bottle freed me from all pain.

WM. MAGRATH.

J. N. Sutherland, St. Catharines.

At St. Sebastian the Spanish Queen Christina's gray water-proof and simple poke bonnet caused her to be mistaken for an English governess.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollors, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator, Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

A GOOD MOVE.—Tennessee has adopted a new plan to diminish drunkenness, by passing a law to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors to minors without the written consent of their parents or guardians, or to husbands who are common drunkards unless their wives give their consent. The operation of this law will be watched with interest. Our new Dominion license law prohibits the sale to minors under sixteen years of age, but we would like to see increased restrictions in that direction.

HOW TO MAKE MONEY FA
OVER 5,000 SOLD!

A Book containing 25 very valuable making secrets, sent to any address and sealed on receipt of $1.00.
N. W. BOYD, Knowlton, P. Q.

N. C. Bicycl
Something New in Sty
Further Reduction in Prices for the Fall Tr
SOLE AGENT,
WM PAYNE, LONDON, O
Send 2c. stamp for Catalogue.

F. E. DIXON & CO
Manufacturers of Star Rive
Leather Belting
70 King Street, East, Toronto
Large double Driving Belts a specialty. for Price Lists and Discounts.

Blacksmith's Bellows,
Anvils, Vi
Portable Forges,
Babbet Me
The Largest Assortment in the Dom

WILLIAM DARLING & C
HARDWARE MERCHANTS,
MONTREAL, P.Q.

PAINT! PAIN
To Painters and those Paint

Ramsay's Concentrated Z has three times the body of lead and wea years. One pound will cover more work three pounds of best English Lead. Gr ted and manufactured by
A. RAMSAY & SON, Montre
Should be Sold by All Paint Dealers

DALLEY'S FAMILY PILLS
BILIOUS HEADACH
CONSTIPATION.
AND FOR REGULATING THE LI
THEY HAVE NO EQUAL.

CONSUMPTION
Asthma, Bronchitis, Throat D eases, and Catarrh.
Together with diseases of the Eye, Ear Heart, successfully treated at ne
Ontario Pulmonary Institute, 276 and 278 Jarvis street, Toronto, On
M. HILTON WILLIAMS, M.D., M.C.P.S. PROPRIETOR.
Our system of practice is by Medicated I ations, combined with proper constitu remedies. Over 40,000 cases treated during past 18 years.
If impossible to call personally for an ex ination, write for list of Questions and a copy our new Medical Treatise. Address, ONTA PULMONARY INSTITUTE, 274, 276 and Jarvis Street, Toronto, Ontario.

Dominion Line of Steamshi
Running in connection with the Grand T Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec Saturday during the summer months, and Portland every alternate Thursday during winter months. Sailing dates from Que

Ontario, 22nd Sept.	Toronto, 13th
Oregon, 29th "	Sarnia, 20th
Dominion, 6th Oct.	Montreal, 27th

Rates of passage: Cabin, Quebec to Liver $50, $60, $65, $80; return, $90, $108, $117, according to steamer and berth. Interme $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and state in steamers marked thus: * are amidsh where but little motion is felt, and no cattle sheep are carried on them. For further par lars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway A or local agents of the Company, or to DAVID TORRANCE & CO., General Agents, Montr

OAKLAWN FARM,
The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in the World.
Percheron-Norman Hors
WORTH $2,500,000.00
Imported from France and B since 1872, by
M. W. DUNHA
Wayne, DuPage Co., Illinois, 25 miles West of Chic on C. & N. W. R'
Prices low for q ity of stock. EVERY STAL GUARANTEED BREEDER.

390 Imported the Past Three Mon consisting of finest animals, with choicest p Registered in the Percheron Stud Book of and the Percheron-Norman Stud Book of the States. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue

RHEUMATINE
An Internal Remedy and a SURE CU for all kinds of RHEUMATIC COMPLAINTS

If you are suffering from Kidney Complaint

EWS IN A NUTSHELL.

TE MINUTES SELECT READING.

mary of Foreign, Domestic, and War tems—Pithy, Concise and Pointed.

Vatican is arranging a convention Russia for the improvement of their ches and the restoration of the expelled ops.

Vienna despatch says that seventeen nts in Styria have been condemned to prisonment for 22 years for plundering perty of the Jews.

e grand jury have returned an indict- charging O'Donnell with murder He ded "Not Guilty," and the trial was poned till Nov. 21st.

W. Mackey and James Gordon Bennett igned at Paris a contract for two Atlantic cables. The first will be open the public June 1st, 1884.

Vitre, editor of the Drapeau Noir, of , has been arrested, charged with in- the workingmen to violent deeds by ditary articles in his paper.

ivan says he will not undertake O'Don- 's defence unless time is granted to the witnesses and Russell, O'Donnell's al counsel, to reach England.

e Grand Trunk report shows that the receipts for the past six months exhibit crease over the same period last year of 10 per cent. The net receipts are in- ed 19 per cent.

e Telegraph says the police have failed obtain any evidence showing connection ween O'Donnell and the Invincibles. It orted that the Government will oppose postponement of the trial.

the "Ada Atkinson mystery," Fowler, Jacob Nelling, accused of stabbing and ing Ada Atkinson, his employer's daugh- has confessed the crime and withdrawn charge implicating Jacob Ladd.

n enquiry is to be made into the condi- of the working classes of East London, land, with the view of ascertaining how y would feel disposed to accept State ly emigrate to the North-West of Can- a.

Durban dispatch says that the remnant Cetewayo's party, who assembled with the ention of rescuing Cetewayo from Inkalua re, where he has been hiding, were sur- ed by Chief Usibepu's forces, who ughtered half of them.

At the meeting of the Dublin Guardians the Poor recently, a letter from the Arch- hop of Toronto was read urging the stop- e of Irish immigrants to Canada. The hbishop says that Canada is now crowd- with pauper immigrants.

Among the villages destroyed by the earth- ake in the Grecian Archipelago and Ana- were Katopania, Reis, Dere, and Lidja, latter celebrated for its baths. Slight ocks are still felt on the island of Chios. e British Admiral has sent assistance to esme and Chios.

ne hundred and fifty Annamite convicts, ting a lighthouse on the island of Poole dor, 120 miles east of Point Cambodia, belonging to French Cochin China, muti- ed, murdered a Frenchman and a native ilian, and seriously injured another chman. Sixty of them seized arms and es and decamped in boats. The rest fled the woods.

The vessel reported embargoed at Vladivo- k was the English schooner Otum, which s captured while trespassing upon the pre- es of the American Alaska Commercial pany. Her cargo of hunting material s confiscated. The schooner was taken to ropaulovski. The crew, consisting of four ksmen and fifteen Japanese, were sent Vladivostock.

A St. Petersburg despatch states that it is nounced officially that the Czar will short- institute numerous reforms in the Russian lway service. It is also stated upon thority that he will issue an edict in refer- ce to the affairs of Jews residing in Russia ich will place them on a better footing, far as regards their citizenship and busi- ss interests, and to a great extent render em less liable to the murderous attacks to ich they have been subjected from the wer classes of Russians during the past ar.

Sir Stafford Northcote closed the campaign Corn and recently with a speech at Larne. e said to develop her resources Ireland eded order, repose, and a firm and steady vernment, not offering bribes one day and ctional legislation the next, followed by stant repression. He deemed the Land a beneficial measure if justly admini- ered. There should be no compact with national disturbers who would seek Home le through new measures for Local Gov- ment, and he warned Conservatives to ard against them.

A Constantinople despatch says that the re- ent earthquake was most severe in Anato- a, being particularly destructive on that rtion of the coast which lies directly east the island of Chios. All the villages be- ween Cheshmeh and Vourla are completely wrecked. At least 2,000 persons lost their es by being buried under the falling walls their dwellings. An immense amount of operty has been destroyed, the value of ich is at present impossible to estimate. heshmeh was badly damaged, but no lives were lost. At Smyrna the shock was quite severe. A regular panic prevailed during e continuance of the vibrations, but the mage was slight. On the island of Chios e shock was also severe, but the duration was short and little damage was done. From eports received from points lying east of heshmeh and south-east of Smyrna, it ap- ears that an extensive area of country was ffected.

The latest productions of the glass manu- facturers of Munich are reproductions of the ne sixteenth-century glass pieces of Moor- sh, Spanish, and Venetian origin, in the orm of urns, chalices, plates, caraffes, and vases, the originals of which are found at present only in the Art Museum of Berlin and the Louvre in Paris. The decorations of these pieces consist of enamelling sections of colored glass on white or tinted, with intaglio traceries between, filled with gold. The effect is artistic, marvellous, and beau- tifully barbaric.

The Egyptian False prophet.

A letter from a Khartoum correspondent of the Daily News gives a depressing account of the operations of the Egyptians against the Mahdi. Half the city officials are said to be already partisans of the rebels, and all through the rebellion trade has been carried on freely between the disturbed districts and those nominally loyal to the Khedive under the passports of the False Prophet. Meanwhile a proclamation from two officers of the regular army who have joined the rebels, to the army and civil officials is circulated, in which the Mahdi is spoken of in highly complimentary terms. They say:—"Friends, we are with the Mahdi, and as we have seen him regularly for the past six months, we watch his proceedings attentively, we hear all he says, and we have not found in him a grain of anything that is bad or unbecoming his holy mission (peace be unto him). By the great God and the excellent Koran, we swear that he is the true Mahdi, the expected one; there is no other but he, and the man who doubts his holy mission is an infidel, and God has already decreed it. As a proof of this, the large amounts of gold and silver and immense stores of goods which came into his possesion have no interest whatever for him, and it lays in the Muslim treasury with a faithful and trusty man in charge of it all, and who distributes it to widows and orphans, auxiliaries and emigrants.

A SEEKER AFTER GOD.

"The Mahdi seeks nothing but God. He is kind, and speaks civilly to all. He abhors falsehood, and his pride is to spread the glory of our religion. He fights in the path of God, and only with those who refuse to obey Him. His daily life (peace be unto him) is quite opposed to worldly matters; nor does he care for its enjoyments. He is simple in his diet and plain in dress. Kisoret Dourra steeped in water is all that he eats. A plain shirt and trousers made from the native cloth is all that he wears. He is always smiling, and his face is as resplendent as the full moon. His body and form are of the sons of Israel, and on his right cheek is a khal (wart?) and also other marks which are written in the books of the Holy Law are stamped on him. He neither honors the rich for their riches nor does he neglect the poor on account of their poverty. All Muslims to him are equal.

PARADISE AND AMMUNITION.

"If we were to describe to you all the good qualities of the Mahdi it would take a long letter to do so; he is following the footsteps of his grandfather (peace be to his bones); and if you are Muslims banish worldly affairs and follow not the inclination of sinful souls, which leads its posessor to destruction, but look to the end and to paradise. With the numerous army of the Mahdi, which is about two hundred thousand fighting men, whose souls are offered to the Lord, we have also Remingtons, guns and rockets which have been taken from the Turks, besides an ample supply of ammunition. The Mahdi, however (unto whom be peace) trusts to God only and will prevent fighting by fire arms; spears and swords he fights with, and his connection with the angels is well knows, as we well know from the history of Mohammed."

A Noble Act of Charity.

One of the prettiest stories of real life comes from Paris. It is related that a poor old woman was singing in a street with the usual expectation that not her melody, but the absence of it, would excite the pity of the passers-by. But though she cast her eyes despairingly at the windows, there was not a gleam of charity in any of them. Yet somebody was watching. It was a young girl named Dronsert, a pupil of the Paris Conservatoire. As the old woman, overcome with fatigue, sank down upon the pavement, the young girl's heart was moved with compassion, and in a moment she was at the unfortunate creature's side. Yet what could she do? She was not in a position to open her purse to satisfy the old woman's pressing need, for she was poor, and all the money she earned was as yet insufficient to do more than keep herself from want. But when was woman's wit unequal to an emergency? Taking the forlorn wanderer by the hand, and walking down the street, she lifted up her fresh young voice, and sang with all the fervor of a noble heart,—sang until the street was thronged with enraptured auditors, and delighted faces filled the windows which had seemed so cold and hard to the poor, homeless, tuneless vagabond. And then came such a shower of silver as never rained before upon the parched soil of misery and want. In a few moments the old woman, trembling, bewildered, but rejoicing, was sent on her way with seventy francs in her pocket. "It reads almost like a tale of Ouida's," says the chronicler, "but it is a true story for all that, and when the name of Dronsert becomes as famous as that of Nilsson or Tietjens, this little act of charity may, perhaps, commend itself to the army of her admirers and biographers."—London Paper.

Sunday in Spain.

The Sundays in Malaga are very different from what they are in England. With the exception of their great festivals, which are numerous, Sunday is the gayest of all days. The Alameda is crowded with gayly-dressed people, ladies with their mantillas and fans, soldiers, servants, beggars; here and there a stray priest in his black gown; and of these people not one in a hundred has been in church. The churches are empty; the theatres are full. A military band is playing martial airs, the shops are open, and work of all kind is going on as usual. The one observable difference between Sunday and other days is its greater gayness and giddiness. Whatever the opinion of others may be as to the rightness or wrongness of all this, there is one point on which I have a decided opinion of my own—that all this is not conducive to moral pith, to manly virtue, to national success, and that we are much better off with even a Scottish Sabbath than we should be with a Spanish Sunday.

A Georgia Merchant's Order.

One of our merchants received the following order from a customer a few days since: "Mr. B——, please send me $1 worth of coffy and $1 worth of shoogar, some small nales. My wife had a baby last nite, also two padlocks and a monkey rench."—Macou Telegraph.

JULES VERNE ON THE SEA.

What his Sailors Say of him—How he Writes his Books.

Universal as is the reputation of M. Jules Verne, and much as he is admired as an author, but little is known of his private life. To make his acquaintance it is better not to go to his pleasant home at Amiens, where he would be almost too deep in his work to receive his visitors, but to see him on board his small yacht when he is crusing off the coast of France. You will then, besides the author, admire the man. See him walking the deck, now as Captain giving commands to his two assistants, now busy with sail and reef, his fine face lit up with evident delight at the prospect of a long holiday on the sea, and you will understand something of the vigorous vitality which is the pre-eminent characteristic of all his works.

M. Jules Verne is about 50 years old. His hair and beard are turning white, and his once supple and elegant figure is beginning to give way to a comfortable embonpoint, but his intelligent face is still full of youthful ardor. A veritable sailor does he look in his blue pea jacket and leather sou'wester, not differing in outward appearance from his mates, whose adoration for their Captain is only marred by his indifference to fishing, a sport dear to their hearts. One of them, talking of his master with enthusiasm and affection, said, with the deepest conviction: "He has but one fault—he does not know anything about fishing, and believes in fish only when he sees it at the end of his fork. How can a man of such superiority be afflicted with such a defect!" The master, however, though himself not inclined to share the favorite pastime of his men, does not interfere with their pleasure, and will often watch their operations when, on a calm day, tackle and lines are produced, and the two fishermen prepare for work, sometimes disturbed by a mocking remark of the Captain or galled by his hearty laugh when an heroic fish returns to his element before it can be secured.

After a few months of such holiday life Jules Verne returns to his home refreshed and strengthened for his winter's work, his ever-active brain full of fresh ideas gathered in earth, sky, and sea. Before beginning to write a new story M. Verne carefully studies the country which he is about to explore, gathering information on all possible details, and then clothing them in the garb of his powerful imagination. Love, in most of the author's works, shines by its absence. Queer scholars, full of fantastic ideas, and hardy adventurers, such as Fergursson, Hatteras, Clowbonny, Glenarvanny, Paganel Arronax, Captain Nemo, Michel Ardant, and Phileas Fogg, give rich life to his pictures: but among all the thousand unexpected, original details love and passion find no room. Perhaps the fact that for some time he was the collaborator of A. Dumas fils has not been without effect on his writings. Though they separated after a short time, their relations have remained such that to day it is said of M. Dumas, "He loves him as he loves when he loves." And as by M. Dumas, so he is regarded with esteem and affection by all who know him—from his humble sailor friends to the leaders of society.

The Bridegroom's "Best Man."

The custom of a bridegroom s being attended on his marriage by a friend or relative, who is styled the "best man," so practiced at weddings in the present day, is of great antiquity, descending from our Saxon ancestors. In their time marriages were always celebrated in the house of a bridegroom. On the day before the wedding all his friends and relations, having been invited, arrived at his house and spent the time in feasting and in preparing for the approaching ceremony. Next came the bridegroom's company mounted on horseback, completely armed, who proceeded in great state and order, under the command of one who was called the forewistaman or foremost man, to receive and conduct the bride in safety to the house of her future husband. The bride, in her turn, was attended by her guardian and other male relatives, led by a matron, who was called the bride's-woman and followed by a company of young maidens, who were called bridesmaids. The Saxon forewistaman of the ninth century is the prototype of the English "best man" of the nineteenth.

A Bigamous Preacher.

The career of a bigamous Episcopalian parson, one Hughes, is exciting attention in England. In 1875 he got five years for fraudulently obtaining a certificate for the burial of his stepdaughter's child, of which he was the reputed father. In 1879 he left jail with a ticket of leave, and in 1881 he left his wife and, although obliged to report himself periodically to the police, got a chaplaincy. As curate of Wellesbourne, he deluded a girl into matrimony in February, 1881. In October, 1882, he assumed sole charge of Bickenhill parish, in the vicar's absence, and made himself very popular, especially with the vicar's cook, whom he soon afterward married. Yet another bigamy has now come to light. While curate in Staffordshire in 1872 4 he married under a feigned name a young and handsome governess, by whom he had two children. She went to America and died. Since July he has lived by borrowing and writing begging letters. His second victim has lost her reason from the shock at the perfidy of this reverend scoundrel.

Women in the Water.

Fragile women, so often considered as a mere plaything for man, has more than once both astonished man and humiliated him by her exploits of endurance in the water. It is the fact, however, that woman can float more easily in the water than a man can, because she has the advantage over him in having smaller bones in proportion to her total weight than a man has, and has also a larger proportionate amount in her body of adispose matter, which is lighter in water, than man has. But nevertheless, for a fragile vessel she has performed feats on the frisky wave more marvellous even than those accomplished by her male rival and has done them far more gracefully, for it is an undeniable fact that though woman cannot walk as gracefully as men, she exceeds him in her grace of movement in the water, and becomes in its embrace as fair a nymph indeed as ever floated in the mythic waters of Greek mythology.—Chicago Paper.

ALL SORTS.

The . for putting the : has , gain.

Used up—A weather vane.

A guilt frame—The prison window.

A modern lock's myth—A woman's hair.

Quick at figures—The dancing master.

The horse prefers to dine at the table d'oat.

The first weather report—Thunder.

Church music is not difficult to a choir.

Not levelled by love—The rank of an onion.

The balloon that will not go up is not good for ascent.

A stitch in time must make the old chap feel sew-sew.

A cutaway jacket is the proper costume for an elopement.

A man don't have to live long in Paris to learn the road to Rouen.

When the man with a deep voice sings, he is sure to get off his bass.

Would a law against tight lacing be inimical to the freedom of contracts?

When a giraffe wants a drink, he knows what a long-felt want is.

An exchange tells of "a widow of twenty-two." Twenty-two what? Husbands?

The Chicago girl who wears number tens, is still able to stand considerable x-hersize.

Who wrote Shakespeare? queries a contemporary. Probably some fellow who wanted William's autograph.

Beer was made in Egypt 400 years B. C. But it didn't pyramid other nations until some years afterwards.

London has a weekly paper devoted to balloooning matters—the Aeronaut. It is probably published on fly-paper.

"Is beer a tonic?" inquires an anxious correspondent; and in our humble opinion it is most emphatically—a Teutonic.

There is not always honor among thieves. A society reporter is something of a pirate himself; yet he frequently attacks private cars.

The difference between a single colored man's moan for his sweetheart and a Western storm is, that one is a dark, lone sigh, and the other a dark cyclone.

"The man who rides on a railroad train," said Mr. Stebbins, "is not necessarily prompted by contemptible feeling, though he be moved by a low-cur-motive."

William Hicks, of San Joe, Cal., went out to dig a well, and struck a valuable pocket of ore. As Emerson says, he—Bill—did better than he knew.

A gentleman who was blessed with a musical son-in-law, on seeing an item to the effect that "the musician, like the cook, makes his bread out of do," remarked, "That may be so in some instances, but in my case the musician makes his bread out of me."

Linoleum consists of cork-powder consolidated with dried linseed-oil. The mixture, in the proportion of about three parts of oil to one of cork-powder, is passed under heavy rollers and then stuck on to cloth by means of drying oil. It is allowed to dry for about three months, when the product is ready to receive various designs, and may be readily washed. Linoleum is adulterated by adding saw-dust to the cork-powder.

SHORT TALES.

For Marines and Other Folk.

A robber, having been arrested and brought into court, was asked by the Judge what he had to say in defence of his crime.

"Why, sir," he replied, "I discovered a cave in a hill side,"

"What has that to do with the case?"

"Everything. What use was the cave to me unless I turned robber and wanted to hide?"

[NOTE—What's the use of having a mother-in-law unless she splits the wood and does the kitchen work?]

BURIED TREASURE.

An old man whose daughter had taken a husband and brought him nome to live, seized up his son-in-law and said:

"I am an old man and have only a short time to live. I have a buried treasure which shall be yours when I pass away."

The son-in-law went out behind the smoke-house and tickled himself half to death to think he hadn't shipped the old man off to the Poor House, as he intended, before hearing of the treasure. Then he twisted his face into a smile and his mouth into a pucker, and for seventeen long years he pulled off the old man's boots at night, kept him in smoking tobacco and accepted his weather predictions without a murmur. When the aged pioneer finally pegged out a dive was made for the buried treasure, and the son-in-law soon held in his hands a—gilt-edged Bible which never cost less than $4.

[NOTE—Some old men would have buried a cheap hymn-book and lived on a son-in-law twenty-five years.]

THE PROFESSION.

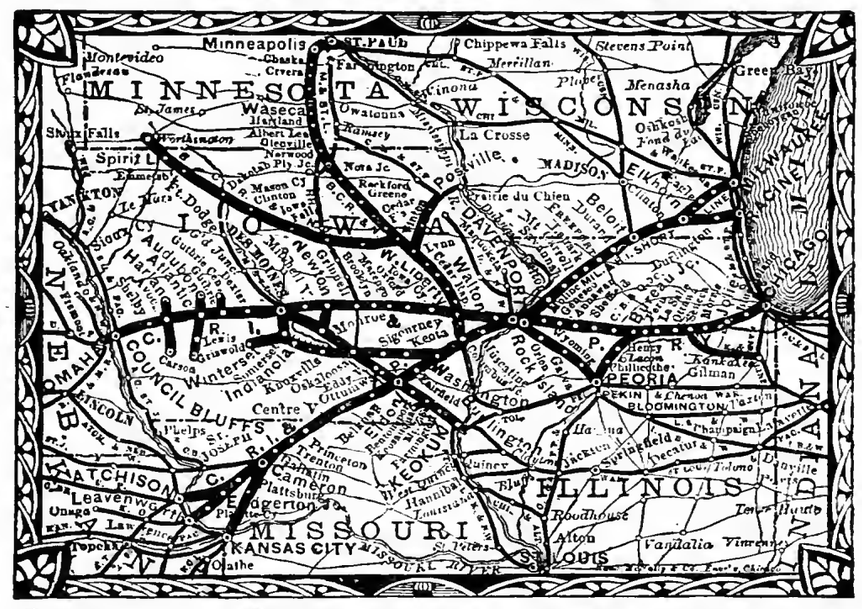
A lawyer returned to his home one evening to find that a tramp had forced his way into the house and appropriated property of considerable value. He rushed for the police and by some unaccountable accident the thief was overhauled and conducted to the cooler.

"Ah! you rascal, you shall suffer for this!" growled the lawyer.

"I desire to engage your legal service to defend me!" was the sheet-iron rejoinder. "I will give you half the stolen property to clear me of the charge."

"Wretch! how dare you!"

"Oh, if you don't close with me some other lawyer will take all!" was the steady reply.



The lawyer reflected for a moment and then decided to plead the man's case and tearfully call the attention of the jury to the fact that his client had no intention of stealing anything, but that, in leaving the house in a hurry, the property got tangled up in his boot-legs.

[NOTE—Verdict of acquittal, and another triumph for right and honesty.]

Copper is not as dangerous as lead. The solubility of most of its salts, their marked color, nauseating taste, and emetic action give at once warning. The salts of lead, on the contrary, have no pronounced taste, or are even sweetish. They are, in general, colorless. If introduced into the system, there is no alarming effect until the nervous centres, the liver, and the blood have become interpenetrated with the poison. All foods sold in tins, especially if of a fatty nature, public water supplies, wines, beers, effervescing drinks, the glaze of earthenware, enamels, and especially culinary utenlined with tin, may introduce lead into the system.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Galiatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

The Standard.

MARKDALE, OCT. 25TH, 1883.

THOSE MINUTES.

In answer to X. Y. Z. in another column in reference to the publishing of the Artemesia council minutes, we have to state that we have not received a copy of them for several months, or we would have gladly published them. Should we drop the matter here, no doubt the blame would rest upon the shoulders of the township clerk. However, we have had many opportunities during the past six years of learning something of the duties and responsibilities of township clerks, having done business with seven or eight municipalities, and the conclusion has forced itself upon us that ratepayers generally have but a vague idea of the amount of labor a clerk has to perform in connection with the business of a township. We consider that more depends on the efficiency and proper discharge of the duties of a township clerk, than on the whole council besides, and yet in many instances, if one of those ill-paid officials should suggest the idea of compensation for copying off the minutes, monthly, for three or four papers, many of the ratepayers would say it was an extortion. Some clerks are paid for this, and we see no reason why all should not be. Then ratepayers would have an account of the council proceedings regularly. Now we will see about the cost: Is there any ratepayer who would object to paying in taxes ten cents extra per year for this information? we say not, and yet about one-tenth of that amount would likely be sufficient. The average number of ratepayers in township municipalities in this section is 800; $8 would be an average of one cent each for this number, and though that would be a very small sum to offer for such work, we believe in most cases that amount would be accepted for such extra services.

CHANGE IN BUSINESS.

Mr. W. F. Doll has sold his jewellry business in this place to Mr. W. A. Brown, his partner, and is going into the "jobbing" business himself. Mr. Doll has built up a large business in the jewellry line here, he is an active, shrewd and enterprising business man and will be greatly missed. He is opening a jewellry store this week in Chatsworth, of which our esteemed friend, Mr. James Munshaw, will be manager. Mr. Doll leaves this week for the North-West, we wish him success in his new field of action.

Mr. Brown commences business on his own account this week and under very favorable circumstances. He is a mechanic of rare ability, as his work for the past nine months in this place in repairing etc., will fully prove, is a man of undoubted integrity, and we can cheerfully recommend him to the confidence of the public and hope he may have that degree of success which real merit deserves.

A RIDDLE.

(By special request)

A natural production, neither animal, vegetable, or mineral, neither male or female, yet often produced between both, and exists from two to six feet high, is of often spoken in romances, is strongly recommended by precept, example and holy writ.

A kiss—is the only correct answer among a number we have received, from E. H. B.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—Our new Governor General, the Marquis of Lansdowne, arrived at Quebec on Monday last.

—Notice of an application to Parliament for an Act to incorporate the Methodist Church on the basis of union adopted at Belleville, has been given at Ottawa.

—The Marquis of Lorne was presented with a farewell address at Quebec Saturday. In his reply His Excellency advised strongly against a policy of isolation from the rest of the Provinces.

—Canada wants nothing so much just now as a really independent press. It is full time that a new generation of journalists appeared on the scene, who will give us the truth and leave us to draw our own conclusions. We have had enough of party vituperation and contradiction for mere contradiction,s sake.

—The Toronto World is down on the marriage aid association of Hamilton in its own independent and vigorous style, while the voice of the country papers rises from all quarters of the province in commendation of the out spoken and fearless course presued by the World in such matters. We beleive the above named association is a fraud in the strictest sense of the word, and would advise the public against having anything to do with it.

PASSED AWAY.

We are again called upon to chronicle the death of a resident of this place, in the person of Mrs. Arch. Butter, who died at her father's residence, Glenelg, on Tuesday 18th inst. Mr. and Mrs. Butter were highly respected residents of Markdale for a number of years. She was a consistent and zealous member of the Presbyterian church, was an active member of the L. A. Association, among whom she had many warm friends who now mourn her early departure. She lost her health some two years since, and has continued to lose strength and vitality by that prevalent disease, consumption, until the above date, when death claimed its victim. She was but 36 years of age and passed away full of hope in a glorious eternity. The funeral took place on Sabbath last and was the largest ever witnessed in this section of country. Rev. Mr. Wilson preached an impressive sermon and conducted the burial services. Mr. Butter has our warmest sympathy in his bereavement.

Personals.

Mr. C. Biggar was in town this week.

G. S. Brown, of Meaford, was in town this week.

Mrs John Williams was down from Sault Ste Marie this week.

Miss Maggie Donnelly returned from visiting friends in Innisfill township this week.

Mrs. Wm. Wright left on Tuesday for St. Joseph, after visiting friends several weeks.

W. R. P. Eager, Esq., of Milton, Master of the circuit Court of Halton County, was in town Monday.

Miss Moffat, sister of our respected townsman of the Markdale Foundry, arrived from Scotland last week.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

Mr. W. G. Pickell says:—In reference to an insertion in last weeks' Advance, I distinctly state I never made any such acknowledgement, and was under no misapprehension whatever.

To Editor STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—As a ratepayer of Artemesia township I would ask, through the columns of your paper, for information in reference to the publishing of the minutes of our council. I am a subscriber to both our local papers and have failed to see any account of the last three meetings. If the minutes are sent to you why not publish them. Even you do not receive any remuneration for so doing. I consider, for my part, that the minutes of our council meeting, when published regularly, is one of the most valuable features of a local paper, and one which every ratepayer is more or less, interested in, because it is the only source from which we can procure such information. We are apt to blame the printer for neglect of duty, or rather what we as farmers consider their duty, and I await information on this subject. If you do not receive the minutes, perhaps you can enlighten us as to where the fault lies.

Your truly,

X. Y. Z.

The Gun.

One day last week T. McNea, T. Mullarky, W. Mason and C. G. Smith, of this place, together with James Peters and Joseph Blyth, of Normanby, and A. Brown, Proton, went for a days' sport taking with them a fouling piece each selecting as their hunting ground the neighborhood of the townline of Artemesia and Proton. About sunset McNae shot two fine deer. They secured the services of Mr. King, a farmer, to convey them and their game to Flesherton station, where all hands and the "doe" boarded the train and came to Markdale, where the butcher dressed one carcass and the sportman treated the citizens to a free roast. The other was sent to Normanby where we presume the sportsmen served it likewise.

The same party, less Smith, again tried their luck on Monday last, in the same neighborhood and after four lively runs with Goldy, Lundy and Lassy Gean captured a fine buck. Peters this time being the lucky marksman, who also wounded a second one which, however escaped; so ended the second day's sport. The third day Mr. McNae captured a fine buck, which he brought home yesterday.

Williamsford Station.

From a correspondent.

Oct. 23—Mr. H. Foster expects to raise his grain house to-morrow, and will have it finished with all possible speed. The establishment of a grain market will doubtless be a great benefit to the place.

Mr. J. Lilburn is building a large steam saw mill, which will be ready for next seasons work, which will commence with the winter, this will be an improvement on the water power.

About 40 men are working on the ballast train and about 25 repairing the track, all this is making a wonderfull improvement on this portion of the road. The station is also being thoroughly repaired.

The Ball Family, (colored) gave a concert in the Methodist church, on Monday evening to a crowded house with satisfactory results.

The American Agriculturist for November

Surpasses in every respect any previous issue of that periodical during its forty-three years of existance. It contains over one hundered illustrations, engraved expressly for its columns. by Halm, Cary, Forbes, Trumble, Reed, and other well-known artists. There are four full-page engravings, including the cover, which is a greater number than has ever appared before in a single issue of the American Agriculturist. There are over one hundred columns of reading matter, upon all subjects pertaining to the Farm, Garden, and Household, by such well known writers as Orange Judd, Joseph Harris, George Thurber, Byron D., Halsted, William Clift, Alfred Trumble, Prof, S. R. Tompson, R. W. Seiss, F. D. Curtis, A. B. Allen, M. C. Weld, and a host of others. There are papers on every variety of subject, convering the entire country from Maine to California, and from Canada to the Gulf. Among the leading features of the paper are several fully illustrated articles on Barn Plans and Outbuildings, remodelling barns, etc. The articles on "Cattle Ranching" in South America is fresh and very interesting, David W. Judd contributes an artilcal on "Prairie Chicken Shooting," illustrating with a full-page engraving. Price, post-paid, $1.50 a year. Clubbed with the STANDARD for $2.00.

Sheep worrying in St. Vincnet.

Sheep worrying dogs appear to be abroad in the township of St. Vincent. They are creating sad havoc, too as the following item illustrates. On Wednesday night of last week, Mr. James Bowes, jr., Reeve of the township, had 25 of his splendid flock of sheep worried by dogs. Ten of them were left dead, and four more of them cannot possibly recover. Mr. Bowes places the loss at not less than $200, and he states he has no clue as to the ownership of the canines.—Mirror.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.70 to $1.95; Spring $0.70 to $1 95; Barley, 50 to70; Peas, 60; Oats, 30c Butter, 15c; Eggs, 20c; Potatoes, 40c; Hay, $6 .00 ; Pork, 5.00 to 5.50; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20.

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.10; Spring, $1.00 to $1.12; Barley, 50c to 70c; Oats, 37c to 38c Peas, 70c to 73c; Hogs, $6.00 to $6.25; Potatoes, per bag, 90c to $1c; Butter, dairy, 15c to 17c; eggs, 18c to 20c.

Euphrasia Show.

From the Monitor.

This show was held on the 10th inst. The day was very unfavorable, being wet, this however did not prevent a large number from turning out. The show was smaller than usual, but the quality was good, if it had not been for the rain the show whould have been a success, and the directors would have been enabled to clear off the debt they got into in the law suit about the show ground. They took in $53.55 at the gate. The following is the prize list:—

HORSES.—General purpose team, James Bowes, sr., Wm McConnell, Carriage road team, Jas Henderson, Wm McConnell, Single driver in rig, J W Love, H McDonald. Brood mare draught, J Langhill. General purpose brood mare, Wm Ham, Wm Kinnear. Brood mare carriage, J Mahoney, A Holden. Two year old draught, I Loughead. Two year old general purpose, I Loughead, Arch Davison. Two year old carriage or roadster, J Mahoney, J Foy. Yearling draught, D M Robertson, A Davidson, General purpose yearling, R Clark. Yearling carriage or roadster, H McDonald, Thos Ellis. Spring foal draught, E I Shaw. Spring foal general purpose, W Ham, S Gilmore. Spring foal carriage or roadster, W Kinnear, A Holden.

CATTLE.—(Durham) Cow giving milk, R Clark, 1s and 2nd. Two year old heifer, J Neely, R Clark. Yearling heifer, R Clark. Heifer calf, R Clark. Bull calf, R Clark. (Grade Cattle) Yoke oxen, J W Knott, D Squire. Cow giving milk, S Gilmore, R Clark. Two yeark old heifer, J T Perry. Yearling heifer, R Clark, Hugh Johnston. Heifer calf, R Clark.

SHEEP.—(Leicester or Lincoln,) Aged ram, E I Shaw, Wm Fawcett. Shearling ram, W Ham, W Fawcett. Ram lamb, W Ham, 1st and 2nd. Pair aged ewes, Wm Shepperdson, W Fawcett. Pair Shearling ewes, E Shaw, Wm Shepperdson. Pair ewe lambs, E Shaw, Wm Ham. (Cotswold,) Aged ram, Wm Shepperdson. Ram lamb, Wm Fawcett, W Wm Shepperdson. Pair aged ewe, W Shepperdson. Pair shearling ewes, W Shepperdson, W Fawcett. Pair ewe lambs, W Shepperdson, W Fawcett. (South and other Downs,) Shearling ram, J F Perry. Ram lamb, How & Ellis, 1st and 2nd. Pair aged ewes. How & Ellis. Pair ewe lambs, Joseph How, W Shepperdson.

SWINE.—(Berkshire,) Aged boar, J Clugston Aged sow, W Fawcett, A Crabtree. Boar of 1883, Wm Fawcett. (Suffolk and other white breeds,) aged boar, E Shaw, J Munarey Aged sow, E Shaw, J Munarey. Boar of 1883, Ed Shaw, J How. Sow of 1883, Jos Munarey, J How.

POULTRY.—Pair ducks, R Clark, S Read.

GRAIN.—Fall wheat, J Mahoney, S Vanwick. Spring wheat, J Mahoney, C Clark. Barley, H Hurd, C Clark. White oats, C Clark, A Crabtree. Peas, Jas Body, S Vanwyck.

ROOTS AND VEGETABLES.—Early Rose potatoes, R Onie, R Quinton. Potatoes, any sort, Wm Ward, F Eaton. Swede turnips, Thos Douglas, J Bowes, sr. Mangold wurtzel, W Fawcett, A Crabtree. Blood beets, H Johnston, F Eaton. Field carrots, Wm Ham, Wm Ward. Table carrots, J Hawkins, J C Paterson. Parsnips, H Johnston, R Gilray. Squash, Wm ——. Cabbage, H Johnston, R Onie. Black seed onions, Wm Ham, H Johnston. Potato onions, J Body, R Quinton. Top onions seed, T Morrison, F Eaton. Tomatoes, Wm Ward. Celery, R Gilray. White beans, J Brody, C Clark. Collection beans, T Perry, F Brody. Collection vegetable, Wm Ward.

FRUIT.—Fall apples, J G Perry, H Hurd. Winter apples, C Clark, Wm Ham. Fall pears, J Brody, R Gilray. Winter pears, Wm Ward, J Brody. Grapes, J D Crabtree. Plums, R Clark, S Gilmore. Crab apples, C Clark, J Clugston. Collection fruit, J C Paterson, W Ward.

DAIRY PRODUCE.—Tub butter, Wm Ward. H Johnston, R Onie. Roll butter, W Ward, H Johnston. Cheese, J Irwin 1st and 2nd. Box honey, J C Paterson. Bread, W Ward. Thos Douglass.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.—Farmers' Waggon, J Pinch. H L Tottenham. Democrat waggon, A Holden, G Cruickshank. Single buggy, A Holden, W Quin. Fanning mill, C Watt, W T Pringle.

MANUFACTURES.—Set team harness, H McDonald. Carriage harness, H McDonald, 1st and 2nd. Single harness, H McDonald. Saddle, bridle and martingale, H McDonald. Fulled cloth, R Quinton 1st and 2nd Fancy flannel, R Quinton, W Ward. Plain Flannel F Eaton, R Quinton. Pair blankets, J T Perry, R Quinton.

LADIES' WORK.—Patchwork quilt, W Gray, H Johnston. Any other kind quilt, H Johnston. Embroidery in cotton worsted braiding, R Gilray, William Ward. Crotchet work, R Gilray, Wm Ward. Tidy, W Guy R Gilray. Woollen stockings, R Quinton 1st and 2nd. Woollen socks, H Johnston, R Quinton. Woollen mitts, Thos Douglass, R Quinton. Woollen gloves, J Brody, J Hawkins. Ladies undershirt, R Gilray. Rag or wool mat hooked, R Quinton. Fancy knitting in cotton, J Brody, J Irwin. Berlin wool work, J C Paterson, W Ward. Pillow shams, R Gilray, C Clark. Ladies dress, R Gilray, W Ward. Collection needlework, R Gilray, W Ward. Collection out flowers, W Ward 1st and 2nd. Pencil drawing, Sarah Clark, recommended. Painting on satin, S Clark. Twine work, J C Paterson. Bracket, H McDonald.

THE CRADLE.

FLEMING.—At Berkeley on the 10th inst., the wife of Mr. George Fleming, Post Master, of a son.

THE ALTAR.

REDDICK—COOKE.—At the residence of the bride's brother, Glenelg, on Oct. 16th, by the Rev. T. Ashbury, Miss Annie Cooke, of Durham, to Mr. James Reddick, of Mount Forest.

THE GRAVE.

BUTTER.—In Glenelg, at the residence of her father, on the 18th inst., Margaret, wife of Mr. Arch. Butter, aged 36 years.

KIRKPATRICK.—In Euphrasia, on the 21st inst., Mr. John Kirkpatrick, aged 59 yrs.

BEARD—In Glenelg, twin children, of Mr. Marshall Beard, one the 21st and one the 25th, aged 4 months.

BREAD to be 12 cts, the large loaf, on Monday Oct. 29th, at Montgomery & Joy's bakery.

WANTED, An apprentice at the Sash and Door Factory. Apply to GEORGE GRANT & CO., Markdale.

NOTICE. Having given up possession of Barrhead Mill, and purpose removing from this place shortly, I hereby notify all parties indebted to me to call at Lucas' Bank and settle their account and save further trouble or costs.

Oct. 24, '83. W. J. ROWE.

William McLeod, BOOT AND SHOEMAKER, MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Scrap work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand opposite Mathews' harness shop.

156-3m

FARM FOR SALE. Lot 89 and [illegible] second range west of Toronto S. Road, Glenelg, 100 acres, 85 of which are cleared and under cultivation fit for [illegible] on. Buildings and [illegible] soil clay loam, well watered, and in a good state of cultivation, and well located [illegible] flourishing village of [illegible] particulars apply on premises or by letter to WM. MUTHIE, Markdale P.O.

162-6i

FARMS FOR SALE. Lot 11, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of which are [illegible] cultivation. Lot [illegible] 63 acres, 40 cleared and under cultivation, with [illegible] thereon. Lot 13, con. 1, Artemesia, 140 acres, all bush. For terms and particulars apply to J. G. LAING, Markdale.

Oct. 16, 1883. 1f

325 ACRES | Fonthill Nurseries | 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment the year round to all willing to work. Money and Advancement for the right men. Pleasant and profitable WORK THE YEAR ROUND. Good salaries and commissions from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses, horses and outfit free. Address STONE & WELLINGTON, TORONTO, ONT.

161-13

HOLLAND CENTRE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY

BALANCE SHEET FOR 1883.

To 183 Members Subscriptions	$183 00
" Extra subscriptions	50 00
" Grant of Township Council	50 00
" Sale of tickets at Gate	4 50
Total	$285 50
By amount of Prizes awarded	$179 50
" Wm. Vogan, for Judges and Referees dinner	12 50
" C. W. Ruth, [illegible] rules, [illegible]	14 00
" S. Watson, [illegible] for pens	2 50
" Postage and Stationery	2 50
" Two pieces [illegible]	50
" Five yards [illegible]	10 00
" Salary to Secretary	40 00
" Balance on hand [illegible]	23 50
Total	$285 50

Examined and [illegible]

JAS. [illegible] Auditors.

T. W. [illegible]

WM. SPENCER, Secretary.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all [illegible] indebted to me by note or book account must [illegible] the same immediately. Settlement of [illegible] can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

In the Goods of MARGARET IRETON (DECEASED)

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to Section 34 of Chapter 107, R. S. O., the [illegible] of Margaret Ireton, late of the township of [illegible], in the county of Grey, [illegible] who died on or about the 5th day of May, 1883, and all parties having claims upon her estate are on or before the next, to send by post prepaid, to Benjamin Coleman, of the Village of Markdale, in the county of Grey, one of the Executors, of the personal estate and effects of the deceased, (or to James Masson, Markdale, solicitor for the executors,) their Christian and Surnames addresses and description, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and nature of the securities (if any) held by them, and in default thereof the assets of the said deceased will be distributed, having regard only to the claims then received or those of which the executors then have notice,

FIFTEENTH DAY OF NOVEMBER

BENJAMIN COLEMAN, JOHN WM. FORD, Executors.

J. MASSON, Solicitor for Executors.

Dated this 1st Day October, 1883.

DressStuffsTw

Dress stuffs in all t shades, varying in pr 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English and Canadian, in th and most fashionable

TORONT

THIS SPACE BE TO W. A. BRO The Jewel MARKD

Advertisement next

Local and Other

NOTICES in these columns of any individual or Society cents a line for the cents a line each subs

THE second story of [illegible] ing is up.

MR. HULL has his [illegible] up and is roofing it.

COMPLETE outfits for [illegible] the STANDARD Office.

15LBS of good raw [illegible] at Trimble & Wright's.

BLANK notes, receipt forms for sale at the [illegible]

MR. J. W. FORD is [illegible] 30 barrels of flour [illegible]

Go to Trimble & W. best and cheapest [illegible] Canada.

A FINE lamp has [illegible] front of the Revere H be next.

DRESS goods all shades patterns very cheap Wrights.

G. L. DOBBS, Esq., W T., will please accept th for the STANDARD.

EDWARD Rutledge has from Wm. Shepherdson, er, a fine bred ram.

BRING along your [illegible] highest prices paid in c Trimble & Wright's.

MRS. M. will please thanks for that fine [illegible] also Mr. McNea, for a [illegible] of venison.

DRESS GOODS.—We h latest patterns in th prices that will surpri Reynolds & Son.

AT the last meeting [illegible] F. the Markdale Lodge visit from a number [illegible] of Holland Centre Lod

MR. W. J. McFarl materially improved h building an addition improving the surround

WE learn with re Mullarky, Deputy Re had his ankle put out stepping from the train Station Monday evenin

GRAND opening, Re have just opened out t winter stock of dry goo crockery, &c. We inv at large to call and see prices.

MR. Wm. Brown has residence on Elizabet complete, and is makin able place of the same. proved it also very mu dition of the adjoining the premises.

COMMENDABLE SUCC L., son of Mr. Edward place, and who is but 1 passed the intermediat last July in Owen Sou more marks than was third class certificate. him from entering the he being two years too

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK

Dress Stuffs Tweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN

THIS SPACE BELONGS TO

W. A. BROWN,

The Jeweller,

MARKDALE.

Advertisement next week.

Local and Other Items.

Notices in those columns intended to benefit churches or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line for each subsequent insertion.

The second story of Mr. Rae's building is up.

Mr. Irving has his new livery stable up and is roofing it.

Complete outfits for auctioneers, at the STANDARD Office.

15lbs of good raw sugar for $1.00, at Trimble & Wright's.

Blank notes, receipts and all such forms for sale at the STANDARD Office.

Mr. J. W. Ford is shipping about 20 barrels of flour weekly, to Dundalk.

Go to Trimble & Wright's for the best and cheapest all steel axe in Canada.

A fine lamp has been erected in front of the Revere House. Who'll be next.

Dress goods all shades, colors and patterns very cheap at Trimble & Wright's.

O. L. Davis, Esq, Wolseley, N. W. T., will please accept thanks for $1., for the STANDARD.

Edward Rutledge has purchased from Wm. Shepherdson, sheep breeder, a fine bred ram.

Bring along your butter and eggs, highest prices paid in cash or trade, Trimble & Wright's.

Mrs. M. will please accept our thanks for that fine dressed goose, also Mr. McNeil, for a beautiful roast venison.

DRESS GOODS.—We have the very latest patterns in this line and at prices that will surprise the ladies. Boyd Bros & Son.

At the last meeting of the C. O. O. F. the Markdale Lodge had a friendly visit from a number of the members of Holland Centre Lodge.

Mr. W. J. McFarland has very materially improved his residence by building an addition, and otherwise improving the surroundings.

We learn with regret that Mr. Mulharky, Deputy Reeve of Glenelg, had his ankle put out of joint while stepping from the train at Flesherton station Monday evening.

GRAND opening, Reynolds & Son have just opened out their fall and winter stock of dry goods, groceries, crockery &c. We invite the public at large to call and see our stock and prices.

Mr. Wm. Brown has his spacious residence on Elizabeth street now complete, and is making a very desirable place of the same. He has improved it also very much by the addition of the adjoining vacant lot to the premises.

COMMENDABLE SUCCESS.—William L., son of Mr. Edward Davis, of this place, and who is but 15 years of age, passed the intermediate examination last July in Owen Sound, taking 140 more marks than was necessary for a third class certificate. His age debars him from entering the Model school, he being two years too young.

LADIES if you want a fancy wool shawl, cloud or scarf, go straight to Trimble & Wright's.

WE understand the Berkeley shingle mill will be converted into a broom handle factory, until the shingle season again arrives.

SEE here! Manarey's sale will take place on the 30th October, next Tuesday, not Thursday the 1st November, as first advertised.

SCOTCH and Canadian tweeds the newest and best in the market. young men if you want to get a nobby suit go to Reynolds' & Son.

Trimble & Wright offer for the next 30 days a large line of mantle cloths all good patterns at 75cts on the dollar, don't fail to see them.

Trimble & Wright have just received this day a large stock of boots and shoes purchased at 75 cts on the dollar, all new goods warranted A 1, see them.

MRS. DEMMY, of Holland, left Owen Sound one day recently the same time as the train, she drove with her ponies to Chatsworth and arrived ahead of the train.

A MEETING was held recently at the Markdale House when a Gimnasium club was organized and officers elected, the meeting adjourned until tomorrow evening, Friday, to meet at the same place. All who wish to join or otherwise aid are invited to attend.

PAINTING.—Mr. H. Gill, painter, who had to change his occupation during the summer months, owing to poor health, has now returned to his trade and is prepared to execute all work entrusted to him in painting papering &c., in a workmanlike and satisfactory manner.

ACCIDENT.—Robert, eldest son of Andrew Nesbitt, of Artemesia, who has been brakeman on the G. T. R. for some time, fell from a car while on duty three miles below Belleville early this week, and received serious injuries about the head. His father went down to attend him but we have not yet learned particulars.

NOTICE.—The pews in the Methodist Church will be re-let at 2 o'clock on Thursday, Novembr 1st. Pew holders who wish to retain their seat another year can secure it at the old price by calling at the office of C. W. Rutledge and settling for the same any time up to the above date, otherwise they will be let to the highest bidder.

NOTICE.—Owing to a missunderstanding between the auctioneer and two parties in Euphrasia who are having credit sales, their bills were got out and posted announcing both sales the same day, Mr. Shepherdson, the auctioneer has consequently issued another set of bills for Manarey's sale which will take place on Tuesday the 20th Oct., instead of Thursday the 1st November.

ANOTHER LIE NAILED.—While the reading of the Grand Bumper Degree was in progress at the entertainment given last week by the A. O. U. W & C. O. O. F., Mrs. Flattery was overheard telling Mrs. Callagain that the cup of tea just served was some of an uptown lot, but to Mrs. C. the flavour was too pleasant, the color too yellow, the taste too familiar, and in low, but distinct tones she replied no that is the tae I use every day, the notorious Tae which is sold only by Trimble & Wright.

IN the report of the Mechanics' Institute concert held recently in that place. The Palmerston Telegraph says:—The first concert of the season for the benefit of the library fund of the Mechanics' Institute took place on Friday evening last, in the town hall, and was well attended. The principal performer being Mr. Anderson, of Markdale, whose singing of Scottish songs so charmed the audience that had no other name been in the programme they would have been satisfied.

THE largest stock of fancy woolen goods in the county at Trimble & Wright. Every lady should see them.

SHOT DEAD.—Thomas Scott, a convict from Windsor was shot dead Tuesday by Guard Hart, while attempting to escape from the Central Prison.

WE have made arrangements with the World Publishing Co. whereby we are enabled to club that newsy and independent daily paper with the STANDARD for $3.50 cash.

S. S. SERMONS.—Te Anniversary sermons of the Methodist S. S. of this place were preached last sabbath, Rev. Mr. Wilson, Presbyterian, delivered a very able, practical and impressive discourse in the morning, and Rev. Mr. Cassin preached an appropriate sermon to a crowded house in the evening. Mr. Cassin filled Mr. Wilsons pulpit in the morning with great acceptance. This is as it should be, and we are gratified to know the prospects are so encouragingly favorable for a continuance of that harmony which has exhisted between the above branches of the churche in the past.

STRANGE BUT TRUE.—Trimble & Wright have shipped this week to Fort William 283 yards of carpet, tablings, knapkins, grey and bleached cottons, plain and twilled tickings, counterpins, stair carpet, mats, knives and forks, and other goods suitable for the thorough refitting of the Ontario hotel in that place. They also sold a large bill of goods to Mr. John Howard to be taken direct to his home in the State of Ohio, U. S., they also sent to Prince Arthurs landing, nearly 500 pairs of mitts and socks, ready made clothing, ordered clothing (made by Mr. Rae) mens underwear, gents furnishing &c., also to Manitowaning a large consignment of teas, sugars &c. They expect shortly to open other points to which they will ship more or less goods before the close of navigation.

MARKDALE A. O. U. W. AND C. O. O. F.—The Anniversary entertainment of these lodges was held in their hall on Friday evening last. The rooms which were recently fitted up for the above lodges are spacious and very comfortable, and carpeted with tapestry carpet. The A. O. U. W. lodge was organized two years since and the C. O. O. F. one year. They have both about an equal number of members, viz: 27, and are in a prosperous condition, This was the first opportunity their friends had of visiting them in their new quarters, and from the many expressions indulged in, they were very agreeably surprised both as to the comfortable rooms, and their large membership as designated by their badges. The hall was well filled and the various games and amusements entered into with that cheerfullness and harmony which characterizes the people of this village. During the evening refreshments were served consisting of tea from Trimble & Wright's, sweetened with sugar from McFarland's and cakes from Rookes bakery, after which a programme was entered upon and gone through. The committee have to thank Mr. R. Askin who kindly put his fine organ at the disposal of the committee and Mr. & Mrs. McDougall, who rendered very acceptable assistance in prepairing the tea &c. We hope to see and enjoy many returns of the occasion.

MONTHLY FAIRS.

Markdale—Saturday before Flesherton.
Chatsworth—Monday before Durham.
Dundalk—Tuesday before Orangeville.
Flesherton—Monday before Orangeville.
Shelburne—Wednesday before Orangeville.
Orangeville—The second Thursday in each month.
Mount Forest—Third Wednesday in each month.
Priceville—Monday before Durham.
Durham—Third Tuesday in each month.
Hanover—Monday before Durham.

MARKDALE

PLANING, SASH, DOOR AND FURNITURE FACTORY.

Lumber Planed or Matched While Waiting.

Sash, Doors, and Mouldings always on hand or made to Order. All kinds of lumber, Lath and Shingles kept in stock. Furniture of all descriptions to be seen at our Warerooms. Lumber and cordwood will be taken in exchange for Furniture.

George Grant & Co.,
Proprietors.

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

J. W. FORD

Is giving splendid satisfaction in

CRISTING,

By the New Process at the

Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

New FALL Importations

——arriving daily at——

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats. Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in a th e latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

AN AWKWARD FIX.

The express from New York to Philadelphia was rather crowded one bright May morning some years ago, and a gray-haired old gentleman, with bent shoulders and kindly but rather melancholy dark eyes, walked nearly the whole length of the cars before coming to a disengaged seat beside a young lady with a baby, the latter crowing and kicking with an energy somewhat embarrassing to his smiling young mother.

The baby was an objection surely; but there was no other seat to be had; so Doctor Lewis, with a polite "Good morning," took the vacant place. For a moment the baby was still, staring at the new-comer with solemn, childish curiosity; then there was a sudden crow and a leap, for which his mother was quite unprepared, and both the child's chubby fists were buried in Doctor Lewis's beard, while an infantine scream of delight and triumph almost succeeded in drowning the rumbling and jarring of the train.

"Oh, Harry, Harry!" cried the mother in horror and consternation, vainly doing her best to force the child to let go his hold. "I beg ten thousand pardons, sir; I must have been very careless!"

"Don't make yourself uneasy madam," replied Doctor Lewis, smiling, "I am fond of children, and really feel quite flattered at this fine little fellow's notice. Perhaps he may find my umbrella as attractive as my beard."

As he spoke, the gentleman offered for the child's inspection an umbrella adorned with a shining silver handle, to which the child immediately transferred his attentions, striving for several minutes, with an energy worthy of a better cause, to swallow the new plaything. The lady tried in vain to tempt the child to leave his new acquaintance; but such shrill screams attended any attempt with this object in view that she gave it up in despair, fain to believe Doctor Lewis's kindly assurance that the baby was not troubling him in the least. This, by-the-way, was not the polite fiction usually resorted to in such a case, for the old gentlemen was strangely attracted towards the rosy, laughing boy gazing up into his face with big confiding dark eyes, in whose depths lay some unaccountable fascination for him.

"You evidently have plenty of children or grandchildren at home," smiled the mother. "It is easy to see that you are accustomed to children; Harry doesn't often take so readily to a stranger."

"No, madam," replied the gentleman, a little sadly. "I know unhappily very little of children. I lost my only child sixteen years ago, when I lived in New Orleans. His name was Harry too, and he had eyes very like your little one's here."

Yes, that was the charm in Baby Harry's eyes, which Doctor Lewis realised only as he spoke of his long-lost child; and for a few moments the old man was lost in painful retrospection of the great sorrow and remorse of his life—the sternness, which he now magnified into cruelty, which had driven his high-spirited motherless boy of sixteen to leave his father's house one night when too heavily punished for some boyish escapade, never to return. It was supposed he had gone to sea; but, as nothing had ever been heard of him, his father had long since given him up as dead; in all the long years which had passed however he had never forgiven himself for being what he morbidly called the destroyer of his own child.

"Do you live in Philadelphia, madam?" Doctor Lewis asked, when Harry had at last been induced by the bribe of an orange to return to his mother's arms.

"Oh, no, sir!" was the reply. "Our home is in California. We are visiting now in New York, and Harry and I are going to my cousin's wedding in Philadelphia; my husband went yesterday, and will meet us at the station if possible."

Doctor Lewis found Harry's bright, pretty young mother quite as entertaining as her child, and his journey that morning was a much pleasanter affair than he usually found such a trip. Harry's father was not at the station; so Dr. Lewis established the mother with her baby and a small valise, in a carriage, and, after expressing sincere wishes for another meeting rather regretfully saw the carriage drive away, while he was left standing alone on the pavement.

The day was still young, and, after taking an early dinner at a restaurant, Dr. Lewis — valise in hand — forthwith went his way on the business which had brought him to Philadelphia—a weekly meeting of a society of geologists and naturalists, these branches of science being Doctor Lewis's hobbies. For weeks he had been busily engaged preparing a paper on fossils which he was to lay before the society; and this, with reports and other papers of interest to the society, of which he was secretary, formed the contents of the small leather travelling-bag he had brought with him. The meeting that afternoon was preliminary to the official one in the evening, and there Doctor Lewis was to read the paper which had caused him such profound study to a few kindred spirits before bestowing the precious gift upon the public.

About a dozen elderly gentlemen were present when he entered the room, and very soon Doctor Lewis was called upon to contribute his share to the evening's programme. A long-nosed solemn naturalist had just been giving his ideas on worms, and Doctor Lewis—bag in hand—advanced immediately to the place he had vacated before the table.

"Gentlemen," he began, with a gravity suitable to the dignity of his subject, "I shall now ask you to listen to a few remarks I have written on the subject of antediluvian fossils."

As he spoke, the Doctor opened his bag, and, in full view of the circle of spectacled, grave professors, drew threfrom an elaborately-embroidered baby's bib! Yes—there was no disguising it—no amount of imagination could transform this, in the circumstances, most startling article into anything like the fossil it ought to have been; and, utterly bewildered, without daring to glance at his amazed colleagues, Doctor Lewis hopele sly laid the bib on the table, and drew forth a pair of pale blue socks.

At this a decided murmur went round the table, which issuing from any other than such learned and dignified lips, would certainly have much resembled a titter; but, when Doctor Lewis—with face growing every moment redder—hurriedly produced from the bag a nursing-bottle, the roar of laughter echoing through the room might have proceeded from a troop of the veriest schoolboys.

"Gentlemen, this is easily explained," said Doctor Lewis at last, laying down the bag and laughing heartily at this joke at his own expense. "I travelled with a lady and her baby from New York, and in leaving the cars I evidently took her bag—exactly like my own, I see—in exchange for mine. You certainly will own that the fossils I contribute to the cause of science to-day are of a new and startling character. Fortunately I remember the address the lady gave the hackman, so I can return her property and recover my own still in time for our meeting this evening."

Harry and his mother were safely deposited at the house of the bride-elect whose wedding was the cause of this trip to Philadelphia, destined to be so eventful. It was Harry's first appearance among his relatives and of course the homage laid at his shrine occupied the first hour of the visit. The marriage was to take place at home; and immediately after the early dinner the party separated for the important occupation of donning wedding-garments. Harry was with difficulty torn from the detaining arms of aunts and cousins, and disappeared with his parents.

"I have not told you yet what a delightful acquaintance baby and I made in the cars to-day, Harry," the young mother remarked to her husband, as, after depositing hat, cloak, and baby on the bed, she threw herself on the sofa for an instant's repose, to fortify herself for the important task of rendering master Harry resplendent enough to completely dazzle the eyes of his admirers—running a serious risk of quite throwing the charms of the bride into the background, his fond mother thought in the depths of her heart. The straintened means of the young couple had never allowed the expense of a nursery-maid; but this was a deprivation which had never as yet troubled mother or child in the least. "Of course he admired Harry immensely, and I don't think he was wholly indifferent to the charms of Harry's mamma."

"Some disreputable old scamp, I've no doubt!" was the sympathetic reply of the husband—a dark-eyed, broad-shouldered young man, who, as he spoke, was gazing at his fair young wife with eyes full of proudest love and admiration.

"He was no such thing, I assure you," she retorted. "He was——Harry, my precious child, do you imagine yourself to be an ostrich?"

With a spring, she reached her son's side, and seized just in time a rusty nail which he was endeavouring to swallow. Harry greeted his mother's interference with an energetic roar of disgust, to soothe which required all her energies for a moment, after which she opened her travelling-bag preparatory to making the child's toilette.

An instant later the husband was startled by an exclamation of utter dismay and alarm.

"Harry, Harry, come here this moment and tell me what has happened!"

The young man hurried to his wife's side, in a limp, hopeless way, for she had sunk upon the floor beside the travelling-bag, the contents of which she was surveying with eyes twice as large as they ought to have been, her husband thought.

"Louise, my dear wife, what in the world is the matter?"

"That is exactly what I want to know!" cried Louise, on the verge of tears, while the baby crowed lustily at his successful attempt at tearing a large hole in the lace-edging of the pillow-case with the rusty nail which had unfortunately been left within his reach. "See for yourself; here is the bag in which I packed all baby's things for the wedding this morning, and look! All his lovely embroideries have turned into a pile of stones and a lot of papers. What shall I do? What can it mean?"

In utter amazement Harry emptied the bag, and sure enough found it to contain nothing at all but a few stones and fossils and one or two papers, which seemed a discussion of some abstruse point in geology. Quite at a loss, he fell to studying the bag. Suddenly a light broke over his face, and he bust into a merry fit of laughter, which, in the circumstances, of all things seemed most heartless to his aggravated wife.

"Ha, ha—my dear, it's plain enough now! This isn't your bag at all, though very like it. Some musty old professor must have walked off with Harry's frills and furbelows, and left you these stones in their place. Don't I wish I could be somewhere about when he finds out his mistake."

"But what shall I do?" cried poor Louise, fairly bursting into tears. "I haven't any other things for Harry with me, and there is no time to get anything. He was to have been so perfectly lovely!"

"Never mind, darling," said the young man, doing his best to stifle his laughter and console his wife. "Scrub him and comb his hair, and wrap him up in anything. He is sure to be the beauty any way." And with this assurance Louise was obliged to find what comfort she could; but her anticipations of pleasure for the day were completely spoiled.

Her own toilette was soon made, and the child rendered as presentable as circumstances would a low, the deficiencies of the attire he had travelled in being covered as well as might be by a white opera-cloak lent for the purpose by a sympathising but very rash cousin; and an hour later the wedding ceremony was over.

The bride, the wedding presents, and the dark-eyed crowing baby in tumbled dress and embroidered opera cloak were disputing the attention of the few guests at this quietest of weddings. when Mrs. Laurence, the mother of the bride, was called from the room, returning a few moments later and approaching Harry's mother with rather a perplexed face.

"My dear," she said, drawing her guest aside, "there is an old gentleman waiting in the library to see some one who, I think, must be you. He says he doesn't know the name; but he should be glad to see the lady whom he had the pleasure of travelling with this morning. From the description, it can be no one else; you are the only one who arrived with a baby."

"Yes, it must be my old gentleman!" replied Louise, a little wonderingly. "What can he want?"

"Perhaps he knows something about Harry's petticoats," suggested her husband, "I think I will follow you in a moment, to see what your admirer is like."

Hurriedly Louise accompanied her hostess into the library; and there, sure enough, stood her acquaintance of the morning; and —yes, on the table beside which he was standing was the brown leather bag the loss of which she had so mourned.

The old gentleman saw the direction his companion's eyes immediately took, and laughed heartily as he advanced to greet her.

"Yes, madam, I have come to restore your property, for which I have as little use as you probably have for mine, and must beg a thousand pardons for the stupidity which has doubtless caused you a good deal of inconvenience."

"Thank you so much," replied Louise, with a sigh of relief—her cherished infant might even yet be able to dazzle the eyes of the assembled guests before their departure. "I am so glad I didn't throw out your stones. I was thinking of it."

"I am very glad too," said the old gentleman, smiling. "By-the-by, I had some difficulty in getting into the house at all, not knowing your name. The servant evidently had the strongest doubts as to my respectability."

"I shall ask my aunt to discharge him immediately," Louise responded promptly. "How odd that I shouldn't have told you my name! I am Mrs. Lewis—Mrs. Henry Lewis. I beg your pardon; is any thing the matter?"—for the old gentleman had started violently as his companion spoke.

"No, no, nothing at all, Mrs Lewis," he said slowly, after leaving the question for a moment unanswered. "I had a very dear relative of that name who died some years ago; but it is a common enough name. In fact, my own name is Lewis."

"Is it possible?" cried Louise, with deep interest. "I wonder if you could be any connection?"

But Louise's speech was never finished, for the sound of a hurried exclamation from the open door behind her made her turn quickly, to see her husband standing spellbound for an instant, paler than she remembered ever having seen him. Then, with a half-smothered cry—"Father, father!"—he passed his wife with hasty strides, and grasped the hand of her visitor in both his own, while for a full minute the two men gazed silently into each other's faces with eyes asking an eager, momentous question which their tongues as yet hardly dared to utter.

"Harry—my son—my own boy!" said Doctor Lewis, at last, in a broken voice. "Do my old eyes deceive me, or has this greatest of all mercies been vouchsafed to me in my old age?"

"There is no deception, dear father. For years it has been my great grief that you—as I supposed—died before I could beg your forgiveness for the sin and disobedience of my boyhood; and now I find you again when I had long ceased to hope for it."

"My boy, it is for me to ask your forgiveness for the unnatural harshness which drove you forth from your home. But tell me of your life—remember, I know nothing since you disappeared sixteen years ago."

Louise had been standing quietly near the door, fairly sobbing with delight and intense sympathy; but now her husband turned, and drew her towards him.

"Here, father, is the crown and glory of my life," he said quietly, as he placed Louise's hand in that of his father. "If I have anything in the world to be proud of, it is that half of myself which I call my wife."

"Thank you, my dear, for what you have been to my boy," said Doctor Lewis gently, as he bent forward and kissed his daughter-in-law's white forehead.

"I ran away to sea—as perhaps you suspected—father," the young man related. "We went to China, Australia, South America, and almost every civilised county under the sun, before I returned to New Orleans, three years after; and I assure you that for a while I had hardships enough to make me bitterly repent my headstrong folly. When I last saw New Orleans, you had left the place a year before; and no amount of inquiry, then or since, resulted in the slightest clue to your whereabouts. Finally I heard that a Doctor Lewis had died months before in New York; and, though I for a long time refused to believe that it could be you, I was at last forced to the sad conclusion that I should never again see you in this world. I went to California, and have been working there ever since though I am a poor man yet. But I have my wife and child—and now my father!"

"Yes; and I, thank Heaven, have now children to help me to enjoy the wealth which of late years has come to me, and, which has seemed only like a mockery of fate in my loneliness!" the old man exclaimed feverently. "Can't I see my bonny little grandson, my dear?"—to Louise. "Is it any wonder that the child's eyes seemed to be looking into the very depths of my heart to-day?"

"Yes, I will bring him, of course," said the mother eagerly. "How lucky that I have something respectable to put on him! He deserves to be clothed in velvet and diamonds to-day; for without him we should never have found our father, Harry."

Leaving the two men alone, she went off proudly to seek her son, and found that infantile promoter of family joy and peace an object hideous to behold, having just fallen headlong into a tub of exceedingly dirty soapsuds, used by a servant for scrubbing the floor; while beside him knelt the too trusting cousin, bewailing the utter ruin of her opera cloak.

M. M. E.

An English National Apple Congress.

The first National Apple Congress was opened recently in the great conservatory of the Royal Horticultural Gardens, Chiswick. The only object of the congress is the nomenclature of apples, and no prizes are offered for the exhibits. The exhibitors represent every county in Great Britain and Ireland, and dishes of apples have also been sent from Sweden and Jersey. There is altogether a display of 7,000 dishes, representing 10,000 different sorts of apples; and it is the task of the judges to determine the number of varieties sent, and to classify them. The county of Kent is the largest contributor, and is followed by Herts, Middlesex, Hereford and Oxford. The Queen has on exhibition the large contribution of 167 varieties, which have been grown in the royal gardens. The congress is thoroughly educational.

Finding the Trail.

Here in the shadow of this grim mountain is a camp of cavalry—200 men in faded ragged blue uniforms, every face sunburned and bronzed, every sabre and carbine showing long use, every horse lifting its head from the grass at short intervals for a swift glance up and down the valley.

Here, at the foot of the mountain, the Apache trail, which has been followed for three days, has grown cold. Aye, it has been lost. It is as if the white man had followed a path which suddenly ended at a precipice. From this point the red demons took wings, and the oldest trailer is at fault.

The men on picket looked up and down the narrow valley with anxious faces. Down the valley, a mile away, a solitary wild horse paws and prances and utters shrill neighs of wonderment and alarm. Up the valley is a long stretch of green grass, the earth as level as a floor and no visible sign of life. The pines and shrubs on the mountain side might hide ten thousand Indians, but there is not the slightest movement to arouse suspicion. It is still, a hot day. Not a bird chirps, not a branch waves. The eye of a lynx could detect nothing beyond the erratic movements of the lone wild horse down the valley and the circular flight of an eagle so high in the air that the proud bird seemed no larger than a sparrow.

For an hour every man and horse has looked for 'signs," but nothing has been discovered beyond what has been described. It is a lost trail. There is something in it to arouse suspicion as well as annoyance. Ten miles away the trail was as plain as a country highway, and the Indians had no suspicion of pursuit. Five miles back there were signs of commotion. Here, in the centre of the valley, every footprint suddenly disappears.

Look, now! A sergeant with grizzly locks and fighting jaw rides down the valley, followed by five troopers. They are to scout for the lost trail. Every man has unslung his carbine, every saddle-girth has been tightened, and every man of the six looks over the camp as he rides out as if he had been told that he was bidding a last farewell to comrades. They ride at a slow gallop. Each man casts swift glances along the mountain side to his right—along the mountain side to his left—at the green grass under his horse's feet.

What's that! Afar up the slope to the right something waves to and fro for a moment. Higher up the signal is answered. Across the valley on the other slope it is answered again. Down, the valley, a full two miles beyond where the wild horse now stands like a figure of stone, and where the valley sweeps to the right like the sudden turn of a river, the signal is caught up and 200 Apaches, eager, excited, and mounted, draw back into the fringe at the base of the mountain and wait.

The little band gallop straight down upon the lone horse. Now they are only half a mile away, and his breath comes quick and his nostrils quiver, as he stands and stares at the strange spectacle. A little nearer and his muscles twitch and quiver and his sharp-pointed ears work faster. Only eighty rods now, and with a fierce snort of alarm and defiance he rears up, whirls about like a top, and is off down the valley like an arrow sent by a strong hand. The sight may thrill, but it does not increase the pace of those who follow. The men see the wild horse fleeing before them, but the sight does not hold their eyes more than a second. To the right—to the left—above them—down the valley—they are looking for a hoof-print, for a trampled spot, for a broken twig—for a sign however insignificant to prove that men have passed that way. They find nothing. The signals up the mountain-side were visible only for seconds.

Look! It is only a quarter of a mile now to the turn in the valley. The lone horse has sudddenly stopped to sniff the air. His ears are pointed straight ahead, his eyes grow larger and take on a frighted look and he half wheels as if he would gallop back to those who have seemingly pursued. Five, eight, ten seconds, and with a snort of alarm he breaks into a terrific run, takes the extreme left of the valley, and goes tearing out of sight as if followed by lions.

"Halt!"

The grim sergeant sees "signs" in the actions of the horse. Every trooper is looking ahead and to the right. The green valley runs into the fringe, the fringe into dense thicket, the thicket into rock and pine and mountain slope. The Indians may be in ambush there. or the horse may have scented wolf or grizzly.

"Forward!"

No man knows what danger lurks in the fringe, but the order was to scout beyond the bend. To disobey is ignominy and disgrace; to ride forward is—wait! There is no air stirring in the valley. Every limb and bough is as still as if made of iron. There is a silence which weighs like a heavy burden, and the harsh note of hawk or buzzard would be a relief.

Here is the bend. The valley continues as before—no wider—no narrower—level and unbroken. The wild horse was out of sight long ago, and the six troopers see nothing but the green grass as their eyes sweep the valley from side to side.

"Turn the bend and ride down the valley for a mile or so and keep your eyes open to discover any pass leading out."

"Halt!"

It is more than a mile beyond the bend. No pass has been discovered. No signs of a trail have been picked up. The sergeant has raised himself up for a long and careful scrutiny, when an exclamation causes him to turn his face up the valley. Out from the fringe ride the black demons who have been lurking there to drink blood. Five—ten—twenty—fifty—the line has no end. It stretches clear across the valley before a word is spoken. Then it faces to the right and 200 Indians in war paint face the grim old sergeant and his five troopers.

"Into line—right dress!"

It is the sergeant who whispers the order. Six to 200, but he will face the danger. To retreat down the valley is to be overtaken one by one and shot from the saddle or reserved for torture. Down the valley there is no hope; up the valley is the camp and rescue. The two lines face each other for a moment without a movement.

"Now, men, one volley—sling carbines—draw sabres and charge!"

A sheet of flame—a roar—a cloud of smoke, and the six horses spring forward. Then there is a grand yell, a rush by every horse and rider, and a whirlpool begins to circle. Sabres flash and clang—arrows whistle—revolvers pop—voices shout and scream, and then the whirlpool ceases. It is not three minutes since the first carbine was fired, but the tragedy has ended. Every trooper is down and scalped, half a dozen redskins are dead or dying, a dozen horses are struggling or staggering, and turning to a bend at a mad gallop is the sergeant's riderless horse. He carries an arrow in his shoulder, and there is blood on the saddle. In five minutes he will be in camp, and the notes of the bugle will prove that the lost trail has been found.

Sir Moses Montefiore.

In Leghorn, on the 25th of October, 1784, Richel, the daughter of Abraham Mocatta, gave to her husband, the merchant Joseph Elias Montefiore, his first-born son, and they named the child Moses.

If an angel had appeared to this Joseph in a dream, or had there been at hand a prophet to reveal to these parents what their child would become, not only to the race of Israel, but to the cause of human need in any creed or clime, their delight in the first-born must have deepened into a more solemn joy of thanksgiving, even without the knowledge that his life should cover with the unbroken lustre of good deeds the span of a century.

In a conversation with a most courteous English gentleman, the Rev. Dr. Hermann Adler, gifted son and right capable delegate of the aged Chief Rabbi, I learned most of the following interesting facts.

Sir Moses, now in his hundredth year, though suffering some physical langour, retains in their full power his mental forces and all the quickness of his humane sympathies, and can find at will among the superb stores of his memory the incident or scene he wants, which he relates with eyes that sparkle as in youth. He is a tall man of majestic presence; his handsome features unwontedly firm in repose, have the most attractive mobility when he speaks or smiles.

His interest in all matters of any import to mankind continues unabated. When the recent coronation ceremonies were being arranged in Russia, he sent letters to the principal rabbis in Russia and Poland, asking that there might be festivities in the schools on coronation-day, inclosing a sum of £10 in each letter for the purpose.

He always directs prayers to be offered in the schools of Jerusalem on the birthdays of the Queen and the Prince of Wales. The City of London College, soon to be opened by the latter at Moorfields, recently received Sir Moses's check for £500.

He has always been the friend of children; not many months ago he appeared at a charity bazar, and bought continuously a great quantity of toys and trinkets, which he as continuously gave away right and left to the hungry-eyed little gamins who crowd around such gay scenes.

One day last May (1883), Lord Shaftesbury, meeting Dr. Hermann Adler, exclaimed: "Your great Judas Maccabæus has just sent me £98 for my Ragged Schools!" A pound for each year of Sir Moses's life. When I asked Dr. Adler to tell me in a word the sum of Sir Moses's effectiveness he replied: "By his example he has stimulated his brethren in Europe to think of and work for their co-religionists in the East, and his sustained efforts, indirectly the origin of the 'Alliance Israelite' in Paris and the Anglo-Jewish Association here, have inspired all the exertions made during the last year to relieve and rehabilitate the persecuted Jews of Russia."

About two months ago a warm friend of Sir Moses, Mr. Alfred A. Marcus, of Boston, sent, in honor of Sir Moses, a fine harmonium to the Evelina Hospital for the Sick, in Southwark Road, founded by Baron Ferdinand Rothschild, whose wife, Evelina, was a relation of Sir Moses. And as the centenary of this beloved patriarch approaches, signs are not wanting of the universal interest it excites.

A special celebration of it is under preparation at Leghorn, the city of his nativity; in Rome a rabbinical seminary about to be founded is to bear his name; and a beautiful album containing addresses voted by all the towns in Italy having Jewish inhabitants is to be presented to him. I have also heard that a celebration in his honor is under consideration in the city of New York, warmly seconded by, if not originating with, his personal friend the Rev. Dr. Isaacs, son of the Rev. Mr. Isaacs, founder of the Jewish Messenger; and here in England preparations are being made to celebrate worthily the interesting date.—Harper's Magazine.

A Large Family.

The Madrid Estafette states that a Spanish gentleman, Senor Lucas Nequeiras Saez, who emigrated from his native land to America seventy years ago, recently returned to Spain in a steamer of his own, and brought with him the whole of his family, which consists of no fewer than 197 souls, sons-in-law and daughters-in-law not included. Senior Saez has been three times married. His first wife had 11 children at a birth, his second had 19 children at 13 births, and his third had 7 children at 6 births. The youngest of this family of 37 is aged nineteen; the eldest, who is seventy, has children, of whom the first born is forty-seven. Of Senor Saez's 23 sons, all of whom are living, 13 are married, 6 are unmarried, and 4 are widowers; and of his surviving daughters, 9 are married. The granddaughters number 34, and of these 22 are married, 9 are unmarried, and 3 are widows; and of the 45 grandsons, 23 are married, 17 are unmarried, and 4 are widowers. There are also 45 great granddaughters, and 3 great-grandsons, of whom 3 are married. Senor Saez has never tasted wine or any alcoholic liquor, and lives chiefly upon vegetable diet, with but little salt. In spite of his ninety-three years, he is still hale and hearty, and makes a point of walking briskly for at least three hours every day.

Among the many leagues which are formed for the benefit of both man and beast, the last, and perhaps the most curious, is that which has for its object to protest against the use of the American lobster as an article of food, on the ground that it can only be obtained by torturing the animal or fish. A number of Parisians, the originators of the scheme, wear a badge on which is pinned a crustacean holding in its claws a small visiting card, with the simple word, "Thanks."

DEATH-WARNINGS.

Premonitions of Dissolution ascribed to Supernatural Agencies—Some Remarkable Instances.

A number of acquaintances were together recently, when the conversation turned on the subject of premonitions of death-warnings. No one confessed to a belief in such things, but each had a well-authenticated instance to relate which no one was able to explain.

Said one: "I am not prepared to say whether I do or do not believe in premonitions. What I am going to relate happened under my own observation, and made a lasting impression on me. Several years ago three of us were rooming together on Walnut hills. One of the number was formerly from Maysville, Ky., a man without any nonsense in him in regard to anything. Of his father's family he often spoke, and particularly of a little half brother, for whom he seemed to have more than a brother's affection. One night, probably about two o'clock, we were awakened by a cry of distress from our friend in another bed. We found him sitting up, wide and wide awake. In explanation of the fact he said he had just that minute seen his little half brother die. We tried to reason him out of such an idea, but he simply replied: 'I will not subject myself to your ridicule by saying anything more about it, but my fears will be confirmed when morning comes.' Sure enough, on the arrival of the first omnibus from the city in the morning came a messenger boy with a telegram announcing the death of the little half brother in Maysville. I know all this to be true. Make your own explanations."

"Some of you know," said another, "that my poor mother died in an insane asylum a few years ago. My eldest brother enlisted during the first months of the late war. I can not remember the fact from some of the incidents connected with his departure for camp. Three days later, before any word had been received from him, my mother aroused the household with her screams. It was about ten o'clock at night, the family, including my mother, having retired early. Mother said she had seen Tom in her sleep lying on a cot dead, with a fearful wound in his left breast. It was in vain that she was told that it all came about by her anxiety to hear from him, and the pictures she had drawn of the horrors of battle. She would believe nothing except that her boy was dead. We lived several miles from a telegraph office, but early in the morning father rode over and telegraphed to the captain of the company. While he waited, the answer came: 'Tom was accidentally stabbed to death last night. Particulars by mail. The particulars were that Tom, in attempting to separate two men who were fighting, received a fatal knife wound in the breast. My poor mother never knew when the body arrived. From the moment that the contents of the telegram were made known to her she became a maniac, and died after ten years of suffering without ever seeming to recognize either of the three young children who were left worse than motherless."

"When I was a boy," said a third, "my mother had a young lady doing some sewing for her. She was regarded as a most remarkable girl. Deeply religious, she carried her profession into her every-day life. Her prayers and exhortations were remarkable for one so young and uneducated. Her life was a beautiful one in every respect. One winter's night she and my mother were sitting by the fire after having put up their sewing, when she astonished my mother by asking whether she thought persons were warned of their approaching death. I was a small boy, and my presence was not regarded as of any moment. My mother made an evasive reply, and the young lady related the following: 'One year ago to night my two sisters and myself were sleeping in one room, they in one bed and I in the other. I was awakened in some manner, I could not tell how, but with the most delightful feeling I ever experienced. I hesitated to open my eyes, although I was wide awake, lest the delightful sensation I felt would leave me. I did open my eyes, however. The moon was shining brightly into the room, and for a moment I saw nothing unusual, while my eyes caught sight of a little child standing on the foot of my bed. I was not frightened and do not believe I was surprised. It all seemed so natural and a part of the pleasant waking I had just experienced that I waited to see what else would come. In a moment the child said: "Lou will live just three years," and it was gone. I did not awaken my sisters, but the next morning I related the circumstances at the breakfast table. They all laughed at me except father, who looked serious, and has treated me with greater tenderness ever since. I believe I am going to die at the time designated, but I am making no preparation for the event beyond trying how much good I can do in the short time I am to stay here., I resolved to watch the date, but boy-like it all passed from my mind. I only remember that two winters after, one cold Christmas day, I drove my mother in a sleigh to attend the funeral of her young girl friend. She had been sick nearly all winter, and probably died at the very date that she said she would."

"I believe I have never related this before," said another. My father had been an invalid for several years, but of late he had not seemed any more likely to die suddenly than years before. We lived many miles apart and certainly not a day passed that I did not think of him, but I had ceased to feel that constant anxiety that clung to me the first year or two of his illness. One night after I had retired I lay wide awake, but with my eyes closed, as was my custom, and with my face toward the front side of the bed. Suddenly I imagined that my father was standing beside the bed looking at me. Do not understand me to mean that I saw him. If any of you will close your eyes, by the exertion of your imagination you can of course, bring any object before you. That was my situation, except that I did not purposely employ my imagination. The vision came instantly and unsought. This is as plain as I can make it. He did not appear as I had last seen him, but seemingly free from suffering and in the very best of humor. A pleasant smile was on his face, such as I had never seen in twenty years. It was all over in a moment. I opened my eyes involuntarily, and of course, saw nothing. I did not sleep for some hours, when I did fall to sleep I was disturbed by dreams, and got up in the morning unrefreshed and went to my place of business. About 8 o'clock I was handed a telegram, and realized what it meant. For a minute I was engaged, and put the telegram in my pocket. When I was disengaged, which was almost immediately, I commenced making arrangements to be absent, and was remainded by an associate that I had not read my telegram. I was so well satisfied what it contained that I had unthinkingly allowed it to remain unopened. The reading confirmed my fears. He had died suddenly the night before, and was dead perhaps a minute before anyone knew it. Was it then that his spirit appeared at my bedside? I do not know, but the time corresponded exactly."

One of the company had said nothing during the entire conversation. He was asked for his experience, and very unexpectedly to most of the company he had one to give. "As you all know, I have a wife and children, and I do not need to tell you that I am happily married. Away back in boyhood like most boys, I had a 'first love.' They are often laughed at and seldom make matches, but I believe that those early loves leave lasting impressions and should not be made light of. We were separated in the most natural way, and years later we both married. We never met, and, so far as I am able to judge, no regret marred the happiness of either of us. Such separations are regarded as natural and necessary; but I want to put on record here that I never thought of her without recalling the pleasant emotions of our early love, and which I believe are never felt in any future attachments, however true and warm they may be.

"One night when I had certainly not thought of her for months, I was awakened by what I then thought and still believe was a kiss on my forehead, and she stood beside me in plain view. It was only for a moment, and the incident, imaginary or real, did not disturb me enough to keep me awake for five minutes. A week later I heard of her death. Good night, gentlemen; I did not know it was so late."

The company broke up, and the writer has tried to give a faithful recital from memory of the so-called incidents as related in the order given.—Cincinnati News-Journal.

"Mr." and "Esq."

But now comes another of our anomalies, one which greatly puzzles European continentals, and which is not always grasped even by our American kinsfolk. This is the nature of the Esquire. A class of people are habitually called plain "Mr." in ordinary talk who would be greatly offended if their letters were so addressed. I am not speaking of those who claim a higher adjective description: I mean those who are spoken of as "Mr. A. B.," but who, in any formal description, from the address of a letter upward, must be described as "A. B., Esq." In itself, Esquire, like Knight, is a title, if not of office, of something very like office; and it would not have been wonderful if it had been usual to call men "Knight A." and "Esquire B." But "Knight A." seems never to have been in use; and "Esquire," or rather "Esquire B.," can hardly be said to have ever been in polite use. Men like Hampden, who would have ranked as nobles anywhere out of the British kingdom, were simply "Mr. Hampden," and the like.

To be sure, "Mr." was more of a distinct title than it is now. I have seen somewhere in the early records of a New England colony an order, in which, among other pains and penalties decreed against a certain man, it is forbidden to speak to him any longer as "Mr." Possibly, though used to be spoken of as "Mr.," he did not hold the technical rank of "Esquire." For "Esquire" is a technical rank, as much as Earl or Knight; and one odd thing is when the word, in a contracted shape, is put before a name, it means something different from that technical rank. Many people put "Esq." after their names, not by mere assumption or conventionality, but of perfect right, to whom no living soul would ever think of tacking on "'Squire" before their names. "'Squire A." marks a position which, if not strictly official, certainly comes very near to it—a position which is not held by all who are described as esquires even by strict formal right.—E. A. Freeman in Longman's Magazine.

An Oregon Hunting Story.

Last week while a gentleman was out hunting in the woods near Hardy Eliff's place he shot a deer, which ran into the woods, and he was unable to find it. A day or two after Mr. Walker found where the deer had been dragged for some distance and partially devoured by a bear. He procured a steel trap and set it. The next morning he went to the place and found the trap gone. Young Mr. Eliff went back with him to the place and put the dogs on the trail. They had not proceeded far before they found the pole hanging from the forks of a tree, with the chain and trap on the other side, with the hind foot and tendons of the leg of a monster bear. The dog went a short distance further and commenced baying. Mr. Eliff went to where they were and shot a large female panther out of a tree, which he and the dogs soon killed. A young dog went back into the bush, and commenced barking. They went to the place and found two young panthers about half as large as a full grown cat, which they took to Mr. Eliff's house. The strangest part of the story is that an old cat with some young kittens adopted the young panthers and nurses them. Mr. Eliff informs us that it is amusing to see the old cat lug the young whelps up a flight of stairs and put them to bed in the garret.

The Yukon River.

Lieut. Schwatka, who with his party was picked up by Lieut. Ray, speaking of his trip up the Yukon River, Alaska, says they travelled overland to the head waters of the river, and constructed a raft to navigate the stream to its mouth. They procured a crew of six Indians, and proceeded within 25 miles of Fort Cheloat, when the rapids were encountered. The Indians refused to go on, and attempted to force the raft ashore. Schwatka, to suppress the mutiny, fired on the Indians killing three. The others submitted and the rapids were run. The voyage was 1,829 miles from the mouth of the Yukon. Schwatka claims to have been farther up the Yukon than any other white man. Signal Service officer Leavitt says he ascended the Yukon to Fort Selkirk, 2,000 miles. He describes the river as one of the largest in the world, discharging 50 per cent., more water than the Mississippi, and at places seven miles in breadth.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

While orthodox Christians in this country very generally frown on the stage and all its belongings, it is not to be disguised that the prejudice against actors and theatres is not as marked as it was, say, twenty years ago. One of the most beautiful and successful theatres in New York is owned by a couple of clergyman who are also proprietors of the Churchman, the official organ of the Episcopal denomination. The Rev. Robert Colyer and other liberal, as well as Episcopal, clergymen openly visit the New York theatres and no scandal is caused thereby. In England the Bishop and clergymen of the national church attend operas and theatres the same as other people; but more remarkable than all, the Christian World, the leading London organ of the Nonconformists, recently contained a leading editorial, giving Mr. Henry Irving a "God speed," apropos of his departure to America. Mr. George Macdonald, the English novelist, is a clergyman, yet he frequently appears as an amateur actor on semi-public occasions. The theatre is growing in popularity in this country. A large space is given to dramatic news in all our journals. It is for Christian people to say what course they shall pursue in the future. It is idle to ignore the stage or to condemn it by wholesale. After all, why not try and moralize it and free it from objectionable associations?—Demorest's Magazine.

The refusal of Maggie Mitchell to play on Sunday night in Cincinnati sets a good example to other stars. A day and night of rest are needed by professionals as well as other people, and it is unfair that they should be expected by the people of Western cities to act without cessation during their engegements in that section. Entirely aside from a question of morality or piety, we believe that Sunday should be set apart by the profession as a time for recuperation after the work of the week.

Fanny Davenport's new play "Fedora," is pronounced one of the strongest dramas that have been produced in New York, and the star has made a complete success in the title role. Robert Mantel, her leading support, has made a great hit as "Louvis Ipanoff," "Fedora's" lover.

The Birmingham (England) Gazette says: "Miss Minnie Palmer's manner, quaintly humorous as it always is, is withal so natural and spontaneous that it never seems forced or strained, but to be the natural outcome of a nature overflowing with animal spirits."

"How does Henry Irving compare with Booth?" was asked of Dion Boucicault by a Kansas City reporter the other day, and the veteran replied:—"You can't compare them; one is brandy and the other is champagne.

Mrs. Zelda Sequin Wallace, well known upon the operatic stage, proposes to appear next season as an actress in a new version of "Oliver Twist," and a translation of the French play, "The Boyhood of Richelieu."

Sarah Bernhardt claims that she got married because matrimony was the only thing in life that she had left untried. After her marriage she indulged in divorce for the novelty of the thing.

A Word to the Boys.

Water is the strongest drink. It drives mills; it 's the drink of lions and horses, and Samson never drank anything else. Let young men be teetotalers if only for economy's sake. The beer money will soon build a house. If what goes into the mash-tub went into the kneading trough, families would be better fed and better taught. If what is spent in waste were only saved against a rainy day, poorhouses would never be built. The man who spends his money with the publican, and thinks the landlord's bow and "How do ye do, my good fellow?" mean true respect, is a perfect simpleton. We don't light fires for the herring's comfort, but to roast him. Men do not keep pot-houses for laborers' good; if they do, they certainly miss their aim. Why, then, should people drink "for the good of the house?" If I spend money for the good of the house let it be my own, and not the landlord's. It is a bad well into which you must put water; and the beer house is a bad friend, because it takes your all and leaves you nothing but headaches. He who calls those his friends who let him sit and drink by the hour together is ignorant—very ignorant. Why, red lions, and tigers, and eagles, and vultures are all creatures of prey, and why do so many put themselves within the power of their jaws and talons? Such as drink and live riotously, and wonder why their faces are so blotchy and their pockets so bare, would leave off wondering if they had two grains of wisdom. They might as well ask an elm tree for pears as look to loose habits for health and wealth. Those who go to the public house for happiness climb a tree to find fish.—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

A Crushed Porter.

We are happy. The porter of the parlor car has been crushed.

"Beg yo' pawdon, sah," he remarked with impressive grandeur to one of the occupants of his car, "dat was a trade dollah you handed me a minute ago."

"Ah, was it?" replied the plebe as he took it from the outstretched hand and examined it. "Take this for your honesty, my friend," and pocketing the dollar the traveler handed the astounded potentate of the road a lead nickel.

The insensible body of the porter was left at the next station, and after physicians had worked at him for two hours he recovered sufficiently to murmur incoherently:

"It wa'nt de money what pah-lized me, boss; but he called me 'my fren'!' Boss, dat tuk me down offul!"

They all tell the same story. Mr. W. Thompson, Jeweller, Delhi, suffered from Dyspepsia, got no relief until he used Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. He says "it was just the medicine I needed. It has cured me."

Any one who has had the misfortune to injure the coating of a rubber umbrella will be glad to know that it is not without a remedy. A preparation of damar varnish and asphaltum in about equal quantities, with a little turpentine, will make an easily applied coating which makes the umbrella about as good as new again. Spots on gossamer coats and cloaks can be covered with this also.

Throat, Bronchial, and Lung Diseases a specialty. Send two stamps for large treatise giving self treatment. Address WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N.Y.

Mr. Whittier has gone to Boston for the winter.

Two-Thirds of a Bottle Cures.

Dr. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N.Y.: Dear Sir—I have been taking your "Favorite Prescription" for "female weakness." Before I had taken it two days I began to feel stronger. I have taken but two-thirds of a bottle and believe I am cured.

Gratefully,
MRS. B. C. LOVETT, Wasseka, Ill.

Lady Brassey is a member of an ambulance society, and the other day was able to do all that was required for a lady who had broken her leg, until the arrival of the surgeon.

Sick and bilious headache, and all derangements of stomach and bowels, cured by Dr. Pierce's "Pellets"—or antibilious granules. 25 cents a vial. No cheap boxes to allow waste of virtues. By druggists.

Clara Louise Kellogg has earned half a million dollars with her voice.

THE BEST DRAFT HORSE.—M. Newgass, one of the principal extensive horse dealers of Chicago, says as follows of the grade Percheron-Normans: "Of draft horses I handle more Normans than any other breed. They are more enduring, have better feet, are finer built, more attractive, and are true to work. They are broken before they are ever harnessed. They will sell in New York, conditions being equal, for from $50 to $75 more than a Clydesdale. I advise farmers to breed their mares to Percheron Norman horses in preference to any other breed."—Chicago Tribune. About 1,400 Percheron-Norman horses have been imported from France by M. W. Dunham, of Wayne, Ill., 390 of which the present season.

Christopher Columbus's ashes are to be removed and placed in a plate-glass urn in the Cathedral at Saint Domingo.

The most incredulous are forced to admit that for perfection in colors the Triangle Dyes have no equal. Ask for three cornered package, and see that you get it. 10 cents.

In his youth Tourgueneff's passion for shooting was destroyed by the death of a hen quail in defense of her young.

Mrs. J. McPhee, Appin, writes;—During the last eight years I have used almost every medicine recommended for Biliousness, but found nothing equal to Carson's Bitters. If you suffer try it. Price 50 cents.

In taking the veil, the Comtesse de Chambord goes into hardly deeper seclusion, and no more self-denial, than she has already exercised for years.

WHAT! LIMPING YET? Why should you go limping around when Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor will remove your corns in a few days. It will give almost instant relief and a guaranteed cure in the end. Be sure you get the genuine Putnam's Corn Extractor, made by Polson & Co., Kingston, for many substitutes are being offered, and it is always better to get the best. Safe, sure, painless.

Another birthday-book, this time from the writings of Matthew Arnold, is in preparation by his daughter, Eleanor Arnold.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-St. West, Toronto, Canada.

Mr. F. C. Burnand, of "Happy Thought" fame, has raised a newspaper storm about his ears by announcing that he is about to write a burlesque of Shakespeare's Tempest.

A. P. 148.

Tinsmiths' Goods!

TIN PLATE—Different Brands and Sizes.
TINNED SHEETS— do do
CANADA PLATE—Fen and other Brands.
INGOT TIN—Lamb and Flag and Straits.
GALVANIZED IRON—"Davies," "Avon," &c.
And STAMPED GOODS, CHEAP.
For Sale by COPLAND & McLAREN,
MONTREAL.

A. B. FLINT

Sells all kinds of Black Silk at Wholesale Price. A good Black Silk, wide width, at $1.25. Send cash with order, and express will be paid to any part of Canada.

35 COLBORNE STREET.

A. B. FLINT

Sells Black Cashmere at Wholesale price. Our 50 cent French Blue-Black Cashmere is worth 67½ cents. Send for 8 or 10 yards as sample, and see for yourself.

35 COLBORNE STREET.

A. B. FLINT

Sells all Colors in Velveteens. Our 65 cent Black Louis Velveteen is worth 90 cents a yard. Send for a dress length, and see for yourself. All kinds of Dress Goods kept in stock. You can save $1 a pair on good Lace Curtains, by sending an order to 35 COLBORNE STREET.

A. B. FLINT

is the only wholesale man in Canada selling to consumers direct, and cash will be returned if goods are not as represented.

35 COLBORNE STREET.

A. B. FLINT, - TORONTO.

FOR THE
Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.
THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

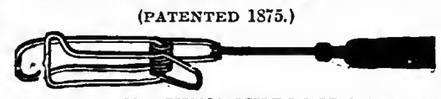
For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS OF PREPARED LEATHER, Durable, Light, Elastic, and Cheap. First prize at Provincial Exhibition, London. Testimonials on application. Satisfaction guaranteed.
Address J. DOAN & SON, Drayton, Ont.

ROOFING.—CHEAP, DURABLE, FIRE-PROOF, easily put on, composed of 3 ply felt cemented together for Flat or steep roofs. H. WILLIAMS, Manufacturer and dealer in Felt roofing materials, 4 Adelaide Street East, Toronto.

DO NOT ALLOW YOUR CHILDREN TO grow up deformed or cripoled, but call and examine our appliances for the treatment of Club Feet, and Diseases of the Spine, Hip, Knee and Ankle. Remember the world is progressing, and more can be done to-day than at any former period. We also manufacture Artificial Limbs, Trusses, and appliances for the relief and cure of all kinds of deformities. Will show at Toronto, Guelph and London Exhibitions. AUTHORS & COX, 91 Church St., Toronto.



THE LILY

is a perfect gem, equal to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most fastidious. Manufactured only by
THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.,
78 YORK STREET, TORONTO.

WANTED—STEADY EMPLOYMENT and good pay given to every lady owning a sewing machine. Material sent and returned by mail. Send one dollar with your application as a guarantee that the material we furnish will be returned when finished. FINDLAY & CO., Manufacturers, Detroit, Mich.

BEAVER S. S. LINE.
WEEKLY BETWEEN
Quebec, Montreal, and Liverpool,
CALLING AT
QUEENSTOWN AND BELFAST
For lowest rates and all particulars apply to
Sam. Osborne & Co., 40 Yonge street, Toronto.

WELLS' WINDOW SHADE CLASP
(PATENTED 1875.)

Used for holding WINDOW BLIND SHADES without rollers, pins, or cords. Saves blinds, money and patience. Looks orderly and neat. Send for sample, 20 cents, agents' circulars 3c. Orders from the trade solicited. Agents wanted. TORONTO INDUSTRIAL WORKS CO., 96 Church street, Toronto.

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS
—OF THE—
WHITE STAR LINE

Are all of them without exception among the Largest and Fastest of Ocean Steamers. They were constructed with special reference to the conveyance of passengers, and for Safety, Comfort or Speed, are unexcelled. They are specially noted for the regularity of their rapid passages in all weather. The steerage accommodations are of the highest order, the ventilation perfect: and every provision has been made for the comfort and protection of the passengers. In addition to the total and absolute separation of the single men and women, except on deck, the married compartment has been so remodelled and arranged that every married couple or family has a little private room to itself.

For particulars apply to the company's agents at all towns in Ontario or to T. W. JONES, General Agent, 23 York street, Toronto.

TRADE MARK.

THE BEST
HORSE REMEDIES are those made by

THE ELLIS SPAVIN CURE CO.

Every owner of one or more horses can save a large amount of time and money by having on hand a good supply of Ellis's Horse Remedies, and to supply a general demand we would announce that we will send the following by express (on receipt of the money, or C.O.D. and return charges): $6.50 for $5. 1 box, 12 pounds Medicated Food, $1; 2 bottles Spavin Cure, $2; 2 boxes Large Condition Powders, $1; 2 boxes Worm Powders, $1; 1 box Heave Powder, 50c.; 1 box Colic Powder, 50c.; 1 box Hoof Ointment, 50c.—$6.50. J. H. Whitson & Son, 24th Street, N.Y., says: "We have used Ellis's Spavin Cure in our stables for two years and have tried it on the following with perfect success: Splints, curbs, ring bones, bunches on the neck, swelled ankles, also quincy, sore throat, and for general stable liniment it is the best article we have ever used." For further particulars, free books, etc., write to

ELLIS SPAVIN CURE COMPANY,
Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.;
or 276 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Markdale monthly Cattle FAIR.

A regular Monthly Cattle Fair will be held in the Agricultural Grounds, Markdale, as follows:

—1883—

SATURDAY	.....	Aug. 4
Do.	.....	Sept.
Do.	.....	Oct.
Do.	.....	Nov. 3
Do.	.....	Dec. 8

MARKDALE Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats!

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and deliivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23, 1882. 80-ly

Health is Wealth!

Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment, a guaranteed specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Fits, Nervous Neuralgia, Headache, Nervous Prostration caused by the use of alcohol or tobacco, Wakefulness, Mental Depression, Softening of the Brain, resulting in Insanity and leading to misery, decay and death, Premature Old Age, Barrenness, Loss of Power in either sex, Involuntary losses and Spermatorrhœa, caused by over-exertion of the brain, self-abuse or over-indulgence. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser a written guarantee to refund the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by A. Turner & Co., ole authorized Agent for Markdale Ont. John C. West & Co. sole proprietor Toronto, Ont.

ROBT. ASKIN,

MARKDALE,

Has opened out a First-Class

UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,

And therefore has supplied a want long felt,

COFFINS,

CASKETS,

SHROUDS,

and all

FUNERAL FURNISHINGS

supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse

for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—

PICTURE FRAMING

Done on short notice.

ROBT. ASKIN.

ALEX KAY

BOOT & SHOE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and Positively cures Piles. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by A. Turner & Co

AUCTION SALE

—OF—

Valuable Village Property

—IN THE—

VILLAGE OF HOLLAND CENTRE

—IN THE—

County of Grey.

There will be sold on Friday, the

Second Day of November,

1883, at One o'clock in the afternoon, on the premises, in the Village of Holland Centre, by virtue of a Power of Sale, contained in a certain mortgage, which will be produced at the Sale, the following property:—

Under mortgage from George Skene, village lot No. 25, on the west side of the Toronto and Sydenham Road, in the Village of Holland Centre, containing one fifth of an acre, more or less, being part of lot 31 in the 1st Range, south-west of the Toronto, and Sydenham Road, in the Township of Holland, in the County of Grey.

The following improvements are said to be on the premises: A frame dwelling with outbuildings.

Terms—One tenth of the purchase money to be paid down on the day of sale. For balance terms will be made known at the sale.

For further particulars apply to

JONES BROS. & MACKENZIE,
Solicitors, Masonic Hall, Toronto.
or to John Lyons, Esq., Markdale.

Toronto, Oct. 4th, 1883.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Wilson Benson

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.
DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

WILSON BENSON.

July 6, 1882.

THE BEST PLACE

TO GET

A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery.

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NTH. GOING SOUTH

Read Down. A.M.	P.M.		Read Up. A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	Toronto	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	Cardwell Junc.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	Orangeville...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	Mount Forest..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	Teeswater	5 00	2 45
11 50	8 30	Flesherton	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	Markdale,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	Owen Sound....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNicoll, Gen. Pass. Agt. — Edmund Wragge, General Manager

CARD OF THANKS.

As I am now about leaving Priceville and having been engaged in various branches of business for over twenty years, in this village, I take this opportunity of kindly thanking all my old friends and the public generally, for the very liberal amount of patronage they have bestowed upon me in all the various branches of business in which I have been engaged. I hope you will give my successor in business a hearty welcome when he comes among you, and I also wish that he may prove himself worthy of all the support you may favor him with, and at the end of twenty more years he may be able to do what I am now doing, viz.: thanking you again for your very great liberality.

I remain, dear friends,
Yours very truly,
ALEX. WEBSTER.

Priceville, Oct. 3, 1883.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Italy has 918 daily papers.

Eve was the first woman to gather leaves during the fall.

Quick, Now.—You can have either the weekly Mail or Globe with the Standard to the end of 1884 for $2, Cash. Be alive and secure the balance of the year free which is worth 50 cents.

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate. It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

Seven new hotels, four with 1,000 rooms each, are being built in London.

"A never-failing spring," as the boy remarked when the schoolmaster jumped from his seat, which had previously been inoculated with a bent pin.—[Boston Transcript.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

Shaw beat Smith easily in the walking match at Walkerton, recently. Smith deserted the track at the end of six miles, when Shaw was half a mile ahead.

Ram lambs for sale.—A choice lot of South Down grade ram lambs for sale at H D Irwin's and Thos. Irwin's a short distance East of Markdale.

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

The Grand Trunk report shows that the gross receipts for the past six months exhibit an increase over the same period last year of nearly 10 per cent. The net receipts are increased 19 per cent.

One of the best agricultural monthlies is the Farmer's Advocate. Its editorials are well written, and its selections wisely chosen. The various departments of interest to the farmers are filled with interesting and valuable matter. It is edited by men of practical experiance, and not mere theorists. $1 per annum. Orders taken at the Standard Office.

If you are sick take Rejuvenator Bitters to make you well, and if you are well take the Bitters to keep you well, sold by Smith, the barber, and he is continually selling them.

If you wish to subscribe for the Globe, Mail, Star, Farmer's Advocate or Montreal Witness or renew your subscription for any of the above papers hand in your name and subscription to this office.

True merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increased sales, as a prominent Druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits;" It is the grand specific for diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys, 25,000 bottles have been sold during the last three months. For sale by A. Turner & Co. Markdale.

Some of the most aristocratic English ladies are riding bicycles.

FREE OF CHARGE,

All persons suffering from Coughs, Colds Asthma, Bronchitis, Loss of Voice or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, are requested to call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, free of charge, which will convince them of its wonderful Merits and show what a regular dollar-size bottle will do. Call early.

It was the young tailor who said, referring to a rival for the affections of a young lady, that he thought he knew enough to be able to cut him out.

DO NOT BE DECEIVED.

In these times of quack medicine advertisements everywhere, it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise and which really does as recommended. Electric Bitters we will do as recommended. They invariably cure Stomach and Liver Complaints, Diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary difficulties. We know whereof we speak, and can readily say, give them a trial. Sold at fifty cents a bottle, by A. Turner & Co.

I have always said it; nature meant to make woman as its masterpiece.—Lessing.

A VEXED CLERGYMAN.

Even the patience of Job would become exhausted were he a preacher and endeavoring to interest his audience while they were keeping up an incessant coughing, making it impossible for him to be heard. Yet, how very easy can all this be avoided by simply using Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Trial Bottles given away at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store.

ARTEMESIA WAREHOUSE

FLESHERTON STATION.

Dry Goods, Hardware, Crockery, Boots and Shoes

Groceries, Provisions, &c. Stock kept full and well assorted with new goods received every week.

MY BRANCH STORE AT EUGENIA

replenished with new goods every week. For sale cheap for cash or produce

My Saw mill, Shingle Factoty, and Lime Kiln

AT LITTLE FALLS, ARE IN OPERATION.

All kinds Saw ogs bought at the Mill or sawn on shares.

Lumber, Lath, Broom Handles, Shingles and Lime for sale.

WM. HOGG.

Robt. S. Rae,

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

—AT—

Bulmers Photograph Gallery

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we area not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

CALCINED PLASTER,

—OR—

Plaster Paris,

One car of Nova Scotia, all best and cheapest in the market.

Machine Oils and Paint

OILS AT CLOSE PRICES.

H. PARKER'S

Drugstore - DURHAM.

THOS. MATHEWS,

Harness Establishment

MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!

IN CONNECTION.

Agents 1884 Wanted

READ THIS.

THE GREAT DOLLAR PAPER,

The Weekly Globe

FROM NOW TO END OF 1884

ONLY ONE—$1.00—DOLLAR.

The Foremost Journal in the Dominion.

THE * DAILY * GLOBE

THE GREAT CANADIAN PAPER.

Has the most extensive and influential circulation in British America, is noted for its extensive Cable and Telegraphic News, and is the great authority upon Commercial and Financial Matters throughout the Dominion.

SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year, ... $7.00 | Half Year, ... $3.50
Quarter Year, ... $1.75.

The Paper for the Farmer.

In order to increase our already large list of yearly subscribers to The Weekly Globe, we make the following liberal and magnificent offer to every reader of this advertisement who wishes to take advantage of it at once.

For $3.50 we will send to any address in Canada or the U. S.,

THE WEEKLY GLOBE

from now to end of December, 1884, and in addition, A HANDSOME NICKEL OPEN-FACED STEM-WINDING WATCH.

The Watch is of convenient size; it is neat in appearance; it is a stem-winder, consequently requires no key; it is dust-proof, and a good time-keeper.

The above price includes postage upon Watch to any address in Canada or the United States. This offer only holds good until January 20th, 1884. We will start shipping watches on October 15th. Remittances should be sent at once, so as to enable us to procure necessary supply and fill orders with as little delay as possible. Address,

THE GLOBE PRINTING CO, (Limited),
TORONTO.

The Great Dollar Paper.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 8. MARKDALE, ONT., NOV. 1. 1883. No. 164.

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY THURSDAY EVENING,

At Markdale Ontario.

$1 Per Anumn

IN ADVANCE.

C. W. RUTLEDGE.

EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O.
Physician and Surgeon, Priceville,
Graduate of University Vitt. College.
" " New York, and
Hon. Graduate, of the same,
" " Ayleth Medical Institute.
" " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y.
Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.

DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.

January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.

ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS. CONVEYances, &c. &c.

OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in

MARKDALE;

Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.

Funds to lend on reasonable terms.

JOHN CREASOR, Q.C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown,

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.

Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.

Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.

N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. G. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Jan, 24th, 1883. 124ly

MISS. GREEN,
DRESS AND MANTLE
PARLOR.

Dunlop's building Markdale.

All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.

Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

William McLeod,

BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,

MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel.

159-3m

JOHN NOBLE,

MARKDALE.

GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING

A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,

MARKDALE.

M. BYRNES

PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE

(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)

CHATSWORTH, Ont.

C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.

PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's

THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,

CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of

BRICK AND STONE WORK,

Plain Ornamental Plastering.

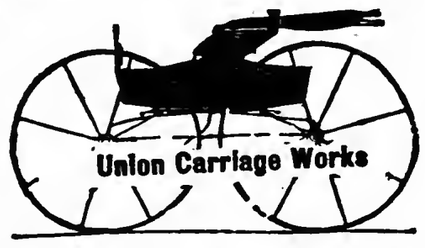
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.

Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

GEORGE WILSON,

Wholesale and Retail



{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.

FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.

Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from

FIRST CLASS MATERIAL

In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with

English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs

will receive prompt attention.

All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time consistent with good workmanship.

GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.

Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside

D. J. SHANAHAN,

Proprietor

Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

STARTLING DISCOVERY!

LOST MANHOOD RESTORED.

A victim of youthful imprudence, causing Premature Decay, Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, etc., having tried in vain every known remedy, has discovered a simple self-cure, which he will send FREE to his fellow-sufferers, address J. H. REEVES, 43 Chatham St., N. Y.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

325 ACRES | Foothill Nurseries | 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address

STONE & WELLINGTON,

161-75 Toronto, Ont.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,

BANKERS,

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good indorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.

Allowed on Savings Deposits.

Drafts issued and Collections made on points, at lowest rates.

W.M. LUCAS,
Manager.

September 23, 1880. 2-ly

EUGENIA

Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made eqtensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.

GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND

Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.

LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.

Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted

69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

SEEING IS BELIEVING.

GENTLEMEN,—

If you want a first-class

Buggie or Wagon

call at

MCKENNA & MASON'S

CARRIAGE WORKS

MARKDALE.

They can supply you with anything from a

Lumber Wagon

up to

Extension Top Phæton.

To buy from them is o

SAVE MONEY!

They are both practical workmen, and employ none but

PRACTICAL WORKMEN

They guarantee their work Second to none for Lightness of Draught and Superiority of Finish.

They use nothing but First-class White Oak for Wagons, and thrice Extra Second Growth Hickory for light work.

The immense amount of work turned out of McKenna & Mason's shop is sufficien proof of the wide reputation they enjoy for doing good work.

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END Poor cheap work we positively will not take.

Special attention given to Re-Trimming and Repainting all classes of Carriage Work.

Satisfaction guaranteed (or No Pay) in

HORSESHOEI NG

SHOP—On Mill Street opposite to Sproule's Hotel.

McKENNA & MASON.

Holland Council.

Holland Centre, Oct. 20, '83.

Council met for the transaction of general business; members all present; reeve in the chair.

Minutes of former meeting read and approved.

Moved by Galbraith, seconded by McKinnet, that By-law No. 7, for the appointing of collector, be read a first, second and third time, and engrossed on the minutes.

Moved by Shute, seconded by Galbraith, that $80 be granted to cut down the north side of hill opposite lots 53 and 54, con. 2.

Moved by Galbraith, seconded by McKinnet, that $4 be expended on twenty-first side road.

Moved by Galbraith, seconded by Shute, that the clerk notify Dr. McClelland to remove his fence off the street at Walter's Falls, as the time allowed him for doing so is expired.

Moved by Deavitt, seconded by McKinnet, that $8 be expended on thirty side road, from Isaac Erwin's to beyond Welwood's.

Moved by Shute, seconded by Galbraith, that the clerk notify all parties not having put in their road list to appear at next meeting of council to shew cause.

Moved by Galbraith, seconded by Deavitt, that this council adjourn, to meet on Dec. 10th, at Vogan's hall.

C. PRICE, Clerk.

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

Mr. W. P. Rundle, and Miss Harris have been re-engaged as teachers of Dundalk school.

Mr. W. J. Hicks has returned from Brampton, where he has been working during the summer.

Rev. Mr. Forrest, the Presbyterian minister who was lately stationed here, is now doing pastoral duty near Owen Sound.

Reports concerning the havoc caused by the frosts are somewhat conflicting. In some parts near here where threshing has been done, the grain has turned out very well indeed, quite up to the average. Farmers in other neighborhoods say that the yield will not be equal to the seed sown. It is evident, that in many cases farmers will have to raise the "needful" by sale of the natural product of the land, the timber.

Our township council do not seem to be inclined to lavish expenditure on road improvement. Complaints are rife respecting the state of even the leading roads of the township. The council do not seem inclined to make any grant in this direction, unless the ratepayers first guarantee to raise an equal amount by subscription. This has been done in two instances. There is a strong feeling here that this side of the township has not received its fair share of attention at the hands of its representatives, and when nomination day comes round lively times are expected.

(The above correspondence was crowded out last week.)

Preaching recently on the subject, "Is Christianity fading out," Rev. Dr. James M. Pullman, of New York, said:—Christianity is no more vulnerable to men's antagonism than is the sun. It is stronger at the centre today than ever. Eventually the different sects will coalesce and dissolve and become one in a glorious Christianity. One hundred and twenty years ago Voltaire said that before the beginning of the nineteenth century Christianity would have disappeared from the earth. In the year 1800 there were 24,000,000 English speaking people, of whom there were 14,000,000 Protestant, and 5,000,000 Catholics. In 1881 there were 59,000,000 Protestants and 13,500,000 Catholics among the same class. The population of the United States has increaeed eleven fold, the churches thirty-seven fold. In 1800 there was one church for every 1,700 inhabitants now one church for every 589 inhabitants. Then Sunday Schools were almost unknown; now the teachers and scholars in the Sunday schools number about 14,000,000.

District Dashes.

Mr. Wm. Currie, of Mt. Forest, shipped 11,620 dozen eggs to New York, recently, at one shipment.

The post office difficulty at Orangeville, has been settled, and the Government will proceed to build the custom house and post office.

The Zoo at Toronto will likely be moved to the exhibition grounds next season, and the wild animal show largely increased.

A fire broke out in Grip's printing office, Toronto, last Thursday night destroying $10,000 worth of property, which was however covered by insurance.

Edward Hanlan has gone to Boston to see his new boat. From Boston he thinks he will go to San Francisco, where he will give exhibitions and meet some of the scullers of the pacific slope.

BURIED ALIVE.—Mr. Angle, of Wiarton, while piling lumber at the above place, a pile of lumber fell over on him, he was extracted when it was found one of his legs was broken in two places. He is recovering.

LOSS OF A HORSE.—On Saturday last Mr. James Anderson, of Glenelg while working his team, one of them fell over and died almost instantly. This is a serious loss to Mr. Anderson, as he bought the horse about a year ago for $70.

The Cabinet Changes.

Ottawa, Oct. 22.—The Canada Gazette issued this afternoon announces the appointment of Hon. D. L. Macpherson as minister of the Interior Sir John A. Macdonald as president of the Privy Council, Hon. Wm. Miller as President of the Senate, and Thos. J. Jarvis, of Niagara Falls, as a commissioner to act judicially in extradition matters.

A New Railway.

At a meeting held in Allen's Hall, Horning's Mills, on the 17th inst., it was decided to form a company to build a line of railway from Horning's Mills to connect with the Toronto, Grey & Bruce Railway at Melancthon Station or Shelburne, and a committee was appointed to solicit subscriptions for a charter. The required amount having been raised it was decided to take proceedings to obtain a charter from the Legislature. A meeting to appoint a Board of Directors will be held on Monday evening, 29th inst.—Shelburne Free Press.

The Marquis of Lorne and the Princess Louise bade farewell to Canada on Saturday. They left in the Allan line steamship Sardinian from Quebec. The weather was very disagreeable, but nevertheless a large crowd of the citizens turned out to wish the distinguished couple good-by.

CONFUSION and annoyance has been the result of the various standards of time on the railways on this continent, especially where the traveller has to "change cars." A convention of railway men has just decided to adopt a uniform time schedule on what is known as the hour basis. They divided the country into districts, to be known as "Eastern," "Central," and "Mountain," the uniform time of each district being exactly one hour different from that adjoining. The Eastern district is to comprise from New Brunswick to Detroit, and all the railways within it will be run on the time of the 75th meridian, which is one minute slower than New York time and 17 minutes faster than Toronto time. The Central district extends from Detroit to a point near the western boundary of Kansas, and railways within it will be run on a uniform time exactly an hour slower than Eastern time. The Mountain district will be from the western boundary of Kansas to a line between Utah and Nevada, and trains will be run on time just an hour slower than Central time. The C. P. R. has gone in with the arrangement, as has also the Grand Trunk.

THE FARMER'S CORNER.

Farmwork for Novemter

Surface drains made [illegible] carry off the excess of water during fall and winter months. They will also remove valuable fertilizing materials, especially if well-decomposed manure is to be applied as a top-dressing to land. Deep open drains may be dug during the autumn. It is better to finish the work in a thorough manner, as far as the drains go. A small part of a wet field, well drained, is better than half-made ditches over a large area. The great mistake in constructing drains is, to partly dig them one season, with the expectation of finishing the work at some future time.

Corn is husked with the greatest ease and comfort while in the field, if this work is done before cold weather sets in. There are several devices for the fingers to aid in removing the husks. A very good husking-hook may be made from a piece of strap-iron, with leather hoops for the fingers. A simple wooden-peg is all that some good huskers with. It is important to wash the hands thoroughly after each half day of husking, and use some substance to keep the skin soft and prevent cracking. An ointment made of two ounces of oil of almonds, half an ounce of spermacetti, one drachm of white wax, and one ounce of glycerine, may be prepared by any druggist, and is excellent for hands which are roughened by cold weather and raw winds. If this or a similar ointment is applied to the hands, warmed in at evening, and old kid gloves worn during the night, the hands will be much softened by morning.

Root crops should be gathered before the ground freezes. Mangels are more tender than turnips, and the latter may remain undug until there is danger of their being frozen fast in the soil. The tops make fine fodder for live stock when given with hay and grain.

Fall plowing may be done so long as the weather will permit. Every acre turned in the fall helps forward the work of the busy months of spring. The effect upon clay soil is specially beneficial, making it more porous, and facilitating important chemical changes. Fall plowing is one of the best methods of eradicating cut-worms, wire-worms, and many other insect pests, which pass the winter in the soil.

Notes on Live Stock.

Horses should be kept out of all hard storms, which are frequent during this month. One of the best cures for a severe cold is a warm stable and perfect rest, with a good run in the yard or pasture on pleasant days. It is too late in the year to permit horses to remain out of doors through the night. Young colts and yearlings need plenty of nutritious food. Much depends upon the care which colts receive during the first winter. Oats are excellent for them: if corn is used, it should be fed with wheat bran. Use the brush freely on all horses and colts, and keep the skin clean and active.

Cows, which are to give milk through the winter, need to be fed with special care at this time. If possible, the flow of milk must not be permitted to decrease. Mangels and sugar beets are excellent, cut in slices and sprinkled with bran. The rule, that good feeding brings good manure, should be kept in mind in a judicious care of farm animals during winter. Good feed in abundance is not enough; it should be given with regularity. The habits of different animals have to be studied, and treated accordingly. Scarcely any two cows or horses have the same appetites. It is important to so mix and change the feed, that sameness may be avoided. A variety of food encourages healthful digestion, and upon this the profits of the owner largely depend.

Sheep will bear more exposure than any other domestic animal, but even they winter poorly without a good shelter. Sheds and yards should now be put in good order, that there may be no delays in getting the flocks into their winter quarters. Ewes should now be with young, except in when late lambs are desired. Half a pint of corn per day will aid in keeping each ewe in a good condition. All weak sheep should be placed by themselves and fattened for market. It does not pay to keep second-rate animals.

Pigs are most profitable if fattened and sold before mid-winter. A large part of the food is used up in simply maintaining the animal during the coldest winter weather. Well-bred swine will sometimes lose in weight during a severe storm. Give the pigs all the corn, or other feed, they will eat during the fattening period. Keep the pens clean, with an abundance of litter, and supply all needed pure water.

The Sanitary Peril of the Farm.

Farmers often dilate upon the pure air and healthy surroundings of the country where they have the good fortune to live. Nature has done much for the country, but few farmers have studied the effect of an improper arrangement of necessary conveniences about buildings.

The well is, perhaps, the most important matter relating to health on the farm. Pure water is as necessary as pure air, and few have studied all the sources of impurity in water. It is quite common to find the well, the barnyard, and the privy not far separated from each other. It is a prevalent idea that if the well be on higher ground there is no danger of contaminating the water. It does not seem to be understood that the position of the well is to be considered from its bottom, and not from its top. A drain draws towards its bottom, and the deeper a well is the greater the distance it will drain. It is quite true that the natural formation of the earth about a well has something to do with the determination of water toward it. When it is placed in a natural sag in the earth, where the [illegible] it, forming [illegible] the most effort[illegible] for [illegible] increasing the [illegible] by [illegible] containing matter into [illegible] the nature of [illegible] very much to do with it. A porous or gravelly soil will conduct water from a long distance, and the liquid of a barnyard twenty or even thirty or more rods distant may find its way into the well. In such a situation, therefore, the well should be the more carefully guarded from the sources of contamination. Very many wells have no real spring in the bottom, but are supplied by a filtering of water from all directions into them. Such wells seem to give satisfaction when water is plentiful, but when drought intervenes and the great source of supply, the rainfall, ceases, then the water that percolates into the well is so highly charged with effete matter that it is noticed at once, and condemned as unfit for use. When the rains come again and dilute the offensive matters, the water is then called good again. But it must be seen that the quality of the water is only comparatively good, and not absolutely good at any time.

A clayey soil is the greatest safegard against filtration from much of a distance, and what filters through it gets pretty well purified. Clay is a great absorbent of effete nitrogenous matters—the most dangerous matters that get into water. It has the power of holding ammonia, which is given off by decaying matter.

A layer of clay, from one to four feet thick, sometimes overlies sand or gravel, and then water that filters through it is generally well purified before it reaches the gravel. But this cannot always be depended upon. The Hon. George Geddes mentions a chemical professor at Syracuse, New York, who, determined to make sure of the best water, bored through twenty feet of clay, and struck a layer of gravel. He now thought himself assured of absolutely pure water. But what was his surprise on finding the water so offensive that the stench from its boiling could not be borne! On inquiry it was found that this layer of clay was very thin some eighty rods distant, and the gravel came near the surface, so that the privies of that part of the city leached into that layer of gravel—hence his vile water.

On an elevated stretch of land, where the wind reaches it from every side, a low type of fever (typhoid) sometimes appears, and so puzzles good people as to its cause that they would fain attribute it to a special providence. But it is a special punishment, resulting from drinking bad water. Typhoid fever never comes except as the result of bad water or impure air. It frequently comes from poisoning the well, as we have said, by filtration from the privy or barnyard, or from slops of the kitchen. The privy should always have a concrete or absolutely water-tight vault, so arranged that the contents can easily be taken to the field, where its fertilizing matter will largely overpay the labor required.

Dry, sifted coal ashes or road dust should always be kept at hand, and a small quantity be thrown into the vault every day. This will deodorize the contents and preserve its fertilizing value.

Slops should always be conducted by a tight drain into a vat, half filled with earth. When filled, let it be hauled, earth and all, to the field or manure pile, and all will be saved, and the air kept pure.—National Live Stock Journal.

Canada's Future.

The era of "booms" will soon set in in Canada, if it has not set in already. Mighty railways like the Pacific lines of America do for a country in a few years or even months what a century of creeking waggons will fail to do. Towns and villages appear as if at fairy bidding. As the road nears completion, the enthusiasm of the workers grows apace. The sight of the Pacific will be a tonic as invigorating as the sight of the sea was to the Ten Thousand. When the three thousand miles of line are finished the progress of the Dominion will have assumed another phase. That Canada has a great future in store no one doubts. The Dominion has its wildernesses, but they are far less frequent than its oases. The severe cold in winter, which is the only drawback to the rich lands of Manitoba, should create a hardy race of men, unless experience contradicts itself. With inexhaustible cereal and mineral wealth, the Canadian North-west is at that happy stage of social development when there is land enough for everybody, when labor is highly paid, and when it is not worth a man's while to be lazy. It is the golden age of a country, about which it cannot make too much while it lasts. But, just as children are impatient to become men, a country is ashamed of its childhood and hastens to reach maturity. The Dominion is anxious to fill a larger place in the eyes of the world, and one may safely prophesy its success. Given a vast and rich country, with an energetic population communicating its energy to every settler who sets foot upon its shores, and a railway traversing the land from one end to another, nothing short of the superhuman would seem able to stop the Dominion from a career of prosperity.—London Times.

The Colonel: "Great Cæsar! Another hat? You are the most extravagant women in England. Why, I believe you have got a different hat for every day in the week."—Mrs. Colonel: "Why, of course I have! That's just it! I have one for every day in the week, but none for Sunday. I want a finer one for Sunday."

Fine Wools.

Fine wools are in greater demand than ever before in the history of the country. Year by year, however, they are coming to bear the consumer with greater [illegible] and consequent dissatisfaction [illegible] fine wool (which [illegible] cent. In 1863 the [illegible] was 47 per cent; in 1863 41 per cent; in 1873 [illegible] per cent; in 1883 53 per cent. [illegible] Half-bloods [illegible] increases from 55 to 58 per cent. [illegible] same from 45 to 53 per cent. While fine wools are more and more in demand, our manufacturers stand aghast at the amount of burrs, dirt, sand, &c., they have to pay for. Is there any remedy? We fear there is none but in the institution of some system of tests among buyers, like that in operation in France, where every pound of wool is made to conform to a standard, failing in which the grower feels the loss, unless it can be shown that it was not the carelessness or dishonesty that put the impure article on the market. Of course, in the long run, the evil will come back with interest on the grower, as economy will compel the manufacturer to abandon the special lines of industry using the wools, or induce heavier imports to meet his wants. To-day the standard fine-combing wools are Australian. The Port Philip shipments lead the world in this line. Sir Samuel Wilson, of Melbourne, seeing the growth and promise of the worsted industries, laid his plans for the production of long-combing wools, from both English and American stock, and to-day has the satisfaction of being able to place in the market the fleece for which he finds more prompt buyers than there is supply. Sir Samuel has returned from England, having purchased the classic home of Disraeli, at Hughenden Manor. Yet he does not forget his sheep husbandry, the writer having had recently a communication from him as to the importation of Vermont merinos for his Australian ranches. The growers of Australia are taking great pains with their fine wools in breeding, feeding, shearing, and putting on the market. Buyers are more than the product and increasing numbers. It is a great pity that in a line of wools where there is such a demand and less competition our American growers, who have in many sections equal facilities with Australia, do not cheerfully cater to a branch of trade in which there will be in future, as in the past twenty years an ever-increasing and profitable business. No subject can more profitably occupy the time of Messrs Garland and Markham, of the Wool Growers' Association, than to give attention to this matter, and initiate some action to redeem the tailing reputation of our American growers of fine wools, and not only save but largely increase the market for such products. The next great step in woollen and worsted industries among our manufacturers to meet the popular taste and demand, and also the products in merchandise of their rivals abroad, will increase the consumption of these wools. Shall we have them from Ohio, Texas, Montana, and Oregon, or import them from the now greatly superior and rapidly growing yield of Australia?—Industrial Record.

The Greyhound.

On account of his unsociable disposition the greyhound is so troublesome as to be excluded from many kennels. A gamekeeper in the north of Scotland, having one of these animals given into his charge, was for a while tormented by its noise and misconduct, and at last became obliged to turn him out to wander wherever he pleased. Now, there happened to be a pig on the premises which also enjoyed freedom. To the astonishment of everybody, these two formed a fast friendship, so close that they fed together, slept together, and kept constantly in company, without the one ever showing the slightest hostility to the other. The dog that had formerly kept up a perpetual quarrel among his own race now seemed anxious to accommodate himself to the way of his new friend; while the pig in his turn seemed equally willing to stand high in the favor of the hound.

After this state of things had gone on for some time, they came to understand something of the natural gifts of one another. Living on the confines of a moor, where hares and rabbits abound, they soon began to do a little quiet hunting on their own account. The hound being guided by sight more than by scent, found most difficulty in starting his prey; and here the pig, which appears to be endowed with an excellent scent, came to his assistance. Knowing what was required of him, piggy would trace the hare or rabbit to its lair, and then wait for his companion to do the rest. Thus guided, the hound would sometimes take the prey at one bound; or, if he failed in that, he gave pursuit; and when the hare or rabbit was captured, returned with it to the pig, which immediately tore it to pieces, to be amicably devoured between them. The keeper, obliged to put a stop to this poaching, confined the pig; but the hound showed his constancy by following his friend to the sty, where he lived with him afterward on the best of terms. Although the hound could leap over the sty-rails with the greatest ease he never attempted to supply the menage with more hares or rabbits.

Modern Grammar.

"Johnnie, what part of speech is adieu?"

"A verb, ma'am."

"Aha! Something new, I suppose. Let me hear how you would decline it."

"Present, adieu; past, a dude."

"Johnnie, that will do; it will now be my dudey to send you home."

Denver Doings.

Mr. J. A. M Beth, Pacific Express Office, Denver, Colo., was cured by St. Jacobs Oil of an excruciating pain in the neck, and also tooth-ache. One application did the work.

Nine million postal cards, which will weigh about thirty tons, have just been ordered from the factory in Castleton, N. Y.

The use of Pills, Salts, Castor Oil &c. and other nauseous, griping Cathartics is necessary, as a pleasant substitute is found in Dr. Carson's Bitters, which act as a Cathartic without griping or causing nausea. All druggists sell it. 50 cents a Bottle.

ADVICE TO CONSUMPTIVES.

On the appearance of the first symptoms of general debility, loss of appetite, pallor, sensations, followed by night-sweats cough — prompt measures for relief should be taken. Consumption is scrofulous [illegible] Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, Superior Cod Liver Oil, and Lactucarium are unsurpassed as specifics for [illegible] spitting of blood, [illegible] affections, however [illegible] Sold by druggists the world over. For Dr. Pierce's pamphlet on Consumption, send two stamps to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

Slight shocks of earthquake have been felt both at Malta and Trieste.

CANCERS AND OTHER TUMORS are treated with unusual success by World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y. Send stamp for pamphlet.

An avalanche at Asaro Catania, Sicily, buried six employees and killed five others.

FISTULA, FIS[illegible] successfully treated by World's Dispensary Association. Address with stamp for pamphlet, Buffalo, N.Y.

Trichinosis is spreading rapidly in Saxony. In Ernsleben alone there are 200 persons prostrated with the disease.

FRENCH HORSES. WHAT THE ENGLISH SAY.—The British Quarterly Journal of Agriculture says: "The Horses of Normandy are a capital race for hard work and scanty fare. Have never elsewhere seen such horses at the collar. Under the diligence, post-carriage, or cumbrous cab jolet, or on the farm, they are enduring and energetic beyond description. With their necks cut to the bone they flinch not. They keep their condition when other horses would die of neglect and hard treatment." The superiority of French stallions for crossing on the common mares of America is established. This fact has caused the development of the two largest importing and breeding establishments in the world, M. W. Dunham, having imported from France nearly 1 400 Percheron Normans to his "Oaklawn Farm" at Wayne, Ill., now having there on hand about 500 pure breds, and 2,000 mares, and 21 imported Percheron stallions on Colorado ranges.

It has been decided to hold the civic celebration of the Semi-Centennial of Toronto during the third week of June next.

A Three Cornered Weapon.—The triangular shape of the Triangle Dye Package added to their undoubted superiority, have won the day, and driven all others from the field. 30 colors. 10 cents.

Four shocks of earthquake in quick succession have been felt at Gibraltar. The direction of the movement was north and the duration of the shocks ten to twenty seconds each.

Important

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

Lieut. Viand, author of the report in the Figaro that the French sailors massacred the natives at Hue after they ceased resistance, has been removed from active service.

They all tell the same story. Mr. W. Thompson, Jeweller, Delhi, suffered for years from Dyspepsia, got no relief until he used Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. He says "it was just the medicine I needed. It has cured me."

Near Columbia a colored woman left her young babe all day. When she returned it was devoured by ants. They had crawled into the child's ears, eyes, and mouth. It died shortly after.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-St. West, Toronto, Canada.

A hotel in Milton, Arkansas, is kept by William Shakespeare.

From MR. WILLIAM MAGARTH

Ermilda, Credit P. O., Jan. 8th, 1883

MY DEAR SUTHERLAND: Some two months since I became afflicted with Rheumatism of the neck and right shoulder as to render my right arm nearly powerless. I determined to try your "Rheumatine" and the result is that I am now free from pain, and enjoy the full use of my arm. My general health is also much improved by the use of the medicine. The first two bottles relieved me—the third bottle freed me from all pain.

WM. MAGRATH.

J. N. Sutherland, St. Catharines.

"Mamma, where do the cows get their milk?" asked Willie, looking up from the foaming pan of milk, which he had been intently regarding. "Where do you get your tears?" was the answer. After thoughtful silence he again broke out, "Mamma, do the cows have to be spanked?"

" A. P." 149

St. Jacobs Oil

THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY

FOR PAIN.

Relieves and cures

RHEUMATISM,

Neuralgia,

Sciatica, Lumbago,

BACKACHE,

HEADACHE, TOOTHACHE,

SORE THROAT,

QUINSY, SWELLINGS,

SPRAINS,

Soreness, Cuts, Bruises,

FROSTBITES,

BURNS, SCALDS,

And all other bodily aches and pains.

FIFTY CENTS A BOTTLE

Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine.

Directions in Eleven languages.

The Charles A. Vogeler Co.

(Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.)

Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

CORNS! CORNS! Tender corns, painful corns, soft corns, bleeding corns, hard corns, corns of all sizes are alike removed by Pu[illegible] Pain Extractor. Beware of imitations. Pu[illegible] Pain Extractor is the only [illegible] that does not cause pain, but [illegible] the most painful corns in two days. Pu[illegible] Pain Extractor gives immediate comfort. Give Putnam's Pain Extractor a trial. Beware of substitutes. Sold everywhere. Price 25 cents.

Dr. J. Lea[illegible] Appin, writes:—During the last eight years I have used almost every medicine recommended for Biliousness, but found nothing equal to Carson's Bitters. If you suffer try it. Price 50 cents.

THE LILY

is a perfect gem, equal to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved by the most fastidious. Manufactured by

THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.

78 YORK STREET, TORONTO.

WELLS' WINDOW SHADE CLAMP

PATENTED 1875.

Used for holding WINDOW BLIND SHADES without rollers, pins, or cords. Saves time, money and patience. Looks orderly and neat. Is durable and cheap. Retailed by all dealers everywhere. Trade supplied wholesale by manufacturers. The TORONTO INDUSTRIAL WORKS CO., 96 Church street, Toronto.

BLACKSMITHS' BELLOWS

ANVILS, VICES

PORTABLE FORGES

BABBET METAL,

The largest assortment in the Dominion

William Darling & Co.

HARDWARE MERCHANTS,

MONTREAL, P. Q.

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS

—OF THE—

WHITE STAR LINE

Are all of them without exception among the LARGEST AND FASTEST of Ocean Steamers. They were constructed with special reference to the conveyance of passengers, and for Safety, Comfort or Speed, are unexcelled. They are specially noted for the regularity of their rapid passages in all weather. The steerage accommodations are of the highest order, the ventilation perfect, and every provision has been made for the comfort and protection of the passengers. In addition to the total and absolute separation of the single men and women, except on deck, the married compartment has been so remodelled and arranged that every married couple or family has a little private room to itself. For particulars apply to the company's agents at all towns in Ontario, or to T. W. JONES, General Agent, 23 York street, Toronto.

BEST, SAFEST, & CHEAPEST

GUN

IN THE WORLD

Double-Barrel, Breech-loading Shot Gun including Ten Brass Shells, Tools and Case, Price $13.

The Lefaucheux action of this gun is the strongest and simplest made. The barrels are of the same quality as the $15 Breech-loading Shot Gun, but not so fine a finish.

CHAS. STARK

52 CHURCH-STREET, TORONTO,

Agent for the Winchester Repeating Arms Co. The only Store in the Dominion where a full and complete line of every description of Fine Arms and Sporting Goods is kept.

Send for our 96, page Catalogue, containing over 600 illustrations of Firearms, Silverware, Watches, Jewellery, etc.

A. B. FLINT

Sells all kinds of Black Silk at Wholesale price. A Good Black Silk, wide width, at $1.25. Send cash with order and express will be paid to any part of Canada.

35 COLBORNE ST.

A. B. FLINT

Sells Black Cashmere at Wholesale Price. Our 50 cent French Blue Black Cashmere is worth 67½ cents. Send for 8 or 10 yards as sample, and see for yourself.

35 COLBORNE ST.

A. B. FLINT

Sells all Colors in Velveteen. Our 65 cent Black Louis Velveteen is worth 90 cents a yard. Send for a dress length and see for yourself. All kinds of Dress Goods kept in stock. You can save $1 a pair on good Lace Curtains by sending an order to 35 COLBORNE ST.

A. B. FLINT

Is the only wholesale man in Canada selling to consumers direct, and cash will be returned if goods are not as represented.

35 COLBORNE ST.

A. B. FLINT, - TORONTO

RHEUMATINE

An Internal Remedy and a SURE CURE for all kinds of

RHEUMATIC COMPLAINTS

If you are suffering from

Kidney Complaint

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

FIVE MINUTES SELECT READING.

Summary of Foreign, Domestic and War Items—Concise, Pithy, and Pointed.

A Paris despatch says that the general impression produced there by the disclosures of the yellow book issued recently is that war or mediation only will settle the dispute between France and China.

It is said to be fashionable this fall for American heiresses to wed young Irishmen of quality. German barons, it is learned from the same source, were in vogue last fall and English noblemen two years ago.

Fifty-five murderers have been committed in Logan county, Ky., since 1865, and but one of them has been hanged. Only two of them were sentenced to life imprisonment, and one of the two was pardoned.

The late English hangman's wife, Mrs. Marwood, died the other morning, her death being hastened by intemperance. It is stated that on the occasion of each execution her husband gave her a bottle of gin.

A new warrant has been issued under the Customs Smuggling Act against Holmes and Bracken, the arrested Halifax dynamiters, in which they are charged with bringing explosives across the border without paying duty upon them.

The entries of freshmen at the various colleges of Cambridge University, England, this year exceed those of 1882 by forty-one, the numbers being 716 and 767 respectively. The name of Prince Edward of Wales heads the list at Trinity.

The Berlin Museum has purchased for $60,000 Rembrandt's painting of "Potiphar Accusing Joseph Before Pharaoh." The work was formerly in possession of Sir Thomas Lawrence, and is one of the most famous of Rembrandt's pictures.

From Dublin it is reported that Michael Walters, sentenced to imprisonment for complicity in the Crossmaglen murder conspiracy, recently died in prison. Mr. Healy, M.P., publicly declared that Walters protested to the last his innocence.

Recent advices from Tonquin confirm the report that the Black Flags in Annam are secretly encouraged and assisted by the Chinese authorities. It is said to be the popular belief in China that their army is preparing for a war of extermination against all foreigners.

In the Women's Congress in Chicago, Mrs. Wolcott of Massachusetts told her sisters that the outdoor work of a farmer is not so hard as that of the kitchen, and she instanced many women in Kentucky who are doing farm work rather than bury themselves in kitchen.

Mr. Judah P. Benjamin's friends, acting to the London Times, are having his likeness engraved; and among the subscribers are Lord Cairns, Lord O'Hagan, Lord Watson, Mr. Justice Denman, Mr. Baron Pollock, Sir John de Gex, and many other distinguished persons.

A Berlin despatch states that two Jews have been convicted at Costin of setting fire to the synagogue to obtain the insurance. They were sentenced to four years' imprisonment. Others implicated in the crime were sentenced to shorter terms. The crime was originally attributed to the Christians.

An English country paper contains the following curious instance of mispunctuation: "Lord Palmerston then entered on his head, a white hat upon his feet, large and well-polished boots upon his brow, a dark cloud in his hand, his faithful walking stick in his eye, a menacing glare saying nothing."

A St. Petersburg despatch says the Journal de St. Petersbourg declares that the foreign policy of Russia is entirely devoted to peace. Her relations with all foreign powers are excellent, and no question is now pending likely to disturb the peace which all Governments are striving to maintain.

An item of society intelligence from Kansas says that elopements are becoming things of the past in that State. "It is becoming the rage now," says the writer, "for neighbors to take the bride's father into the next room and sit on him, so that he can't interrupt the wedding ceremony, and to get the mother upstairs discussing new styles of bonnets."

The latest Nihilist proclamation, being extensively circulated, demands that the Czar shall summon the representatives of the Russian people, and asks for a full amnesty, freedom of the press, freedom of speech, and the right to hold public meetings as the only means of preventing a revolution. Pitiless vengeance is threatened if the demands are disregarded.

The Porte has issued a note to the powers protesting against the continued recognition of Prince Alexander as sovereign of Bulgaria. The grounds of the protest are the frequent and continued absence from Bulgaria of the Prince, who is required by the constitution of 1879 to reside permanently in the principality, or appoint a regent during his absence, and other acts on the part of a ruler which trench upon the rights and dignity of Turkey as treaty-suzerain of Bulgaria.

Lord Rossmore, Grand Master of the Orangemen of Monaghan, writes to the newspapers calling attention to the serious state of affairs in Ulster. He says that henceforth the self-restraint of the Orangemen cannot be reckoned upon. Only the utmost efforts of himself and other leaders prevented the Orangemen storming the hill at Rosslea during the Parnellite meeting. If the Goverment allows such disloyal meetings to continue in Ulster the result will be bloodshed—perhaps civil war.

Value of Soup as Food.

The value of soup as food cannot be over-estimated. In times of scarcity and distress, when the question has arisen of how to feed the largest number of persons upon the least quantity of food, the aliment chosen has always been soup. There are two reasons for this: First, by the addition of water to the ingredients used, we secure the aid of this important agent in distributing nutrition equally throughout the blood, to await final absorption; and second, we gain that sense of repletion to the satisfaction of hunger—the fact being acknowledged that the sensation we call hunger is often allayed by the presence of even innutritious substance in the stomach. Good soup is literally the juice of any ingredient from which it is made, the extract of the meat, grains or vegetables which compose it. Even the most economical soups, eaten with bread, will satisfy the hunger of the hardest worker.

The absolute nutritive value of soup depends, of course, upon its ingredients; and these can easily be chosen in reference to the maintenance of health. For instance, the pot liquor in which meat has been boiled needs only the addition of a few dumplings or cereals and seasoning to form a perfect nutriment. That produced from skin and bones can be made equally palatable and nutritious by boiling with it a few vegetables and sweet herbs, and some rice, barley or oatmeal. Even the gelatinous residue—produced by long-continued boiling, without the presence of any foreign matter, is a useful emollient application to the inflamed mucous surfaces in some diseases, while it affords at the same time the degree of distention necessary to prevent flatulency. The time required to make the most palatable and nutritious soup is short. Lean meat should be chopped fine, placed in cold water, in the proportion of a pint to each pound, slowly heated and thoroughly skimmed. Five minutes' boiling will extract from the meat every particle of nutriment and flavor. The liquor can then be strained off, seasoned and eaten with bread, biscuit, and vegetables. Peas or beans boiled and added to the soup make it the most perfect food for sustaining health and strength. It is the pure juice of the meat, and contains all its savory and life-giving principles.

Characteristics of Hands.

Hands are divided into three different kinds; those with round-pointed fingers, those with square tips, and those that are spade shaped, with pods of flesh at each side of the nail. The first type—with round-pointed fingers—belongs to characters with perceptions extra sensitive, to very pious people, to contemplative minds, to the impulsive, and to all poets and artists who have ideality as a prominent trait. The square-shaped belong to scientific people, sensible, self-contained characters, and to the class of professional men who are neither visionary nor altogether sordid. The spade-shaped type, with pods of flesh at the side of the nail, indicates people whose interests and instincts are mostly material. Each finger, no matter what kind of a hand it is joined to, has a joint representing each of those types. The division of the finger that is nearest the palm stands for the body, the middle division represents mind, and the highest joint spirit or soul. If the top joint is longer than the others it denotes a character weakened with a too abundant imagination, great ideality and a leaning towards the theoretical rather than the practical. When the middle joint of the finger is long, it promises a logical mind, and when the lowest joint is longest, it indicates a nature that clings more to the luxuries than to the refinements of life. If they are nearly alike, it indicates a well-balanced mind, especially if the length of the fingers equals the length of the palm.

Fighting a Panther.

Henry Snook, of Readsville, had a desperate encounter with a panther in the Seven Mountains recently, says the Philadelphia Times. It seems that he had been informed that such an animal had been seen the day previous on the back mountain, and he, accompanied by his brother and Robert Dignan, also of Readsville, equipped themselves and started for points in the Seven Mountains where panthers have been known to frequent. When the men reached the vicinity of the place they concealed themselves some distance apart. Just as the sun sank behind the hills, and shadows were shutting out the light necessary to aid the hunter in making a sure shot, Henry Snook's eye fell upon a large panther cautiously moving towards him. Mr. Snook fired a load of buckshot at the animal, breaking one of its hind legs. The enraged and crippled creature advanced upon Snook, who retreated a short distance when the animal halted. The hunter then returned, when another conflict ensued, and Snook ran the muzzle into the animal's mouth and fired, breaking its under jaw. It then struck several terrific blows at him with his paws, and owing to the darkness Snook drew out of the fight. Two men returned to the place the next morning, but did not see the panther.

There is another monster trial to come up shortly before Vice-Chancellor Bacon, in England, which promises to last as long as the Tichborne case, of which Lord Coleridge was a great part. The amount in dispute is $2,500,000. There are ten defendants, who make separate defences and employ separate counsel. Three counsel are engaged for each defendant; and the plaintiff, a well-known company, has five. The company's leading lawyer has $5,000 marked on his brief, and the others on both sides from $2,500 down to $1,500. The pleadings make up a large folio volume. As Sir James Bacon is 85, it is likely to finish him.

A New Aerostat.

It was Scaliger, to the best of our recollection, who thanked God that He had put it into the hearts of some men to make dictionaries. The practical utility of people who believe that they have solved the problem of aerial navigation is not as yet quite so clear as that of lexicographers, although when we go to Chicago by balloon, we shall no doubt be invoking the blessings of Scaliger upon the series of experimenters who have made that result possible.

The cause of aeronautics has not advanced in proportion to the labor expended on it. The other day it was cabled as a surprising feat that an aeronaut had crossed the British Channel in a balloon, whereas that same feat was performed almost a century ago, in January, 1785, namely by Blanchard and Jeffries, less than two years after the first ascension in a balloon had been made (October, 1783), by a person who was afterward killed in an attempt to cross the Channel, and not much more after the Montgolfiers had discovered that a light bag with the open end down would rise if a fire were built under it. The first crossing was in "the infancy of aeronautics," and we are in the infancy of aeronautics still. Although the intervening century has been the most fruitful in mechanical successes of any the world has seen, no real progress has been made. The vision in which the laureate Saw "the nations airy navies grappling in central blue,

Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails, Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales," remains hitherto all in the laureate's eye. Nevertheless the problem has been so successfully solved by birds, with a cubical capacity of brain infinitesimal compared with that of man, that it is no wooder it should continue to provoke the ingenuity of inventive and unfeathered bipeds.

Mr. C. F. Ritchel, of Bridgeport, Connecticut, is the latest of the inventors into whose hearts it has been put to solve the problem, although his efforts appear to be rather towards aerostatics than toword aeronautics—to enable man to hover rather than to fly. However, the successful solution of the problem of aerostation would take us a long way toward flight. The great need of the aerostat has been a tissue light and not transpirable, which will retain his gas in an efficacious state without destroying the buoyancy of the balloon in a few hours by leakage. Mr. Ritchel uses for his balloon, which is a cylindrical reservoir of gas, Scotch gingham coated with rubber and sulphur. For this composition he claims the advantage that it will not rot the balloon as the ordinary coating of boiled linseed-oil does by generating an acid that eats the vegetable fibres. The composition in this case is pressed into the fibre with heated rollers, and then vulcanized.

The balloon—that is to say, the cylinder—is 85 feet long by 35 in diameter, and has thus a capacity of 81,000 feet of gas. Pure hydrogen gas having a lifting capacity of seventy pounds to the thousand feet, this cylinder is expected to carry a load of 5670 pounds. The weight of the cylinder itself is 1200 pounds, of the frame and machinery 1500, of the ballast (water) 600, and fifteen men, crew and passengers, are estimated for at the low average of 120 pounds each, making the total weight 5100 pounds. The fans, four in number, are three feet in diameter, with three blades set at an angle of thirty degrees from an horizontal plan.

There are no valves in the cylinder. Reliance is placed for lowering the balloon upon the fans, which are to be worked by two men at each wheel, and, for raising it, upon a series of shutters under the car, worked by a lever within the car, so as to open out like a parachute, or rather like a brake, so as to slacken motion in either direction by increasing the area of resistance. The inventor believes that the material employed in the balloon will enable him to retain his supply of gas much longer than has hitherto been possible. The ballast is meant only to compensate for the loss of gas by decomposition or leakage, the latter being reduced to a minimum.

It must be owned that this looks a good deal like an undertaking that a man shall not merely lift himself, but soar, by tugging at his waistband; but Mr. Ritchel avers that by applying the principle used in the construction of his air ship a man weighing ninety-six pounds raised fourteen pounds of shot to the ceiling of a room every half-hour, working a fan of fourteen inches diameter, making 2,000 revolutions a minute. But the fan is intended to be used to lower the machine only, the lifting power of the gas being virtually a constant quantity. This is a step beyond Archimedes, who required a place to stand as a condition precedent to moving the world.

A singular species of acacia is growing at Virginia, Nev., which shows all the characteristics of a sensitive plant. It is about eight feet high, and growing rapidly. When the sun sets its leaves fold together and the ends of the twigs coil up like a pig-tail, and if the latter are handled there is evident uneasiness throughout the plant. Its highest state of agitation was reached when the tree was removed from the spot in which it was matured into a larger one. To use a gardener's expression, it went mad. It had scarcely been planted in its new quarters before the leaves began to stand up in all directions like the hair on the tail of an angry cat, and soon the whole plant was in a quiver. At the same time it gave out a most sickening and pungent odor, resembling that of a rattlesnake when teased. The smell so filled the house that it was necessary to open the doors and windows, and it was fully an hour before the plant calmed down and folded its leaves in place.

How People Die.

Miss Nightingale has pointed out how constantly the mental state of the dying depends on their physical condition. As a rule, she tells us, in acute cases interest in their own danger is rarely felt. "Indifference, excepting with regard to bodily suffering, or to some duty the dying man wishes to perform, is the far more usual state. But patients who die of consumption very frequently die in a state of seraphic joy and peace; the countenance almost expresses rapture. Patients who die of cholero, peritonitis, etc., on the contrary, very often die in a state approaching despair. In dysentry, diarrhœa, or fever, the patient often dies in a state of indifference." Those who have carefully examined the dead on a battlefield, or in the streets after an emeute, are struck with the fact that while the expression on the faces of those who have died by gunshot wounds is one of agony and distress, the dead by sword have a calmer expression, though their wounds often seem more painful to the eye. A very careful observer, who was through the Indian mutiny, entirely confirms this. After giving several instances, he says,—

"A rapid death by steel is almost painless. Sabre edge or point divides the nerves so quickly as to give little pain. A bullet lascerates."

The Mormon Chiefs, says the Salt Lake Tribune, tell of their converts. They could get many more immigrants were they to say nothing of their religion, but simply use the emigration system they have adopted. They assess their people ten per cent. on all their earnings. This gives a fund of probably $1,000,000 per annum. If they set aside but a tenth of this for an emigration fund, it is easy to see what might be accomplished. But now the debts contracted by former emigrants are being paid with interest, and probably it is not any longer necessary to draw upon the Church fund. The Mormon religion is certainly the most stupendous fraud of the nineteenth century, but the Mormon emigration system is a most thoroughly effective one.

Some interesting biographical notes on Alexandre Dumas, pere, are being published by M. Blaze de Bury in Paris. One story, showing the facile fecundity of the great novelist, is interesting. He was out shooting one day with a party at Compiegne. He had killed twenty-nine head of game. "I shall kill my thirtieth and then return to the chateau, for I am tired and have had enough of it," said he to his neighbor. Dumas brought down one more partridge and departed. It was noon. The rest of the party returned at five o'clock, and found Dumas seated in front of the fire, rubbing his hands. "Ah! so you have had a nice snooze, eh?" exclaimed his son, "No such uick," was the reply; "those confounded cocks and hens in the farmyard have kept me awake all the time." "Then what on earth have you done with yourself all the afternoon alone?" "Why, I have written a piece for the Frangais." The piece was entitled "Romulus," and was a great success.

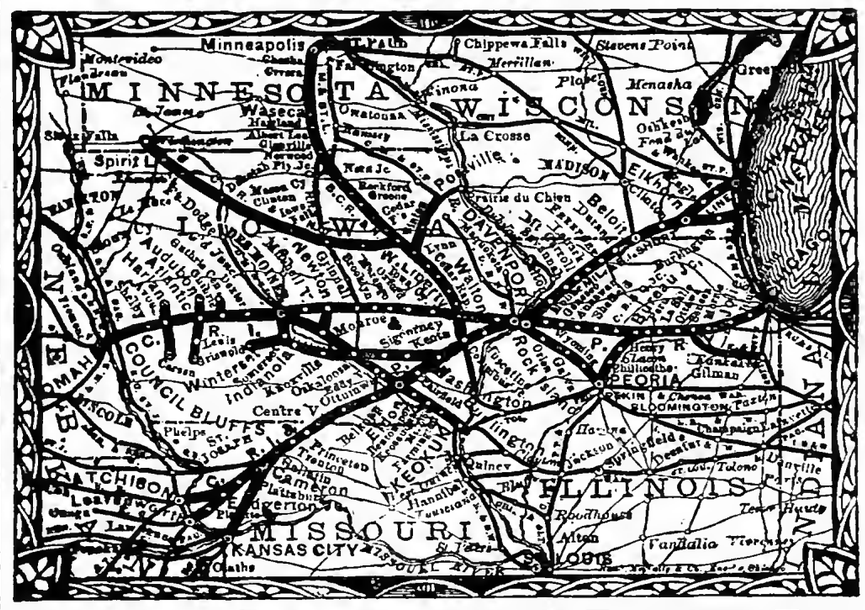
The Best Recipe for a Long Life.

Apropos of Sir Moses Montefiore, whose approaching energy on his hundredth year is a subject of such general congratulation, what is the best recipe for a very long life—supposing a man to consider it an object worth attaining? Milton laid stress on "the rule of not too much," which is no doubt an excellent one, but vague in its application. Moreover Milton followed his own advice, and yet failed to live sixty-six years. Fontenelle, whose life embraced almost exactly a century (11th of February, 1657, to 9th of January, 1757), was formally asked his opinion on this weighty question, and replied that he ascribed his length of days to two maxims he had laid down for himself and rigidly adhered to—the first, "everybody is right"; the second, "everything is possible." The late Canon Beadon was less sententious, and would laughingly explain that he had reached a hundred simply by never wearing an overcoat. It was either he or another centenarian who said he had never eaten cold meat, but always hot, and thus saved his digestion from premature exhaustion owing to double work. It is related of Lord Mansfield that whenever a hale and hearty old man gave evidence before him, he would question the witness in a friendly way as to his habits, with the result that he found every one to be an early riser. The topers are said to have been as numerous as the water-drinkers; which is probable enough, the latter being an extremely limited section of the English people in the eighteenth century.—St. James' Gazette.

Vaccination.

The following conclusions were adopted by the Third International Congress of Opponents to Compulsory Vaccination, recently held at Berne, Switzerland, under the Presidency of Dr. Adolf Vogt, Professor of Hygiene and Medicine in the Bern University, in favor of the abrogation of the laws:

1.—That a comprehensive study of vital statistics proves that the extension of the practice of Vaccination bears no logical relation to the reduction of small-pox.



2.—That whilst the virus used for the excitation of the disease designated vaccinia is of various origins and uncertain character, it is also liable to occasion, intensify, and convey, other and serious maladies.

3.—That statistics gathered from European States, and from India, establish the fact that small-pox (like the other members of the class of zymotic diseases to which it belongs), originates in, and is fostered by, insanitary conditions, and is only effectually combatted by their removal; that Vaccination is inoperative upon mortality where sanitation is defective, and superfluous where sanitation prevails.

4.—That enforced Vaccination is an infraction of personal freedom, inasmuch as a conviction adverse to the utility of the practice is a matter of scientific conscience, which is entitled to the same respect as is accorded in all civilized communities to the theological conscience.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Tailoring—A. Hill.
New Goods—W. Hogg.
Estray—Samuel Smart.
For Sale—John Mercer.
Estray—Henry Hamilton.
Girls Wanted—Miss Green.
Teacher Wanted—John Hazard.
Only Two Dollars—The STANDARD.
Mortgage Sale—Falconbridge & Berwick.
Farmer's Hand Book—Farmer's Advocate,

The Standard.

MARKDALE, NOV. 1st, 1883.

TEA TRAMPS.

The public would do well to give tea pedlars, as well as all such petty dealers, a wide berth. Some of those who have been operating in the tea business in this place are now endeavoring to force payment for goods which were never ordered or received. We think citizens should patronize those in our midst who are doing a legitimate business, in preference to smooth tongued agents of whatever department they may represent. We believe in citizens supporting each other and patronizing home, at least so long as they are fairly dealt with. We might here complain somewhat in the printing line as one of our merchants have been having printing done in Toronto. In fact, they say by their actions, that a paper published in the place is no benefit whatever. Now, if we wished to retaliate, we could readily secure Toronto advertisements, which would doubtless have the effect of many purchases being made in Toronto which are now made in Markdale, but we do not believe in the principle of rendering evil for evil and will not practice it, but would earnestly recommend the public to patronize home and we have no fear as to the result.

THE COUNCIL MINUTES.

In reference to a communication in another column from the Reeve of Artemesia, we would beg to inform him that there has been a material advancement in the times since the days referred to when editors were under the necessity of searching council minute books, and many similar modes of securing matter to fill their paper. One of the most difficult matters we have to contend with in the present age is the condensing or "boiling down" process in order to give as much information as possible in a given space. Usefull and interesting news are abundant, and the means of collecting it equally ample, so that we could easily fill double the space at our disposal, but thenthe boot would pinch in another quarter. Country editors know well that the subscription alone does not pay more than two thirds of the cost of the paper, subscribers perhaps think this impossible, it is nevertheless true, hence the necessity of economizing in regard to the expense of collecting necessary and desirable information. We consider however the publisher does his duty when he publishes the minutes of a council from year to year free, thereby, in some instances at least, saving the municipality $25 or upwards for publishing the same matter once a year in pamphlet form. We can scarcely believe however that the Reeve of Artemesia is sincere in his stated opinion that it is the duty of editors to secure such matter at their own expense, but merely gives it for the sake of argument. So mote it be.

FEMALE FRANCHISE.

A deputation from the Canada Woman's Suffrage Association waited on the Toronto city council on Monday evening last with the object of getting its support to their petition to be shortly presented to the Ontario Legislature for the extension of the municipal and parlimentary franchise to women.

The deputation was composed of Mrs. McEwan, President of the association, Mrs. McMaster, Mrs. T. B. Wylie, Mrs. W. I. Mackenzie, Mrs. Adam Miller, Dr. Emily, H. Stowe, Miss McMaster, Mrs. Kerr, and Mrs. W. B. Hamilton.

At the present time women who are possessed of property sufficient to entitle a man to vote are disfranchised and their property, though taxed, is not represented. The following resolution was put and carried by 20 to 5 viz:

Resolved, that in the opinion of this council the municipal and parliamentary franchise should be extended to women who possess the qualifications which entitle men to vote, and that His Worship the Mayor be requested on behalf of this council to sign the petition now being prepared to be presented to the Legislature at its next session."

REMARKABLE COINCIDENCE.

The editor of the Flesherton Advance treats its readers to halt a colum last week under the above heading. Our Osprey correspondent being also a correspondent to the Meaford Mirror gives the report of the agricultural show in Singhampton, in somewhat similar language to both papers, and the editor of the Advance thinks it worthy of a half column notice. We think it no more strange, however, than the Toronto boot black charging extra for cleaning those "mud scows from the North." Not a bit.

ON THE WING.

We had a pleasant drive through the township of Osprey on Friday last and found harvestiug operations about wound up. Several steam threshers are at work, and, from what we could learn the yield will be fully up to the average but the quality of wheat sadly deficient. This will have the effect of greatly reducing the return in cash in this particular kind of grain, yet on the whole the results of the year's operations will not be far, if any, below the average. Very little fall work is done, owing in a great measure to the lateness of the harvest. We never saw the roads better than they were last week; the gravel through the township is an excellent road. Seldom do we come across a country hotel as orderly and neatly kept as J. Allison's, at Maxwell. The table also is kept considerably above the average. There is likely to be considerable interest taken in the coming municipal election. There's plenty of time yet, however.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—The Port Elgin Busy Times, Bruce Herald, of Walkerton, and other papers advocate the formation of a rural Press Association. This is a move in the right direction. We hope to see further action taken in the matter.

—The following from Truth, we coinside in:—The marriage "aiders" are still buisy trying to get up a boom. Those who have tried say most emphatically that they have been badly bitten. No wonder. The thing is not on a business basis, and bears absurdity on its very face. The best provision for marriage which young people can make is that which comes from saving, economical habits, with the steady avoidance of whiskey, tobacco, and all other iniquities. If anybody thinks that a society is going to give him a hundred dollars on the payment of five, he is quite too awfully simple for this world, and should make off as speedily as possible to more Arcadian scenes.

—Truth says:—It may well be doubted it there is any very effusive loyalty in Canada. To judge by the expressions of the daily papers, there is no great regret felt at the departure of the Marquis and the Princess, and very little enthusiasm over his successor. The truth of the matter is, that these big wigs feel their stay among us a kind of exile. Canadians know that they feel in this way, and there cannot, therefore, in the nature of things, be much affection or real regard either on one side or the other. They come and go like the shadows they are. It may be to be regretted, but as to such being the fact it is to be feared there is no doubt what ever.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

MR. EDITOR,—Your correspondent, X. Y. Z., and your own remarks regarding the publication of the proceedings of the council suggest the following remarks:—

I agree thoroughly with yourself, that the township clerk is the worst paid office belong to the municipality, and that the relations and operations to meet the governmental requirements depend more on him than the council, and therefore every person is not qualified for the position, but having one he should be paid proportionately to his responsibility. Some years ago it was made imperative by resolution for the clerk to furnish the newspapers, two or three of them, your own included, with those minutes and this has not been recinded. But it always seemed to be a resolution out of harmony with justice, and it was allowed to take care of itself.

One is struck with the alleged importance of such printing by the remarks of X. Y. Z. They, however, loose much of their importance, when it becomes known, that any ratepayer has access to the clerk's office, and can investigate the minute book at pleasure, but notwithstanding, I believe with both, it would be very desirable to have them printed in the local papers, now I take it for granted that the majority of readers especially local readers, estimate the minutes, among the most important news items, if correct, does it not appear for their sakes that the duty should devolve on editors to copy or obtain the copy of them? Is it not worth something to the proprietors to keep up the popularity of their papers? and consequently with the trouble either to copy or arrange for the obtaining such copies, independently of the council or clerk? I cannot see any propriety for councils, to voluntarily arrange, to parade their own misdeeds before a critical public, their condemnation will come soon enough, especially if editors do as was the custom in those parts where I formerly resided, viz: copy the minutes themselves; and who were always glad to get a plenty of such work to do.

Another suggestion is this, most papers have local correspondents, would it not be a pleasure of duty performed, if such correspondents, for the week in which the council met, substitute their usual quota of ordinary news, for the minutes of the council, it would meet the case for all parties.

W. S. CHRISTOE.

Death of Rev. Matthew Richey, a Well-known Methodist.

Halifax, Oct. 24.—Rev. Matthew Richey, D. D., father of the lieutenant-governor of Nova Scotia, is dead. He was in his 81st year. He was at one time president of Victoria college Cobourg, Ont., and for several years president Wesleyan Methodist conference in Canada, and subsequently president of the Wesleyan Methodist conference of Eastern British America.

Letter Writing.

Unless one accustomes themselves habitually to the use of the pen it is sometimes a difficult matter to bring one's self to the actual task of writing a letter. Not but that there is something to say, but the putting the thought into language, and this language upon paper is not the easy thing which at first sight it may appear to be. And all too frequently absent friends are neglected from the sheer laziness of the person who ought to send them a letter.

Yet who that has ever waited long and anxiously for tidings from some loved one, and fretted and worried because they did not write, but can appreciate the value of a letter even if it be the merest scrawl so far as penmanship is concerned. The welcome news is in it, and the mind set at rest from its vague conjecturings.

In these days of cheap postage and ready mails, it is generally not from lack of opportunity of knowing that distant ones are left in ignorance of even matters of detail as regards the lives and well being of those dear to them. And in no way except by frequent and minute descriptions by means of letter writing can the bonds of sympathy be well cemented between absent ones and those left behind. Interests and feelings always prove to seek the present, and tangibal rather than the distant and vague will so absorb one's time and attention, that very dear ones far away will receive but small share of even the thought they would were their daily lines made clear one to the other by means of frequent letter-writing.

There is a power in letters for influencing other minds, which few overrate and must think only too lightly of. Words which from the manner in which they may be spoken can fall lightly on the ear of the listner, assume new meaning when clearly penned in black and white. The mother's advice reaching her absent boy in a letter, carries with it an urgency which her spoken words may not always convey. The brother sister, the friend show themselves doubly in their pen strokes.

Yet evil as well as good can leave its impression upon the paper, and if the good seem intensified by the written word, so too, will the evil obtain added force by being penned Once sent the letter cannot be recalled, and after epistles can hardly seem to effact the effect of written words which had best never have been written. Greater care should be taken for this reason in the selection of language in letters than in speech, and there is a world-wide difference between a good letter and a bad one. Neither blot or erasure should be tolerated, except in the most intimate correspondence, and a misspelled word is an unpardonable sin. There is no excuse, in these days of general education and universal dictionaries, for not knowing how to spell.

Handwriting should be as regular and legible as possible, entirely free from flourishes. But good and clear penmanship comes by good practice. There is no royal road to it; nor yet is there any royal road to the composition of a clever letter.

One of the letters of inquiry which are before me asks: "How shall I write an entertaining letter?" You might as well ask, "how shall I be an entertaining talker?" The good talker, or the good letter writer, is, like the poet, born, not made. There are but few rules for composition which may be given and followed: Never try to write a long letter—never allow yourself, indeed, to write one unless you have so much to say that you cannot help it. A long winded letter is only less unendurable than a prosy, long winded talker, because you can skip the letter, and the talker won't let you skip him. Say what you have to say as briefly as it is convenient with saying it clearly, and avoid alike long words and long sentences. Say what you have to say, and be contented to stop when it is said. If you have not the good fortune to be witty, or brilliant, or original in your way of looking at things, still your letter may be clever, and if not, you at least can be prompt, brief and courteous. All letters, of whatever nature, save to the people who are so closely allied to use that we can think aloud to them, should be written with a certain amount of consideration. It is one thing to make a careless speech and quite another to put the same thought into the cool permanence of pen and ink.

Then let the missives fly—letters of joy and hope and sorrowful tidings may pass but that they might never be the bearers of evil thought, rather let them be messengers of right on good deeds intent.—Ex.

THE CRADLE.

MABEE—In Markdale, on the 19th ult., the wife of E. S. Mabee, of a son.

CAMPBELL—In Flesherton, on the 29th ult., the wife of Mr. John Campbell of a son.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.70 to $1.95; Spring $0.70 to $1 95; Barley, 40 to60; Peas, 63; Oats, 30c Butter, 17c; Eggs, 22c; Potatoes, 40c; Hay, $7 .00; Pork, 5.00 to 5.50; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20.

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.10; Spring, $1.00 to $1.12; Barley, 50c to 70c; Oats, 37c to 40c Peas, 70c to 73c; Hogs, $6.00 to $6.25; Potatoes, per bag, 90c to $1c; Butter, dairy, 15c to 17c; eggs, 22c to 25c.

READY DECEMBER 1ST, 1883

—THE—

FARMER'S HAND BOOK

FOR 1884.

(Copyright secured.)

A COMPLETE RECORD OF FARM OPERATIONS.

This book will contain blank pages, ruled, so that the farmer can keep a correct diary of his farm accounts, of his purchases and sales of his produce, sales of live stock, grain, dairy, fruit, and poultry; also a calendar for 1884, giving the moon's changes, and also many useful tables, receipts, with memoranda pages, &c., for the farmers, not found in any other single book.

A NECESSITY TO EVERY INTELLIGENT FARMER. PRICE, 25 CENTS EACH.

Address—
THE FARMER'S ADVOCATE,
360 Richmond Street,
LONDON, ONT., CANADA.

ONLY $2.00

—FOR—

THE STANDARD

—AND—

The Farmers' Advocate

AND HOME MAGAZINE,

Together with a copy of the Farmers' Hand Book for 1884, advertised in this paper. Without a rival in Canada, and unsurpassed in Arerica, for Stock Raiser, Dairyman, Fruit Grower.

We are enabled, by a special arrangement, to offer that well-known agricultural paper, THE FARMER'S ADVOCATE, now in its 19th year of publication, clubbed with this journal for the above small sum.

"SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS."

The Advocate is the acknowledged agricultural authority of Canada, and combines with, under its Home Magazine department, the best family paper published in the Dominion. Its motto—

"PLAIN, PRACTICAL AND PAYING INFORMATION," and its best energies are devoted to the interest of the farmer and his family. Over 400 pages every year. Just what is wanted for every owner of farm, Garden, or Orchard. IMPROVEMENTS IN EACH DEPARTMENT IN 1884.

SUBSCRIBE NOW.

Balance of the year FREE. Send for sample copy.

WANTED,

Eight girls, at Miss Green's dress making parlor. Six apprentices and two assistants. 161-tf.

TEACHER WANTED

For School Section No. 6, Artemesia, male or female, holding second or third class certificate. Duties to commence 2nd day of January, 1884. Apply stating salary to

JOHN HAZARD,
Sec.-Treas. to Trustees,
Flesherton Station P.O.
Artemesia, Oct, 25, '83. 164-65

ESTRAY.

Came into the premises of the subscriber, Lot North ½ 2, Con. 12, Euphrasia, about the 8th October, two heifers rising two years. The owner is requested to prove property, pay expences, and take them away.

SAMUEL SMART.
164-66

ESTRAY.

A steer rising two years came to the premises of the undersigned, lot 18, con. 12, Holland, in September last. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take him.

HENRY HAMILTON,
164-66 Harkaway P.O.

FOR SALE,

A choice grain farm, Lots 109 and 110, 2nd East T. and S. Road, Artemesia, containing 100 acres, 80 acres cleared and in high state of cultivation, clear of stone and fit for machinery of any kind; soil clay loam. The farm is well fenced, has 15 acres fall wheat in, about 50 fruit trees bearing, and is situated in a beautiful section of country two and a half miles from Markdale, a thriving village on the T. G. & B. railway. Good reasons for selling. Possession given next spring. For further particulars apply on the premises to

JOHN MERCER,
164-66 Markdale P. O.

NOTICE.

Having given up possession of Barrhead Mill and purpose removing from this place shortly, I hereby notify all parties indebted to me to call at Lucas' Bank and settle their account and save further trouble or costs.

W. J. ROWE.
Oct. 24, '83.

FARM FOR SALE.

Lot 89 and 90 second range west of T. & S. Road, Glenelg, 100 acres, 85 of which are cleared and under cultivation fit for reaper and mower to work on. Buildings and fences in good repair, soil clay loam, well watered, and in a good state of cultivation. This is a desirable farm and well located being 2½ miles from the flourishing village of Markdale. For further particulars apply on premises or by letter to

162-72 WM. MUTRIE,
Markdale P. O.

FARMS FOR SALE.

Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are clearsd and under ultivation. Lot S part 15, con. 12, Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to

J. G. IRVING,
Markdale.
Oct. 16. 1883. 16

WANTED,

An apprentice at the Sash and Door Factory.
Apply to GEORGE GRANT & CO.,
Markdale.

A. HILL,

Fashionable Tailor,

OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.

A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

MORTGAGE SALE

—OF—

Valuable Farm Property

—IN THE—

Township of Glenelg.

Under the power of sale in a certain mortgage from John Travers to the vendors, which will be produced at the time of sale, and on default being made in payment of the money, thereby secured, there will be offered for sale by Public Auction, at the

MIDDAUGH HOUSE HOTEL,

—IN THE—

TOWN of DURHAM

—ON—

Tuesday Nov. 20th, 1883

AT TWELVE O'CLOCK, NOON,

By HUGH MACKAY, Auctioneer,

The following property, viz:

The Southerly part of Lot No. 9, in Con. 9, of the said Township of Glenelg, containing 31 43/100 acres, more more or less, more particularly described by metes and bounds in said mortgage which is registered as number 2182, also the Southerly part of lot No. 8 in said concession 9, of said Township containing 50 acres more or less and more particularly described by metes and bounds in said regestered Mortgage. About 43 acres are said to be cleared and under cultivation, and well fenced. On the premises are said to be a frame house, barn, stable and sheds in good repair also large orchard. Terms—10 per cent at the time of sale, 15 per cent within one month thereafter and the balance to be secured by the Mortgage of the premises payable in five equal annual instalments with interest at 7 per cent yearly, or such other terms as may be agreed upon at the time of sale. For further particulars apply to DAVID JACKSON, Jr., Esq., Durham, or to FALCONBRIDGE & BERWICK Vendors Solicitors,

Toronto Oct 30th 1883,

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK

DressStuffsTweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest grades, varying in price from 5 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN

Markdale and Toronto TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clocks, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing generaliy, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,
The Jeweller,
MARKDALE.

Local and Other Items.

NOTICES in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cts a line for the first insertion and five cts a line each subsequent insertion.

KEEP your feet dry.

OUR wood is out—d'ye hear.

GRAIN is now coming in freely.

MR. AND MRS. R. H. BYERS left this week for Rochester.

ABOUT four inches of snow this Thursday morning.

COMPLETE outfits for auctioneers, at the STANDARD Office.

BLANK notes, receipts and all such forms for sale at the STANDARD Office.

LAST night was halloweve ; dear-o-dear how things are mixed up this morning.

MR. HULL has erected this week his carriage house in connection with the livery.

OUR railway station has been this week improved by a new floor and the walls calcimined.

TRIMBLE & WRIGHT are crowded to their utmost capacity to attend to the wants of their numerous customers.

MR. J. R. ANDERSON had his residence vaneered with brick recently, which gives it a comfortable appearance.

MR. N. CAMPBELL, Flesherton, has painted his residence and otherwise very greatly improved the house and surroundings.

LOST on Oct. 13th, near Markdale, a silver watch, finder will be liberally rewarded by leaving it at the STANDARD office.

MR. J. R. TRIMBLE, of the firm of Trimble & Wright, is in Toronto this week attending the trade sales. Look out for Big bargains.

ALL business places will be closed on Thanksgiving day except the photo gallery. New improvements for that day, be sure you call and see them.

NEXT Thursday being a public holiday the STANDARD will be published a day early. Our correspondents will please make a note of this and send in the news a day early.

WE have made arrangements with the World Publishing Co. whereby we are enabled to club that newsy and independent daily paper with the STANDARD for $3.50 cash.

TO SELL OR TRADE.—A large cow rising 5 years, farrow, will sell or trade for a good cow in calf Joseph Henderson, Lot North ½ 5, con. 7 Euphrasia about six miles from Markdale.

MR O. W. SMITH, we are informed, has purchased eight hundard acres of pine and cedar lands on the Indian Peninsula where he intends to commense operations in a few days.

A SAMPLE of spring wheat from the N. W. T. can be seen at the STANDARD office which was sent us by G. L. Dolds, of Wolseley, formerly of Glenelg. The quality of grain is good.

AT A meeting of the trustees last night one Mr. Norris was engaged as head teacher at a salary of $850. The present female teachers were re-engaged.

THANKSGIVING DAY.—The second Thursday in November, being the 8th will be set apart as a day of thanksgiving for the people of Canada, to give public expression of their gratitude for numberless benefits received.

JOHN MCDUFFIE returned last Tuesday from the Ontario anh Quebec Railway, where he has been overseer of a gang during the past Summer. He leaves for Port Arthur on Saturday.

WOOD is very scearce just now in Markdale, some of our citizens who have a supply say they will likely cause an explosion in somebody's stove if they do not desist visiting wood piles at night.

THE addition to the Markdale house is about completed and will add materially to the convenience of the place. The lower portion will be used as kitchen and woodshed while the upper story is intended for bed rooms.

MR. MUTRIE, advertises his farm for sale in this paper. It is located two and a half miles from Markdale and is a very good farm. We hope Mr. M. will change his mind and decide to remain, we do not like to lose such respected enterprising and well-to-do residents.

BIG rush of busines at Reynolds' since they got their fall goods in. Our stock is complete in every department and all our goods are of the latest fashion and at prices that beat the best on record. Call and see us; no trouble to show goods. C. Reynolds & Son.

AN auction sale of farm stock and implements will take place at Edward Sargent's near Berkeley on Monday the 12th November. There is six horses and a large quantity of other stock implements &c in the bill for sale. Twelve months credit, see bills for full particulars. Geo. Noble Auctioneer.

NEWSPAPER subscriptions are always paid in advance ; that is to say, if the subscriber does not do it the publisher is obliged to, as the paper dealers, the compositors, the type makers, ink makers, scissor grinder, the pencil sharpener, the pressman. the landlord, and others will not wait for their pay until the year expires.

MR. WHYTE, the new General Manager of the T. G. & B. Railway, who is also Manager of the C. V. R. and and O. & Q. Railways passed up on the morning train Wednesday. Mr. Whyte is a thoroughly practical man and wishes to become personally acquainted with the business men along the line, and for this purpose he met a number of our leading men at the station yesterday.

SHAMEFUL.—A broken or loose board in the sidewalk is a very dangerous thing and may sometimes cause very serious results, but when it comes to leaving open cellar approaches on or immediately adjoining the street, it is altogether an action not to be excused in any one. Such is the case at the North side of McFarland's building, where only the other night a person falling into it miraculously escaped being killed. The place should be fixed securely at once.

W. HOGG, Flesherton Station, announces the arrival of his new fall goods, intending purchasers would do well to examine them. He also advertises his water power saw mill at Little Falls, with those blocks of timber lands on which it is situated for sale or to let. The creek from Cullen's lake, with numerous additional springs, runs through this land on a rapid down grade, making several excellent mill sites on the property. The mill is driven under 36 feet head of water.

LOSH, preserve us, Sandy, what in a this worl is the matter wi ye, noo add sake yer puffin an blawing as tho ye had the heaves, or was broken winded, weel Jock I'll just tell ye I've come in frae the south line o' Glenelg 7 lang miles a' the way on my fot jest to get a 10 or 20 lbs o' that tea o' Trimble & Wrights, we've been oot ot for twa or three days and the guid wife is just as cross as twa sticks, I tell ye its the best tea I ever used since I crossed the sault water.

THE Agents Herald is a four column sixteen page monthly journal, published in Philadelphia, by L. Lum Smith, at 50 cents per year or 5 cts for a single copy. It is a valuable paper for publishers because it exposes fraudulent advertisers; it is valuable to advertisers showing up publishers whose bonafide circulation is in many instances not half what they represent; it is valuable to agents because all kinds of reliable articles are advertised for sale through its columns and agents wanted; it is valuable to the public warning them of the thousand one frauds that are being advertised from time to time in large papers.

Dundalk.

Grain is beginning to come in, but there is very little wheat marketed yet, and on the whole business is rather quiet.

Mr. Whyte, the new manager of the T. G. & B. R., held an interview with the leading business men of the village, at the station on Wednesday last.

Mr. T. Hanbury has sold part of his beautiful park lot to Mr. J. J. Middleton, and another portion to Mr. T. Hall. Both gentlemen intend erecting tasty residences during the coming season.

Mr. J. Stinson, of the vicinity of Markdale had a narrow escape, when removing the scaffolding from McCullaugh, new hotel. He fell from a considerable hight. He did not receive any serious injury.

Chatsworth.

From a correspondent.

Grain is coming in slowly.

Wes. Roberts has left to take a situation in Mount Forest.

Mr. Matthews, the hotel keeper's father, is removing to Dakota.

Mr. Thos. Stephenson was banqueted at Campbell's hotel on the eve of his departure for Mount Forest.

Quite a number of cases were disposed of at the division court, last Thursday, a large number were in attendance.

The young men of this place purpose celebrating Thanksgiving Day by a squirrel hunt, the loosing party paying for the supper. Messrs. Young and Hebertson are captains.

Williamsford Station.

From a correspondent.

Our enterprising merchant has his grain house up, having raised the frame on Monday. It is a strong substantial structure and will be pushed to completion with all possible speed.

Dr. Cameron, of Owen Sound, grand master of the C. O. O. F., and Mr. McMurchy, of the same place, deputy district grand master, visited our lodge on Tuesday evening last, results satisfactory.

Maxwell.

Mr. Joseph Kerton moved last week to Avening village, where, it is said, he is going into tavern keeping.

Mr. Wm. Hamlin's family moved last week to Beaverton to join their head, who is in the mercantile business.

Mr. Stinson's store has the appearance of taste and cleanliness, and friend Sharp, the manager knows how to keep it so.

WM. HOGG,
FLESHERTON STATION,

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods!

IN

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes, &c

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold very low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Station.

Nov. 1st, 1883.

J. G. IRVING,
MARKDALE,
Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

J. W. FORD

Is giving splendid satisfaction in

CRISTING,

By the New Process at the

Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

New FALL Importations

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats, Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in a the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

KEN'S MYSTERY.

BY JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

One cool October evening—it was the last day of the month, and unusually cool for the time of year—I made up my mind to go and spend an hour or two with my friend Keningale. Keningale was an artist (as well as a musical amateur and poet), and had a very delightful studio built on to his house, in which he was wont to sit of an evening. The studio had a cavernous fire-place, designed in imitation of the old-fashioned fire-places of Elizabethan mannor-houses, and in it, when the temperature out-doors warranted, he would build up a cheerful fire of dry logs. It would suit me particularly well, I thought, to go and have a quiet pipe and chat in front of that fire with my friend.

I had not had such a chat for a very long time—not, in fact, since Keningale (or Ken, as his friends called him) had returned from his visit to Europe the year before. He went abroad, as he affirmed at the time, "for the purposes of study," where at we all smiled, for Ken, so far as we knew him, was more likely to do anything else than to study. He was a young fellow of a buoyant temperament, lively and social in his habits, of a brilliant and versatile mind, and possessing an income of twelve or fifteen thousand dollars a year; he could sing, play, scribble, and paint very cleverly, and some of his heads and figure-pieces were really well done, considering that he never had any regular training in art; but he was not a worker. Personally he was fine-looking, of good height and figure, active, healthy, and with a remarkably fine brow, and clear, full-gazing eye. Nobody was surprised at his going to Europe, nobody expected him to do anything there except amuse himself, and few anticipated that he would be soon again seen in New York. He was one of the sort that find Europe agree with them. Off he went, therefore; and in the course of a few months the rumor reached us that he was engaged to a handsome and wealthy New York girl whom he had met in London. This was nearly all we did hear of him until, not very long afterward, he turned up again on Fifth Avenue, to every one's astonishment; made no satisfactory answer to those who wanted to know how he happened to tire so soon of the Old World; while as to the reported engagement, he cut short all allusion to that in so peremptory a manner as to show that it was not a permissible topic of conversation with him. It was surmised that the lady had jilted him; but, on the other hand, she herself returned home not a great while after, and though she had plenty of opportunities, she had never married to this day.

Be the rights of this matter what they may, it was soon remarked that Ken was no longer the careless and merry fellow he used to be; on the contrary, he appeared grave, moody, averse from general society, and habitually taciturn and undemonstrative even in the company of his most intimate friends. Evidently something had happened to him, or he had done something. What? Had he committed a murder? or joined the Nihilists? or was his unsuccessful love affair at the bottom of it? Some declared that the cloud was only temporary, and would soon pass away. Nevertheless, up to the period of which I am writing it had not passed away, but had rather gathered additional gloom, and threatened to become permanent.

Meanwhile I had met him twice or thrice at the club, at the opera, or in the street, but had as yet had no opportunity of regularly renewing my acquaintance with him. We had been on a footing of more than common intimacy in the old days, and I was not disposed to think that he would refuse to renew the former relations now. But what I had heard and myself seen of his changed condition imparted a stimulating tinge of suspense or curiosity to the pleasure with which I looked forward to the prospects of this evening. His house stood at a distance of two or three miles beyond the general range of habitations in New York at this time, as I walked briskly along in the clear twilight air I had leisure to go over in my mind all that I had known of Ken and had divined of his character. After all, had there not always been something in his nature—deep down, and held in abeyance by the activity of his animal spirits—but something strange and separate, and capable of developing under suitable conditions into—into what? As I asked myself this question I arrived at his door; and it was with a feeling of relief that I felt the next moment the cordial grasp of his hand, and his voice bidding me welcome in a tone that indicated unaffected gratification at my presence. He drew me at once into his studio, relieved me of my hat and cane, and then put his hand on my shoulder.

"I am glad to see you," he repeated, with singular earnsteness—"glad to see you and to feel you; and to-night of all nights in the year."

"Why to-night especially?"

"Oh, never mind. It's just as well, too, you didn't let me know beforehand you were coming; the unreadiness is all, to paraphrase the poet. Now, with you to help me, I can drink a glass of tamarind-water and take a bit draw of the pipe. This would have been a grim night for me if I'd been left to myself."

"In such a lap of luxury as this too!" said I, looking round at the glowing fire-place, the low, luxurious chairs and all the rich and sumptuous fittings of the room. "I should have thought a condemned murderer might make himself comfortable here."

"Perhaps but that's not exactly my category at present. And have you forgotten what night this is? This is No- tradition asserts, the dead arise and walk about, all forms, goblins, and spiritual beings of all kinds have more freedom and power than on any other day of the year. One can see you've never been in Ireland."

"I wasn't aware till now that you had been there, either."

"Yes, I have been in Ireland. Yes—" He paused, sighed, and fell into a reverie, from which, however, he soon roused himself by an effort, and went to a cabinet in a corner of the room for the liquor and tobacco. While he was thus employed I sauntered about the studio, taking note of the various beauties, grotesquenesses, and curiosities that it contained. Many things were there to repay study and arouse admiration: for Ken was a good collector, having excellent taste as well as means to back it, but, upon the whole, nothing interested me more than some studies of a female head, roughly done in oils, and, judging from the sequestered positions in which I found them, not intended by the artist for exhibition or criticism. There were three or four of the studies, all of the same face, but in different poses and costumes. In one the head was enveloped in a dark hood, overshadowing and partly concealing the features; in another she seemed to be peering duskily through a latticed casement, lit by a faint moonlight; a third showed her splendidly attired in evening costume, with jewels in her hair and ears, and sparkling on her snowy bosom. The expressions were as various as the poses; now it was demure penetration, now a subtile inviting glance, now burning passion, and again a look of elfish and elusive mockery. In whatever phase, the countenance possessed a singular and poignant fascination, not of beauty merely, though that was very striking, but of character and quality likewise.

"Did you find this model abroad?" I inquired at length. "She has evidently inspired you, and I don't wonder at it."

Ken, who had been heating the tamarind-water, had not noticed my movements, now looked up, and said: "I didn't mean those to be seen. They don't satisfy me, and I'm going to destroy them: but I couldn't rest till I had made some attempts to reproduce— What was it you asked? Abroad? Yes—or no. They were all painted here within the last six weeks."

"Whether they satisfy you or not, they are by far the best things of yours I have ever seen."

"Well, let them alone, and tell me what you think of this beverage. To my thinking, it goes to the right spot. It owes its existence to your coming here. I can't drink alone, and those portraits are not company, though, for aught I know, she might have come out of the canvas to-night and sat down in that chair." Then, seeing my inquiring look, he added, with a hasty laugh, "It's November, eve, you know, when anything may happen, provided it's strange enough. Well, here's to ourselves."

We each swallowed a deep draught of the smoking and aromatic liquor, and see down our glasses with approval. The punch was excellent. Ken now opened a box of cigars, ane we seated ourselves before the fire-place.

"All we need now," I remarked, after a short silence, "is a little music. By-the-by, Ken, have you still got the banjo I gave you before you went abroad?"

He paused so long before replying that I supposed he had not heard my question. "I have got it," he said at length, "but it will never make any more music."

"Got broken, eh? Can't it be mended? It was a fine instrument."

"It's not broken, but it's past mending. You shall see for yourself."

He rose as he spoke, and going to another part of the studio, opened a black oak coffer, and took out of it a long object wrapped up in a piece of faded yellow silk. He handed it to me, and when I had unwrapped it, there appeared a thing that might once have been a banjo, but had little resemblance of one now. It bore every sign of extreme age. The wood of the handle was honey-combed with the gnawings of worms, and dusty with dry-rot. The parchment head was green with mould, and hung in shrivelled tatters. The hoop, which was of solid silver, was so blackened and tarnished that it looked like dilipidated iron. The strings were gone, and most of the tuning-screws had dropped out of their decayed sockets. Altogether it had the appearance of having been made before the Flood, and been forgotten in the forecastle of Noah's Ark ever since.

"It is a curious relic certainly," I said. "Where did you come across it? I had no idea that the banjo was invented so long ago as this. It certainly can't be less than two hundred years old, and may be much older than that."

Ken smiled gloomily. "You are quite right," he said; "it is at least two hundred years old, and yet it is the very same banjo that you gave me a year ago."

"Hardly," I returned, smiling in my turn, "since that was made to my order with a view to presenting it to you."

"I know that; but the two hundred years have passed since then. Yes, it is absurd and impossible, I know, but nothing is truer. That banjo, which was made last year, existed in the sixteenth century, and has been rotting ever since. Stay. Give it to me a moment, and I'll convince you. You recollect that your name and mine, with the date, were engraved on the silver hoop?"

"Yes; and there was a private mark of my own also."

"Very well," said Ken, who had been rubbing a place on the hoop with a corner of the yellow silk wrapper; "look at that."

I took the decrepit instrument from him, and examined the spot which he had rubbed. It was incredible, sure enough; but there were the names and the date precisely as I had caused them to be engraved; and there, moreover, was my own private mark, which I had idly made with an old etching point not more than eighteen months before. After convincing myself that there was no mistake, I laid the banjo across my knees, and stared at my friend in bewilderment. He sat smoking with a kind of a grim composure, his eyes fixed upon the blazing logs.

"I'm mystified, I confess," said I. "Come; what is the joke? What method have you discovered of producing the decay of centuries on this unfortunate banjo? I have heard of an elixir to counteract the effects of time, but your receipt seems to work the other way—to make time rush forward at two hundred times his usual rate, in one place, while he jogs on at his usual gait elsewhere. Unfold your mystery magician. Seriously, Ken, how on earth did the thing happen?"

"I know no more about it than you do," was his reply. "Either you and I and all the rest of the living word are insane, or else there has been wrought a miracle as strange as any in tradition. How can I explain it? It is a common saying—a common experience, if you will—that we may, on certain trying or tremendous occasions, live years in a moment. But that's a mental experience, not a physical one, and one that applies, at all events, only to human beings, not to senseless things of wood and metal. You imagine the thing is some trick or jugglery. If it be, I don't know the secret of it. There's no chemical appliance that I ever heard of that will get a piece of solid wood into that condition in a few months, or a few years. And it wasn't done in a few years, or a few months either. A year ago to-day at this very hour that banjo was as sound as when it left the maker's hands, and twenty-four hours afterward—I'm telling you the simple truth—it was as you see it now."

The gravity and earnestness with which Ken made this astounding statement were evidently not assumed. He believed every word that he uttered. I knew not what to think. Of course my friend might be insane, though he betrayed none of the ordinary symptoms of mania; but, however that might be, there was the banjo, a witness whose silent testimony there was no gainsaying. The more I meditated on the matter the more inconceivable did it appear. Two hundred years—twenty-four hours; those were the terms of the proposed equation. Ken and the banjo both affirmed that the equation had been made; all worldly knowledge and experience affirmed it to be impossible. What was the explanation? What is time? What is life? I felt myself beginning to doubt the reality of all things. And so this was the mystery which my friend had been brooding over since his return from abroad. No wonder it had changed him. More to be wondered at was it that it had not changed him more.

"Can you tell me the whole story?" I demanded at length.

Ken quaffed another draught from his glass of tamarind-water and rubbed his hand through his thick brown beard. "I have never spoken to any one of it heretofore," he said, "and I have never meant to speak of it. But I'll try and give you some idea of what it was. You know me better than any one else; you'll understand the thing as far as it can ever be understood, and perhaps I may be relieved of some of the oppression it has caused me. For it is rather a ghastly memory to grapple with alone, I can tell you."

Hereupon, without further preface, Ken related the following tale. He was, I may observe in passing, a naturally fine narrator. There were deep, lingering tones in his voice, and he could strikingly enhance the comic or pathetic effect of a sentence by dwelling here and there upon some syllable. His features were equally susceptible of humorous and of solemn expressions, and his eyes were in form and hue wonderfully adapted to showing great varities of emotion. Their mournful aspect was extremely earnest and affecting; and when Ken was giving utterance to some mysterious passage of the tale they had a doubtful, melancholy, exploring look which appealed irresistibly to the imagination. But the interest of his story was too pressing to allow of noticing these incidental embellishments at the time, though they doubtless had their influence upon me all the same.

"I left New York on an Inman Line steamer, you remember," began Ken, "and landed at Havre. I went the usual round of sight-seeing on the Continent, and got round to London in July, at the height of the season. I had good introductions, and met any number of agreeable and famous people. Among others was a young lady, a country-woman of my own—you know whom I mean—who interested me very much, and before her family left London she and I were engaged. We parted there for the time, because she had the Continental trip yet to make, while I wanted to take the opportunity to visit the north of England and Ireland. I landed at Dublin about the first of October, and, zigzagging about the country, I found myself in County Cork about two weeks later.

"There is in that region some of the most lovely scenery that human eyes ever rested on, and it seems to be less known to tourists than many places of infinitely less picturesque value. A lonely region, too: during my rambles I met not a single stranger like myself, and few enough natives. It seems incredible that so beautiful a country should be so deserted. After walking a dozen Irish miles you come across a group of two or three one-roomed cottages, and, like as not, one or more of those will have the roof off and the walls in ruins. The few peasants whom one sees, however, are affable and hospitable, especially when they hear you are from their friends and relatives have gone before them. They seem simple and primitive enough at first sight, and yet they are a strange, and incomprehensible a race as any in the world. They are as superstitious, as credulous of marvels, fairies, magicians, and omens, as the men whom St. Patrick preached to, and at the same time they are shrewd, sensual, insensible, and bottomless liars. Upon the whole, I met with no nation on my travels whose company I enjoyed so much, or who inspired me with so much kindliness, curiosity, and repugnance.

"At length I got to a place on the sea-coast, which I will not further specify than to say it was not many miles from Ballynacheen, on the south shore. I have seen Venice and Naples, I have driven along the Cornice road, I have spent a month at our own Mount Desert, and I say that all of them together are not so beautiful as this glowing, deep-hued, soft-gleaming, silvery-lighted, ancient harbor and town, with the tall hills crowding round it and the block cliffs and headlands planting their iron feet in the blue, transparent sea. It is a very old place, and has had a history which it has outlived ages since. It may once have had two or three thousand inhabitants; it has scarce five or six hundred to day. Half the houses are in ruins or have disappeared; many of the remainder are standing empty. All the people are poor, most of them abjectly so; they saunter about with bare feet and uncovered heads, the women in quaint black or dark blue cloaks, the men in such anomalous attire as only an Irishman knows how to get together, the children half naked. The only comfortable-looking people are the monks and the priests, and the soldiers in the fort. For there is a fort there, constructed on the huge ruins of one which may have done duty in the reign of Edward the Black Prince, or earlier, in whose mossy embrasures are mounted a couple of cannon, which occasionally sent a practice-shot or two at the cliffs on the outer side of the harbor. The garrison consists of a dozen men and three or four officers and non-commissioned officers. I suppose they are relieved occasionally, but those I saw seemed to have become component parts of their surroundings.

"I put up at a wonderful little old inn, the only one in the place, and took my meals in a dining-saloon fifteen feet by nine, with a portrait of George I. (a print varnished to preserve it) hanging over the mantel-piece. On the second evening after dinner a young gentleman came in—the dining-saloon being public property, of course—and ordered some bread and cheese and a bottle of Dublin stout. We presently fell into talk; he turned out to be an officer from the fort, Lieutenant O'Connor, and a fine-young specimen of the Irish soldier he was. After telling me all he knew about the town, the surrounding country, his friends, and himself, he intimated a readiness to sympathize with whatever tale I might choose to pour into his ear; and I had pleasure in trying to rival his own outspokenness. We became excellent friends; we had up a half-pint of Kinahan's whiskey, and the lieutenant expressed himself in terms of high praise of my countrymen, my country, and my own particular cigars. When it became time for him to depart I accompanied him—for there was a splendid moon abroad—and bade him farewell at the fort entrance, having promised to come over the next day and make the acquaintance of the other fellows. 'And mind your eye, now, going back, my dear boy,' he called out, as I turned my face homeward. 'Sure 'tis a spooky place, that grave-yard, and you'll as likely meet the black woman there as anywhere else!'

"The grave-yard was a forlorn and barren spot on the hill-side, just the hither side of the fort: thirty or forty rough head-stones, few of which retained any resemblance of the perpendicular, while many were so shattered and decayed as to seem nothing more than irregular natural projections from the ground. Who the black woman might be I knew not, and did not stay to inquire. I had never been subject to ghostly apprehensions, and as a matter of fact, though the path I had to follow was in places very bad going, not to mention a hap-hazard scramble over a ruined bridge that covered a deep-lying brook, I reached my inn without any adventure whatever.

"The next day I kept my appointment at the fort, and found no reason to regret it; and my friendly sentiments were abundantly reciprocated, thanks more especially, perhaps, to the success of my banjo, which I carried with me, and which was as novel as it was popular with those who listened to it. The chief personages in the social circle besides my friend the lieutenant were Major Molloy, who was in command, a racy and juicy old campaigner, with a face like a sunset, and the surgeon, Dr. Dudeen, a long, dry, humorous genius, with a wealth of anecdotical and traditional lore at his command that I have never seen surpassed. We had a jolly time of it, and it was the precursor of many more like it. The remains of October slipped away rapidly, aod I was obliged to remember that I was a traveller in Europe, and not a resident in Ireland. The major, the surgeon, and the lieutenant all protested cordially against my proposed departure, but as there was no help for it, they arranged a farewell dinner to take place in the fort on All-halloween.

"I wish you could have been at that dinner with me! It was the essence of Irish good-fellowship. Dr. Dudeen was in great force; the major was better than the best of Lever's novels; the lieutenant was overflowing with hearty good-humor, merry chaff, and sentimental rhapsodies anent this or the other pretty girl of the neighborhood. For my part I made the banjo ring as it had never rung before, with a mellow strength of lungs such as you don often hear outside of Ireland. Among the stories that Dr. Dudeen regaled us with was one about the Kern of Querin and his wife, Ethelind Fiongula—which being interpreted signifies 'the white-shoulder ed.' The lady, it appears, was originally betrothed to one O'Connor (here the lieu tenant winked with his left eye), but was stolen away on the wedding night by a party of vampires, who, it would seem, were at that period a prominent feature among the troubles of Ireland. But as they were bearing her along—she being unconscious —to that supper where she was not to eat but to be eaten, the young Kern of Querin, who happened to be out duck-shooting, met the party, and emptied his gun at it. The vampires fled, and the Kern carried the fair lady, still in a state of insensibility, to his house. 'And by the same token, Mr. Keningale,' observed the doctor, knocking the ashes out of his pipe, 'ye're after passing that very house on your way here. The one with the dark archway underneath it, and the big mullioned window at the corner, ye recollect, hanging over the street, as I might say—'

"'Go 'long wid the house, Dr. Dudeen, dear,' interrupted the lieutenant; 'sure can't you see we're all dyin' to know what happened to sweet Miss Fiongula, God be good to her, when I was after getting her safe upstairs—'

"'Faith, then, I can tell ye that myself, Mr. O'Connor,' exclaimed the major, imparting a rotary motion to the remnants of whiskey in his tumbler. 'Tis a question to be solved on general principles, as Colonel O'Halloran said that time he was asked what he'd do if he'd been the Dook o' Wellington, and the Prussians hadn't come up in the nick o' time at Waterloo. 'Faith,' says the colonel, 'I'll tell ye—'

"'Arrah, then, major, why would ye be interruptin' the doctor, and Mr. Keningale there lettin' his glass stay empty as he hears—The Lord save us! the bottle empty!'

"In the excitement consequent upon this discovery, the thread of the doctor's story was lost; and before it could be recovered the evening had advanced so far that I felt obliged to withdraw. It took some time to make my proposition heard and comprehended; and a still longer time to put it in execution; so that it was full midnight before I found myself standing in the cool pure air outside the door, with the farewells of my boon companions ringing in my ears.

"Considering that it had been rather a wet evening in-doors, I was in a remarkably good state of preservation, and I therefore ascribed it rather to the roughness of the road than to the smoothness of the liquor, when, after advancing a few yards I stumbled and fell. As I picked myself up I fancied I heard a laugh, and supposed that the lieutenant, who had accompanied me to the gate, was making merry over my mishap: but on looking round I saw that the gate was closed and no one was visible. The laugh, moreover, had seemed to be close at hand, and even to be pitched in a key that was rather feminine than masculine. Of course I must have been deceived: nobody was near me: my imagination had played me a trick, or else there was more truth than poetry in the tradition than Halloween is the carnival-time of disembodied spirits. It did not occur to me at the time that a stumble is held by the superstitious Irish to be an evil omen, and had I remembered it it would only have been to laugh at it. At all events, I was physically none the worse for my tumble, and I resumed my way immediately.

"But the path was singularly difficult to find, or rather the path I was following did not seem to be the right one. I did not recognize it; I could have sworn (except I knew the contrary) that I had never seen it before. The moon had risen, though her light was as yet obscured by clouds, but neither my immediate surroundings nor the general aspect of the region appeared familiar. Dark, silent hill-sides mounted up on either hand, and the road, for the most part, plunged downward, as if to conduct me into the bowels of the earth. The place was alive with strange echoes, so that at times I seemed to be walking through the midst of muttering voices and mysterious whispers, and a wild, fairy sound of laughter seemed ever and anon to reverberate among the passes of the hills. Currents of colder air sighing up through narrow defiles and dark crevices touched my face as with airy fingers. A certain feeling of anxiety and insecurity began to take possession of me, though there was no definable cause for it, unless that I might be belated in getting home. With the perverse instinct of those who are lost I hastened my steps, but was impelled now and then to glance back over my shoulder, with a sensation of being pursued. But no living creature was in sight. The moon, however, had now risen higher, and the clouds that were drifting slowly across the sky flung into the naked valley dusky shadows, which occasionally assumed shapes that looked like the vague semblance of gigantic human forms.

"How long I had been hurrying onward I know not, when, with a kind of suddenness, I found myself approaching a grave-yard.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

One of the Mexicans implicated in the murder of the four men at a dance near Gardner was overtaken by armed citizens. A rope was placed round his neck, the other end fastened to the saddle of a horse, who was then frightened into a run, dragging the culprit over rocks and stumps until dead. He stated that himself and companions were hired to commit the murder.

MR. CHEN'S COURT.

Characteristic Scenes in a Chinese Justice Shop.

Of the courts in Shanghai the first and most important place of all is the native Mixed Court, where Chen sits in the potential-ity of his glory to try Chinese prisoners. The hall is covered in by a sort of tiled roof, the gable ends of which are turned up in approved Chinese style. On three sides it is shut in by walls; the fourth or front side, opens into a large court, facing the doors of the prison cages. The seat of justice is vermilion—a sort of throne with a table in front. On this table is simply an inkstand and a bronze representation of a human hand, whereon rest the pens with which Mr. Chen signs his sentences. Behind the chair are ranged a large number of vermilion-painted pen stands, the boards being covered with hieroglyphics detailing the virtues of the mandarin. That representative of justice occasionally gives more than ordinary attention to people who come before him. They go away pleased, and at once have his goodness on a vermilion board, which they send to him. This board Mr. Chen at once puts in the rack behind his chair as a testimonial to his worth, it is said by all who come before him. Chen can be carried out in his procession when he goes through the town in state. An American friend who accompanied me as he saw these: "These cases must be very consoling to disappointed suitors: they show that if justice is delayed just now, it has been at some time or other, anyhow."

On our introduction to Mr. Chen I found us in the presence of a little old man who could speak nothing but Chinese. Chen spoke, but firm on one point. He would execute justice, he said, by day.

The prisoners he could, even in early morn: somebody said he had disposed of 300 culprits in a single morning. But the carrying out of his sentences was a very different thing, and we would see some little later. So we returned when evening had set in, and the lamps were lighted. Then Mr. Chen said he could begin. He almost apologized for the paucity of criminals when at last he prepared to take his seat. But he said that those he was about to deal with might well make up for many more, for they were parlous rogues and deserving many stripes which he proposed to give them. Then, making a signal, he left the way from his reception hall to the judgment seat, preceded by a gentleman with a tremendous gong, two gigantic fellows with high red cone caps, two men armed with split bamboos, and some men bearing cangues—large square pieces of board with a neck-hole in the centre. Bang went the gong. "By!" cried out the lictors. "Ay!" shouted the people who were gathered in the hall: and thus came Mr. Chen to execute justice. I now saw that on a form near the prison doors sat a ragged and miserable crew, apparently waiting for something more or less awful. They alone of all persons in the hall shouted not. They had some shouting to do later on, and perhaps were reserving their powers. One, in fact, very shortly received good reason to shout. "Chang Huen," said the magistrate. "Chang Huen," echoed the lictors; and forthwith the wretched owner of the name was seized by the pigtail and hurried up to the vermilion table. Down he went on his knees, but all to no purpose. "One hundred blows," ejaculated Mr. Chen, looking at his judicial notes, and forthwith the culprit was seized by the two men with the conical caps, pulled a little way along the stones in front of the table to a point where the mandarin could get a full view of him, and their flung on his back, his arms being twisted over his head by one lictor, while he was divested of a portion of his clothing. Chang Huen evidently knew what was to follow, and he howled piteously. But howling did not help him, for so soon as the two lictors had got him into proper position and had sat on him, one of the men with bamboos came up, and, squatting down on the ground, began to strike him on the inner parts of the naked thighs, counting the blows as they fell. At first sight, despite Chang Huen's noise, I thought that PUNISHMENT WAS VERY LIGHT.

THE ARM OF JUSTICE REALLY AT WORK

I saw soon afterwards that the skin was already black, and that the first twenty-five strokes had left a band of colour quite six inches broad. Executioner No. 2 now came up and laid on another twenty-five: then his comrade had another turn, and lastly he finished his fifty. It will perhaps be thought that the injury thus inflicted would be severe. But the skin was not broken, and I should say that the bruises would heal in a week or ten days at most. Garotters in England, flogged as they are on the bony back and shoulder blades, are apparently hurt much more, though I was told that the beating without breaking the skin was much more painful than it looked. Chang Huen, however, had very few to pity him; he was evidently either a very bad or impecunious man, for no sooner was the beating over than he was roughly seized once more by the pigtail and hauled along over the yard to the prison with great rapidity, and screeching loudly all the while.

Far more fortunate was a culprit who followed him, and who as he was thrown down by the lictors, put out two fingers in such a way that the executioners could see them plainly. "What does that mean?" I asked of the Magistrate's interpreter. "He mean he give two dollar if not spoilee too much with bamboo," was the instantaneous reply. "But surely," said I, "he cannot bribe in so open a way, under the nose of the mandarin?" "Yes," said the interpreter, "everybody know. More better man givee two dollar." He was certainly speaking the truth; this gentleman, culprit No. 2, got off lightly. His bruises were very small, his pigtail was not pulled, he made plenty of noise, had four at any rate through the semblance of a severe punishment, and he had lost two dollars, which to him was no doubt a painful event. Possibly the mandarin looked upon the momentary transaction in the light of a fine by which his underlings benefitted. And so the punishments went on.

Wedding Days.

There are favored days in the week for marriages, says an English paper, as well as favored months in the year. Saturday, Sunday and Monday are the most in esteem. Sunday in the rural districts, and Saturday in the towns. It appears, however, that Sunday weddings are generally less numerous than they were, while Saturday weddings are on the increase. Friday is deemed an unlucky day for marriages, as for most other undertakings. In the county of Gloucester there were but twenty Friday marriages in 1881 to two hundred and thirteen on Saturday, two hundred and eleven on Monday and two hundred and three on Sunday. In the city of Manchester much the same proportion holds good. The Friday weddings were but twenty-four, to two hundred and eighty-seven on Saturday, two hundred and twenty-one on Sunday, and one hundred and seventy-eight on Monday. In Scotland, on the other hand, Friday is the great day for marrying; nearly half the weddings for a given year are celebrated on that day. Sunday in Scotland is practically a dies non for matrimonial purposes, and the Saturday weddings are exceedingly few. The English prejudice against Friday marriages in general does not extend to Good Friday—at least in certain town districts—for whereas the average of Friday marriages in Manchester was, in 1881, but 218, on Good Friday there were celebrated as many as thirty-six. There are no figures, however, to show that this is a common state of things. The one day in the year on which more marriages are celebrated in Scotland than on any other is December 31, which is doubtless explained by the fact that New-Year's day is observed there as a general holiday. In England no one day is in the same position, but the favorite wedding days are Christmas Day, Easter Monday, Whitsun Monday, and the days preceding and following them, and then the August bank holiday.

The Population of Paris.

The analysis of the population of Paris just published gives very singular statistics as to the inhabitants of the gayest city in Europe. It seems, also, for its size, to be the most industrious. The proportion in which the working class exceed those who live on thir own incomes is the more remarkable, as Paris is the recognized centre of expenditure and extravagance for all France. There are no cities that hold to the capital the same relative position that Liverpool, Manchester, and Birmingham occupy relatively to London. More than half a million of Parisians are employed in commerce, trade and banking operations, while of the artisan class there are considerably more than a million and a quarter. The liberal profession seem to occupy but a small proportion of the population. All combined do not amount to 200,000, and in the sub-divisions the prominence is quite different to what it would be with us. The great majority are in the public service, which employs more than medicine, law and divinity all combined. But, after the public service, it is art which gives employment and livelihood to the greatest number of Parisians. Forty-two thousand get their income from this branch of industry. The doctors come after, but a long way after. Medicine in its branches supports 10,000, the branches, of course, including chemists and all compounders and venders of medicine. Then comes the law, with its 16,000 votaries, from judge to bailiff. Literature figures very low on the list, for, grouped with science and journalism, it gives employment to only 11,000 people, while all the clergy of all the persuasions amount to but half that number. On the whole, Paris would seem to be more industrious, more artistic, less literary and less religious than the ordinary visitor would suppose.

The Bear not in Winter Society.

Like the hedgehog, the bear depends entirely upon its accumulation of fat, and during the fall is in prime condition, when, in October or November it enters upon its winter home. One of these nests of the black bear, found by the writer several miles from Lake Utowana, in the Adirondacks, was beneath a huge tree, four or five of whose great roots branched out on each side. The earth had been removed on the south side, the interior lined with leaves, twigs and other refuse matter that would make a comfortable bed, and covered with snow in a dense jungle the animal had perfect security. Soon after the bear has retired the intestines shrink and become clogged or hardened with a substance known as tappan, in reality pine leaves and the bark of fir trees, that they eat immediately prior to entering upon the state of hibernation, that remains in position until spring, and so slow is the exhaustion of fat, that is now the food supply, that animals have been found five months after their involuntary entombment as fat as when they went in. During the sleep the skin upon the balls of their feet is renewed. The males of the polar bear do not hibernate, a fact proven by the late polar expedition of the yacht Eira.

The King of Siam a Humane and Intelligent Monarch.

A paragraph has been going the rounds of the press referring to the king of Siam, which is accepted to by D. B. [illegible] late United States representative at the Court of Siam. Mr. Sickels says: "I presume the paragraph in question was based upon some English publication, and it is well known in Siam that it is part of the British policy to misrepresent the king of that country and create the impression that the Siamese people are in a state of almost hopeless barbarism, from which they can never be rescued except by the annexation of the country to the British crown. The King of Siam, who is known as Chulalonkorn the First, or Somdetch Phra Paramindr Moha Chulalonkorn, is one of the most humane and intelligent monarchs in the far east. He celebrated his thirtieth birthday on the 21st of last September, and has reigned for fourteen years as the supreme ruler of the country. During his reign, which has been the most peaceful and prosperous one since the establishment of the empire, he has instituted numerous reforms in the Government, practically abolished slavery, inaugurated an official public school system, proclaimed religious liberty throughout his domains, established a new code of laws, and improved a judicial system. In all his tendencies he is decidedly progressive, and is greatly beloved by his people, whose welfare and advancement are his constant care. He often prepares important public documents with his own hand, as he did the despatch that was sent to Lord Salisbury a few years ago, in which he demanded the recall of the British consul-general whose daughter married a Siamese nobleman of high rank in violation of the King's command. His Majesty is an accomplished scholar and linguist, and altogether one of the most intellectual Asiatics I have ever conversed with, and better educated than Li Hung Chang, or any of the Eastern rajahs."

Unsatisfactory Diet.

In times of want and famine in Ireland, sea-weed is used as food by the people who dwell along the coasts. In the best of times they consume a considerable amount of the choicest varieties for medicinal purposes. That which has the greatest popularity grows luxuriantly upon rocks that are submerged during high tide. The saving process is a very simple one. At low tide the wives and daughters of fishermen gather it in baskets and spread it in such a way that it will catch the sun. The effect of this treatment changes its greenish color to a dark purple, and it is then stored in bags. On the western coast the people call it dilusk and sell it to summer visitors. As an appetizer it is considered very effective. It is a common sight at the western watering-places to see the children munching it during the mid-day airings on rock and heath. But as the effect of this kind of sea-weed is to increase rather than allay hunger in those unaccustomed to its use, the natives of the coast line cannot be expected to derive much nourishment from it as a continuous diet. As a matter of fact, they do not. A woman in the County Clare a few years ago, through the desertion of her husband and her inability to walk to a village a few miles distant, was compelled to subsist wholly on sea-weed. She ultimately died of starvation, and the stomach was found to be almost full of sea-weed. The kind of sea-weed which is known in this country as Irish moss is capable of affording a much more agreeable and nutritious food than any other of the five hundred or more varieties. Scores of peasant women live by gathering it from the rocks in summer. They spread it upon the grassy slopes near the ocean until it whitens and hardens in the sun, and then pack and ship it. It is like Irish "mild-cure" bacon—too valuable for home consumption. Carrageen is still used by well-to-do Irish families for blanc-mange making. It is first steeped in cold water, then strained and the liquor boiled in milk. When poured into moulds, sweetened, and flavored with lemon or vanilla, it becomes as stiff as corn-starch, and far more palatable. Before its medicinal virtues were proclaimed to the world the peasants of the coast had it nearly all to themselves. During late years they have been content with an occasional meal.

The Nations Wealth.

The following table, compiled from Mulhall's Balance Sheet of the World, shows the estimated capital or wealth of a few of the principal nations of Europe in 1880:

Nations.	Total wealth.
Great Britain	$44,800,000,000
France	37,085,000,000
Germany	30,375,000,000
Russia	17,700,000,000
Austria	15,250,000,000
Italy	9,300,000,000
Spain	6,865,000,000
Holland	5,650,000,000

The next table gives the per capita, or rate of wealth for each inhabitant, less the per capita of the public debt:

Nations	Per capita of wealth.
Great Britain	$1,185
France	900
Germany	650
Russia	180
Austria	335
Italy	235
Spain	225
Holland	1,310

Salt if taken in small quantities facilitates digestion, but if too much be taken it acts injuriously. This is also true of vinegar.

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,

Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

MOULDINGS, PICTURE FRAMES, Mirrors and Picture Findings generally. Trade supplied. MATTHEWS BROS. & CO., Toronto

ROOFING.—CHEAP, DURABLE AND FIRE-PROOF, easily put on, composed of Felt cemented together for Flat or steep roofs. H. WILLIAMS, Manufacturer and dealer in Felt roofing materials, 1 Adelaide Street East, Toronto.

THE MUTUAL MARRIAGE ENDOWMENT Association of Ontario. Head Office London, Ont. Issues certificates from $250 to $3,000 payable upon marriage. An investment for young people of either sex. Send for particulars. W. I. MACKAY, Secretary, Albion Block, London.

DO NOT ALLOW YOUR CHILDREN TO grow up deformed or crippled, but call and examine our appliances for the treatment of Club Feet, and Diseases of the Spine, Hip, Knee and Ankle. Remember the world is progressing, and more can be done to-day than at any former period. We also manufacture Artificial Limbs, Trusses, and appliances for the relief and cure of all kinds of deformities. Will show at Toronto, Guelph and London Exhibitions. AUTHORS & COX, 91 Church street, Toronto.

$1 FOR WESTERN ADVERTISER, LONDON, from now to end of 1884. Magnificent premium, "BOOK OF PORTRAITS," only 10c. extra—contains following chromo-lithographs, in five colors: Queen Victoria; the new Governor-General (Marquis of Lansdowne); Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone; Hon. E. Blake; Sir John A. Macdonald; Hon. O. Mowat; Hon. Alex Mackenzie; Chester A. Arthur, President U. S. Biographical sketch of each. Agents wanted. Address—ADVERTISER PRINTING CO., London, Ont.

WANTED—STEADY EMPLOYMENT and good pay given to every lady owning a sewing machine. Material sent and returned by mail. Send one dollar with your application as a guarantee that the material we furnish will be returned when finished. FINDLAY & CO., Manufacturers, Detroit, Mich.

195 ACRES—48 CLEARED; 40 FOR HAY; clay loam; no stone or rock; nearly level; well watered; large frame barn, with granary, log stable, and foreman's house, all nearly new; immediate possession; $2,300 cash; also 212 acres, 70 cleared, 15 pasture; clay and black loam; situated on Mary Lake, Stephenson township, large new two-story frame house, 24 x 28 and 16 x 16; stone cellar 24 x 28; pantry, w.c., store-room, and woodshed; new frame stable, with loft; price $40 per acre, $5,000 cash; these prices if sold at once. CAPT. OPENSHAW, Port Sydney, Muskoka.

PAINT! PAINT!

To Painters and those Painting.

RAMSAY'S CONCENTRATED ZINC has three times the body of lead and wears for years. One pound will cover more work than than three pounds of best English Lead. Guaranteed and manufactured by

A. RAMSAY & SON, Montreal.

Should be Sold by All Paint Dealers.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS OF PREPARED LEATHER, Durable, Light, Elastic, and Cheap. First prize at Provincial Exhibition, London. Testimonials of cures. Satisfaction guaranteed. William J. Hobbs, Orrayton, Ont.

HOW TO MAKE MONEY FAST

OVER 7,000 SOLD!

A Book containing 25 very valuable money making secrets, sent to any address post-paid and sealed, on receipt of $1.00. Address N. W. BOYD, Knowlton, P. Que.

BEAVER S. S. LINE

WEEKLY BETWEEN

Quebec, Montreal, and Liverpool,

CALLING AT

QUEENSTOWN AND BELFAST

For lowest rates and all particulars apply to Sam Osborne & Co., 28 Yonge street, Toronto.

CLEAN YOUR BOILERS

Britannia Scale Purger Saves Fuel, saves Repairs, obviates Danger.

Gluss Lubricators Save Oil.

Tube Cleaners Save the Tubes.

Belt Dressing Saves your Belts.

For Sale by GORMAN & McLAREN, Cor. Wellington & Grey Nun Sts., Montreal.

The Newell Patent Universal Grinder

Award of Gold and Silver Medals.

NEWELL & CHAPIN Proprietors, 95 St. James-st. west Montreal.

These Mills save time, grind any kind of grain very fast and without heating. Larger Size Mills working on same principle with different style of cutter, grinding phosphates, gold and silver ores, quartz, plaster, clay, bones, fish-scraps, bark, &c. Please call or write for particulars.

Dominion Line of Steamships.

Running in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec every Saturday during the summer months, and from Portland every alternate Thursday during the winter months. Sailing dates from Quebec:—

*Sarnia,	Oct. 20	*Oregon,	Nov. 10
*Montreal,	" 27	Dominion,	" 17
*Oregon,	Nov. 3	Toronto,	" 24

Rates of passage: Cabin, Quebec to Liverpool $50, $60, $65, $80; return, $90, $108, $117, $144 according to steamer and berth. Intermediate $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and staterooms in steamers marked thus: * are amidships, where but little motion is felt, and no cattle or sheep are carried on them. For further particulars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway Agent, or local agents of the Company, or to DAVID TORRANCE & CO., General Agents, Montreal.

OAKLAWN FARM,

The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in the World.

Percheron-Norman Horses

WORTH $2,500,000.00

Imported from France and Bred since 1872, by

M. W. DUNHAM, Wayne, Du Page Co., Illinois,

35 miles West of Chicago, on C. & N.-W. R'y.

Prices low for quality of stock, and EVERY STALLION GUARANTEED A BREEDER.

390 Imported the Past Three Months, consisting of finest animals, with choicest pedigrees. Registered in the Percheron Stud Book of France, and the Percheron-Norman Stud Book of the United States. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue No. 20

THE BEST

Horse Remedies

TRADE MARK.

are those made by

THE ELLIS SPAVIN CURE CO.

Every owner of one or more horses can save a large amount of time and money by having on hand a good supply of Ellis's Horse Remedies, and to supply a general demand we would announce that we will send the following by express (on receipt of the money, or C.O.D. and return charges): $6 50 for $5; 1 box, 12 pounds Medicated Food, $1; 2 bottles Spavin Cure, $2; 2 boxes Large Condition Powders, $1; 2 boxes Worm Powders, $1; 1 box Heave Powder, 50c, 1 box Colic Powder, 50c.; 1 box Hoof Ointment, 50c.—$6.50. J. H. Whitson & Son, 24th St., N. Y., says: "We have used Ellis's Spavin Cure in our stables for two years and have tried it on the following with perfect success: Splints, curbs, ring bones, bunches on the neck, swelled ankles, also quincy sore throat, and for genera stable liniment it is the best article we have ever used." For further particulars, free books, etc., write to

ELLIS SPAVIN CURE COMPANY, 40 Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.; or 276 Fourth Avenue, New York

ONE CENT SONGS.

310 The Five Cent Shave.	359 Old, and only in the Way.	401 Moon is out to-night, Love.
311 Hen Convention.	360 Six Feet of Earth.	402 Devil's In New Jersey.
312 Red, White and Blue.	361 Write a Letter to My Mother.	403 Rambler from Clare.
313 Old Oaken Bucket.	362 Yellow Rose of Texas.	404 Pretty Little Blue-Eyed
314 Little Sweetheart Come	365 We have Met, Loved and	405 Faded Flowers. [Stranger.
316 They all Do it. [and Kiss me	364 One Pound Two [Parted.	406 Dark-Eyed Sailor.
318 Wait Till the Moonlight falls on the Water.	366 Bummer's Hotel.	407 Rose of Killarney.
319 Linger not, Darling.	367 I'm Getting a Big Boy Now.	408 Cot in the Corner. [Gals.
322 Johnny's so Bashful.	368 I shall never be Happy	409 Boys, Keep Away from the
326 Dancing in the Sunlight.	369 Soldier's Farewell. [again.	411 Bonny Bunch of Roses.
329 Love Letters	370 Old Kitchen Floor.	412 Pat Roach at the Play.
331 The Tramp. [Recl.	371 Sweet Belle Mahone.	413 Doran's Ass.
332 Lamentation of Johnny	372 My Dear Savannah Home.	414 Banks of Claudy. [Saying.
333 Roll on, Silver Moon. [Job.	373 Billy Barlow.	415 What are the Wild Waves
334 When McGuinness Gets a	374 Wild Irish Boy.	416 Her Front Name is Hanner.
335 Give an Honest Irish Lad a Chance.	375 Twenty-Seven Cents.	417 Sweet Evelina.
336 Down among the Dasies.	376 Starry Night for a Ramble.	418 Behind the Scenes.
337 Down by the Old Mill Stream.	377 Locked Out after Nine.	419 Gospel Raft. [ingman Down.
338 Do not Heed Her Warning	378 While Poor Will's Song.	420 Don't Put the Poor Work-
339 Battle-Cry for Freedom.	379 Days When You'll Forget Me.	421 Cruiskeen Lawn.
340 Home Rule for Ireland.	382 You'll Miss me When I'm	422 I had but Fifty Cents.
341 Riding on the Elevated Railroad	381 Son of a Gamboller [Gone.	423 I'm Leaving Now the Old
342 When McCormic Rules the States.	382 Golden Stair.	424 Irish Molly O! [Folks.
343 Sweet Chiming Bells.	383 Emmett's Cuckoo Song	425 Ring My Mother Wore.
345 I Want to see the Cotton	384 American Boy. [every Day.	426 Blackbird.
346 Waltz with Me. [Fields.	385 You get More like your Dad	427 Little Cherry Blossom.
347 Meet Me by the Moonlight Alone.	386 Barney McCoy.	428 Whist! Whist! Whist!
348 Do They Miss Me at Home.	387 Razors in the Air.	429 A Violet from Mother's
349 Father and Slave.	388 Sallie Horner.	430 Nelly Ray. [Grave.
350 Happy be Thy Dreams.	389 Willie Reilly.	431 Maggie Darling Now Good-
351 Take It In [Song).	391 Old Sexton.	432 Rise it, Reilly. [Bye.
352 Stokes' Verdict (Jim Fisk	392 Pull Down the Blind.	433 Meeting of the Waters.
353 Lardy Da	393 Do they think of Me at home,	434 Wait for the Turn of the
354 Golden Wedding.	394 Tell me where my Eva's gone.	435 Old farm Gate. [Tide.
355 My Mother-in-Law.	395 Barbara Allan.	436 Oh, Fred, Tell them to Stop
356 What should make Thee sad my Darling.	396 Longshoremen's Strike.	437 McDonald's Return to Glen-
357 Dear Italian Girl.	397 Bonnie sweet Bessie, the Maid of Dundee.	438 Mantles so Green [coe.
358 Banks of Brandywine.	398 Bathing Song.	439 Uncle Tom's Lament.
	399 Carrie Lee.	440 Mary Ann I'll Tell your Ma.
	400 One White River to Cross.	441 Old Fashioned Homestead.
		442 Emmet's "Mountain Song."
		443 Old Fashioned Church the Hill.
		444 Handful of Turf.

We will send ten of the above Songs, your own selection, for 10 cents, 50 for 30 cents, 100 for 50 cents, 250 for $1.00 all post paid by mail. Remember, we will not send less than 10 these songs by mail. Order songs by the number in rotation. Valuable catalogue of song and agents' goods mailed free. Stamps taken.

JAMES LEE & CO., 517 LAGAUCHETIERE ST., MONTREAL, P.

Markdale monthly Cattle FAIR.

A regular Monthly Cattle Fair will be held in the Agricultural Grounds, Markdale, as follows:

—1 3—

SATURDAY ..... Nov. 3
Do. ..... Dec. 8

MARKDALE Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats!

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and delivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23, 1882. 80-ly

Health is Wealth!

Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment, a guaranteed specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Fits, Nervous Neuralgia, Headache, Nervous Prostration caused by the use of alcohol or tobacco, Wakefulness, Mental Depression, Softening of the Brain, resulting in Insanity and leading to misery, decay and death, Premature Old Age, Barrenness, Loss of Power in either sex, Involuntary losses and Spermatorrhœa, caused by over-exertion of the brain, self-abuse or over-indulgence. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser a written guarantee to refund the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by A. Turner & Co., ole authorized Agent for Markdale Ont. John C. West & Co. sole proprietor. Toronto, Ont.

ROBT. ASKIN,

MARKDALE,

has opened out a First-Class

UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,

And therefore has supplied a want long felt,

COFFINS,
CASKETS,
SHROUDS,
and all

FUNERAL FURNISHINGS

supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse

for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—

PICTURE FRAMING

Done on short notice.

ROBT. ASKIN.

ALEX KAY

BooT & ShoE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and Positively cures Piles. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by A. Turner & Co

AUCTION SALE

—OF—

Valuable Village Property

—IN THE—

VILLAGE OF HOLLAND CENTRE

—IN THE—

County of Grey.

There will be sold on Friday, the

Second Day of November,

1883, at One o'clock in the afternoon, on the premises, in the Village of Holland Centre, by virtue of a Power of Sale, contained in a certain mortgage, which will be produced at the Sale, the following property:—

Under mortgage from George Skene, village lot No. 25, on the west side of the Toronto and Sydenham Road, in the Village of Holland Centre, containing one fifth of an acre, more or less, being part of lot 31 in the 1st Range, south-west of the Toronto, and Sydenham Road, in the Township of Holland, in the County of Grey.

The following improvements are said to be on the premises: A frame dwelling with outbuildings.

Terms—One tenth of the purchase money to be paid down on the day of sale. For balance terms will be made known at the sale.

For further particulars apply to

JONES BROS. & MACKENZIE,
Solicitors, Masonic Hall, Toronto.
or to John Lyons, Esq., Markdale.

Toronto, Oct. 4th, 1883.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Wilson Benson

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.
DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

WILSON BENSON.

July 6, 1882.

THE BEST PLACE

TO GET

A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery.

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST,

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NTH.			GOING SOUTH
Read Down.				Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.			A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25		Toronto	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00		Cardwell Junc.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45		Orangeville...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44		Mount Forest..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15		Teeswater	5 00	2 45
11 50	8 30		Flesherton	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45		Markdale,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55		Owen Sound....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.			A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNicoll, Gen. Pass. Agt. — Edmund Wragge, General Manager

$500 Reward!

We will pay the above reward for any case of Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Constipation or Costiveness we cannot cure with West's Vegetable Liver Pills, when the directions are strictly complied with. They are purely Vegetable, and never fail to give satisfaction. Sugar Coated. Large Boxes, containing 30 Pills, 25 cts. For sale by all Druggists. Beware of counterfeits and immitations. The genuine manufactured only by JOHN C. WEST & CO., "The Pill Makers," 81 & 83 King St. East, Toronto, Ont. Free trial package sent by mail prepaid on receipt of a 3 cent stamp. For sale at Turner & Co. Drug Store.

MISCELLANEOUS.

When is butter like Irish babies. Answer given next week.

An unhappy marriage is like an electric machine—it makes one dance, but you can't let go.—Ex.

Quick, Now.—You can have either the weekly Mail or Globe with the Standard to the end of 1884 for $2, Cash. Be alive and secure the balance of the year free which is worth 50 cents.

The average girl with a big hat loaded with flowers and feathers seems all head till you talk to her. —Ex.

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate, It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

Some unknown person attempted to break into the editor's house recently, but discovered his mistake and escaped before the editor could rob him.—Friendship Register.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Bubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

Look out for bogus Canada 25 cent pieces. They are thicker and lighter than the genuine, and have a rather brighter lustre. In all other respects they are well calculated to deceive.

Ram lambs for sale.—A choice lot of South Down grade ram lambs for sale at H D Irwin's and Thos. Irwin's a short distance East of Markdale.

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

One of the best agricultural monthlies is the Farmer's Advocate. Its editorials are well written, and its selections wisely chosen. The various departments of interest to the farmers are filled with interesting and valuable matter. It is edited by men of practical experiance, and not mere theorists. $1 per annum. Orders taken at the Standard Office.

The general manager of the Canadian Pacific railway states that the through line will be completed in October, 1885. Nine thousand men will be at work on the Lake Superior end of the line all winter.

If you wish to subscribe for the Globe, Mail, Star, Farmer's Advocate or Montreal Witness or renew your subscription for any of the above papers hand in your name and subscription to this office.

True merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increased sales, as a prominent Druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits;" It is the grand specific for diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys, 25. 000 bottles have been sold during the last three months. For sale by A. Turner & Co. Markdale.

A GENERAL STAMPEDE.

Never was such a rush made for any Drug Store as is now at A. Turner & Co's for a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. All persons affected with Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Severe Coughs or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, can get a Trial Bottle of this great remedy free, by calling at above Drug Store.

"A baby," says the New York Journal, "is the oasis of married life." This does away with the popular notion that an oasis is a quiet place.

TRUE TO HER TRUST.

Too much cannot be said of the ever faithful wife and mother, constantly watching and caring for her dear ones, never neglecting a single duty in their behalf. When they are assailed by disease, and the system should have a thorough cleaning, the stomach and bowels regulated, blood purified, a malarial poison exterminated, she must know that Electric Bitters are the only sure remedy. They are the best and purest medicine in the world and only cost fifty cents. Sold by A. Turner.

Some admiring poet said of his best girl, "Upon her face a thousand dimples smile for me." Which only adds more emphasis to the adage "Love is blind." How like the mischief a girl would look with a thousand dimples on her face. The poet must have meant freckles.—New Haven Register.

MILLIONS GIVEN AWAY.

Millions of bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, have been given away as Trial Bottles of the large size. This enormous outlay would be disastrous to the proprietors, were it not for the rare merits possessed by the wonderful medicine. Call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle free, and try for yourself. It never fails to cure,

MARKDALE PLANING, SASH, DOOR AND FURNITU FACTORY.

Lumber Planed or Matched While Waitl

Sash, Doors, and Mouldings always on hand or made Order. All kinds of lumber, Lath and Shingles kep stock. Furniture of all descriptions to be seen at Warerooms. Lumber and cordwood will be taken in change for Furniture.

George Grant & Co.,
Proprietors.

Robt. S. Rae,

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

—AT—

Bulmers Photograph Gallery FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which I am not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTO

CALCINED PLASTER,

—OR—

Plaster Paris,

One car of Nova Scotia, all best and cheapest in the market.

Machine Oils and Paint

OILS AT CLOSE PRICES.

H. PARKER'S

Drugstore - DURHAM.

THOS. MATHEWS Harness Establishment MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY IN CONNECTION.

Agents 1884 Wanted

READ THIS.

THE GREAT DOLLAR PAPER,

The Weekly Globe

FROM NOW TO END OF 1884

ONLY ONE—$1.00—DOLLAR.

THE * DAILY * GLOBE

THE GREAT CANADIAN PAPER.

Has the most extensive and influential circulation in British America, is noted for its extensive Cable and Telegraphic News, and is the great authority upon Commercial and Financial Matters throughout the Dominion.

SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year, ... $7.00 | Half Year, ... $3.50
Quarter Year, ... $1.75.

In order to increase our already large list of yearly subscribers to The Weekly Globe, we make the following liberal and magnificent offer to every reader of this advertisement who wishes to take advantage of it at once.

For $3.50 we will send to any address in Canada or the U. S.,

THE WEEKLY GLOBE

from now to end of December, 1884, and in addition, A HANDSOME NICKEL OPEN-FACED STEM-WINDING WATCH.

The Watch is of convenient size; it is neat in appearance; it is a stem-winder, consequently requires no key; it is dust-proof, and a good time-keeper.

The above price includes postage upon Watch to any address in Canada or the United States. This offer only holds good until January 20th, 1884. We will start shipping watches on October 15th. Remittances should be sent at once, so as to enable us to procure necessary supply and fill orders with as little delay as possible. Address,

THE GLOBE PRINTING CO, (Limited),
TORONTO.

The Foremost Journal in the Dominion.

The Great Dollar Paper.

VOL. 4.--N

The Markdale S

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY THURSDAY E

At Markdale Ontari

$1 Per An

IN ADVANCE.

C. W. RUTLED

EDITOR &

SAMUEL WARD

WELL DIGGER AND DR

orders promptly attend

dence—Snider's Hill, Owen Sou

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C

Physician and Surgeon,

Graduate of University, Vict.

" " New Y

Hon. Graduate, of the same,

" " Ayleth Med

" " Opthalmic Ho

Member Coll. Physicians & Sur

J. P. MARSHALL

DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TO

of Dentistry,

Hotel, Markdale, on

nesday of each mo

Hotel. Flesherton, the third Wednesday in ea

tice of his profession.

January 9th, 1883.

Legal.

Frost & Fro

BARRISTERS, AND AT

Law, Solicitors in Cha ancers, &c., Owen Sound, ha

Flesherton, Office open ever heretofore.

Alfred Frost, J. W.

County Crown Attorney.

J. MASSON

BARRISTER, MASTER A

in Chancery, Notary Pu

cer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARMS F

Offices—Owen Sound, in

Poulett St.; Branch office in

McFarland's Store, on Frida

every week.

Creaser & Morr

BARRI... ...S, SOLICITO

Bances, &c. &c.

Offices in Owen Sound, over W. F. Wolf's Store and MARKDAL

Over W. J. McFarland's Sto and Friday of each week.

Funds to lend on reaso

John Creasor, Q.C.

Markdale, March 15, 1882.

Alexander Br

ISSUER of Marriage Lic

Life Insurance Agent.

R. R. &c. Conveyance

Auctioneer for the County of Merchants, and Land Sales tended to and charges made

Priceville, Sept. 17, 1883.

Wm. Brow

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE

Commissioner in B. R.

Conveyancing in all its br ttended to and carefully exe

N. B.—Money to Lend on curity.

W. G. RICHA

BUILDER, CONTRACT

TECT.—Residence on M

dale.

Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883

MISS. GR

DRESS AND

ROOMS

DUNLOP'S BUILDING

All kinds of ladies wearin

made in the very la

Wedding Suits a Sp

William McLeo

BOOT AND SHOEMAK

MARKDALE.

Orders promptly atte work a specialty. All our Terms strictly cash. Reme opposite Revere Hotel.

JOHN N

MARKDA

GENER'L BLA

HORSE SH

A SPECIAL

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 9. MARKDALE, ONT., NOV.8 . 1883. No. 165.

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY THURSDAY EVENING,

At Markdale Ontario.

$1 Per Anumn

IN ADVANCE.

C. W. RUTLEDGE.

EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

S. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O. Physician and Surgeon, Priceville, Graduate of University, Vict. College. " New York, and " Graduate, of the same, " Ayleth Medical Institute. " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y. Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.

DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the last Wednesday of each month and at Masbew's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the last Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.

January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.

ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B. County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS. CONVEYANCES, &c. &c.

OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in

MARKDALE;

Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.

Funds to lend on reasonable terms.

JOHN CREASOR, Q.C. DUNCAN MORISON

Markdale, March 15, 1883. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Marchants, and Land Sales Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.

Priceville, Sept. 17, 1883. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c. Commissioner in B. R. &c.

Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.

N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

MISS. GREEN.

DRESS AND MANTLE ROOMS.

DUNLOP'S BUILDING MARKDALE.

All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.

Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

William McLeod,

BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,

MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel. 159-3m

JOHN NOBLE,

MARKDALE,

GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING

A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,

MARKDALE.

M. BYRNES

PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large ommercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE

(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)

CHATSWORTH, Ont.

C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guarauteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.

PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's

THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,

CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of

BRICK AND STONE WORK,

Plain Ornamental Plastering.

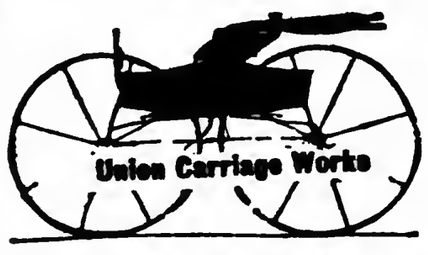
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.

Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

GEORGE WILSON,

Wholesale and Retail



{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.

FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.

Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from

FIRST CLASS MATERIAL

In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with

English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs

will receive prompt attention.

All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time consistent with good workmanship.

GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.

Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside

D. J. SHANAHAN,

Proprietor

Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER,

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

THE FATE OF A BRIDE.

A Young Married Woman Poisoned by Strychnine.

Suspicious Circumstances Revealed.

EVIDENCE GIVEN AT THE CORONER'S INQUEST, STATEMENT OF THE BRIDEGROOM.

FLESHERTON, Nov. 2.—The sudden death of a young bride, only a few weeks married, at Eugenia, near here, under most suspicious circumstances, has caused a flutter of excitement in the township of Artemesia, seldom if ever equalled belore. As the mystery which shrouded her death has not yet been satisfactorily explained, a coroner and twelve jurymen who attempted to solve it, there is considerable speculation as to the real cause of death, and though several theories as to how the young woman met her death are advanced, they all tend to show that she was poisoned by strychnine, administed by some party or parties. Rosanna Leppard was living with her father near Eugenia, about two miles from this place, four years ago, when she ran away from home. She was then 20 years of age. Nothing more was seen of her till two years later, when she returned with one John Rodgers, who represented himself to be her husband. This mariage her people supposed was bogus one, for they had not lived there many months when they left the place together, and in a few months she returned alone.

MARRIED TO A BLIND MAN.

Rosanna remained with her father, James Leppard, till May last, when she went to Cook Tait's home, near Eugenia, where she remained a month. She then returned to her home, and Cook Tait acquainted her father of their desire to be married. Before the matrimonial arrangements were completed, however, it was agreed that the girl's life should be insured for the benefit of the intended bridegroom. Some time after this Cook Tait and Rosanna went to Meaford, where she was examined by a doctor, and policies for a $3,000 endowment in a Toronto mutual concern were given to the parties by Mr. Purdy, of Eugenia. The girl soon after accompanied Tsit to Toronto, where he says they were married by Rev. Mr. Macdonnell. The couple then went to Freemont, Michigan, to visit Tait's brother, and after remaining there some time returned to Flesherton on the 23rd October last. She went to live with her father again and to live with his brother. Now come the strange part of the story. She appeared to be in good health up to Monday last, when she was seized with vomiting, a pain in the stomach, and other symptoms of poisoning. Cook Tait came to see her on Monday evening, and took tea with his wife and her mother. She walked a part of the way home with him in the evening. She then went to bed and during the night her mother was awakened by "a loud yell," as she expressed it, and hurrying to her daughter found her in her bed

IN THE AGONIES OF DEATH.

She was unable to speak, and had several fits. She seemed to know she was dying, for when her mother applied hot flannels to her body and asked her if she felt better, she only replied, "Let me pray." Her sudden death caused suspicion among the neighbors and it was whispered about that her friends perhaps knew more about it than they cared to tell. A resident magistrate, however, communicated the facts of the case to Mr, Frost, County Crown Attorney, at Owen Sound, who instructed Dr. Christoe to hold an inquest, which took place on Friday last, and some interesting facts were elicited which tend to throw a little light on the mystery. The testimony of the witnesses forms a strong chain of circumstantial evidence, which, it would seem, if a little more light is thrown on the case, will implicate one or more parties in connection with the young woman's death. It was shown that Cook Tait had in his possession which he told one of the witnesses he had purchased in the States, and that he had got it for several purposes. In his evidence before the Coroner's jury Cook Tait was very reticent and cautious. He evaded giving a direct answer to many of the questions asked him and pleaded as an excuse that his memory failed him. He said he had never given deceased any medicine and did not know what caused her death. Her life was insured for his benefit, and in the event of her death the money was to be paid to him. The policy was made out in her maiden name as they were not married till some time after it was issued. He knew before he married the deceased that she was pregnant. She had a consultation with a doctor who had told her that she was in a delicate condition. He had heard her complain of sickness a week before she died, but her mother said she only had a cold. Dr. Sproule made a post mortem examination of the body, and reported to the jury that he had found all the parts in a healthy condition. From the symptoms of the case he supposed that deceased had come to her death by poisoning, and the kind of poison that suggested itself to his mind was strychnine. He had preserved the stomach intact in order to have an analysis made.

A BOTTLE OF STRYCHNINE,

A MYSTERIOUS BLACK EYE.

Mrs. Leppard, the mother of the girl, stated in her evidence that her daughter's limbs were quite stiff when she was dying, but she struggled a little and threw the clothes off her on the bed where she was lying. There was nobody in the house at the time but her other daughters and she did not know the cause of her death. Mrs. Leppard had a black eye when she appeared at the inquest to be examined. She stated that she had got the black eye while attending deceased. While she was in one of the fits she had thrown her arms about and struck her. R. Hannah stated in his evidence that he had seen deceased with Cook Tait after they returned from the United States, at Munshaw's hotel, where he gave her some wine in a glass. He saw him order it and hand it to her, but he did not see him put anything in it.

WAS DECEAPED POISONED?

The evidence tends to prove that the unfortunate young woman was poisoned, but by whom, and for what purpose, it cannot yet besaid. Dr. Christoe has written to the Attorney General asking permission to send the stomach of deceased to Toronto to have an analysis of it made. In the meantime, the inquest has been adjourned for two weeks to hear the result of the analysis before giving a verdict. The reputation of the Leppord family is not a very enviable one. They live near Eugenia in a miserable little dwelling, and one of the jurymen is authority for the statement that a dozen of them live in room fifteen feet square in a miserable condition. No arrests have been made in connection with the affair.

Artemesia Council.

Council met in town hall, Aug. 6th 1883; members all present; minutes of July session read.

Letters from the following parties presented and read:—Clerk of Mclancthon, re drains; Reeve of Melancthon, re drains; A. Webster, Esq.; re road job on 8th con.; Creasor and Platt, claiming $100 damages to one Malone; Wm. Hogg, asking to have Valley road completed.

Accounts as follows presented and payment ordered for the same, viz:—J. H. Campaigne, repairing scraper, 40cts.; A. R. Fawcett, printing voters' list and advertising, $55.30; W. Wright, wood for town hall $10.12; J. Rutherford, stationery $10.95; John McArthur, letting and inspecting bridge at Priceville $14.48.

By-laws levying the different rates for the year were introduced and passed in the usual way.

By-law to levy sums on lands benefitted by drains from Melancthon was introduced and passed.

The commissioners for the different wards were paid $10 each for expending appropriations; Michael Ryan was paid $40 for road job on 8th con.; J. P. Sparling was paid $30 for repairing bridge on 18th con, ward No. 2; the Reeve was authorized to employ men by the day to repair hills on gravel roads; the sum of $20 was granted to Artemesia Agricultural Society.

The Reeve was requested to correspond with the council of Euphrasia in regard to the completion of Valley road.

Council adjourned.

September 3rd, 1883.

Council met to-day in Town Hall, Flesherton.

Members all present.

Minutes of August meeting read.

A letter from Robert Patton re culvert on town line Proton, was read.

The following accounts were ordered to be paid: M. Riley, repairing scrapers, $1.50; Jas. Watson, ditto, $1.25; Wm. Watson, burying Mrs. Beeton, an indigent, $6.50; Jerry Taylor for culvert on back line $5.00; W. Richardson, stationary and telegrams, $1.57; Wm. Smith, work on gravel roads $18.75; S. Kingston, dito, $18.75.

By-laws to appoint collectors for current year, appointing S. J. Coleman, John Hazard, John Higginbothon, and J. B. Sloan collectors, was passed.

The following was paid for road jobs in word No. 3: Henry Fenwick, $15; David McMullen, $2.50; Geo. Allen, $10.20; James Chard, $10; Mr. Elliott was paid $5. for letting and inspecting bridge on town line, Euphrasia and Artemesia; Thomas Wanchob, was paid $50 for bridge in Tyrone; Thorp Wright, $5, for letting and inspecting the same; C. Boyce was paid $90, for building bridge over saugeen at Wallace's Church; W. H. Hemphill, $20, for repairing bridge near Alfred Ward's W. T. McKee and Thorp Wright $5 each for letting and inspecting work on the same.

The following road jobs in ward No. 2 were paid: Arthur Johnston, $1.65; David Johnston, $7; John McGee, $7; Messrs. Blaine & Wyville were paid $103, job on bridge on town line Artemesia and Euphrasia. Council adjourned.

October 1st, 1883.

Council met to-day; members all present; minutes of last meeting read and approved.

A letter was received from John Nichol, re school money S. S. No. 12. The following accounts were ordered to be paid: W. J. Bellamy, treasurer's salary $37.50; A. R. Fawcett, printing and advertising $16.50; R. J. Sproule, postage to date $2.36.

The Clerk was instructed to give to the trustees of U.S.S. No. 12, a statement of school moneys claimed by trustees, from 1881. Mrs. Duckett was granted $1 per week as per remuneration for keep of Wiggins' child deserted by its parents without assuming any responsibility in the matter. John McArthur was paid $5 for leting and inspecting work on Durham Road bridge in Priceville. S. Pedlar, jr., was paid $1 for repairing bridge on 25th side road.

Council adjourned.

W. J. BELLAMY, Clerk.

New Railway Ticket.

A new kind of railway ticket is coming to the front. It is best explained by taking the Grand Trunk for example. That road goes to work and it prints a book of tickets containing 1000, or 500, or 100 or 50 tickets, 20 on a page, and each ticket good for one mile. These little tickets are smaller than postage stamps, 20 on a sheet and perforated. You can buy two, twenty or a thousand of them and pay for them at a fixed rate, and the company on its part is bound to accept one of them for every mile you travel. You will not require to tell the ticket seller where you want to go; you will say give me a hundred miles, or twenty, or a thousand miles, and get on board give the conductor enough of the little squares to carry you to your destination. There will be then no such thing as lay-over tickets, or trouble in getting tickets changed or loss through tickets not used-these tickets will be as good as money and always current. The road on its part will be duly protected from scalpers and the like. The new system has received the endorsement of the better class of passenger agents, of travellers, and has been adopted on several western roads already.

Railway Appointments Gazetted.

A circular has been issued to the officers and employes of the Ontario & Quebec railway (Toronto, Grey and Bruce division) and Credit Valley railway by Mr. Whyte, general superintendent, to the following effect: "With a view to more economical and efficient working of the joint traffic of the Credit Valley railway and the Toronto, Grey and Bruce division of the Ontario & Quebec railway, I have to announce the following appointments: E. Tiffin, general freight agent; A. McNicol, general passenger agent D. L. Hertzberg, engineer; D. Preston, mechanical superintendent of both systems; J. W. Leonard, formerly general passenger agent Credit Valley railway, master of transportation Credit Valley railway; James Wilson, formerly superintendent of trausport T., G. & B. railway, master of transportation, T., G. & B. division. The two last named gentlemen will have charge of all matters relating to transport, also of train and station staffs. All correspondence relating to the different departements should be addressed to the gentleman named above as the head of such department. The appointments went into effect last week.

The offices of the Credit Valley Railway have been removed to the Toronto, Grey, & Bruce Railway office, corner of Bay and Front streets. The C. V. R. ticket office will remain at the old stand on King-street until the U. E. Club building is ready to be occupied.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

Wisdom in the Well.

There was an old man in Birtleby-town,
Who chose to live down in a well:
But why he lived there, in Birtleby-town,
Was never a man could tell.

And the reason we had never know to this day,
Had not the old gentleman told:
He said he was cool when the weather was hot,
And warm when the weather was cold.

A bucket he had to draw himself up,
A bucket to let himself down:
So, perhaps, he was either the silliest man,
Or the wisest, in Birtleby-town,

—Phil O'Gales, in St. Nicholas for November.

A Thanksgiving Dinner That Flew Away.

"Aunt, what makes you keep that gander, year after year?" said I, one evening, as we were sitting on the lawn before the door. "Is it because he is a kind of a watch-dog, and keeps troublesome people away?"

"No, child, no; I do not wish to keep most people away, not well-behaved people, nor to distress nor annoy any one. The fact is, there is a story about that gander that I do not like to speak of to every one—something that makes me feel tender toward him; so that if he needs a whipping, I would rather do it. He knows something that no one else knows. You have heard me speak of Nathaniel, my oldest boy?"

"Yes."

"That is his picture in my room, you know. I loved Nathaniel—you cannot think how much I loved Nathaniel. It was on my account that he went away.

"The farm did not produce enough for us all. One year—that was ten years ago—we were sued for our taxes.

"'Nathaniel,' said I, 'I will take board-ers.'

"Then he looked up to me and said (Oh, how noble and handsome he appeared to me!):

"'Mother, I will go to sea.'

"'Where?' asked I, in surprise.

"'In a coaster.'

"'You and John can manage the place,' he continued. 'One of the vessels sails next week—Uncle Aaron's: he offers to take me.'

"It seemed best, and he made preparations to go

"The spring before, Skipper Ben—you have met Skipper Ben—had given me some goose eggs; he had brought them from Canada, and said they were wild-goose eggs.

"I set them under hens. In four weeks I had three goslings, and one of those goslings is that gander.

"Skipper Ben came over to see me, the day before Nathaniel was to sail. Aaron came with him.

"I said to Aaron:

"'What can I give to Nathaniel to carry to sea with him to make him think of home? Cakes, preserves, apples? I have't got much; I have done all I can for him, poor boy.'

"Brother looked at me curiously, and said:

"'Give him one of those wild geese, and we will have it on shipboard and will have it for Thanksgiving dinner.'

"What brother Aaron said pleased me. The young gander was a noble bird, the handsomest of the lot; and I resolved to keep the geese to kill for my own use and to give him to Nathaniel.

"The next morning—it was late in September—I took leave of Nathaniel. I tried to be calm and cheerful and hopeful. I watched him as he went down the walk with the gander struggling under his arms. A stranger would have laughed, but I did not feel like laughing; although the boys who went coasting were usually gone but a few months and came home hardy and happy.

"I saw him go over the hill. On the top he stopped and held up the gander. He disappeared; yes, my own Nathaniel disappeared. I think of him now as one who disappeared.

"November came—it was a terrible month on the coast that year. Storm followed storm; the seafaring people talked constantly of wrecks and losses. I could not sleep on the nights of those high winds. I used to lie awake thinking all over the happy hours I had lived with Nathaniel.

"Thanksgiving week came.

"It was full of an Indian-summer brightness after the long storms. The nights were misty, bright, and calm.

"I could sleep on those nights.

"One morning, I thought I heard a strange sound in the woodland pasture. It was like a wild goose. I listened; it was repeated. I was lying in bed. I started up. I thought I had been dreaming.

"On the night before Thanksgiving I went to bed early, being very tired. The moon was full; the air was calm and still. I was thinking of Nathaniel, and I wondered if he would indeed have the gander for his Thanksgiving dinner; if it would be cooked as well as I would have cooked it, and if he would think of me that day.

"I was going to sleep, when suddenly I heard a sound that made me start up and catch my breath.

"'Honk!'

"I thought it was a dream followed by a noise in the stock.

"'Honk! Honk!'

"There it was again, in the yard. I was entirely awake and in my senses.

"I heard the geese cackle.

"'Honk! honk! honk!'

"I got out of bed and lifted the curtain. It was almost as light as day. Instead of two geese there were three. Had one of the neighbor's geese stolen away?

"I should have thought so, and should not have felt disturbed, but for the reason that none of the neighbors' geese had that peculiar call—that horn like tone that I had noticed in mine.

"I went out of the door.

"The third goose looked like the very gander I had given Nathaniel. Could it be?

"I did not sleep. I rose early and went to the crib for some corn.

"It was a gander—a 'wild' gander—that had come in the night. He seemed to know me.

"I trembled all over as though I had seen a ghost. I was so faint that I sat down on the meal-chest.

"As I was in that place, a bill pecked against the door. The door opened. The strange gander came hobbling over the crib-stone and went to the corn-bin. He stopped there, looked at me, and gave a sort of glad "honk," as though he knew me and was glad to see me.

"I was certain that he was the gander I had raised, and that Nathaniel had lifted into the air when he gave me his last recognition from the top of the hill.

"It overcame me. It was Thanksgiving. The church bell would soon be ringing as on Sunday. And here was Nathaniel's Thanksgiving dinner; and Brother Aaron's—had it flown away? Where was the vessel?

"Years have passed—ten. You know I waited and waited for my boy to come back. December grew dark with its rainy seas; the snow fell; May lighted up the hills, but the vessel never came back. Nathaniel—my Nathaniel—never returned.

"That gander knows something he could tell me if he could talk. Birds have memories. He remembered the corn-crib—he remembered something else. I wish he could talk, poor bird! I wish he could talk. I will never sell him, nor kill him, nor have him abused. He knows!"—Hezekiah Butterworth, in November St. Nicholas.

How a Mouse Built a House.

A few years ago a rich man built a great schoolhouse for girls. He built it only for girls, so their brothers had to stay at home, or go to one of the great schools for boys. But the mice did not care whether they were invited or not, and came in families to the warm, cozy rooms that were built expressly for the girls. They even disputed the ownership with the rightful occupants; and one young lady spent the first night there in deciding which should stay in the room, she or the mice.

One mouse was in need of a house. She was very presevering and smart, and had a good deal of taste, too, and she could not be satisfied with a house made of common materials. She watched her chance when the young lady was away reciting her lessons, and crept carefully into her room, and up to her closet shelf; and there she found what was better for her than a whole forest of blackwalnut, or a quarry of marble. It was the school girl's Sunday hat—a very palace for Mrs. Mouse. It was winter time, and the velvet hat had a lining of soft silk, and trimmings of beautiful soft feathers. You can imagine the joy with which mother saw this wealth of delicate building stuffs. She went quietly to work to literally turn the hat outside in, for with her little white teeth she bit off pieces of feather and bits of velvet, until her house was entirely plain without, but lined and relined within with these tempting furnishings. Like your mother, little child, she was not working for her own comfort, but when her beautiful house was done she tucked into it her six dear little mice, and hoped to bring them up safely in the luxury of feathers and velvets.

When next Sunday came, the young lady went to her wardrobe for her hat, and found, instead, the house that mother mouse had built.—Youth's Helper.

Lazy People.

Lazy people are more to be pitied than condemned. I take it that laziness is a disease, an incurable disease, I may say, and the person cursed with it might as well put himself down on the invalid list with a come-to stay resignation. A constitutionally lazy man is worse than a periodical drunkard, for the latter is at times a useful citizen, while the former never is. He may hold a position, but he does it through charity or influence, but never by ability, and all his surroundings, from his clothes to his desk, or his store, are disagreeable evidences of his weakness. A lazy woman is even worse than a lazy man, for, somehow or other, she is expected to be neat and clean and industrious under all circumstances. A lazy woman's home can be told at a glance by any person on the street. The door-yard is weedy, the fence is dingy and broken down, the windows are dirty, and on the inside—well, the Lord needs a full supply of pity to meet the demand necessary for the husband of such a woman. I have been in their house, slept in their beds, eaten at their tables, and am still alive, thanks to a good constitution. By a wise provision of natural selection, a lazy man seldom marries a lazy woman and vice versa. If it were not for this, there is no telling what the result would be in some cases.

Disappearance of a Lake.

Red Fish Lake above Sawtooth City on the summit of the Sawtooth range of mountains, in the Wood River region, Idaho, has dropped through the bottom. The lake had an area of several miles, and was many fathoms in depth. It was on the summit of one of the peaks of the range, some 11,000 feet elevation above the sea, and surrounded by heavy timber, which rendered it a delightful place of resort in summer for camping, fishing, and boating parties. The lake has been there since the white man has known the country, but lately—the day of the occurrence is not known—the bottom fell out. The country formation is granite and limestone, and an immense fissure has opened, whether caused by separation or settling of the earth's surface or from volcanic action is not known. At present the bed of the lake is dry, and presents the appearance of a deep gorge or valley on the summit of the mountains. This lake has always contained millions of red fish, and been a favorite resort for bear, deer, and other game. Where the fish went to is as much a mystery as where the water went.—Hailey Times.

Memory.

A man's memory is like his stomach. To do its best work it must have good treatment. It must neither be neglected nor overloaded. It can easily be so abused by neglect, or by irregular and unsystematic employment, as to become chiefly a cause of annoyance and discomfort; or, again, it can be so overworked and heavily taxed that it becomes practically the chief organ or agent of the entire system, every other portion dwindling in comparison. The latter course is the great danger of those who value the help of a tenacious memory.

Both memory and stomach are valuable, not in proportion to the burdens they can carry, but in proportion to their training for their part in the work of the system as a whole; and either of them is made effective as much by what is kept from it as by what is packed into it.

Why is a leaky tub like a poor rule? Because it doesn't hold good.

FARMER'S CORNER.

Polled Cattle.

There was a fine exhibition of Polled Angus cattle at the show of the New York State Society this year at Rochester. In previous years, the Red Polled Norfolks and Suffolks have been exhibited. The former are essentially a beef-breed, while the latter combines milk and flesh. Within a few years past, the Angus, which are a black, Scottish breed, occasionally marked with white, have been introduced upon the plains with most excellent results. As we have before stated, the grade animals are almost uniformly hornless, and of a tractability and docility which surprises the cow-boys. A few lots of steers, which have come to market, delight the drovers and butchers by keeping up in weight. They are less nervous, less given to bullying, and can hardly do one another any harm if they wish to. The shrinkage of beef is due largely to the horns, which are uncomfortable to the wearers in crowded cars, dangerous to drivers, and to the other animals carried. It is bad enough for fat steers to be so crowded and jammed for a journey across the Continent in narrow cars, but if they are not crowded, so they can hardly move, they would soon use their liberty to punish their neighbors for being in their way. The Polled cattle pack closely, travel quietly, and shrink but little.

Bee Notes for November.

If the bees are to remain on their summer stands, either in chaff hives or in packing, they need but little attention this month, or until next April. Do not let the entrance become closed with ice or snow. If the swarms are to be wintered in the cellar or bee-house, they should be carried in early this month, before severe weather comes. The bees should be disturbed as little as possible while they are carried in-doors. Leave the entrance of the cellar open, and the covers off the hives. We prefer to place a piece of carpet or other heavy material over the hives, that will retain heat, but allow the free passage of moisture. Once in a dark and well-ventilated cellar that maintains a uniform temperature of from thirty-eight to forty-eight degrees Fahrenheit, the bees will need no further care until April. If they remain quiet in the cellar, we may know that all is right: but if they become restless and loud buzzing is heard, and the hives are soiled about the entrance, they should be allowed a flight the first warm, pleasant day. It is better to arrange the cellar for sub-earth ventilation and avoid removing the bees to the open air for a flight. If they are carried out, they should be returned at night-fall, where they will remain quiet for the winter.

HONEY—MARKETING.

The autumn is a leisure time in the apiary, and affords an opportunity to look after the honey. In October and November the extracted honey should be placed in kegs, bottles, cans or pails, ready for market. The tin pails now used and sold with the honey are cheap and satisfactory. By use of these vessels and elegant labels, now in the market, it is easy to sell all the extracted honey that is made. The label should give the kind of honey, and tell how to reliquify it when candied. It is well to state that granulation is the best test of purity, and causes no damage if the honey is not overheated in reliquifying it. The name of the apiarist should not be omitted from the label—if he is not in bad repute.

In selling comb honey the sections should be cleaned of all propolis, or bee glue, and if the market will warrant it, each section should be glassed.

STIMULATING THE HOME MARKET.

Bee-keepers are often unwise in not working up their home markets. Very few groceries have honey to sell for any considerable part of the year, and when they do have it, it is rarely arranged in an attractive manner or in a conspicuous place. If all grocers exhibited honey in a neat case, which would keep flies and fingers out, we should find that, overstocking the market, is well-nigh impossible.

Weeding out and Sheltering Stock.

To the stockman the idea of weeding out stock is nothing new, since he makes an annual practice of doing it. The successful stock-grower is aware that it pays to weed out the poor and worthless stock and give that which remains improved feed and better care. He does not sell the best; he keeps that to breed from, or to sell at the season of the year when it commands the highest market price. The winter feeding of scrub stock rarely pays.

Another important matter is shelter. Sheds should be built at once, so that the stock can have their "Thanksgiving" as well as we, who take good care to shelter ourselves from the sleet and rain storms so common in this latitude. A timber-range is not shelter enough. Whoever depends upon leafless trees for shelter for his stock will lose fully one year's growth out of three. His cattle will be no larger at three years old than those of his more humane neighbors at two. Temporary sheds answer a good purpose. They can be built on the south side of a high plank fence and covered with rough planks, straw, coarse grass, corn stalks, or any other material that will turn off or shed the rain. Open sheds that are of a temporary character should be much larger than permenent, well-built ones. In the latter, cattle can be tied to stanchions, and thus be packed closer than they would arrange themselves in an open shed.

He Looked Honest.

The black man has a growing confidence in the general integrity of his white brother, which it is pleasant to contemplate. This is well illustrated by an incident which took place in Tennessee the other day.

A gentleman went into a little store, and remarking that he wanted ten cents' worth of tobacco, handed the colored proprietor a twenty dollar gold piece.

"Ain't yer got nothin' smaller den dis?"

"Nothing smaller."

"All right, boss," throwing the twenty dollars into the drawer; "I'll let yer take de terbacker, bein's as yer look sorter honest an' yer kin drap in some time when yer's passin' an' can git yoer nineteen dollars an' ninety cents."

The annual yield of the mussel-fishery on all the French coasts is said to be 1,750,000 bushels.

"WITH GRATEFUL FEELINGS."

Dr. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—Your "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Purgative Pellets" have cured my daughter of Scrofulous Swellings and Open Sores about the Neck: and your "Favorite Prescription" has accomplished wonders in restoring to health my wife who had been bedfast for eight months from Female Weakness. I am, with grateful feelings, Yours truly, T. H. LONG, Galveston, Texas.

The horse prefers to dine at the table d'oat.

"Golden Medical Discovery" is warranted to cleanse the blood from all impurities, from whatever cause arising. For Scrofula, Sores of all kinds, Skin and Blood Diseases, its effects are marvelous. Thousands of Testimonials from all parts. Send stamp for pamphlet on Skin Diseases. Address WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N.Y.

A man breathes about thirteen times a minute, and uses three thousand cubic feet of air per hour.

"FAIR GIRL GRADUATES," whose sedentary lives increase those troubles peculiar to women, should use Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," which is an unfailing remedy. Sold by druggists.

One of the most historic buildings in Paris has disappeared forever. The last stone of the Tuileries has now been removed.

If you have a faded cloak or mantle make it new by using a package of the Triangle Dyes. All the popular colors. Always certain. 10c.

The man with the single English eye-glass looks as if he had a pain in his eye. And therefore presents a singular spectacle.

IMPORTATIONS OF PERCHERON-NORMAN HORSES.—More than 500 stallions are now annually being imported from France to the United States. The immense wealth they are adding to the nation will be better understood from the estimate that the first cross of a Percheron stallion with a native mare doubles the selling value of the colt when mature. The greatest importer of this breed is M. W. Dunham, of Wayne, Ill., who has imported this year 390; the next largest importers are the Dillons, of Normal, Ill., who have imported 33 this year.

How much more we might make of our family life and our friendships if every secret thought of love blossomed into a deed.

The use of Pills, Salts, Castor Oil, &c. and other nauseous, griping Cathartics is unnecessary, as a pleasant substitute is found in Dr. Carson's Bitters, which act as a Cathartic without griping or causing nausea. All druggists sell it. 50 cents a bottle.

Europeans, it appears, are never thoroughly acclimatised in Cochin China, and most white children born there die shortly after birth.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-st. West, Toronto, Canada

From MR. WILLIAM MAGRATH.

Erindale, Credit P. O., Jan. 8th, 1883.

MY DEAR SUTHERLAND: Some two months since I became so afflicted with Rheumatism of the neck and right shoulder as to render my right arm nearly powerless. I determined to try your "Rheumatine" and the result is that I am now free from pain, and enjoy the full use of my arm. My general health is also much improved by the use of the medicine. The first two bottles relieved me—the third bottle freed me from all pain

WM. MAGRATH

J. N. Sutherland, St. Catharines.

If a man is very ill and needs immediate attention, what kind of a physician do people send for?—Why, a nigh an I near doctor, of course!

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

A.P. '50

AGENTS,

You can easily earn $100 to $200 a month in any locality. No capital required. Enclose stamp for reply. Address E. A. SPARLING, Toronto, Ont.

ROOFING.—CHEAP, DURABLE, FIRE PROOF, easily put on composed of 3 plies Felt cemented together for Flat or steep roofs H. WILLIAMS, Manufacturer and dealer in Felt roofing materials, 4 Adelaide Street East Toronto.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS OF PREPARED LEATHER, Elastic, and Cheap. First prize at Provincial Exhibition, London. Testimonials on application. Satisfaction guaranteed. Address. J. DOAN & SON, Drayton, Ont.

195 ACRES—18 CLEARED; 10 FOR HAY; clay loam; no stone or rock; nearly level; well watered; large frame barn, with granary, log stable, and foreman's house, all nearly new; immediate possession; $2,300 cash: also 212 acres, 17½ cleared, 15 pasture; clay and black loam; situated on Mary Lake, Stephenson township, large new two-story frame house, 24 x 28 and 16 x 16; stone cellar 24 x 28; pantry, w.c., store-room, and woodshed; new frame stable, with loft, price of 407 acres, $5,000 cash, these prices if sold at once. CAPT. OPENSHAW, Port Sydney, Muskoka.

An Enterprising Firm.

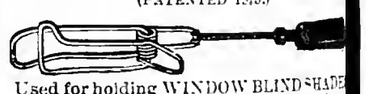
Among the many enterprising business men of Montreal few are more enterprising in their own way than the well-known firm of James Lee & Co., of 517 Lagauchetiere St., whose advertisment appears elsewhere. Their stock embraces a very large range of goods of all kinds, and the figure at which they are sold are something astonishing. A printing office for $1.25, such as will enable many a school boy to turn an honest penny by printing his friends' cards for them. A barometer and thermometer combined, for $1, which will be found invaluable to farmers and others; spy-glasses at the same price which will be found just the thing for tourists and travellers generally. The Family Record, for 25 cents, will recommend itself to all families as a useful and ornamental adjunct to the home pictures. The Harpsichordette, a new musical instrument, which is becoming very popular indeed, from the ease with which it can be learned, $1.50 to $2.50 according to size; these are among the latest offers of the firm. Then there is any number of songs—good songs, which have long since become popular—to be had at a cent each; while the "Gold Watch Stationery Package" is an attractive feature in the business, for the particulars of which we refer our readers to the advertisement. The firm is a thoroughly reliable one, and all their offers are bona fide, while the articles offered are in every case first class, and can be depended on to fill the bill in every particular.

Of all the actions of a man's life, his marriage least concerns other people; yet, of all actions of his life, it is most meddled with by other people.

Mrs. J. McPhee, Appin, writes:—During the last eight years I have used almost every medicine recommended for Biliousness, but found nothing equal to Carson's Bitters. If you suffer try it. Price 50 cents.

THE MUTUAL MARRIAGE ENDOWMENT Association of Ontario Head Office London, Ont. Issues certificates for $250 to $3,000 payable upon marriage. A safe investment for young people of either sex. Send for particulars. W. I. IMLACH, Secretary, Albion Block, London.

DO NOT ALLOW YOUR CHILDREN to grow up deformed or crippled, but call and examine our appliances for the treatment of Club Feet, and Diseases of the Spine, Hip, Knee and Ankle. Remember the world is progressing, and more can be done to-day than any former period. We also manufacture Artificial Limbs, Trusses, and appliances for the relief and cure of all kinds of deformity. Will show at Toronto, Guelph and London Exhibitions. AUTHORS & COX, 90 Church st., Toronto.



WANTED—STEADY EMPLOYMENT and good pay given to every man owning a sewing machine. Material sent and returned by mail. Send One Dollar with your application as a guarantee that the material we furnish will be returned when finished. FINDLAY & CO. Manufacturers, Detroit, Mich.

BEAVER S. S. LINE
WEEKLY BETWEEN
QUEBEC, MONTREAL, AND LIVERPOOL
CALLING AT
QUEENSTOWN AND BELFAST
For lowest rates and all particulars apply to
Sam. Osborne & Co., 40 Yonge street, Toronto.

THE LILY

is a perfect gem, equal to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most fastidious. Manufactured only by
THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.
78 YORK STREET, TORONTO.

WELLS' WINDOW SHADE CLASP
(PATENTED 1875.)

Used for holding WINDOW BLINDS SHADES without rollers, pins, or cords. Saves time, money and patience. Looks orderly and neat. Is durable and Cheap. Retailed by all dealers everywhere. Trade supplied wholesale by the manufacturers. The TORONTO INDUSTRIAL WORKS CO., 96 Church street, Toronto.

TINSMITHS' GOODS

TIN PLATE—Different Brands and Sizes.
TINNED SHEETS— do do
CANADA PLATE—Pen and other Brands.
INGOT TIN—Lamb and Flag and Straits.
GALVANIZED IRON—"Davies," "Avon," &c.
And STAMPED GOODS, CHEAP.
For Sale by COPLAND & McLAREN
MONTREAL.

Dominion Line of Steamships

Running in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec every Saturday during the summer months, and from Portland every alternate Thursday during the winter months. Sailing dates from Quebec:

Sarnia,	Oct. 20	Oregon,	Nov. 10
Montreal,	" 27	Dominion,	" 17
Ontario,	Nov. 3	Toronto,	" 24

Rates of passage: Cabin, Quebec to Liverpool, $50, $60, $65, $80; return, $90, $105, $115, $140, according to steamer and berth. Intermediate, $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and staterooms in steamers marked thus: * are amidships, where but little motion is felt, and no cattle or sheep are carried on them. For further particulars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway Agents, or local agents of the Company, or to
DAVID TORRANCE & CO.,
General Agents, Montreal.

RHEUMATINE

An Internal Remedy and a SURE CURE for all kinds of
RHEUMATIC COMPLAINTS!

If you are suffering from Kidney Complaints

NEWS IN A NUTSH

FIVE MINUTES SELECT RE

Summary of Foreign, Domestic,

Items—Pithy, Concise and P

Since the outbreak of trichinosis over 400 persons have been a the disease of whom eighteen hav

A Glasgow despatch says the ri
Orange riots at Coatbridge l been sentenced to two years, a active participator to nine month

It is reported that the Ol gave sounded Germany with r their asserting their claims to t throne. Bismarck gave them n

A Berlin despatch says:—It that Bismarck and Kalnoky hav establishment of the Kingdom o

An Alexandria despatch says earance of cholera has revive passengers on European vessels d without landing. The best ay the epidemic will not last l

Great disorders have occurred olonies in Siberia owing to c tion. A large number of exiles o escape, but were re-captured, who fled from the island of Sag

A Rome despatch states it is good authority that the Pope d the erection of the statue of nuel in the Pantheon, Victor E within the pale of the Church.

A quantity of dynamite was exploded in the office of the at Frankfort-on-the Main building was badly damaged many officials in it, but none

Unknown parties fired a ve cus tent during a performance
Ark. C. De Childsburg, was killed, and bullets pas sections of the audience.
escaped.

A war with France and seriously imperil British feared England will intervene not provoke a rupture with nations will not be closed are firmly seated in Tonquin.

The correspondent of Company has received inform thentic sources that the Black
Sontay, and the Chinese pos
If therefore the French att place, war with China will be

A Bombay despatch says ing besieged by the brother ruler. The British gunboat shelling the camp of the be has already lasted four day subjects have left town and the Philomeal.

Two very destructive cyclo
Paris, Ky., recently. The a house, killing four negroes caused destruction of prope of life. In Paris a great num were damaged, also throug the cyclone in the country.

A Cairo despatch says after two battles, entered ne found abandoned, many phet's men killed, and the
The Prophet's fate is unk cations between Khartoum army are now completely

London has had a startling explosions took place almost Two tunnels of underground one many people were injur great damage was caused.
are afloat. The English paper to attribute the explosion

It is believed in diplomatic German Government show ance at the massing of Ca ler that it will make an an explanation from St.
ing directly the meani to have been a preconcerted

A gentleman was attacke lunatic in the compartme
London suburban railway, insensible. The only oth lady, who was unable to
When the train arrived gave the alarm, and the l

The Dublin Freeman s that the Government proposes the wholesale people to Canada. Every offered boards of guardi unions to promote emigra house paupers will be sent.
have been made with shipp
the conveyance of emigrant Government is a party to which the Freeman's Jo Irishmen.

A cyclone passed over parishes, Waterproof, L houses on one plantation and four negroes were k house was lifted and carr the woods. The negro half around. Houses other plantations are re
Many negroes were house in Caratabula parish
She escaped, but her been found since.

The London Express intense excitement Irish almost in were due to the machinations of party of Ireland, who anti-Irish feeling
next to impossible, perfectly impartial
now. It is also rem sions occurred
Davitt was hall.

The Dublin Sta
Hochelaga [illegible]
Dublin for Holyhead horses. Sixty were aboard.
pilot arrived at
He says the
rel. There were including a number of
ers. A later despatch came in collision with hambra, bound
York, when twenty
Both vessels sank.
ora's crew and two drowned. The

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

FIVE MINUTES SELECT READING.

Summary of Foreign, Domestic, and War Items.—Pithy, Concise and Pointed.

[illegible] cases of trichinosis at Ermsla[illegible] persons have been attacked by [illegible] whom eighteen have died.

[illegible] despatch says the ringleader of [illegible] riots at Coatbridge last summer [illegible] sentenced to two years, and another [illegible] imprisonment to nine months.

[illegible] reported that the Orleans Princes [illegible] Germany with reference to [illegible] asserting their claims to the French [illegible] Bismarck gave them no hope.

[illegible] despatch says :—It is asserted [illegible] and Kalnoky favour the re[illegible] of the Kingdom of Poland.

[illegible] despatch says the re-appearance of cholera has revived the panic. [illegible] on European vessels have returned [illegible]ing. The best authorities [illegible] demic will not last long.

[illegible] disorders have occurred in the penal [illegible] Siberia owing to official corruption. [illegible] number of exiles attempted [illegible] were re-captured, except those [illegible] the island of Sighalien.

[illegible] despatch states it is asserted on [illegible] that the Pope does not oppose [illegible] of the statue of Victor Em[illegible]uel. Victor Emanuel died [illegible] of the Church.

[illegible] of dynamite was maliciously [illegible] office of the chief of police [illegible] Malta recently. The [illegible] badly damaged. There were [illegible] in it, but none were injured.

[illegible] filled a volley into a circus performance at Kingskerl, [illegible] Odell Norey, a contortionist. [illegible] bullets passed through all [illegible] audience. The miscreants [illegible] France and China would so [illegible] that it is [illegible] intervene. France will [illegible] peace with China, but no go[illegible] to be obliged until the French [illegible] ated in Tonquin.

[illegible] of Reuter's Telegram [illegible] received in format on from an au[illegible] that the Black Flags occupy [illegible] the Chinese possess Bac Ninh. [illegible] the French attack the latter [illegible] with China will be inevitable.

[illegible] despatch says :—Muscat is be[illegible] by the brother of the present [illegible] British gunboat Philomel is [illegible] camp of the besiegers. The siege [illegible] last four days. All British [illegible] town and gone on board [illegible].

[illegible] destructive cyclone occured at [illegible] recently. The first demolished [illegible] of the negroes. The second [illegible] destruction of property, but no loss [illegible] is a great number of buildings [illegible] and also throughout the path of [illegible] the country.

[illegible] despatch says : Hicks Pasha, [illegible] ordered El Obeid, which [illegible] besieged, army of the False Prophet, and his forces broken up. [illegible] is not yet known. Communi[illegible] between Khartoum and the Egyptian [illegible] was completely cut off.

[illegible] caused a startling sensation. Two [illegible] took place almost simultaneously. [illegible] of underground railway fell. In [illegible] people were injured. In the other [illegible] [illegible]. The wildest rumors [illegible] the English papers do not hesitate [illegible] the explosion to Fenians.

[illegible] diplomatic circles that the [illegible] Government knows so much concerning [illegible] Russians on the frontier will make an official demand for [illegible] explanation from St. Petersburg, asking the meaning of what seems [illegible] a preconcerted movement.

[illegible] was attacked recently by a [illegible] the compartment of a car on a [illegible] suburban railway, and beaten until [illegible]. The only other occupant was a [illegible] was unable to help the gentleman. [illegible] train arrived at the station she [illegible] alarm, and the lunatic was secured.

[illegible] Irishman* declares [illegible] Government circular just issued [illegible] for wholesale shipment of Irish [illegible] to Canada. Every facility is to be [illegible] to boards of guardians and clerks of [illegible] to promote emigration. No workhouses will be sent. Large contracts [illegible] made with shipping companies for [illegible] passage of emigrants. The Canadian [illegible] Government is a party to the scheme, against which the Freeman's Journal warns all [illegible].

[illegible] who passed over Cathoula and Texas [illegible], Waterproof, La., recently. Eight [illegible] on plantation were blown down [illegible] negroes wounded on another. One [illegible] was lifted and carried half a mile into [illegible] woods. The negro church was turned [illegible] upward. Houses and cabins on several [illegible] plantations are reported demolished. [illegible] negroes were injured. Mrs. Bowman's [illegible] in Catahoula parish was blown down, [illegible] upon, but her three children have not [illegible] found since.

[illegible] London explosions have caused an [illegible] sensation in Irish circles. The [illegible] unanimously think the outrages [illegible] to the deliberately planned [illegible] outrages of the National [illegible], who intend to create an [illegible] feeling at home. It will be [illegible] possible, they think, to have a [illegible] capital jury to try O'Donnell. [illegible] remarked that the explo[illegible] [illegible] about the moment [illegible] [illegible] Irish Members.

[illegible] Steamer Company's steamer [illegible] Switzerland was [illegible] Sheerness with a cargo of pigs and [illegible] cattle, besides the crew [illegible] was a new vessel. A [illegible] [illegible] the report. [illegible] [illegible] capsized. It is [illegible] [illegible] sixty passengers aboard, [illegible] number of cattle dealers and drovers. [illegible] despatch says:—The Hollyhead [illegible] in collision with the German ship Alsatia, [illegible] from Liverpool to New [illegible] [illegible] five miles off Holyhead. [illegible] Thirteen of the Alsatia's crew were drowned. The remainder were rescued.

The Origin of Coffee.

It is well known that the coffee plant is not indigenous in Arabia, but was imported from Abyssinia at a date which cannot be accurately given. The taste of coffee itself had a hard struggle at first to find a general welcome among the more select circles. Apart from the oldest legend concerning Shadeh's drink, the Medina Sheikh Abdel-Kader is the oldest historical authority on the used of the "blood-red Kawbeh," as the Tunisian Ion Waki named the beverage. In the year 1588, not three hundred years ago, he tells us that in Yemen people made use of a drink which so lightened the night watches that the faithful of the place were able to sing the praises of God more fervently and cheerful than could be done anywhere else. According to him, the Mufti Dhabani was the first to introduce the insignificant little bean on Arabian soil, having brought it with them from Africa. Certain it is that the districts of Shoa, Efarara and Kaffa (whence the name), in the south of Abyssinian highlands, form the original home of the coffee plant. Dhabani was of a sickly nature, and since he belonged to the order of the S[illegible] (Persian Pantheists) who believed that everything on earth and all being emanated from the Godhead, he regarded a means of excitement of his kind a providential gift.

The Medinese and faithful Meccans laid their turbaned heads together in the public places when first they heard the news; a pious sheik in Aden was the first to drink the "black juice" as a sort of public spectacle. In Mecca itself, violent strife arose soon after its introduction as to the propriety of using it. There were great meetings of learned and pious men who at last, probably after extreme pressure from the Mameluke governor, Khair Beg, declared that coffee "disturbed the brain and intoxicated like wine." But their opponents were of another opinion, and adduced the authority of the celebrated Bagdad physician, Avicenna, in their defence, which, however, did not prevent the transgressor of the edict forbidding the use of coffee from being publicly whipped. At the same time the zealots of the Hedjas proclaimed that all coffee drinkers would appear before the All-Merciful on the resurrection day with black faces. While the great anathema was being pronounced at Mecca, the brothers of the order at Cairo, the very Mamelukes themselves, were fairly revelling in the newly-discovered luxury. A confirmation of the Mecca decree was, therefore, not to be expected from the sultan, and he, Kanfu Aguris, quashed the ordinance of his governor and sent the latter into exile. Then many holy sheikins (for example, the celebrated Mohammed Harite, founder of one of four orthodox schools of Islam), took the side of the coffee drinkers. Thus was the precious bean fully renabilitated, in Western Arabia at least.

A Wonderful Lake.

A wonderful subterranean lake has just been discovered in the Allegheny valley, near the town of Freeport. It lies deep under a large hill, which has been honeycombed with the old coal pits and salt wells. The hill is back from the Allegheny river about 200 yards, and it was by the merest accident that the existence of the vast body of water beneath it was discovered in time to avert a terrible disaster to life and property. Recently a coal miner was opening on the side of the hill, and for several weeks miners have been digging out tons of black diamonds. The other day they were driving a room eastward 100 yards from the main entry, when they came near blasting through a thin wall into an old coal-pit which was abandoned fifty years ago, and whose existence was forgotten. A tiny stream of water gurgled out, and an opening being made, the lake was revealed to the astonished workmen. The full extent of the sheet of water can not yet be definitely estimated, but it is of remarkable size. The old pit, which is part of its bed, has not been worked since 1836, and long before and up to that time all the territory was drilled and mined for salt and coal. Immense quantities of both had been taken out, leaving acres upon acres of cavity under the hill, which since then has been closed up and filling in with water that had no means of egress, all the pits having originally been reached by shafts. The largest of these old pits was the one that the miners encountered. It is several yards above the present mine, and had the blast broken the wall or floor all the men would have been drowned, and the water, rushing in a flood out of the new pit, would have washed away the railroad and dwellings. It has already submerged them to some extent. After tapping the lake the workmen made the opening larger by degrees, so that they could see in. Blazing torches were thrown in, and small rafts with fires built upon them were sent far across the underground waters. The eye was incapable of fathoming the limits of the interior, but by sounding and geological calculations it is pretty well settled that the water underlies the greater part of the hill, and the hill is about two miles long and half a mile wide. Navigation upon the lake by means of a skiff is as yet impossible, the water being within a few feet of the roof of the pit. As the hole is gradually enlarged the volume of water allowed to escape grows in volume. It is now pouring out in a stream five feet in diameter, and has a rushing cataract roar like Niagara. The owners of the mine hope to draw all the water off in a month or two, but it is believed by some that the lake is fed by underground springs, and can not be exhausted.

Discovery of a Soldier's Skeleton.

An interesting discovery took place recently at Andermatt, in the Canton of Uri, by some workmen who were excavating near the old church, well known to tourists. While digging they suddenly came upon several skeletons, and, on further search, there fell from the lower jaw of one two gold coins of the reign of Charles VIII. of France at the end of the fifteenth century. Further search revealed the presence in the bony hands of the skeletons a piece of linen rag in excellent preservation, and on unfolding the rag the men brought to light ten silver coins of the sixteenth century, of the time of Francis I. of France. It is supposed that the skeleton is that of a soldier who fought at the battle of Marignan, and that, having stolen some money and put the gold coins in his mouth for safety, he was immediately after killed on the field.

Horribly Polite.

Mr. Baron Graham was one of the Judges who sat on the English Bench in the early part of this century. He was distiognished for his remarkable politeness, and for having sentenced more unfortunate human beings to death than any other Judge who ever presided at the County Assizes. He invariably exemplified his peculiar notions of politeness even in the very act of sentencing poor creatures to death. His manners on such occasions would often have been laughable but for the deeply affecting situation in which the unhappy prisoners stood. A very singular instance of the Baron's excessive and ill-timed politeness occurred on one occasion after the close of the trials at a County Assize. Nine unhappy men were all appointed to receive sentence of death for burglary, highway robberies, and other offences. It so happened, however, that on entering the names of the unfortunate parties, after being convicted, on his own slip of paper, Baron Graham omitted the name of one prisoner. The nine men were brought up to receive judgment, and the eight whose names were on his paper were severally sentenced to death. They then quitted the bar. The ninth stood in mute astonishment at the circumstance that no sentence was passed on him. The Clerk of the Court perceiving the mistake, immediately called aloud to his Lordship just as he was opening the door to leave the Court that he had ommitted to pass sentence on the unfortunate man. Turning about, and casting a look of surprise at the unhappy prisoner, he hurried back to the seat he had just vacated, took a pinch of snuff—he was one of the most inveterate snuff takers that ever lived—and, putting on the black cap, he addressed the prisoner in the following strain, making at the same time, a profusion of bows,—"My good man, I really beg your perdon for the mistake—altogether a mistake, I assure you. The sentence of the Court on you is that you be taken to the place whence you came, thence to the place of execution, and there hanged until you are dead. And the Lord have mercy on your soul. I do beg your pardon I'm very sorry for the mistake, I assure you." So saying, he made another bow to the unhappy man, and then quitted the Court.

A Help for the Deaf.

A young lady of Millford, Mass., whose auricular nerves are so imperfect as to make the aid of an audiphone, the dentiphone, and similar instruments, of no practical benefit, has discovered a method of hearing by communication with the muscles of the throat of the person talking. She has ascertained, by placing a yardstick upon the keyboard of a piano and bringing it in contact with her teeth, that she can hear music through the dental nerves communicating with the inner ear, and it occured to her that she might hear speech in the same way from the vibrations of the throat. She takes a slender stick at a length convenient for ordinary contiguity, and slightly curved so as to fit a larger portion of the throat than the point, and, holding it between her teeth, is able to hear conversation with ease, and even, with a little help in explanation, to understand a general conversation in which her communicant is taking part. It is much more grateful than the ear trumpet, which is unpleasant in various ways, by the concussion upon the nerve of the ear from too loud speech, from its clumsiness, and other difficulties, and persons beyond the help of the audiphone might find this experiment worth trying.

Home the Best Place for Invalids.

The New York Sun compiles from the Continent the opinions of a physician about the curative powers of nature. The physican concludes that it is better for a consumptive to stay at home, where he can be comfortable, than subject himself to the discomfort of hotel life, or to the greater inconvenience of a camp. He says that camp cure may be fairly treated by sleeping on one's own house top. Another medical man replies that the summer conditions of spruce forests are eminently favorable, and consumptives have recovered in the most surprising way living under canvas in them, where the air is impregnated with the healing emanations peculiar to the non-deciduous tree growths. There are consumptives whose lungs crave the salt air of the ocean; others to whom the dry atmosphere of Colorado is infinitely soothing; and others again who are benefited by the climate of Florida or Southern California. "To prescribe Florida for one person might mean death, while if he went among the northern paradise of spruce, recovery might follow."

Fish Eating Quadrupeds.

In all the colder regions of Europe, says a French writer, cows and horses near the sea coast occasionally vary their diet by eating fish. Some horses which about a century ago were taken from Iceland to Dunkerque were fed during the voyage, as well as during their stay at Dunkerque, on nothing but salt fish. At Saint Waast-la-Hougue fish is given to domestic animals, which eat it with great relish. According to M. Valenciennes, a certain kind of fish which is found in great abundance on some parts of the Indian coast serves both fresh and salted as food for the horses. Kamschatka dogs, of course, are notorious fish eaters, but not even the authority of Philostrates can induce us to believe in his fish-eating sheep, although Ehen backs him up in guaranteeing that their flesh acquires the fishy taste of marine birds. In Lydia and Macedonia sheep were said to be fattened with fish, greatly to the detriment of their mutton but it must be admitted that the whole story has a very ancient and fish-like smell.

London City, Ill., has a little heroine sixteen years of age. A family named Baldo of that place have a sixteen year old daughter who was left with three other children at home while the father and mother went out to spend the evening. During the absence of the parents the children were startled to see three rough looking men, evidently tramps walk into the house. The girl ordered them to leave which they declined to do. She then got her father's shot gun and blazed away at the gang the shot taking effect on one of the men who fell but was carried away by his companions who left in a hurry. That girl is entitled to a medal for her bravery. She is the kind of girl that generally grows up to be a self reliant, independent, first-class woman.

Advice to Barbers.

Don't talk.
Refrain from colloquializing.
If you have anything to say, don't say it.
Do not talk.
Keep your mouth shut.
Do not indulge in conversation.
Say nothing.
Exercise measures of repression to the extent of suppresion with relation to your colloquial predilections.
Stick a towel in your mouth.
Gag yourselves.
Stop your conversation before you begin.
Sew buttons on your lips.
The tongue is an unruly member. Stick a pin through it.
Cease your speech.
Do not converse.
Have nothing to say and say it.
Let somebody else do the talking.
Don't talk.
P. S. Barbers will please hang this up in their shops and have it enforced

Asia's Floating Garden.

Among the most remarkable illustrations of human energy are certainly the floating gardens of Kashmir, in Eastern Asia, the more so that they are the work of an essentially indolent population. For their creation an expanse of water about nine miles in circumference had been utilized, on which masses of weeds, grasses and aquatic plants grow and become intertwined and entangled. These form the soil, as it were, on which cultivation is carried on. Divisions are made in them, they are cut level with the surface of the water and then banked over with river mud. Properly prepared for this purpose this soil is sown with melons and cucumber plants, and a crop is raised which is unequalled in any country for quantity and quality. These melons and cucumbers are sold in a good season at the rate of ten or twenty for two cents; in dear seasons they bring two cents a piece. Floating gardens in Mexico are upon the same plan, but are usually devoted to the cultivation of flowers.

The Girl for Your Money.

A physician writes to young men as follows: My profession has thrown me among women of all classes, and my experience teaches me that the Creator never gave man a greater proof of His love than to place woman here with him. My advice is—go and propose to the most sensible girl you know. If she accepts you, tell her how much your income is and from what source derived, and tell her that you will divide the last shilling with her, and that you will love her with all your heart into the bargain: and then keep your promise. My word for it, she will live within your income, and to your last hour you will regret you did not marry sooner. Stop worrying about feminine extravagance and feminine untruth. Just you be true to her—Love her sincerely, and a more fond, faithful, foolish slave you will never meet anywhere. You will not deserve her, I know; but she will never know it "Are we going to have a hard winter?" asks an exchange. Well, it depends a great deal on circumstances. If your credit is bad with your local coal dealers and your wife has traded away your only overcoat for a chromo of a "Midsummer Reverie," the outlook for you is pretty frosty.—Mitchtown Transcript.

ALL SORTS.

Barbed wire fencing has fallen ten per cent. in price within the last three months. Cows have got so they use it for a hair brush.

In a Livingston, Montana, court a defendant in a case of assault and battery said: "Yes, I licked him, and I'll lick him again!" And the jury rendered a verdict of not guilty.

It is solemnly asserted by a Southern newspaper that there is a calf in Virginia which "eats chickens carnivorously." This, however, even if true, is less remarkable than if the calf were to eat chickens herbivorously.

Near Bismarck, Dakota, three thousand buffalos were slain in one day recently by one thousand Sioux Indians. The red man occasionally equals the English hunting tourists in the wanton destruction of game; but it can be said of them in extenuation that they are untutored.

It having been printed in an English journal that many rich families in London prefer boarding in hotels to keeping house, an American newspaper adds, "No wonder; it gives them opportunities to converse with the clerks."

More than seventy-five million copies of a certain spelling book have been sold in America, it is asserted, and all of them contained that absurd monosyllable of six letters which becomes a word of two syllables when one-third of its letters are taken away—plague

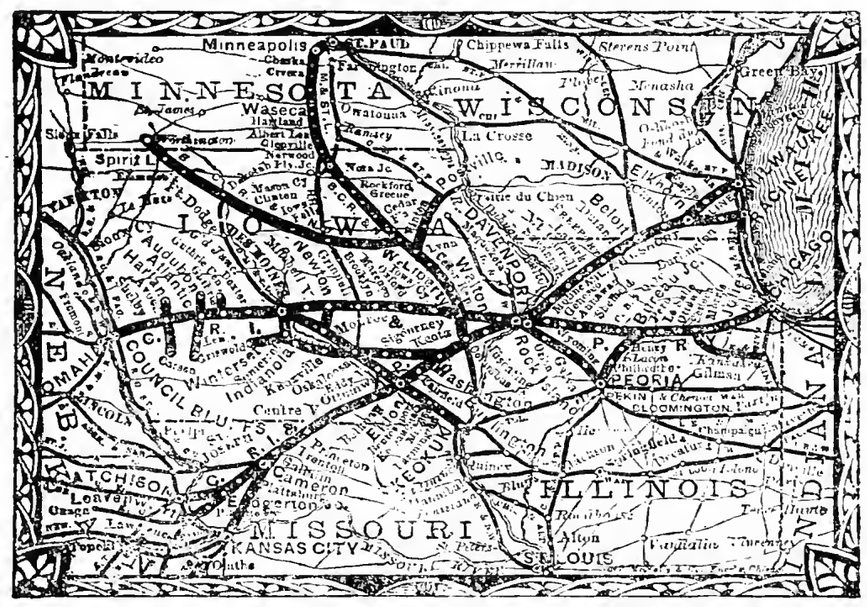
Pittsburgh has a two-headed cow. The heads are both at one end of the "critter," hence ladies need not fear meeting it if it should get on a rampage. There will be no trouble to tell which way it is going to run. If the heads had been put on, one at each end, it would be a plaguey uncertain piece of furniture on a raid. All this cow lacks to make her perfect is an ice cream freezer for summer use.

A young lady stepped into the office of a Cincinnati newspaper and said:

"I would like to subscribe for your paper."

"Certainly, miss," was the polite response. "For a year or six months?"

"Oh, no! only for a week," she replied. And then she exclaimed:



"I only use them for bustles, and a week's papers last a long time."—Philadelphia Call

M. Mignot, Mayor of Rolleboy, one of the few remaining survivors of the "Grande Armee," has just died at Aumoray, in France. He was born in 1790, and in 1830 was Lieutenant of cuirassiers, taking part in the campaign in Germany after the terrible retreat from Moscow. He followed the fortunes of Napoleon until the restoration of the Bourbons, when he entered, retaining his rank, into the Royal Guard. He died worth several millions of francs.

A family living near De Soto, Ill., have a coon, three years old, which was caught when still blind. An old cat at once took charge of and cared for it as if it were one of its own little ones. Now the coon takes care of itself, although the cat continues to feed it with mouse and rat dainties. The children in the house have taught the coon any number of little tricks, such as begging for a biscuit, putting its paws about one's neck. Her couch at night is on the dining room lounge, and she shares that with the dog, who allows none of his kind to approach or annoy her, and is almost [illegible] as the cat.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points. Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT NORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE,
Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN,
Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Estray—Geo. Taylor.
Teacher Wanted—Jas. Struthers.
Notice to creditors—Rich. Woods

The Standard.

MARKDALE, NOV. 8TH, 1883.

OURSELVES.

The prospects of the STANDARD is encouraging and its standing generally satisfactory. The subscription list continues to swell from week to week. At several of our neighboring post offices the number of subscribers have doubled and in some cases trebled during the past year, while in our more immediate vicinity the STANDARD is read, and its weekly visits highly appreciated, in, we believe every family (those who do not subscribe, read their neighbours paper) there are many however who are apparently contented to read the news from week to week, and year to year without paying for the same, we are losing all sympathy as well as confidence in this class and have decided to publish, early in January, the names of all who are in arrears for 1883. We give ample warning and hope to have but a short list to publish. Quite a number have already renewed for 84 and we offer the following liberal terms to those yet in arrears: We will accept cash in advance rates for this year by renewing for '84 at the same time, or in other words will accept $2 cash for 83 and 84 by paying it any time up to 15th December, otherwise $1.25 will be charged. Fair warning, we mean business.

EDITORIAL NOTES,

—The following sensible paragraph we clip from the Toronto Truth and commend it to the earnest consideration of all who use the weed:—At the late Sabboth School Convention a great many home truths were uttered, which it is to be hoped will do a great deal of good. One gentleman was specially hard upon tobacco, but not, Truth fancies, too hard. It seems it was the ruin of that poor worthless fool, Mann, the L'Original murderer. It has been the ruin of a great many better men. It is making a set of weak, nervous, wasteful imbecile, good for nothings, in spite of the fact that a good many sensible people smoke. To see the sidewalks of the principle streets of this city on a Sunday evening, is a caution. It would seem if it had rained saliva. Faugh!

—Truth says:—Who would be a candidate for Parliamentary honors? Why he may be unseated before he knows what he is about. If he calls a public meeting, and addresses the promiscuous crowd in some such terms as "Well, friends, I hope you will all do your best for me," these simple words constitute every man jack in that crowd an agent, and if any one of them do an illegal act, however much it may be to the poor candidate's injury, he is responsible all the same. This seems awfully hard. still it is all the same.

The new Governor has arrived and after all the usual ceremonies have been gone through finds himself quietly settled in Rideau Hall. The political range of his work is very limited. He appeareutly has no individuality, but must do what his Ministers bid him or dismiss them and take the consequences. Socially, however, he may be a power, and is intended to be such. If he and his wife are to succeed in this work they will need to keep very wide awake. The small citizens of Ottawa will try to capture him. The Prime Minister's wife may try to boss Lady Landsdowne, and much else that is small and disagreeable may very likely take place. If they yield to such pressure they will be undone. If they play their cards aright the nation for years hence may very likely part with them in sorrow and with a profound respect which has in it all the best elements of affection.—Truth

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To Editor STANDARD.

Occasionally we read of instances in the human family where men are said to exist in duplicate; one day acting like themselves and again like some other person, known or unknown as the case may be, I begin to think that such cases may be found. That the man who quietly came to me on the day after my letter of the 11th ult. was published, and inquired if I could prove my statements, said he was sorry that this thing had ever occurred between us, he had been drawn into it and was resolved to never meddle again in such matters, and proposed that the bringing of my proof be done quietly and one man was sufficient, (this was his own proposal) that it was the same man who wrote "Mr. Pickell's Denial" in last week's Advance, is a question among the ologies I cannot answer and yet I am sure in the first instance, and presume in the second, it assumed the form and appearance of A. R. Fawcett. Now sir, on the day in question I told Mr, Fawcett it was not convenient for me to meet him but proposed doing so on Saturday evening, he said he was going away in the morning and would not return till Wednesday, and our meeting had to be postponed. Early on Thursday morning I went to his office in company with a gentleman who had waited on him as I before stated, who told him that he was sufficient proof that I had foundation for my statements and at the same time advised that the matter should end as it was of no interest to the public, it was now purely personal between Mr. Fawcett and myself, and suggested that we drop it at once and entirely. Mr. Fawcett said he would naturally like to make some reply to my letter, but this gentleman said it would not do for him to say we had smoked the pipe of peace or anything of that kind, that if we were going to settle we should say no more on either side, I said I would agree. After thinking a few moments Mr. Fawcet said he would drop it at once if I would and said I will give yon my hand on it, and reached out his hand and shook hands with me to bind the agreement that our correspondence was at an end. But, sir, what shall I say of a man, who, in the presence of an honorable witness to such an agreement, which would have been sacred to any one with a spark of truth honor, or principle, daring in the very paper he was then preparing to print, to tell the public that "as W. G. Pickell had acknowledged being in error and under misapprehension, he accordingly agreed to let the matter drop." As to making any acknowledgement whatever, I have denied through your paper and do so again; as to making my "personal confession" to him this is equally false. the very idea is contemptible. If I stoop to corresspond with him I have not found it necessary to make any confession to A. R. F. public or private. I have never tried. as he says to impose on him, I was not interfering with him when he first used my name in his paper, and when I withdrew my subscription I wanted to have done with him, and from the first my posiition has been a defensive one and will be to the end let that be when it may. as I am fully prepared to sustain myself and position and if I were his most bitter enemy I could not wish him to take any other course than the one he has chosen for himself, if he is not satisfied with what I have shown him regarding his patronage, he may find it out for himself in a more practical way before many weeks. Mr. Fawcett repeated inquires "who is W. G. Pickell." Evidently he did not know when he first made him the subject of an editorial. If he had he probably instead would have given his readers "a trip to Toronto," or an account of his adventures in his late visit to Thornbury or something equally instructive and interesting, but for present information I might tell him that W. G. Pickell was a resident of this place probably before A. R. Fawcett was out of his pinafores. The question does not interest me but I have heard it asked who is this A. R. Fawcett who professes to unearth all the dishonest, dishonorable and immoral transactions in our community. As his short stay amongst us leaves it an open question perhaps in his capacity of public instructor he will enlighten the ignorant as to who he is. Mr. Fawcett need make no allowance for hasty expression or misleading, as I am not in the habit of using the first or been drawn astray by the second. I cannot help thinking, sir, of the pitiable state of our moral atmosphere before this champion of morality appeared on the scene, and of the sloughs into which we may relapse after he has run his race amongst us. We recoil from such thoughts, viewing the matter as we do, from the elevated standpoint to which he has raised us. In conclusion, I wish to say that I expect he will deny in toto all I have written in this letter in his reply next week, but doing so in the face of so many who know better, is to his own hurt as usual, not mine. I am sorry to draw so largely on your space on a subject so far beneath the notice of your paper or your intelligent readers.

Yours respectfully,
W. G. PICKELL.

Credit Sale Register.

Mr. Geo. Sewell three miles East of Markdale will sell by public auction, on Thursday November the 15th his stock implements &c. Twelve months credit, sale to commence at 1 o'clock p. m. Geo. Noble, auctioneer.

AN auction sale of farm stock and implements will take place at Edward Sargent's near Berkeley on Monday the 12th November. There is six horses and a large quantity of other stock implements &c in the bill for sale. Twelve months credit, see bills for full particulars. Geo. Noble Auctioneer.

Mr. W. G. Pickell has announced by posters and hand bills, an extensive sale of live stock to take place on his farm near Flesherton, on Saturday next, the 10th, to commence at 1 o'clock p. m. There will be sold twenty five head of cattle, eleven of which are good milch cows, besides horses, sheep, pigs &c. Terms of sale 12 months credit on approved joint notes or eight per cent discount for cash. A. S. Vandusen.

The Alleghanians,

Whose name has become a household word with music-loving people of all nations, and whose continuous travels have extended to all parts of the civilized globe, performing by royal command before the crowned heads and nobility of Europe, will present on Monday evening, Nov. 12th, at the Orange hall, Markdale, one of their unique and incomparable programme, embracing numerous vocal Specialities, new songs, new quartets, and their astonishing manipulation of 120 Swiss Bells.

We commend the following extracts selected from both hemispheres:—On Friday, these exquisite Bell Ringers and Vocalists appeared in one of their extraordinary Concerts at the Crystal Palace, when one of the most charming musical treats ever enjoyed in this place, was undoubtedly afforded those whose good fortune it was to be present."—Era (London, Eng.)

"The playing on the Bells was marvelous, and elicited the most rapturous applause; and the singing was excellent."—Oxford (Eng.) Journal.

"I have so freely expressed my opinion of the merits of these entertainers, that I have only to add, as a word of advice, 'Go and hear them.'"—REV. MR. SPURGEON, London, Eng.

"The Quartets and Songs were admirably sung, and the very able manner in which airs, with variations, were rendered on the Swiss bells greatly delighted the audience, and called forth well-merited encores.—Standard (London, Eng.)

"Their music is decidedly fine, especially their quartets; and it will be long ere we forget that magnificent and heaven-inspiring chant, 'Where shall the soul find rest,' as sung by the Alleghanians—N. Y. Independent.

Tickets 25 and 50 cents. Reserved seats can be secured at A. Turne's drug store without extra charge.

"Who Wouldn't be a Printer?"

Who was the earl of Standhope? He was only a printer. What is prince Frederick William, married to the princess royal of England? He, too, was only a printer. Who was William Caxton, one of the fathers of literature? He was only a printer. Who were J. P. Norris, N. P. Willis, J. Gales, C. Richardson, Horace Greeley, Bavard Taylor, Ghas, Dickens, Thiers Jerrold, George D. Prentice, Bishop Kavanaugh Senators Dix, Cameron Plumb, and Niles? They were only printers. What was Benjamin Franklin? He was only a printer. Everybody cannot afford to be a printer—brains are necessary.

BADLY WANTED.--More street lamps; and hitching posts; a town hall; and a lock-up.

Advertise in the STANDARD.

BIRTHS.

PICKETT.—In Berkeley, on the 6th inst., the wife of Mr. John Pickett, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

CROFT—BADJERO.—At the residence of the brides father, by the Rev. John Chisholm, B. A., Mr. Joseph Croft, of Osprey to Miss Emely Badgero, of Artemesia.

JONES—BULMER.—At the residence of Mr. J. English, Artemesia, on Oct. 16th, by the Rev J. Chisholm, Mr. Geo. Jones, to Miss Mary Bulmer, both of Duneiden.

MASON—MCCONNELL.—At the residence of Thos. McConnell, Osprey, on Oct. 31, by the Rev J. Chisholm. Mr. John Mason, of Egermont, to Miss Martha McConnell, of Osprey.

WANTED, Eight girls, at Miss Green's dress making parlor. Six apprentices and two assistants. 161-tf.

TEACHER WANTED, Male or Female, for School Section No. 15, Township of Euphrasia, holding third class certificate, duties to commence 1st of January, 1884, apply stating salary expected, to JAMES STRUTHERS, Sec. 155-57 Markdale P. O.

ESTRAY. A steer rising two years came to the premises of the undersigned, lot 18, con. 12, Holland, in September last. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take him. HENRY HAMILTON, 164-66 Harkaway P. O.

NOTICE. Having given up possession of Barrhead Mill, and purpose removing from this place shortly, I hereby notify all parties indebted to me to call at Lucas' Bank and settle their account and save further trouble or costs. W. J. ROWE. Oct.24,'83.

ESTRAY. Came into the premises of the subscriber, Lot North ½ 2, Con. 12, Euphrasia, about the 8th October, two heifers rising two years. The owner is requested to prove property, pay expences, and take them away. SAMUEL SMART. 164-66

TEACHER WANTED For School Section No. 6, Artemesia, male or female, holding second or third class certificate. Duties to commence 2nd day of January, 1884. Apply stating salary to JOHN HAZARD. Sec.-Treas. to Trustees. Flesherton Station P.O. Artemesia, Oct. 25, '83. 164-65

ESTRAY. From the premises of the subscriber, lot South ½ 12, con. 11 Euphrasia, in the month of May, 5 yearling calves, 1 steer and 4 heifers, mostly red with a few white spots. Any person giving such information as will lead to their recovery will be suitably rewarded. Any person harboring them without advertising them will be prosecuted according to law. GEO. TAYLOR, Euphrasia Nov. 2, 1883. 155-57

FARMS FOR SALE. Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are clearsd and under ultivation. Lot 8 part 15, con. 12, Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to J. G. IRVING, Markdale. Oct.16.1883. 16

FARM FOR SALE. Lot 89 and 90 second range west of T. & S. Road, Glenelg, 100 acres, 85 of which are cleared and under cultivation fit for reaper and mower to work on. Buildings and fences in good repair, soil clay loam, well watered, and in a good state of cultivation. This is a desirable farm and well located being 2½ miles from the flourishing village of Markdale. For further particulars apply on premises or by letter to 162-72 WM. MUTRIE, Markdale P. O.

FOR SALE, A choice grain farm, Lots 109 and 110, 2nd East T. and S. Road, Artemesia, containing 100 acres, 80 acres cleared and in high state of cultivation, clear of stone and fit for machinery of any kind; soil clay loam. The farm is well fenced, has 15 acres fall wheat in, about 50 fruit trees bearing, and is situated in a beautiful section of country two and a half miles from Markdale, a thriving village on the T. G. & B. railway. Good reasons for selling. Possession given next spring. For further particulars apply on the premises to JOHN MERCER, 164-66 Markdale P. O.

A. HILL, Fashionable Tailor, OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE. A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

$500 Reward! We will pay the above reward for any case of Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Constipation or Costiveness we cannot cure with West's Vegetable Liver Pills, when the directions are strictly complied with. They are purely Vegetable, and never fail to give satisfaction. Sugar Coated, Large Boxes, containing 30 Pills, 25 cts. For sale by all Druggists. Beware of counterfeits and immitations. The genuine manufactured only by JOHN C. WEST & CO., "The Pill Makers," 81 & 83 King St. East, Toronto, Ont. Free trial package sent by mail prepaid on receipt of a 3 cent stamp. For sale at Turner & Co's Drug Store.

A Mount Forest Man in Luck

Our townsman Mr. Jacob Moshier is one of the lucky individuals mentioned in the following paragraph: "Hugh L. Moshier's descendants —75 in number—assembled in the Palmer House, Chicago, on Wednesday last to prepare to get their inheritance. They had been told that Hugh's father, Ezekiel, acquired by trade in Manchester, Eng., $1,160,000,000 when Manchester had only 15,000 inhabitants, that he and his sons became colonists despite their thousand million dollars, and that after Hugh L. Moshier died, in Rhode Island 225 years ago, the money, which at that time had become mysteriously diminished to the mere bagatelle of $129,000,000, was deposited in the bank of England where it awaits the descendants' call.—Mt. Forest Confed.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.70 to $1.95; Spring $0.70 to $1 95; Barley, 40 to60; Peas, 65; Oats, 30c Baster, 18c; Eggs, 22c; Potatoes, 40c; Hay, $7 .00; Pork, 5.00 to 5.50; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 2

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.10; Spring, $1.00 to $1.12; Barley, 50c to 70c; Oats, 37c to 40c Peas, 70c to 73c; Hogs, $6.00 to $6.20; Potatoes, per bag, 90c to $1c; Butter, dairy, 15c to 17c; eggs, 22c to 25c.

IN THE GOODS AND CHATTELS —OF— JOHN KIRKPATRICK, (DECEASED.)

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to Section 34. of Chapter 107, R. S. O. the creditors of John Kirkpatrick, late of the township of Euphrasia, County of Grey, deceased, who died on or about the 21st Oct. 1883. and all parties having claims upon his estate are, on or before the FIFTEENTH DAY OF DECEMBER, 1883 to send by post, prepaid, to Richard Woods, Rocklyn P. O., in the County of Grey, one of the executors. of the personal estate and effects of deceased, their christian and surnames, addresses and description, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and nature of the securities (if any) held by them, and in default thereof the assets of the said deceased will be distributed, having regard only to the claims then received, or those of them which the executors then have notice.

JOS. MANAREY, RICH. WOODS, Executors.

Dated this 5th day of November, 1883.

READY DECEMBER 1ST, 1883 —THE— FARMER'S HAND BOOK FOR 1884. (Copyright secured.)

A COMPLETE RECORD OF FARM OPERATIONS.

This book will contain blank pages, ruled, so that the farmer can keep a correct diary of his farm accounts, of his purchases and sales of his produce, sales of live stock, grain, dairy, fruit, and poultry; also a calendar for 1884, giving the moon's changes, and also many useful tables, receipts, with memoranda pages, &c., for the farmers, not found in any other single book.

A NECESSITY TO EVERY INTELLIGENT FARMER. PRICE, 25 CENTS EACH.

Address— THE FARMER'S ADVOCATE, 360 Richmond Street, LONDON, ONT., CANADA.

EUGENIA Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made extensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.

GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND

Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.

LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.

Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted 69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

Wm. Lucas & Co., BANKERS,

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good indorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT. Allowed on Savings Deposits.

Drafts issued and Collections made on points, at lowest rates.

W.M. LUCAS, Manager.

September 28, 1880. 2-1y

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK

DressStuffsTweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN

Markdale and Toronto TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clocks, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personally, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,
The Jeweller,
MARKDALE.

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

Complete outfits for auctioneers, at the Standard Office.

When is butter like Irish babies? When it is made into pats.

Mr. Bryan, of the Mansion House, has put up two lamps outside.

The Standard to the end of 1884 to new subscribers for $1.00, cash.

Blank notes, receipts and all such forms for sale at the Standard Office.

A Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmem has been organized in Tara.

Thos. McNea has purchased a coal burning stove and a supply of coal for the winter.

The Toronto Daily World clubbed with the Standard the balance of this and all of next year for $3.50.

A Correspondent asks us "if it is right to kiss a young lady on the eve of her departure," Cirtainly not—Kiss her on the mouth.

McFarland is making things hum in the butter line, he purchased 5,000 pounds in one day this week, at big prices, Mc. is the butter king.

The Silver Medal won at the Toronto Industrial Exhibition by J. R. Trimble's "Clear Grit Jr." may be seen in the window of R. Askin's shop.

We have made arrangements with the World Publishing Co. whereby we are enabled to club that newsy and independent daily paper with the Standard for $3.50 cash.

Highest price paid for Butter, Eggs, Fowl, Potatoes, Lard, Tallow, Sheepskins, Geese Feathers, at Trimble & Wright's.

To Sell or Trade.—A large cow rising 5 years, farrow, will sell or trade for a good cow in calf, Joseph Henderson, Lot North ½ 5, con. 7 Euphrasia about six miles from Markdale.

The conservatives of West Simcoe have chosen Dr. Wylie of Stayner, as their standard bearer at the coming electron to fill the vacancy caused by Philps being unseated.

We are pleased to learn that W. J. McFarland has made sale of his butter at a good round price to Thos. Todd & Sons, Liverpool. The quantity sold was two car loads.

The County Judge will hold a court of revision for Holland Township at Campbell's Hotel, Chatsworth on the 15th November at the hour of one o'clock P. M.

People don't have to be hauled by the coat collar into McFarland's store His immense stock of sound fresh goods is sufficient to crowd his store with large buyers.

Robert Nesbitt, brakeman on the G. T. R., who was struck by a bridge while the train was passing under near Belleville recently, has recovered so that he was able to resume work last Tuesday.

The Ontario and Quebec.—Mr. Abbott, inspector of ties and timbers on the Ontario and Quebec railway, says that he expected to see construction trains running from Toronto to Ottawa by the 1st January next.

Reduction in Prices.—Trimble & Wright have this week reduced their notorious tea from 30 to 25cts per lb. in single lbs or 5 lb. lots, 24cts per lb. by the chest, if you want a bargain procure a box before the lot is cleaned out as it cannot be replaced.

The Marquis of Lorne and the Princess Louise arrived at Liverpool Monday, and were accorded a flattering reception. In reply to an address from the Corporation, the Marquis referred to awakening interest of England in the affairs of the Dominion.

True merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increased sales, as a prominent Druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits;" It is the grand specific for diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, 25,000 bottles have been sold during the last three months. For sale by A. Turner & Co. Markdale.

Fortunate Southampton.—It is rumored that the Beatty line of steamers intend to make Southampton instead of Sarnia their southern terminus next season. This move will save a distance of 240 miles every round tripe, and as time means money in these fast days, the change seems only a natural one. Southampton people are jubilant over the matter, and look forward to a big boom next spring and summer.—O. S. Advertisor.

The Cheapest Life Insurance yet, or 1 ounce of prevention vs. a pound of cure.—Men and women who are unable to pay the heavy premiums asked by insurance companies should call on Trimble & Wright at once and procure one of those all wool suits of underclothing, guaranteed a sure preventative for colds, cough's &c., and sold lower than any other retail house in Canada.

Removal.—Thos. Matthews moved this week into the premises lately occupied by A. McDougall. Mr. M. will now have abundant room besides being in a better business stand. It is unnecessary for us to say anything in commendation of his abilities as a harness maker, or of his integrity as a business man. His history for the past eighteen years in this place is surely a sufficient recommendation, and we bespeak for him a largely increased trade in his present commodious and convenient shop.

Tam, what on airth is a yon heap o' stuff stacked up at Trimmel & Wright's store door? odd the like o' you I never saw, hoot Will, it's easy seen ye hana been mucle frae hame, yens mantle claith, traser claith an sack, drawers, flannels an a sort o' claith to keep baith men and woman warm, an if ye just look roond the corner ye'll see stane boats an 30 ft ladder, and to tell ye for a certain fact, for cheapness the same Trimmle & Wright is no beat this side o' John O'Goots.

Mr. A. Webster, of Priceville, is about to take his departure from that place, having disposed of his business and purchased a farm near Toronto. Mr. Webster has been a valuable citizen to Priceville, being a man of undoubted integrity, excellent business qualities and high moral and social standing. The village loses one of its best and most esteemed citizens which will doubtless be difficult to replace. A banquet will be given in his behalf, on Thursday evening the 8th at the Commercial Hotel, which will be largely attended.

The Steamer Ontario Lost, all hands saved.—The steamship Ontario enrouted for Port Arthur and other points North, sank while taking on coal at a wharf, all hands were saved as well as the most valuable part of her load which was slightly damaged by water and shipped to Toronto to be sold by auction. Trimble & Wright who are always on the look out for cheap good, have purchased a large share of the cargo which will be opened this week and sold off at what it will bring, look out for them.

To Be Discontinued.—Some people have hitherto been under the impression that letters, if unsealed, could be sent from one post office to another for one cent, and many letters have been mailed that way. Instructions have been issued to postmasters that hereafter all such letters if not prepaid, are sent to the dead letter office. The same remarks apply to accounts for parties in other places. Of course letters and accounts mailed for delivery at the same post office go for one cent. People should bear these things in mind and they would save themselves much trouble and loss.

Osprey.

From our own correspondent.

The barn of Mr. Fisher, 12th con. of Osprey was set on fire last week, by sparks from an engine of a steam thresher, which was at the time engaged in threshing his own crop, all efforts were put forth to extinguish the fire, but all in vain the wind was too strong and the result was the entire destruction of the barn and all buildings attached, together with all his grain crop. No insurance.

Miss. Mary Reid, student of the Philadelphia school of elocution, and daughter of Jackson Reid. Esq., of Maxwell, recently gave and entertainment in the Presbyterian church, Maxwell. She fully sustained her reputation as a reciter, with the graceful movements of her beautiful figure and the clear and vigorous ring of her melodious voice, the attention of the whole audience is riveted from the very moment she ascends the platform until she descends again. All who heard Miss Read once should certainly seek every opportunity of hearing her again.

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

Tuesday was fair day. There was rather a slim attendance.

Real estate still commands high prices here, houses to rent are still scarce.

Mr. Higginbotham of Inistioge returned from the North West last week He speaks well of the country.

Mr. Mulholland has purchased the building lately erected by Mr. E. Hanbury, the price was $1,300.

Mr. Haney, merchant here, has sold his property to Mr. Wheeler, a dealer in telesraph poles. Mr. Haney purposes removing to Toronto.

The contractors of the Proton drains are pushing the work with energy and will it possible finish the most of the work this season, though so late beginning.

The Melancthon drainage contractors are causing the council some trouble by non-completion of their work. The council have delt very fairly with them, some consider very leniently.

It is most likely that all the members of the Melancthon council will seek re-election. The Reeve of Proton will not offer his services next year, but the rest of the council probably will.

The council have placed a license fee of $80 on the billiard room. The desire of the majority is to see it closed, whether the proprietor will pay the license, or close up remains to be seen.

WM. HOGG,
FLESHERTON STATION,

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods!

IN

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes, &c

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold very low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Station.

Nov. 1st, 1883.

J. G. IRVING,
MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

supplied.

J. W. FORD

Is giving splendid satisfaction in

GRISTING,

By the New Process at the

Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

New FALL Importations

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats. Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

KEN'S MYSTERY.

BY JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

It was situated on the spur of a hill, and there was no fence around it, nor anything to protect it from the incursions of passers-by. There was something in the general appearance of this spot that made me half fancy I had seen it before; and I should have taken it to be the same that I had often noticed on my way to the fort, but that the latter was only a few hundred yards distant therefrom, whereas I must have traversed several miles at least. As I drew near, moreover, I observed that the headstones did not appear so ancient and decayed as those of the other. But what chiefly attracted my attention was the figure that was leaning or half sitting upon one of the largest of the upright slabs near the road. It was a female figure draped in black, and a closer inspection—for I was soon within a few yards of her—showed that she wore the calla, or long hooded cloak, the most common as well as the most ancient garment of Irish women, and doubtless of Spanish origin.

"I was a trifle startled by this appparition, so unexpected as it was, and so strange did it seem that any human creature should be at that hour of the night in so desolate and sinister a place. Involuntarily I paused as I came opposite her, and gazed at her intently. But the moonlight fell behind her, and the deep hood of her cloak so completely shadowed her face that I was unable to discern anything but the sparkle of a pair of eyes, which appeared to be returning my gaze with much vivacity.

"'You seem to be at home here,' I said at length. 'Can you tell me where I am?'

"Hereupon the mysterious personage broke into a light laugh, which, though in itself musical and agreeable, was of a timbre intonation that caused my heart to beat rather faster than my late pedestrian exertions warranted; for it was the identical laugh (or so my imagination persuaded me) that had echoed in my ears as I arose from my tumble an hour or two ago. For the rest, it was the laugh of a young woman, and presumably of a pretty one; and yet it had a wild, airy, mocking quality, that seemed hardly human at all, or not, at any rate to be characteristic of a being of affections and limitations like unto ours. But this impression of mine was fostered, no doubt, by the unusual and uncanny circumstance of the occasion.

"'Sure, sir,' she said, 'you're at the grave of Ethelind Fionguala.'

"As she spoke she rose to her feet, and pointed to the inscription on the stone. I bent forward, and was able, without much difficulty, to decipher the name, and a date which indicated that the occupant of the grave must have entered the disembodied state between two and three centuries ago.

"'And who are you?' was my next question.

"'I'm called Elsie,' she replied. 'But where would your honor be going November-eve?'

"I mentioned my destination, and asked her whether she could direct me thither.

"'Indeed, then, 'tis there I'm going myself,' Elsie replied; 'and if your honor 'ill follow me, and play me a tune on the pretty instrument, 'tisn't long we'll be on the road.'

"She pointed to the banjo which I carried wrapped up under my arm. How she knew that it was a musical instrument I could not imagine; possibly, I thought, she may have seen me playing on it as I strolled about the environs of the town. Be that as it may, I offered no opposition to the bargain, and further intimated that I would reward her more substantially on our arrival. At that she laughed again, and made a peculiar gesture with her hand above her head. I uncovered my banjo, swept my fingers across the strings, and struck into a fantastic dance measure, to the music of which we proceeded along the path, Elsie slightly in advance, her feet keeping time to the airy measure. In fact, she trod so lightly, with an elastic, undulating movement, that with a little more it seemed as if she might float onward like a spirit. The extreme whiteness of her feet attracted my eyes, and I was surprised to find that instead of being bare, as I had supposed, these were incased in white satin slippers quaintly embroidered in gold thread.

"'Elsie,' said I, lengthening my steps so as to come up with her, 'where do you live, and what do you do for a living?'

"'Sure, I live by myself,' she answered; 'and if you'd be after knowing how, you must come and see for yourself.'

"'Are you in the habit of walking over the hills in shoes like that?'

"'And why should I not?' she asked, in her turn. 'And where did your honor get the pretty gold ring on your finger?'

"The ring, which was of no great intrinsic value, had struck my eye in an old curiosity shop in Cork. It was an antique of very old-fashioned design, and might have belonged (as the vendor assured me was the case) to one of the early kings or queens of Ireland.

"'Do you like it?' said I.

"'Will your honor be after making a present of it to Elsie?' she returned, with an insinuating tone and turn of the head.

"'Maybe I will, Elsie, on one condition. I am an artist; I make pictures of people. If you will promise to come to my studio and let me paint your portrait, I'll give you the ring, and some money besides.'

"'And will you give me the ring now?' said Elsie.

"'Yes, if you'll promise.'

"'And will you play the music to me?' she continued.

"'As much as you like.'

"'But maybe I'll not be handsome enough for ye,' said she, with a glance of her eyes beneath the dark hood.

"'I'll take the risk of that,' I answered, laughing, 'though all the same I don't mind taking a peep beforehand to remember you by.' So saying, I put forth a hand to draw back the concealing hood. But Elsie eluded me, I scarce know how, and laughed a third time, with the same airy, mocking cadence.

"'Give me the ring first, and then you shall see me,' she said, coaxingly.

"'Stretch out your hand, then,' returned I, removing the ring from my finger. 'When we are better acquainted, Elsie, you won't be so suspicious.'

"She held out a slender, delicate hand, on the forefinger of which I slipped the ring. As I did so, the folds of her cloak fell a little apart, affording me a glimpse of a white shoulder and of a dress that seemed to be of rich and costly material; and I caught, too, or so I fancied, the frosty sparkle of precious stones.

"'Arrah, mind where ye tread!' said Elsie, in a sudden, sharp tone.

"I looked around, and became aware for the first time that we were standing near the middle of a ruined bridge which spanned a rapid stream that flowed at a considerable depth below. The parapet of the bridge on one side was broken down, and I must have been, in fact, in imminent danger of stepping over into empty air. I made my way cautiously across the decaying structure; but when I turned to assist Elsie, she was nowhere to be seen.

"What had become of the girl? I called, but no answer came. I gazed about on every side, but no trace of her was visible. Unless she had plunged into the narrow abyss at my feet, there was no place where she could have concealed herself—none at least that I could discover. She had vanished, nevertheless; and since her disappearance must have been premeditated, I finally came to the conclusion that it was useless to attempt to find her. She would present herself again in her own good time, or not at all. She had given me the slip very cleverly, and I must make the best of it. The adventure was perhaps worth the ring.

"On resuming my way, I was not a little relieved to find that I once more knew where I was. The bridge that I had just crossed was none other than the one I mentioned some time back; I was within a mile of the town, and my way lay clear before me. The moon, moreover, had now quite dispersed the clouds, and shone down with exquisite brilliancy. Whatever her other failings, Elsie had been a trustworthy guide; she had brought me out of the depth of elf-land into the material world again. It had been a singular adventure, certainly; and I mused over it with a sense of mysterious pleasure as I sauntered along, humming snatches of airs, and accompanying myself on the strings. Hark! what light step was that behind me? It sounded like Elsie's; but no, Elsie was not there. The same impression or hallucination, however, recurred several times before I reached the outskirts of the town—the tread of an airy foot behind or beside my own. The fancy did not make me nervous: on the contrary, I was pleased with the notion of being thus haunted, and gave myself up to a romantic and genial vein of reverie.

"After passing one or two roofless and moss-grown cottages, I entered the narrow and rambling street which leads through the town. The street a short distance down widens a little, as if to afford the wayfarer space to observe a remarkable old house that stands on the northern side. The house was built of stone, and in a noble style of architecture; it reminded me somewhat of certain palaces of the old Italian nobility that I had seen on the Continent, and it may very probably have been built by one of the Italian or Spanish immigrants of the sixteenth or seventeenth century. The moulding of the projecting windows and arched doorway was richly carved, and upon the front of the building was an escutcheon wrought in high relief, though I could not make out the purport of the device. The moonlight falling upon this picturesque pile enhanced all its beauties, and at the same time made it seem like a vision that might dissolve away when the light ceased to shine. I must often have seen the house before, and yet I retained no definite recollection of it; I had never until now examined it with my eyes open, so to speak. Leaning against the wall on the opposite side of the street, I contemplated it for a long while at my leisure. The window at the corner was really a very fine and massive affair. It projected over the pavement below; throwing a heavy shadow aslant; the frames of the diamond-paned lattices were heavily mullioned. How often in past ages had that lattice been pushed open by some fair hand, revealing to a lover waiting beneath in the moonlight the charming countenance of his high-born mistress! Those were brave days. They had passed away long since. The great house had stood empty for who could tell how many years; only bats and vermin were its inhabitants. Where now were those who had built it? and who were they? Probably the very name of them was forgotten.

"As I continued to stare upward, however, a conjecture presented itself to my mind which rapidly ripened into a conviction. Was not this the house that Dr. Dudeen had described that very evening as having been formerly the abode of the Kern of Guerin and his mysterious bride? There was the projecting window, the arched doorway. Yes, beyond a doubt this was the very house. I emitted a low exclamation of renewed interest and pleasure, and my speculations took a still more imaginative, but also a more definite turn.

"What had been the fate of that lovely lady after the Kern had brought her home insensible in his arms? Did she recover? and were they married and made happy ever after? or had the sequel been a tragic one? I remembered to have read that the victims of vampires generally became vampires themselves. Then my thoughts went back to that grave on the hill-side. Surely that was unconsecrated ground. Why had they buried her there? Ethelind of the white shoulder! Ah! why had not I lived in those days? or why might not some magic cause them to live again for me? Then would I seek this street at midnight, and standing here beneath her window, I would lightly touch the strings of my bandore until the casement opened cautiously and she looked down. A sweet vision indeed! And what prevented my realizing it? Only a matter of a couple of centuries or so. And was time, then, at which poets and philosophers sneer, so rigid and real a matter that a little faith and imagination might not overcome it? At all events, I had my banjo, the bandore's legitimate and lineal descendant, and the memory of Fionguala should have the love ditty.

"Hereupon, having tetuned the instrument, I launched forth into an old Spanish love song, which I had met with in some mouldy library during my travels, and had set to music of my own. I sang low, for the deserted street re-echoed the lightest sound, and what I sang must reach only my lady's ears. The words were warm with the fire of the ancient Spanish chivalry, and I threw into their expression all the passion of the lovers of romance. Surely Fionguala, the white-shouldered, would hear, and awaken from her sleep of centuries, and come to the latticed casement and look down! Hist! I see yonder! What light—what shadow is that that seems to flit from room to room within the abandoned house, and now approaches the mullioned window? Are my eyes dazzled by the play of the moonlight, or does the casement move—does it open! Nay, this is no delusion; there is no error of the senses here. There is simply a woman, young, beautiful, and richly attired, bending forward from the window, and silently beckoning me to approach.

"Too much amazed to be conscious of amazement, I advanced until I stood directly beneath the casement, and the lady's face, as she stooped toward me, was not more than twice a man's height from my own. She smiled and kissed her finger-tips; something white fluttered in her hand, then fell through the air to the ground at my feet. The next moment she had withdrawn, and I heard the lattice close.

"I picked up what she had let fall; it was a delicate lace handkerchief, tied to the handle of an elaborately wrought bronze key. It was evidently the key of the house, and invited me to enter. I loosened it from the handkerchief, which bore a faint, delicious perfume, like the aroma of flowers in an ancient garden, and turned to the arched doorway. I felt no misgiving, and scarcely any sense of strangeness. All was as I had wished it to be, and as it should be; the mediæval age was alive once more, and as for myself, I almost felt the velvet coat hanging from my shoulder and the long rapier dangling at my belt. Standing in front of the door I thrust the key into the lock, turned it, and felt the bolt yield. The next instant the door was opened, apparently from within; I stepped across the threshold, the door closed again, and I was alone in the house, and in darkness.

"Not alone, however! As I extended my hand to grope my way it was met by another hand, soft, slender, and cold, which insinuated itself gently into mine and drew me forward. Forward I went, nothing loath; the darkness was impenetrable, but I could hear the light rustle of a dress close to me, and the same delicious perfume that had emanated from the handkerchief enriched the air that I breathed, while the little hand that clasped and was clasped by my own alternately tightened and half relaxed the hold of its soft cold fingers. In this manner, and treading lightly, we traversed what I presumed to be a long, irregular passage way, and ascended a staircase. Then another corridor, until finally we paused, a door opened, emitting a flood of soft light, into which we entered, still hand in hand. The darkness and the doubt were at an end.

"The room was of imposing dimensions, and was furnished and decorated in a style of antique splendor. The walls were draped with mellow hues of tapestry; clusters of candles burned in polished silver sconces, and were reflected and multiplied in tall mirrors placed in the four corners of the room. The heavy beams of the dark oaken ceiling crossed each other in squares, and were laboriously carved; the curtains and the drapery of the chairs were of heavy figured damask. At one end of the room was a broad ottoman, and in front of it a table, on which was set forth, in massive silver dishes, a sumptuous repast, with wines in crystal beakers. At the side was a deep and vast fire-place with space enough on the broad hearth to burn whole trunks of trees. No fire, however, was there, but only a great heap of dead embers; and the room, for all its magnificence, was cold—cold as a tomb, or as my lady's hand—and it sent a subtle chill creeping to my heart.

"But my lady! how fair she was! I gave one passing glance at the room; my eyes and my thoughts were all for her. She was dressed in white, like a bride; diamonds sparkled in her dark hair and on her snowy bosom; her lovely face and slender lips were pale, and all the paler for the dusky glow of her eyes. She gazed at me with a strange, elusive smile; and yet there was, in her respect and bearing, something familiar in the midst of strangeness, like the burden of a song heard long ago and recalled among other conditions and surroundings. It seemed to me that something in me recognized her and knew her, had known her always. She was the woman of whom I had dreamed, whom I had beheld in visions, whose voice and face had haunted me from my boyhood up. Whether we had ever met before, as human beings meet, I knew not; perhaps I had been blindly seeking her over the world, and she had been awaiting me in this splendid room, sitting by those dead embers until all the warmth had gone out of her blood, only to be restored by the heat with which my love might supply her.

"'I thought you had forgotten me,' she said, nodding as if in answer to my thought. 'The night was so late—our one night of the year! How my heart rejoiced when I heard your dear voice singing the song I knew so! Kiss me—my lips are cold!'

"Cold indeed they were—cold as the lips of death. But the warmth of my own seemed to revive them. They were now tinged with a faint color, and in her cheeks also appeared a delicate shade of pink. She drew fuller breath, as one who recovers from a long lethargy. Was it my life that was feeding her? I was ready to give her all. She drew me to the table and pointed to the viands and the wine.

"'Eat and drink,' she said. 'You have travelled far, and you need food.'

"'Will you eat and drink with me?' said I, pouring out the wine.

"'You are the only nourishment I want,' was her answer. 'This wine is thin and cold. Give me wine as red as your blood and as warm, and I will drain the goblet to the dregs.'

"At these words, I know not why, a slight shiver passed through me. She seemed to gain vitality and strength at every instant, but the chill of the great room struck into me more and more.

"She broke into a fantastic flow of spirits, clapping her hands, and dancing about me like a child. Who was she? And was I myself, or was she mocking me when she implied that we had belonged to each other of old? At length she stood still before me, crossing her hands over her breast. I saw upon the forefinger of her right hand the gleam of an antique ring.

"'Where did you get that ring?' I demanded.

"She shook her head and laughed. 'Have you been faithful?' she asked. 'It is my ring; it is the ring that united us; it is the ring you gave me when you loved me first. It is the ring of the Kern—the fairy ring, and I am your Ethelind—Ethelind Fionguala.'

"'So be it,' I said, casting aside all doubt and fear, and yielding myself wholly to the spell of her inscrutable eyes and wooing lips. 'You are mine, and I am yours, and let us be happy while the hours last.'

"'You are mine, and I am yours,' she repeated, nodding her head with an elfish smile. 'Come and sit beside me, and sing that sweet song again that you sang to me so long ago. 'Ah, now I shall live a hundred years.'

"We seated ourselves on the ottoman, and while she nestled luxuriously among the cushions, I took my banjo and sang to her. The song and the music resounded through the lofty room, and came back in throbbing echoes. And before me as I sang I saw the face and form of Ethelind Fionguala, in her jewelled bridal dress, gazing at me with burning eyes. She was pale no longer, but ruddy and warm, and life was like a flame within her. It was I who had become cold and bloodless, yet with the last life that was in me I would have sung to her of love that can never die. But at length my eyes grew dim, the room seemed to darken, the form of Ethelind alternately brightened and waxed indistinct, like the last flickerings of a fire; I swayed towards her, and felt myself lapsing into unconsciousness, with my head resting on her white shoulder."

Here Keningale paused a few moments in his story, flung a fresh log upon the fire, and then continued:

"I awoke, I know not how long afterward. I was in a vast empty room in a ruined building. Rotten shreds of drapery depended from the walls, and heavy festoons of spiders' webs gray with dust covered the windows, which were destitute of glass or sash; they had been boarded up with rough planks which had themselves become rotten with age, and admitted through their holes and crevices pallid rays of light and chilly draughts of air. A bat, disturbed by these rays or by my own movement, detached himself from his hold on a remnant of mouldy tapestry near me, and after circling dizzily round my head, wheeled the flickering noiselessness of his flight into a darker corner. As I arose unsteadily from the heap of miscellaneous rubbish on which I had been lying, something which had been resting across my knees fell to the floor with a rattle. I picked it up, and found it to be my banjo—as you see it now.

"Well, that is all I have to tell. My health was seriously impaired; all the blood seemed to have been drawn out of my veins; I was pale and haggard, and the chill— Ah, that chill," murmured Keningale, drawing nearer to the fire, and spreading out his hands to catch the warmth—"I shall never get over it; I shall carry it to my grave."—Harper's Monthly

A GHOST STORY.

Told by a Woman in the Witness Box.

An Erie, Pa., despatch says:—Seldom has a trial in the Common Pleas possessed such a peculiar interest as that of Teresa Condron vs. James Young, which has just closed with a verdict for the plaintiff. Her history is as amusing as remarkable, and from her earnestness, it is evident she believes every word of it. Ten years ago Michael Condron, a farmer of considerable means, died in Summit township. A few days before his death he made a will, bequeathing his farm and all his estate that he could will away to the Bishop of Erie, in trust for the Catholic Church. His second wife protested against this disposition of his property, but the dying man executed the will. He died three days after and dying within thirty days of making the will he defeated its purpose, and the Church could not inherit. The wife came into sole possession, her husband having no known relatives, and in a short time she married again. Death claimed her in a few months, and she bequeathed her husband's lands to a member of her own family. This person took possession and lived on the farm without interruption until a year ago, when a little old woman, from Ireland, turned up as a claimant to the estate. This was Teresa Condron, the sister of the dead Condron, and the plaintiff in the suit just tried before Judge Galbraith. Her story, told with clearness and without the slightest consciousness of absurdity, is that a year and a half ago, while serving as housekeeper to the Adjutant General of Ireland, residing in Dublin, she was startled by an apparition wearing the form of her brother Michael, who went away to America when he was still a young man. The wraith advanced, and with a mournful air said he could not rest in his grave away off in Erie, Pa., until a great wrong had been righted. Taking her hand he told her he was her brother who had been absent so many years; that he had acquired property in the United States, and, having died, could not enjoy the peace and tranquility of the grave until his farm was wrested from the usurper and given to his own flesh and blood. He commanded her if she loved him, to proceed to America and oust Young, who, the ghost said, had enjoyed unlawful possession for eight years. The spirit exacted a solemn promise that she would carry out his request and melted away in the air before her. She thought it was a dream, but the wraith appeared again on several occasions and implored her to go to Erie and save his spirit from the inquietude that had taken possession of it. He told her frauds had been committed, and instructed her to appeal to the courts. Having convinced herself that she was really being haunted by the ghost of her dead brother, she gave up her position, sold her effects, and came to the States to carry out his wishes. Her story was received as the ravings of a crank, and it was thought that she ought to be confined as a lunatic. She commenced her suit, and by dint of untiring energy she succeeded in bringing to light certain facts that impressed the court, and resulted in convincing the jury that fraud had certainly been perpetrated. It was upon these cold facts discovered that the jury were instructed to deal without regard to the old lady's ghost story. They gave Miss Teresa a verdict, and she took formal possession of the farm, and, as she thinks, gave peace to her brother's spirit. She regards the jurors as the saviours of her poor dead brother, and proposes to publish a card of thanks in behalf of the ghost.

Worry.

The disposition to worry is partly a matter of temperament, and partly a matter of habit, often partly of both temperament and habit. Some people seem born to be in a worry all the time, others seem never to take anything seriously to heart; still others worry just enough to escape contingent troubles. Where worrying is a matter of temperament, the cultivation of sound philosophy with regard to the ordinary affairs of life may do much to check it. A firm and abiding sense of the wisdom and goodness of God will serve as an antidote to it, but the removal of legitimate causes of worry will not help matters at all. The battle is to be fought in one's own soul, and it matters little how slight the precipitating cause may be. One big worry will cure many little ones, as one big sorrow swallows up all lesser ones. Where worrying is a matter of habit, the only wise thing to do is to break the habit by forming one in the opposite direction.

If we planned our lives ourselves, we might have good cause to worry. We try to plan them, but our plans are continually overruled and overborne by a power above us. We "know not what a day may bring forth," and we know that the days are full of surprises, and what we had not expected continually happens. It is right that we should daily take our bearings and see that we are steering in the proper direction; but having done this, keeping ourselves so busy enough to occupy us, and we have no time to worry over dangers already passed, or such as may be waiting us. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Each one of us has just enough capital—intellectual, moral, spiritual, physical—and no more, to operate with in the life given to us. So much of this as is needed each day's work we should invest, and allow the rest to accumulate, wasting nothing it, but investing it as it is called for by the exigencies of life. As life goes on we shall have ample opportunity to invest all our surplus of whatever sort, and whatever we waste, both principals and interest will be subtracted from the sum total of our life-end. If all the time and all the spiritual and intellectual force wasted in worrying were summed up, what a grand total would it amount to! If to this all the time and power lost by the depressing effects of worrying upon the vital powers were added, how would that grand total be swelled! Hours and days are thrown away in worrying over the future trouble that never comes, and the past trouble that can never be changed; and while we thus waste our capital of vitality, instead of providing positive good for ourselves, real troubles overtake us and give us more things to worry over.

Neither worry nor repentance for sin will remove, in this life, all the consequences of its commission. These one must bear as well as he may. When we confess and forsake sin we are promised forgiveness; but we are not promised immunity from the results of our transgression, at least from some of the results in this life, and instead of worrying over this we should rather set ourselves to bearing it with fortitude, and "turning it into the nutriment of virtue." Doubtless Moses repented taking the life of that tyranical Egyptian, and we cannot doubt but that he was forgiven, but he spent forty years in the desert because of it. We know David repented of the murder of Uriah, and was forgiven, but the "sword never departed from his house," and the lives of his four sons were required for the one life of Uriah.

St. Paul never forgot that he had once persecuted the church, and was "more abundant" in labor to establish it because he had tried to destroy it. The alcohol drunkard, the opium drunkard, the glutton, the debauchee, may never be able to repair the injuries they have done themselves, their offspring, their fellows, by their violations of the laws of life, but when they have left off their evil ways and given all that is left of them to walking in right ways, worry over the past consumes the strength they need to live well in the present, and is purely wasteful. They must be content to take up the song of life in a lower key, perhaps in a minor key, and sing it as well as they may. They must be content to walk along the lower levels of life and leave the sublimer heights to those whose vital energies have not been sapped by indulgence in evil courses.

It is necessary that we should make precautions against evil; that we should look out and provide for contingencies; that we should make the ordinary preparations for what is in the nature of things that is likely to come to us, and having done this, the next best thing is to await the coming events with serenity and presence of mind. Worrying will only upset us, waste our powers, distort our mental vision, and put us in such a state of mind as will effectually prevent the best use of our faculties.—Home Interest Dept. N. Y. Tribune.

Her Wages.

Many faithful and hard-working wives earn their own livelihood over and over by their unremitting household labor, yet they receive not a penny for it. I have known a woman to do the same amount of work in a year that her neighbor across the way hired done at three dollars per week, beside caring for a large family of children. And what wages did she get? Just enough to keep her from freezing, and not a glove or collar even found its way to her wardrobe. And yet her husband was just as well off as her neighbor, but, said he, "I never allow my money to slip through my fingers without knowing what it goes for." Was there was anything needed in the house he got it, and if his wife was not suited whose fault was it? He said that cheap dress was his patron saint, and he was too short sighted to see that the best was the cheapest; too bigoted to believe that his wife's judgment was better than his in any such matters. I never knew her to have a dollar she could call her own. If spoken to on the subject, he would say that women did not understand the use of money. I have no doubt but that many men who read this, have been in the habit of dividing the money received from the proceeds of their united labor, but there are hundreds who cram the well-filled pocket-book down into the deepest pocket with a self-satisfied air that seems to say plainer than words: "It's all mine," and long before all the plans he has been forming for its use are carried out, the poor pocket-book is entirely empty.

Athletic Girls.

The blush of health is on the [illegible] fashionable [illegible] Clara Bell [illegible] York. The pretension is that [illegible] there by rugged physical tra[illegible] the summer outing—that she [illegible] lawn tennis, pedestrianated, [illegible] trimated so much that the [illegible] truly indicative of rich, rushin[illegible] a matter of fact, it may have [illegible] on with a brush. I am told th[illegible] rouge has suddenly increas[illegible] pearl powder is correspondin[illegible] the market. It is not more th[illegible] —nay, not so much—since gl[illegible] considered desirable. Even p[illegible] earthly creatures whitened th[illegible] shaded with black under thei[illegible] themselves look like Camille[illegible] model is the roseate milkmai[illegible] is it deplorable to be strong. [illegible] is despised and muscle is exec[illegible]

"Feel that," said a friend [illegible] a parlor after her season out [illegible] She put my hand on her ar[illegible] tween the elbow and the s[illegible] skin was as smooth and white [illegible] a single thickness of lace, a[illegible] ness was charming.

"Grip hard," she command[illegible] I clasped the arm with bot[illegible] she shut her fist and drew [illegible] to her shoulder. Under [illegible] such a bunch of muscles as I [illegible] fore, except when hanging [illegible] partner in a waltz. This gir[illegible] ing daily all summer. Th[illegible] hands are calloused, and sl[illegible] gloves a whole size bigger th[illegible] but she is elated, all the sam[illegible] lift so much as a cup of tea [illegible] ing to bring up that muscle [illegible] saw her writing a letter [illegible] biceps show through the sl[illegible] at every stroke of the pen.

"And look at this," she [illegible] together in her boudoir. W[illegible] called my attention to was [illegible] walking across the room, th[illegible] muscles in her calves was vi[illegible] face of her stockings!

"What a pity you're not [illegible] in the ballet, instead of in [illegible] remarked.

"You are only envious," [illegible]

"Not a bit of it," I rep[illegible] any desire to be an athlete[illegible] won't be able to keep you[illegible] the winter."

"Won't I, Clara Belle?" [illegible] into an adjoining closet. [illegible] will do it, me guyrl."

Perhaps some of my rea[illegible] tivate their muscle, and so[illegible] make the apparatus which[illegible] You can almost fix it yours[illegible] ments are two pulleys, two[illegible] dow weights, a strong cord[illegible] plank with two holes in it. [illegible] run through tde holes in t[illegible] pend the weights. The c[illegible] by pulling at the ends of t[illegible] to assume all sorts of p[illegible] bring the whole muscular [illegible] There isn't a great amoun[illegible] deed, I should say that [illegible] board would be a delight[illegible] pared to it, but fashion m[illegible] and something or other [illegible] poses—from dumb-bells [illegible] chine—is the thing no[illegible] chamber.

The Tiger a Model

There is no nonsense a[illegible] there is about the lion[illegible] imposing on poets. W[illegible] like, pretend they are on[illegible] from want of a better br[illegible] lion swagger as if he w[illegible] than a very large cat; [illegible] descends to such prevari[illegible] self up for better than h[illegible] spect for qualities which [illegible] not possess. There is [illegible] anything he does. All [illegible] the surface. "I am," [illegible] oughly downright wild[illegible] don't like me you must [illegible] meanwhile you had be[illegible] way." There is no [illegible] of superior "intelligen[illegible] they are met with in [illegible] make-believe for the p[illegible] the traveller with thei[illegible] nimity, or waste time li[illegible] fluous roarings, shaking[illegible] ing kingly." On the c[illegible] honestly and candidly, [illegible] they are. They either[illegible] with every confession w[illegible] own fine outspoken wa[illegible] er." Nor when they [illegible] it as if they liked it, [illegible] about it—as the lion[illegible] us [illegible] away slowly t[illegible] of sight, and then bo[illegible] hound—wasting time[illegible] tudes for in trying [illegible] They have no ide[illegible] If they mean to go[illegible] ning, and don't for a [illegible] future they may be ou[illegible] other hand, they me[illegible] the stronger very littl[illegible] standing their intenti[illegible] fare deserves to be [illegible] much, wild beast, for [illegible] and keeps it, doing [illegible] has given him to do w[illegible] has only one end for [illegible] it, and to this he g[illegible] magnificent energies. [illegible] erb capabilities for ta[illegible] ing his own, he exerc[illegible] in this one direction. [illegible] for an instant that h[illegible] flying in the face of [illegible] to be thought any[illegible] Magazine.

Choked w[illegible]

A singular fatalit[illegible] Hillgate, Stockpor[illegible] Hannah Sykes, fifty[illegible] wife of John Sykes, [illegible] Lane. The unfortu[illegible] rected with paralysi[illegible] ped at a stall to pur[illegible] swallowed the first [illegible] tempting a second [illegible] ger and fall to the g[illegible] instantly conveyed [illegible] reached there it [illegible] dead, death no[illegible] through suffocation

Athletic Girls.

The blush of health is on the cheek of the really up-and-up fashionable girls of the metropolis, writes Clara Belle from New York. The pretension is that it was put there by rugged physical training during the summer outing—that she has played lawn tennis, pedestrianated, and equestrianated so much that the ruddy hue is only indicative of rich, rushing blood. As a matter of fact, it may have been painted on with a brush. I am told that the sale of rouge has suddenly increased, and that pearl powder is correspondingly a drug in the market. It is not more than a year ago—nay, not so much—since ghastliness was considered desirable. Even plume and very earthly creatures whitened their cheeks and shaded with black under their eyes, to make themselves look like Camille. Now their model is the roseate milkmaid. No loogre is at deplorable to be strong. Adipose tissue is despised and muscle is excelled.

"I feel that," said a friend whom I met in a parlor after her season out of doors.

She put my hand on her arm, midway between the elbow and the shoulder. The skin was as smooth and white as ever under a single thickness of lace, and the roundness was charming.

"Grasp hard," she commanded.

I grasped the arm with both hands. Then she shut her fist and drew it slowly up to her shoulder. Under my hands rose and fell a bunch of muscles as I never felt before, except when hanging on the brawny partner in a waltz. This girl had been rowing daily all summer. The palms of her hands are calloused, and she has to wear gloves a whole size bigger than she used to, but she is elated, all the same. She doesn't eat so much as a cup of tea without managing to bring up that muscle; and I actually saw her writing a letter and making the muscle show through the sleeve of her dress at every stroke of the pen.

"And look at this," she said, as we were together in her boudoir. What she proudly called my attention to was the fact that in walking across the room, the action of the muscles in her calves was visible on the surface of her stockings!

"What a pity you're not going to dance in the ballet, instead of in the ball-room," I remarked.

"You are only envious," was her retort.

"Not a bit of it," I replied; "I haven't any desire to be an athlete. Besides, you won't be able to keep your muscle through the winter."

"Won't I, Clara Belle?" and she led me into an adjoining closet. "There's what will do it, me guyrl."

Perhaps some of my readers wish to cultivate their muscle, and so I will tell how to make the apparatus which she showed me. You can almost fix it yourself. The requirements are two pulleys, two eight-pound window weights, a strong cord, and a strip of plank with two holes in it. The cord must run through tde holes in the plank and suspend the weights. The exercise is obtained by pulling at the ends of the cord. You are to assume all sorts of positions, so as to bring the whole muscular system into play. There isn't a great amount of fun in it. Indeed, I should say that rubbing a washboard would be a delightful diversion compared to it, but fashion makes slaves of us, and something or other for exereising purposes—from dumb-bells to a rowing-machine—is the thing now for my lady's chamber.

The Tiger a Model Wild Beast.

There is no nonsense about the tiger, as there is about the lion. He does not go composing on poets. Wolves may, if they like, pretend they are only dogs gone wrong from want of a better bringing up, and the lion swagger as if he were something more than a very large cat; but the tiger never descends to such prevarication, setting himself up for better than he is, or claiming respect for qualities which he knows he does not possess. There is no ambiguity about anything he does. All his character is on the surface. "I am," he says, "a thoroughly downright wild beast, and if you don't like me you must lump me; but in the meanwhile you had better get out of the way." There is no pompous affectation of superior "intelligence" about tigers. If they are met with in jungles, they do not make-believe for the purpose of impressing the traveller with their uncommon magnanimity, or waste time like the lion in superfluous roarings, shaking of heads, or "looking kingly." On the contrary, they behave honestly and candidly, like the wild beasts they are. They either retire precipitately with every confession of alarm, or in their own fine outspoken way "go for the stranger." Nor when they make off do they do it as if they liked it, or had any half mind about it—as the lion, that Livingstone tells us trots away slowly till it thinks itself out of sight, and then bounds off like a greyhound—wasting time in pretentious attitudes or in trying to save appearances. They have no idea of showing off. If they mean to go, they go like lightning, and don't for a moment think of the figure they may be cutting. But if, on the other hand, they mean fighting, they give the stranger very little leisure for misunderstanding their intentions. The tiger, therefore, deserves to be held in respect as a model wild beast, for he knows his station and keeps it, doing the work that Nature has given him to do with all his might. Life has only one end for him, the enjoyment of it, and to this he gives the whole of his magnificent energies. Endowed with superb capabilities for taking lives and preserving his own, he exercises them to the utmost in one direction, without ever forgetting for an instant that he is only a huge cat, or trying in the face of Providence by wishing to be thought anything else.—Belgravia Magazine.

Choked with an Oyster.

A singular fatality occurred recently at Hillgate, Stockport, to a woman named Hannah Sykes, fifty-three years of age, and wife of John Sykes, porter, living in Ridgway Place. The unfortunate woman who was attacked with paralysis on the right side, stopped at a stall to purchase some oysters. She swallowed the first one all right, but on attempting a second she was noticed to stagger and fall to the ground. The woman was instantly conveyed home, but before she reached there it was found that she was dead, death no doubt having occurred through suffocation.

PERILOUS ADVENTURE.

Captain Drevar's Attempt to Cross the Channel.

Captain Drevar, who left Dover recently in a miniature paddleboat to attempt to cross the Channel, and whose boat, it was thought, had been swamped during a heavy storm, was rescued by a passing vessel. This is the second time this month that Captain Drevar has been rescued under similar circumstances.

Captain Drevar, who has before tried the perilous experiment of attempting to cross the channel, in his miniature paddle-boat, was picked up on the first occasion on the Goodwin Sands by a Dover fishing-boat. He was landed in a very exhausted state at Dover. Captain Drevar gave the following account of the attempt:—At half-past twelve on Friday afternoon I left Dover with a strong north wind and high sea. I started from the west side of the Admiralty pier, and passed clear of the pier in a few minutes. On getting into the tide I drifted away eastward, but my boat did not ship the least bit of water. When about two miles out from land I found that she was leaking seriously, and I had to leave off paddling and attempt to bale, which kept me constantly at work. All this time I was going away to eastward at about four miles an hour. Finding I could not paddle and bale at the same time I took about a yard of canvas I had in my boat and hung it up on the two levers. I paddled with it as a sail. The little craft then moved along under sail at a nice pace, and I continued baling her out until about half-past three p.m., when I found, to my alarm, I was among Gull breakers about five miles from Dover. The boat did not ship one drop in this sea, but I noticed that she was down in the water considerably at the bows. On examination I found the fore part of the boat was full of water. The sea was getting more boisterous than ever, and the boat's nose now being under water she finally shipped seas right over her and myself. I managed to drag myself up and rest my body on the bottom of the boat, in which position I remained until picked up by a fishing smack, the Happy Return, of Walmer, Captain Arnold. I should have had to remain in the water all night had it not been for the fact that I had with me an old brass foghorn, by which I made the smack aware that I was in the water. The master of the smack said he had seen me previously in the water, but mistaking my craft for an empty barrel he did not deem it worth while stopping for it.

The Worth of Money.

Did the man get anything for his money who spent several thousand dollars for a team of horses, but who never drove them himself and cared nothing about driving? No, he got nothing for his money.

Did the man get anything for his money who, liking poultry, bought twelve hens and a rooster and spent much of his spare time "puttering about hen coops, making hen coops, repairing hen coops, whitewashing hen coops, planning new hen coops, studying treatises on poultry, comparing notes with his neighbor who kept hens and rejoicing every morning over truly fresh eggs, hot from his hen coop? Yes, he has got lots for his money and is still getting it.

Did the man get much for his money who, caring little or nothing for flowers, spent many thousands of dollars for keeping up his lawn and fancy flower garden, besides a fancy hothouse and a high salaried gardener, but who dared not cut a bouquet during the gardener's absence? No, he got very little for his money.

Does the woman on the fifth floor who has but a box of mignonette on the window sill, which she so carefully watches over and cultivates, get anything for her money? Yes, the mignonette has paid for itself one hundred times over.

Then what is money worth? Money is worth the amount of pleasure it brings. Some people have spent $100 on a Fourth of July spree, and got only a headache for it. Others have bought a cheaper article of the same sort for $2, and realized comfort at the rate of five cents a minute. The main point is to use wisdom with a big "W" in the expenditure of cash. The wise man seeth green apples on the stand, but avoids them and clears the colic. The simple boy passeth on. He seeth. He buyeth. He eateth, and soon he crampeth. Money is not all. Oh, no. But money and knowledge how to use it are a great deal.—New York Graphic.

The Discovery of Lithography.

After the first triumphant performance of Mozart's opera of Don Juan at Munich, the theatre was deserted by all except one man. Alois Sennefelder had still much to do. After looking around the stage to see that no sparks had ignited about the theatre, he retired to his room to stamp the theatre tickets for the following day.

As he entered the room he had in his hands a polished whetstone for razors, which he had purchased, a ticket stamp, moistened with printer's ink, and a check on the theatre treasury for a week's salary. He placed the check on a table, when a gust of wind took it, swept it high up in his room for a moment, and then deposited it in a basin filled with water.

Sennefelder took the wet paper and dried it as well as he could, and then, to make sure of it, weighted it down with the whetstone on which he had carelessly before put the printing.

Returning the following morning, he was surprised to see the letters of the stamp printed accurately on the damp paper. He gazed long at the check. A sudden thought flashed through his brain. He wondered if, by some such means, he could not save himself the weary trouble he continually had copying the songs of the chorus.

That very morning he went and purchased a large stone, and commenced to make experiments, and finally succeeded in discovering the neat and useful art of printing from stone lithography.

To a person of weak organization a little sleep in the middle of the day is beneficial. If taken after dinner it should not follow the meal immediately. It were better to adopt a late dinner hour, say three o'clock, and take the nap before eating. A debilitated nervous system will generally be benefited by such a practice.

Printing Fabrics in Japan.

The means employed for figuring fabrics would, to our mechanical manufacturers, appear so ridiculously primitive and roundabout as only to produce a laugh. Yet these fabrics have the subtle charm of handiwork denied to our correctly-printed designs. No doubt our machines are marvels of scientific adjustment but in the commonest Japanese cotton the tiresome uniformity we studiously aim at is on principle avoided. Stenciling is largely employed, and in a great variety of ways and variations of manner. A printer will cut out a series of leaves in paper, and lay them on his material, then bury them by means of a trowel in a sort of thick "resist." The leaves are afterward carefully removed with a pin, and when the "resist" is dry the fabric can be put in the dye-vat and the leaves made of their natural color. One of the most curious processes to watch is when the artist employs a sort of bird-lime, instead of thread, to outline his design.

He takes a small piece of this glutinous mixture on a skewer, touches the point where he wishes to begin, and draws a thread of convenient length. Placing the middle finger of the left hand under the fabric, he can let the ductile thread drop to any part of the stuff, and so go on forming the design even to such minute details as the stamens of flowers. This sticky substance can be drawn out to any length, like candy sugar, and kept an even thickness if necessary. When it is desirable to increase the breadth of the lines, a conical tube of oiled paper filled with the mucilage is used, from which a wider thread can be gradually dropped along. When the outline is finished the colors are added. The fabric is then steamed, and the outline removed by being rinsed in fresh water. If the ground is to be dyed, the paintings are covered with a "resist" before immersion. In pieces of silk, no matter what length, and even where the pattern is repeated, the outlines are done by hand.

A Morning Paper.

Sometimes a man throws his morning paper down on the seat and leaves the car. Each man that has no paper wants it, and each man would grab it, if alone and unobserved. The one who appears to be looking out of a window in an opposite direction is the man who sees that paper more distinctly than anyone else. And he being the man who seems less interested in it is really the man who wants it most. As soon as that paper is thrown down it becomes an object of interest. The man who never buys or reads a paper wants it, and wants it badly. The man sitting next to it looks straight ahead, and doesn't seem to know anything about it. But he is just quivering with excitement. He is wrought up to the highest pitch, and is prepared to grab for that paper just as soon as the man on the other side of it makes a similar attempt. Just at this period a man sitting opposite the paper gives it a sharp exciting look, as though he has seen his name printed wrong. Then he gives another sharper look, and his eyes snap with excitement, and he reaches over and picks it up to see if he is right. You can tell by the way he handles it that he never paid for it; and he gradually gets it up in front of his face, and turns it at intervals, and is as much at home with it as though it was his own. And the other men look at him sourly, and silently condemn him as being largely porcine in his nature.—Puck.

Regimes in France.

Since the accession of Louis XVI., in 1774, nineteen years have never yet passed without a violent change in the Government of France. In the summer of 1774 Louis XVI., ascended the throne of France; in rather less than nineteen years after—namely, in January, 1793—he was beheaded, and France had a republic until 1804, when Napoleon I. became Emperor. The first empire lasted till 1814, when the monarchy was restored in the person of Louis XVIII. His power came to an end a few months later, on the return of Napoleon from Elbain the spring of 1815. Napoleon being defeated at Waterloo, and France overrun by the allied powers of Europe, Louis XVIII. was again restored to the throne; and he and his successor, Charles X., reigned till 1830, when another revolution occurred, and Charles X. lost his crown, which passed to the younger branch of the Bourbon family in the person of Louise Philippe. He reigned eighteen years, till 1848, when he in his turn had to fly, and the second republic was established, only to perish in December, 1851, after an existence of less than four years. The second empire lasted nearly nineteen years—from the 2nd of December, 1851, to the 4th of September, 1870—and then it, too, perished. Never for more than a hundred years has one regime in France lasted as long as nineteen years. The first and second republics and the first empire all fell short of this.

The Mother Hubbard Dress

This is the way of it: Old Mother Hubbard went to the cubbard, to get her poor dorg a bone, but when she got there the cubbard was bare, and so the poor dorg had none. She was in a great stew to know what to dew, for of money she had not a sent; so she sold her last suit to buy meet for her bruit, and up town in her nightgown she went. All the ladies who saw it and the strings for to draw it, declared it the nicest thing out; so now on the street, looking ever so "schweet," in their gowns they go racing about.

A Military Man Made Happy.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—General C. C. Knifin, in a letter stating his wife was cured of a painful ailment by St. Jacobs Oil, writes that after witnessing its magical cure of pain, he would cheerfully pay $100 for a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, if he could not get it cheaper.

It has been said that William K. Vanderbilt was in financial distress. We don't know just exactly what the report means unless it is that he has more money than he knows how to spend.

They all tell the same story. Mr. W. Thompson, Jeweller, Delhi, suffered for years from Dyspepsia, got no relief until he used Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. He says 'twas just the medicine I needed. It has cured me."

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

F. E. DIXON & CO.,
Manufacturers of Star Rivet
Leather Belting!
70 King Street, East, Toronto.
Large double Driving Belts a specialty. Send for Price Lists and Discounts.

CONSUMPTION!
Asthma, Bronchitis, Throat Diseases, and Catarrh.
Together with diseases of the Eye, Ear and Heart, successfully treated at the Ontario Pulmonary Institute,
274, 276 and 278 Jarvis Street.
M. HILTON WILLIAMS, M.D., M.C.P.S.O., PROPRIETOR.
Our system of practice is by Medicated Inhalations, combined with proper constitutional remedies. Over 40,000 cases treated during the past 18 years.
If impossible to call personally for an examination, write for list of Questions and a copy of our new Medical Treatise. Address, ONTARIO PULMONARY INSTITUTE, 274, 276 and 278 Jarvis street, Toronto, Ontario.

OAKLAWN FARM,
The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in the World.
Percheron-Norman Horses
WORTH $2,500,000.00
Imported from France and Bred since 1872, by
M. W. DUNHAM,
Wayne, Du Page Co., Illinois,
35 miles West of Chicago, on C. & N.-W. R'y.

Prices low for quality of stock, and EVERY STALLION GUARANTEED A BREEDER.
390 Imported the Past Three Months. consisting of finest animals, with choicest pedigrees. Registered in the Percheron Stud Book of France, and the Percheron-Norman Stud Book of the United States. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue No. 20

A. B. FLINT
Sells all kinds of Black Silk Wholesale price. A good Black Silk, wide width, at $1.25. Send cash with order, and express will be paid to any part of Canada.
35 COLBORNE ST

A. B. FLINT
Sells Black Cashmere at Wholesale Price. Our 50 cent French Blue-Black Cashmere is worth 67½ cents. Send for 8 or 10 yards as sample, and see for yourself.
35 COLBORNE ST

A. B. FLINT
Sells all Colors in Velveteens. Our 65 cent Black Louis Velveteen is worth 90 cents a yard. Send for a Dress length, and see for yourself. All kinds of Dress Goods kept in stock. You can save $1 a pair on good Lace Curtains, by sending an order to 35 COLBORNE ST.

A. B. FLINT
is the only wholesale man in Canada selling to consumers direct, and cash will be returned if goods are not as represented.
35 COLBORNE ST.

A. B. FLINT, - TORONTO.

PLASTERERS WANTED!
$2.50 per day. Steady Work. Apply immediately. M. J. HYNES & BRO., 88 York St., Toronto.

THE BOILER INSPECTION
—AND—
INSURANCE CO. OF CANADA,
Also Consulting Engineers. Insurance granted against Explosion, covering boilers, buildings and machinery. Inspections made at periodical intervals. Authorized capital, $500,000. Head office, Mechanics' Institute, Toronto. JOHN GALT, C.E. and M.E., General Manager. A. FRASER, Secretary-Treas. GEO. C. ROBB Chief Engineer.

DALLEY'S SYRUP OF HOREHOUND & ELECAMPANE
POSITIVE CURE for COUGHS, COLDS, AND ALL LUNG DISEASES.

Rx No 66.
Endorsed by the FRENCH ACADEMY OF MEDICINE.
For Inflammation of the Urinary Organs, caused by Indiscretion or Exposure. Hotel Dieu Hospital, Paris, Treatment. Positive Cure in one to three days. Local Treatment only required. No nauseous doses of Cubebs or Copaiba.
INFALLIBLE, HYGIENIC, CURATIVE, PREVENTIVE.
Price $1.50, including Bulb Syringe. Sold by all Druggists, or sent free by mail, securely sealed, on receipt of price, Descriptive Treatise free on application. AMERICAN AGENCY "66" MEDICINE CO., DETROIT, MICH., or WINDSOR, ONT. Sold by all Druggists.

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS
—OF THE—
WHITE STAR LINE
Are all of them without exception among the Largest and Fastest of Ocean Steamers. They were constructed with special reference to the conveyance of passengers, and for Safety Comfort or Speed, are unexcelled. They are specially noted for the regularity of their rapid passages in all weather. The steerage accommodations are of the highest order, the ventilation perfect; and every provision has been made for the comfort and protection of the passengers. In addition to the total and absolute separation of the single men and women, except on deck, the married compartment has been so remodelled and arranged that every married couple or family has a little private room to itself. For particulars apply to the company's agents at all towns in Ontario, or to T. W. JONES, General Agent, 23 York street, Toronto.

THE BEST HORSE REMEDIES
TRADE MARK. are those made by
THE ELLIS SPAVIN CURE CO.
Every owner of one or more horses can save a large amount of time and money by having on hand a good supply of Ellis's Horse Remedies, and to supply a general demand we would announce that we will send the following by express (on receipt of the money, or C.O.D. and return charges): $6.50 for $5; 1 box, 12 pounds Medicated Food, $1; 2 bottles Spavin Cure, $2; 2 boxes Large Condition Powders, $1; 2 boxes Worm Powders, $1; 1 box Heave Powder, 50c.; 1 box Colic Powder, 50c.; 1 box Hoof Ointment 50c.—$6.50. J. H. Whitson & Son, 24th St., N. Y., says: "We have used Ellis's Spavin Cure in our stables for two years, and have tried it on the following with perfect success: Splints, curbs, ring bones, bunches on the neck, swelled ankles, also quincy, sore throat, and for general stable liniment it is the best article we have ever used." For further particulars, free books, etc., write to
ELLIS SPAVIN CURE COMPANY,
50 Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.;
or 276 Fourth Avenue, New York

$8 50. $8 50.
BALLARD RIFLES.
We have imported an immense quantity of Ballard Carbine Rifles, 44 calibre, using the long cartridge, which will kill at 500 yards. Length of barrel 22 inches, full length 47 inches; weight 6½ lbs. The barrels are made of the best steel; nothing to get out of order; excellent value, and gives every satisfaction. They cost the U. S. Government to make by the thousand twice the price we sell them for. The U. S. having replaced them with repeating rifles.
CHAS. STARK,
[illegible]-STREET, TORONTO.
Agent for the Winchester Repeating Arms Co. The only Store in the Dominion where a full and complete line of every description of Fire-Arms and Sporting Goods is kept.
Send for our 96-page Catalogue, containing over 600 illustrations of Firearms, Silverware Watches, Jewellery, etc.

SONGS, One Cent Each

5	The Old Cabin Home.	118	Kiss Me, Kiss Your Darling.
6	The Little Ones at Home.	120	A Flower from Mother's Grave.
12	See That My Grave's Kept Green.	124	The Old Log Cabin in the Hill.
13	Grandfather's Clock.	130	Coming Thro' the Rye.
18	Where Was Moses when the Light	131	Must We Then, Meet as Strangers
24	Come By and By. [Went Out.	178	The Kiss Behind the Door.
26	Good Evening, Emma. [Maggie.	184	I Remember You, Love, In My
37	When you and I were Young	146	You May Look but Must'n Touch.
39	When I Saw Sweet Nellie Home.	150	There's Always a Seat in the Parlor for You.
48	Take this Letter to My Mother.	152	I've no Mother Now, I'm Weeping
49	A Model Love Letter.—comic.	156	Mamie's in the Cold, cold Ground.
53	Wife's Commandments.—comic.	159	Say a Kind Word When You Can.
54	Husband's Commandments.	165	I Cannot Sing the Old Songs.
56	Little Old Log Cabin in the Lane.	166	Norah O'Neal.
58	Marching Through Georgia.	167	Waiting, My Darling, for Thee.
60	Widow in the Cottage by the Sea.	169	Jennie the Flower of Kildare.
65	The Minstrel Boy.	170	I'm Lonely Since My Mother Died
70	Take Back the Heart.	172	Tenting on the Old Camp Ground.
72	The Faded Coat of Blue. [Night.	176	Don't You Go, Tommy, To-Night
77	My Old Kentucky Home. Good	180	Willie, We have Missed You.
84	I'll be all Smiles to-Night Love.	186	Over the Hills to the Poor House.
86	Listen to the Mocking Bird.	185	Don't be Angry with Me, Darling.
93	Her Bright Smile Haunts Me Still.	191	Flirtation of the Fan.
94	Sunday Night When the Parlor's	194	Why did She Leave Him? Father.
95	The Gypsy's Warning. [Full.	196	Thou Hast Learned to Love Another.
102	'Tis But a Little Faded Flower	208	There's None Like a Mother.
104	The Girl I Left Behind Me.	204	You Were False, but I'll Forgive.
105	Little Buttercup.	209	Whisper Softly, Mother's Dying.
107	Carry Me Back to Old Virginny	214	Will You Love Me, When I'm Old.
112	The Old Man's Drunk Again.	220	Annie Laurie.
116	I Am Waiting, Essie Dear.	222	Sherman's March to the Sea.
119	Take Me Back to Home & Mother	224	Come, Birdie, Come.
120	Come, Sit by My Side, Darling.	228	Love Among the Roses.
		232	Oh, Aunt Chloe, Dat's Nothing by Dat's
		238	Sailor's Grave [in the Garden
		242	Farmer's Daughter; or Chickens
		243	Oh! Dem Golden Slippers.
		246	Poor, but a Gentleman Still.
		249	Sold; to Darling but Mine.
		257	Put My Little Shoes Away.
		262	Darling Nellie Gray.
		265	Little Brown Jug.
		266	Bay Bolt.
		271	Good Bye Sweetheart.
		269	Sadie Ray.
		270	Tim Finigan's Wake.
		273	The Hat My Father Wore.
		275	I've Only Been Down to the Club
		277	Kiss Me Again.
		279	The Vacant Chair.
		280	The Sweet Sunny South.
		283	Come Home Father.
		284	Little Maggie May.
		288	Molly Bawn.
		288	Sally In Our Alley.
		290	Poor Old Ned.
		292	Man in the Moon is Looking.
		295	Broken Down.
		300	My Little One's Waiting for Me.
		301	I'll Go Back to my Old Love Again
		302	The Butcher Boy.
		305	I'm Going Back to Dixie.
		308	Where Is My Boy To-Night.
		310	The Five Cent Share.
		319	Linger, Not Darling.
		326	Dancing in the Sunlight.

We will send by mail, post-paid, any ten of these Songs for 10 cents, fifty for 30 cents, a one hundred for 50 cents, 250 for $1, 1,000 for $2.50, all post-paid by mail. Remember we will not send less than ten of these songs by mail. Order songs by the number in rotation. Valuable Catalogue of Songs and Agents goods mailed free. Stamps taken.
P. O. BOX 1,120. JAMES LEE & CO., MONTREAL, P.Q.

Markdale monthly Cattle FAIR.

A regular Monthly Cattle Fair will be held in the Agricultural Grounds, Markdale, as follows:

—1 3—

SATURDAY	.....	Nov. 3
Do.	.....	Dec. 8

MARKDALE
Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats!

on hand, at the
Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and delivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23, 1882. 80-1y

Health is Wealth!

Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment, a guaranteed specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Fits, Nervous Neuralgia, Headache, Nervous Prostration caused by the use of alcohol or tobacco, Wakefulness. Mental Depression, Softening of the Brain, resulting in Insanity and leading to misery, decay and death, Premature Old Age, Barrenness, Loss of Power in either sex, Involuntary losses and Spermatorrhœa, caused by over-exertion of the brain, self-abuse or over-indulgence. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser a written guarantee to refund the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by A. Turner &Co., ole authorized Agent for Markdale Ont. John C. West &Co. sole proprietor Toronto.Ont.

ROBT. ASKIN,
MARKDALE,

Has opened out a First-Class

UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,

And therefore has supplied a want long felt,

COFFINS,
CASKETS, SHROUDS,
and all
FUNERAL FURNISHINGS
supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse
for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—
PICTURE FRAMING
Done on short notice.

ROBT. ASKIN.

ALEX KAY
BOOT & SHOE
MAKER,
MILL STREET
MARKDALE.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and Positively cures Piles. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by A. Turner & Co

SEEING IS BELIEVING.

GENTLEMEN,—
If you want a first-class
Buggie or Wagon
call at
MCKENNA & MASON'S
CARRIAGE WORKS
MARKDALE.
They can supply you with anything from a
Lumber Wagon
up to
Extension Top Phæton.

To buy from them is o
SAVE MONEY!

They are both practical workmen, and employ none but
PRACTICAL WORKMEN

They guarantee their work
Second to none for Lightness of Draught and Superiority of Finish.

They use nothing but First-class White Oak for Wagons, and thrice Extra Second Growth Hickory for light work.

The immense amount of work turned out of McKenna & Mason's shop is sufficien proof of the wide reputation they enjoy for doing good work.
THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END
Poor cheap work we positively will not take.

Special attention given to Re-Trimming and Repainting all classes of Carriage Work.

Satisfaction guaranteed (or No Pay) in
HORSESHOEI NG
SHOP—On Mill Street opposite to Sproule's Hotel.

McKENNA & MASON.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Wilson Benson
— OF THE —
Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the
CHOICEST TEAS
In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.
DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,
Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

WILSON BENSON.
July 6, 1882.

THE BEST PLACE
TO GET
A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the
Markdale - Gallery.

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON. - ARTIST.

T. G. & B. RAILWAY.
TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NORTH. Read Down.			GOING SOUTH. Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	Toronto	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	Cardwell Junc.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	Orangeville...	8 27	6 50
10 20	8 44	Mount Forest..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	Teeswater	5 00	2 45
11 50	9 30	Flesherton	6 43	4 47
12 00	8 45	Markdale,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	Owen Sound....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE, General Manager

Moody in London.

SUCCESSFUL MEETINGS HELD YESTERDAY GREAT ENTHUSIASM.

London, Eng., Nov. 4.—Moody successfully opened his great mission at Islington to-day. Four meetings were held, each attended by from 4000 to 6000 persons. The iron hall built for the occasion proved a complete success, affording seating room to 5800. All around on the sides of the hall appropriate texts were displayed. Sakey sang with his customary effect. Moody's powerful address showed he had not lost his hold on the people. A hundred people rose to be prayed for. A heavy storm in the afternoon and evening somewhat diminished the attendance but unfailing interest was manifested. A number of prominent clergymen occupied seats on the platform. Moody, alluding to his mission in Ireland, said his three weeks' work there had been the most productive of his life. At the close of the evening meeting a man shouted that Moody's last mission in England had been a failure. Moody answered by calling for volunteers to come out boldly on the Lord's side, whereupon about 3000 men rose en masse. The incident caused much excitement.—Toronto World.

Cheated out of a Month's Pay.

Union station was invaded early yesterday morning by a party of French Canadians numbering 180. They had been working for a month up near Port Arthur, but their employers failed to pay them, and they left the place in disgust and without money. The mayor of Owen Sound got them down on the Grey and Bruce railway, and now they want to go on to Montreal. They passed the night at the immigrant sheds. The question is how will the get east.—World.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Quick, Now.—You can have either the weekly Mail or Globe with the Standard to the end of 1884 for $2, Cash. Be alive and secure the balance of the year free which is worth 50 cents.

Charlie Ross is again to the fore. A young man of 18 claims that he is the very person. The story has a very fishy appearance. Still one never knows. It is greatly more likely that Charlie Ross has long ere this found a grave.

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND
is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate. It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING
Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-fiive cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.
From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

If you wish to subscribe for the Globe, Mail, Star, Farmer's Advocate or Montreal Witness or renew your subscription for any of the above papers hand in your name and subscription to this office.

WORTHY OF PRAISE.
As a rule we do not recommend Patent Medicines, but when we know of one that really is a public benefactor, and does positively cure, then we consider it our duty to impart that information to all. Electric Bitters are truely a most valuable medicine, and will surely cure Billiousness, Fever and Ague, Stomach, Liver and Kidney Complaints, even when all other remedies fail. We know whereof we speak, and can freely recommend them to all.—Ecch.—Sold at fifty cents a bottle, by A. Turner & Co.

FREE OF COST.
All persons wishing to test the merits of a great remedy—one that will positively cure Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, or any affection of the Throat and Lungs—are requested to call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption free of cost, which will show you what a regular dollar-size bottle will do.

It is now definitely announced that the Dominion Parliament will meet on the 17th of January.

GIVEN AWAY.
We cannot help noticing the liberal offer made to all invalids and sufferers by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. You are requsted to call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store, and get a Trial Bottle free of cost, if you are suffering with Consumption, Severe Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Loss of Voice, Hoarseness, or any affection of the Throat or Lungs. It will positively cure you.

MARKDALE
PLANING, SASH, DOOR AND FURNITURE FACTORY.

Lumber Planed or Matched While Waiting.

Sash, Doors, and Mouldings always on hand or made to Order. All kinds of lumber, Lath and Shingles kept in stock. Furniture of all descriptions to be seen at our Warerooms. Lumber and cordwood will be taken in exchange for Furniture.

George Grant & Co.,
Proprietors.

Robt. S. Rae,
TAILOR,
SYDENHAM STREET,
MARKDALE.

—Good Work Guaranteed—
—AT—
Bulmers Photograph Gallery
FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we are not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at
JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

MORTGAGE SALE
— OF —
Valuable Farm Property
— IN THE —
Township of Glenelg.

Under the power of sale in a certain mortgage from John Travers to the vendors, which will be produced at the time of sale, and on default being made in payment of the money, thereby secured, there will be offered for sale by Public Auction, at the

MIDDAUGH HOUSE HOTEL
— IN THE —
TOWN OF DURHAM
—ON—
Tuesday Nov. 20th, 1883

AT TWELVE O'CLOCK, NOON,
By HUGH MACKAY, Auctioneer,
The following property, viz:

The Southerly part of Lot No. 9, in Con. 9, of the said Township of Glenelg, containing 31 43/100 acres, more more or less, more particularly described by metes and bounds in said mortgage which is regestered as number 2182, also the Southerly part of lot No. 8 in said concession 9, of said Township containing 50 acres more or less and more particularly described by metes and bounds in said regestered Mortgage. About 15 acres are said to be cleared and under cultivation, and well fenced. On the premises are said to be a frame house, barn, stable and sheds in good repair also large orchard. Terms—10 per cent at the time of sale, 15 per cent within one month thereafter and the balance to be secured by the Mortgage of the premises payable in five equal annual intalments with interest at 7 per cent yearly, or such other terms as may be agreed upon at the time of sale. For further particulars apply to David Jackson, Jr., Esq., Durham, or to FALCONBRIDGE & BARWICK Vendors Solicitors,

Toronto Oct 30th 1883.

325 ACRES | Foothill Nurseries | 325 ACRES
THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address
STONE & WELLINGTON,
161-75 Toronto, Ont.

STARTLING DISCOVERY!
LOST MANHOOD RESTORED.

A victim of youthful imprudence causing Premature Decay, Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, etc., having tried in vain every known remedy, has discovered a simple self-cure, which he will send FREE to his fellow-sufferers, address J. H. REEVES, 43 Chatham St., N. Y.

THOS. MA. HEWS,
Harness Establishment
MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!
IN CONNECTION.

CALCINED PLASTER,
—OR—
Plaster Paris,

One car of Nova Scotia, all best and cheapest in the market.

Machine Oils and Paint
OILS AT CLOSE PRICES.
H. PARKER'S
Drugstore - DURHAM.

ONLY $2.00
—FOR—
THE STANDARD
—AND—
The Farmers' Advocate
AND HOME MAGAZINE,

Together with a copy of the Farmers' Hand-Book for 1884, advertised in this paper. Without a rival in Canada, and unsurpassed in America, for Stock Raiser, Dairyman, Fruit Grower.

We are enabled, by a special arrangement, to offer that well-known agricultural paper, The Farmer's Advocate, now in its 19th year of publication, clubbed with this journal for the above small sum.

"SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS."

The Advocate is the acknowledged agricultural authority of Canada, and combines with, under its Home Magazine department, the best family paper published in the Dominion. Its motto—

"PLAIN, PRACTICAL AND PAYING INFORMATION," and its best energies are devoted to the interest of the farmer and his family. Over 400 pages every year. Just what is wanted for every owner of farm, Garden, or Orchard.

IMPROVEMENTS IN EACH DEPARTMENT IN 1884.

SUBSCRIBE NOW.
Balance of the year FREE. Send for sample copy.

VOL. 4.
The Markda
IS PUBL
EVERY THURSD
At Markdale
$1 Per
IN ADVA
C. W. R
Edi

SAMUEL W
WELL DIGGER A orders prompt dence—Snider's Hill, O

B. Ghent, M.D., M
Physician and S
Graduate of Univers
" "
Hon. Graduate, of th
" " A
" " Optari
Member Coll. Physicians

J. P. MARSH
DENT GRADUATE OF
of Dentistry, w
Hotel, Markdale, on th
nesday of each month a Hotel, Flesherton, th
third Wednesday in ea
tice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883.

Frost &
BARRISTERS, AN Law, Solicitors
ancers, &c., Owen Sou Flesherton, Office
heretofore.
ALFRED FROST,
County Crown A

J. MA
BARRISTER, MAS
in Chancery, No
cer, &c.
A NUMBER
OFFICES—Owen Sou
Poulett St.; Branch o
McFarland's Sto
every week.

Creasor &
BARRI
Ances, &c., &c.
OFFICES in over W. F. Wel
MARK
Over W. J. McFarlan and Friday of ea
Funds to JOHN CREASOR,
Markdale, Ma

Alexand
ISSUER of Marria
Life Insurance
in B. R. &c.
Auctioneer for the Merchants, and tended to and charg
Priceville, Sept. 17,

Wm.
ISSUER OF MAR
Commissioner in Conveyancing in al attended to and carefu
N. B.—Money to L
curity.

W. C. RI
BUILDER, CON
TECT.—Reside
dale.
Markdale, Jan. 24t

MISS.
DRESS A
RO
DUNLOP'S BU
All kinds of ladies made in the Wedding Suits

William M
BOOT AND SHO
MARKDA
Orders promptly work a specialty.
Terms strictly cash.
opposite Revere Hot

JOHN MARK GENER'L
HORSE A SPE

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 10. MARKDALE, ONT., NOV. 15. 1883. No. 166.

The Markdale Standard

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY THURSDAY EVENING,

At Markdale Ontario.

$1 Per Annum

IN ADVANCE.

C. W. RUTLEDGE.

EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O.
Physician and Surgeon, Priceville.
Graduate of University. Vict. College.
" " New York, and
Hon. Graduate, of the same,
" " Ayleth Medical Institute.
" " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y.
Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J.P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.

DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.

January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.

ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCERS, &c. &c.

OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolt's Store and in

MARKDALE;

Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.

Funds to lend on reasonable terms.

JOHN CREASOR, Q.C. DUNCAN MORRISON

Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown,

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.

Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.

Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.

N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

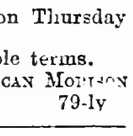
BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

MISS. GREEN,

DRESS AND MANTLE ROOMS.

DUNLOP'S BUILDING MARKDALE.



All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.

Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

William McLeod,

BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,

MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel.

159-3m

JOHN NOBLE,

MARKDALE,

GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING

A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,

MARKDALE.

M. BYRNES

PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large ommercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE

(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)

CHATSWORTH, Ont.

C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.

PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's

THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,

CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of

BRICK AND STONE WORK,

Plain Ornamental Plastering.

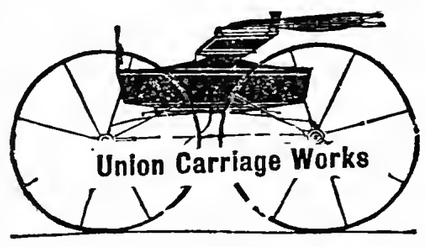
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.

Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

GEORGE WILSON,

Wholesale and Retail



{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.

FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.

Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from

FIRST CLASS MATERIAL

In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with

English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs

will receive prompt attention.

All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time consistent with good workmanship.

GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.

Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside

D. J. SHANAHAN,

Proprietor

Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

ONLY $2.00

—FOR—

THE STANDARD

—AND—

The Farmers' Advocate

AND HOME MAGAZINE,

Together with a copy of the Farmers' Hand Book for 1884, advertised in this paper. Without a rival in Canada, and unsurpassed in Arerica, for Stock Raiser, Dairyman, Fruit Grower.

We are enabled, by a special arrangement, to offer that well-known agricultural paper, THE FARMER'S ADVOCATE, now in its 19th year of publication, clubbed with this journal for the above small sum.

"SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS."

The Advocate is the acknowledged agricultural authority of Canada. and combines with, under its Home Magazine department, the best family paper published in the Dominion. Its motto—

"PLAIN, PRACTICAL AND PAYING INFORMATION," and its best energies are devoted to the interest of the farmer and his family. Over 400 pages every yeai. Just what is wanted for every owner of farm, Garden, or Orchard.

IMPROVEMENTS IN EACH DEPARTMENT IN 1884.

SUBSCRIBE NOW.

Balance of the year FREE. Send for sample copy.

EUGENIA

Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made eqtensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.

GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND

Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.

LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.

Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted

69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

MORTGAGE SALE

—OF—

Valuable Farm Property

—IN THE—

Township of Glenelg.

Under the power of sale in a certain mortgage from John Travers to the vendors, which will be produced at the time of sale, and on default being made in payment of the money, thereby secured, there will be offered for sale by Public Auction, at the

MIDDAUGH HOUSE HOTEL

—IN THE—

TOWN OF DURHAM

—ON—

Tuesday Nov. 20th, 1883

AT TWELVE O'CLOCK, NOON,

By HUGH MACKAY, Auctioneer,

The following property, viz:

The Southerly part of Lot No. 9, in Con. 9, of the said Township of Glenelg, containing 31 43/100 acres, more more or less, more particularly described by metes and bounds in said mortgage which is regestered as number 2182, also the Southerly part of lot No. 8 in said concession 9. of said Township containing 50 acres more or less and more particularly described by metes and bounds in said regestered Mortgage. About 13 acres are said to be cleared and under cultivation, and well fenced. On the premises are said to be a frame house, barn, stable and sheds in good repair also large orchard. Terms—10 per cent at the time of sale, 15 per cent within one month thereafter and the balance to be secured by the Mortgage of the premises payable in five equal annual instalments with interest at 7 per cent yearly, or such other terms as may be agreed upon at the time of sale. For further particulars apply to DAVID JACKSON, Jr., Esq., Durham, or to FALCONBRIDGE & BARWICK Vendora Solicitors,

Toronto Oct 30th 1883.

$500 Reward!

We will pay the above reward for any case of Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Constipation or Costiveness we cannot cure with West's Vegetable Liver Pills, when the directions are strictly complied with. They are purely Vegetable, and never fail to give satisfaction. Sugar Coated, Large Boxes, containing 30 Pills, 25 cts. For sale by all Druggists. Beware of counterfeits and immitations. The genuine manufactured only by JOHN C. WEST & CO., "The Pill Makers," 81 & 83 King St. East, Toronto, Ont. Free trial package sent by mail prepaid on receipt of a 3 cent stamp. For sale at Turner &Co. Drug Store,

IN THE GOODS AND CHATTELS

—OF—

JOHN KIRKPATRICK,

(DECEASED.)

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to Section 34, of Chapter 107, R. S. O. the creditors of John Kirkpatrick, late of the township of Euphrasia, County of Grey, deceased, who died on or about the 21st Oct. 1883, and all parties having claims upon his estate are, on or before the

FIFTEENTH DAY OF DECEMBER, 1883

to send by post, prepaid, to Richard Woods, Rocklyn P. O., in the County of Grey, one of the executors, of the personal estate and effects of deceased, their christian and surnames, addresses and description, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and nature of the securities (if any) held by them, and in default thereof the assets of the said deceased will be distributed, having regard only to the claims then received, or those of them which the executors then have notice.

JOS. MANAREY, } Executors.
RICH. WOODS. }

Dated this 5th day of November, 1883.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,

BANKERS,

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.

Allowed on Savings Deposits.

☞Drafts issued and Collections made on points, at lowest rates.

W.M. LUCAS,
Manager.

September 23. 1880. 2-ly

READY DECEMBER 1ST, 1883

—THE—

FARMER'S HAND BOOK

FOR 1884.

(Copyright secured.)

A COMPLETE RECORD OF FARM OPERATIONS.

This book will contain blank pages, ruled, so that the farmer can keep a correct diary of his farm accounts, of his purchases and sales of his produce, sales of live stock, grain. dairy, fruit, and poultry; also a calendar for 1884, giving the moon's changes, and also many useful tables, receipts, with memoranda pages, &c., for the farmers, not found in any other single book.

A NECESSITY TO EVERY INTELLIGENT FARMER.

PRICE, 25 CENTS EACH.

Address—

THE FARMER'S ADVOCATE,
360 Richmond Street,
LONDON, ONT., CANADA.

325 ACRES | Fonthill Nurseries | 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address

STONE & WELLINGTON,
161-75 Toronto, Ont.

THOS. MATHEWS,

HarnesS EstablishmenT

MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!

IN CONNECTION.

STARTLING DISCOVERY!

LOST MANHOOD RESTORED.

A victim of youthful imprudence causing Premature Decay, Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, etc., having tried in vain every known remedy, has discovered a simple self cure, which he will send FREE to his fellow-sufferers, address J. H. REEVES, 43 Chatham St., N. Y.

The Property Qualification of Councillors.

A change was made in the property qualification of municipal councillors at last session of the Ontario Legislature, the particulars of which may prove interesting to our readers, as our municipal election is drawing nigh. The change made really does not effect the qualification that has been in force for several years past, but merely provides for the election of others in certain circumstances in addition to those possessed of the old qualification, which is still in force, as will be seen by the following extracts from pages 131 and 132 of the Ontario statutes of 1883:—

"73. The persons qualified to be elected Mayors, Aldermen, Reeves, Deputy-Reeves, and Councillors of any Municipality, shall be such persons as reside within the municipality or within two miles thereof, and are natural born or naturalized subjects of Her Majesty, and males of the full age of 21 years, and are not disqualified under this Act, and have, at the time of their election, in their own right, or in the right of their wives, as proprietors or tenants, a legal or equitable freehold or leasehold, or partly freehold or partly leasehold, or partly legal and partly equitable, rated on their own names on the last revised assessment roll of the Municipality to at least the value following, over and above all charges, liens, and encumbrances affecting the same:

(1) In incorporated villages—Freehold to $600, or leasehold to $1,200,

(2) In Towns—Freehold to $800, or leasehold to $1,600,

(3) In cities—Freehold to $1,500, or leasehold to $3,000,

(4) In Townships—Freehold to $400, or leasehold to $800.

And so in the same proportions in all Municipalities, in case the property is partly freehold and partly leasehold."

To the foregoing has been added the following new sub-section:

"But if with any Township any such person is at the time of election in actual occupation of any such freehold rate in his own name on the last revised assessment roll of said township, he will be entitled to be elected as Reeve, Deputy-Reeve or Councillor of said Township if the value at which such freehold is actually rated in said assessment roll amounts to not less than $4000, and for this purpose the said value shall not be affected or reduced by any lien, incumbrance or charge existing on or affecting such freehold."

Flesherton Station.

From a correspondent.

The grist mill is still idle.

Our new station agent is an efficient and obliging man.

Thos. Addison, the implement agent has accepted a situation as district agent for Noxon Bros. of Ingersol. He will move shortly to Barrie, Mr. Addison is an active and reliable man and we wish him every success.

Chatsworth.

From a correspondent.

R. Green has returned, and is now bound to keep the place for twelve months.

We had about an inch of snow last Thursday.

Mr. McTerr has added a story to the height of his dwelling. and is repairing it generally.

Very little worth noting this week, the indications are that winter is near but I suppose you know that yourself as well as the readers of the STANDARD.

(The above was crowded out last week. ED.)

TRUE merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increased sales, as a prominent Druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits;" It is the grand specific for diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, 5,000 bottles have been sold during the last three months. For sale by A. Turner & Co. Markdale.

THE FARMER'S CORNER.

Agricultural Notes.

The time to begin wintering cattle is when the feed begins to fail in the Fall. Any neglect now is sure to cost dearly in the end.

Too many varieties in an orchard spoil the chances for profit. It is very rare that more than three or four kinds of apples are profitable, and when one is found that bears uniform crops of salable fruit it is safe to restrict attention to that.

There is probably no crop on which commercial fertilizers have produced better results this year than on beans. The effect of these fertilizers in making the crops ripen earlier has saved many fields which without the manure would have been worth little or nothing.

Many streams have their banks lined with grass, bushes and often trees, which greatly obstruct the flow of water. A ditch in which these impediments have begun to grow very soon becomes so clogged up as to be of little value for drainage purposes, and if tile drains empty into it they become worthless also.

Before winter sets in a few barrels of road dust should be gathered for use in henhouses, privies, etc., during cold weather. The fine dust on a well-travelled road is often itself a good manure, being largely composed of the excrement of horses and cattle driven over it.

Fowl will usually destroy wheat or other small grain for a few feet near the edge of the lot in which they run. What they eat in the Fall rarely does much damage, but if their depredations are renewed in the Spring the strip so eaten will be of little value at harvest time.

The chief difficulty in feeding cotton-seed meal to stock is from the indigestible husk, which has never been entirely removed. If this can be doue, as it will doubtless be now that cotton seed meal is so largely called for, it is very likely to take the place of other and less nutritious feeds.

The great majority of open drains would be much more effective and durable if stone or pipe were put in and the drain covered. An open drain needs yearly fixing, and if the fall is good, a much smaller pipe will answer to carry off the water than is commonly supposed in looking at the stream.

Buckwheat intended for seed should be hand threshed. In threshing by machine many of the grains are so bruised and broken that they will not germinate. As buckwheat is very easily hand threshed, it makes a job for men in Winter when other work is scarce, and it is a good policy to save it for them.

The Use of Plaster.

There is scarcely a farmer who does not know how useful is a dressing of plaster or gypsum to land bearing clover. But while this is thus, yet it is very rare to see any use made of it. Perhaps plaster has been hardly used by its friends more than by those who have no faith in it. Many things are said in its favor which are untrue, and what is worse, are unreasonable. We recently read an otherwise excellent article upon the use of plaster, which contained the statement that one of the benefits derived from it was that it attracted moisture from drying up. Now, that statement is untrue and unfounded, as any one may know who understands the character of this mineral. And so with many other wrong statements about it, and wrong directions for using it, based upon the erroneous statements.

The quantity usually applied is 100 pounds per acre; but this is not sufficient for a full effect. It is cheap, and a full dose can well be afforded. At $10 per ton, 500 pounds per acre will be very cheap dressing. If it is ground very fine the effect is produced more rapidly than when it is in coarse powder, and it is best to use it in the finest state of division. There are other uses on the farm for gypsum. As a purifier of stables, cesspools, poultry-houses, or other foul places, it is very effective. We have heard from those in whose opinion we had confidence that it would not act as a deodorizer when in a dry state and not until it had entered into solution. This opinion, however, is not founded upon fact. It operates as a deodorizer by absorbing ammonia and the pungent ammoniacal vapors which are produced by decomposing organic substances. It is capable of absorbing ammonia, when dry, for it will quickly purify a foul-poultry house when scattered freely about, although the place and everything about it is perfectly dry. Besides, if a small quantity of dry powdered gypsum be placed in a glass tube, and a current of ammonia, which is really a gas, be passed through it from a bottle of ordinary ammonia water, it will be found that the gas will be absorbed in greater part, and its pungency be greatly diminished. However, in practice, it will be found that to scatter it freely about stables, cowsheds, yards, pig pens, cesspools, manure heaps, slop sinks, and all such disagreeably smelling places, will quickly stop the odors and completely neutralize them. The effect is to unite the ammonia and the sulphuric acid of the plaster, producing an inodorous sulphate of ammonia, and to leave the lime free; this very soon uniting with carbonic acid, which is abundant in all decaying substances, and forming carbonate of lime. Gypsum is the more valuable because it helps us to grow large crops of clover, which, in its growth, draws from the soil from a considerable depth many of the most needed substances for the growth of crops, and leaves them upon or near the surface. The deep feeding roots of clover bring up from several feet below the surface phosphoric acid, potash and nitrogen, and convey these to the leaves and stems and large top roots. It is this effect of gypsum which gives it, through the clover crop, the character of a general fertilizer, while being in itself only one of a special character. With gypsum we can produces clover, and with clover the soil can be made to produce all other crops.

Hints in Saving Manure.

Until the tillers of the soil cease to be careless about saving and applying all of their domestic fertilizers, they should be stimulated to activity by constant reminders upon this important subject. As our farm land tends towards exhaustion they need assistanrt from some source to aid nature in her work of restoration. Worn-out lands may be restored to fertility by rest, which is nature's method. In our Eastern States, however, the farmer cannot spare the land to take such rest, hence the necessity of applying fertilizers, both natural and artificial.

The excrements of animals contain nature's fertilizer. As applied to the soil the solid and liquid manures are of about equal value, the latter being rather more available than the former when absorbed by some proper substance. Many farmers who are very careful concerning the solid excrements of the cattle make no provision for saving the valuable liquids. In Winter the average farmer throws the liquid manure out of the barn, there to remain against the building, to be bleached by sun and wind and washed by storms, until much of its value is lost. Even this class of farmers make no provision for saving the liquid manures, which are allowed to go to waste and form a nuisance about the premises.

Many who have provided barn cellars over which the cattle stand, and into which the manure is dropped, also lose much of the liquid excrement by failing to provide a suitable absorbent. In summer, some farmers yard their cows through the night, others only to milk them, then turning out to pasture. Yet, of these, many pay no attention to the valuable droppings of the cattle, allowing the same to go to waste by washing or blowing away. Others carefully gather the solids into heaps for future use, while few or none make provision for saving the liquids.

A very small but thrifty class of farmers are careful to provide absorbents in their barnyards to receive the droppings, both solid and liquid. After the yard has been in use a while they plow and harrow it, thus thoroughly mixing the droppings with the absorbents. This process is repeated at intervals through the season. Through such a method a large amount of fine rotten manure is secured, forming a most excellent top-dressing for grass.

Again, in the matter of keeping hogs shut up in pens, the latter become an intolerable nuisance in many places unless a liberal stock of some suitable absorbent is supplied for the animals to work over and incorporate with their droppings. Through neglect of this precaution vile odors emanate from the pens, often entering the dairy room, to contaminate the milk, cream or butter. With a fair chance hogs will make a large amount of first-class manure, and which is more stimulating in its application than many of the commercial fertilizers on the market. The droppings of the hen-roost, mixed with dry earth or plaster, are invaluable. Sink drainage, chamber slops and soap-suds, when absorbed by some suitable substance, are transformed into excellent fertilizing material, instead of running to waste about the door yard and rendering the premises unwholesome and unhealthy. Deodorizing substances, such as dry muck, earth, road-dust or plaster, may be used to convert noxious matters from a nuisance into a source of income. Thus the farmer may render his home more healthy and his farm more fertile. Care in these matters may save the money, at least in part, now spent in the purchase of commercial fertilizers. Few farmers exhaust the domestic supply of fertilizing materials.—Cultivator.

Doing her Duty Nobly.

It was the act of an honest, fearless little woman that brought Ellery H. Andrews to justice. She was his wife, and when he confided to her the secret that he had robbed the bank by which he had been employed she turned on him and said: "Harry, you must go back to the bank and confess what you have done."

He hesitated and seemed to wish to avoid a confession.

"If you do not, I will. It is right," was all the plucky woman said.

Saturday noon Mr. George Sturges, President of the Northwestern National Bank of Chicago, was surprised to receive a little tear-stained note from Mrs. Andrews. It informed him that Ellery H. Andrews was a thief. That evening Mr. Sturges went to Andrews' home, a little cottage in the village of Downer's Grove. The heart-broken wife met him at the door and ushered him into the presence of the defaulting husband. He said nothing, but waited for the sentence of the man whom he had robbed. There was a scene in that little cottage, but at the conclusion of the interview Sturges left with a written confession from Andrews. The wife, although expressing the utmost devotion to her husband, did not ask that he be forgiven, but rather wished that he be dealt with as his crime merited.

In the confession Andrews admitted having stolen about $10,000. He did not know where the money had gone, he said. For five years he held the position of correspondent of the bank, and was a trusted employe. One year and a half ago he was married to the woman who gave him up to righteous judgment.

The testimony of the case was submitted to the grand jury of Cook County, and an indictment was found. Andrews was arrested, and taken to the County Jail. Judge Gary fixed the bondsat $10,000, which he was unable to furnish.

Mr. Sturges was seen, and said:

"Last Friday I saw Harry entering a saloon. Now, that is enough to cause the discharge of any man in our employ. I liked the young man, but I decided to dismiss him. He admitted the charge was true, and I told him our contract was at an end. He probably went home, and in a fit of despondency he confessed to his wife. She is the noblest woman I ever saw. She did what she did because she thought it was right. He came to me recommended by the Bank of Commerce. The stealings cover a period of six months. Mr. Maynard said to me at the time: 'Sturges, you have got a treasure in Andrews. There is not a crooked hair in his head.' I have since heard that he gambled. Experts have examined the books, and report that the deficit does not exceed what he admitted. I am very sorry for the poor wife. She is a noble woman, one in a thousand."

A Question of the Age.

The President of the Assizes Court, questioning lady witness—"Your age, madame?"

The lady (in a low voice)—"Twenty-two."

The President—"Thirty-two, you say, madame?"

The lady (quickly)—"No, sir; twenty-seven."

CRIME IN PARIS.

A Remarkable Increase—Habits of the Criminal Classes.

Crime of the most hideous description is on the increase in Paris. The greatest safety seems to lie in a continuance of the dense fogs wherewith we have been blessed for the last six days. The malefactors themselves are apparently frightened. At any rate, a careful perusal of the police reports shows a decrease since last week. The supposition was confirmed by the commissary of police of one of the most dangerous quarters of Paris. This gentleman accounted quite logically for the diminution observable. The Parisian foot-pad and crib-cracker is an epicurian in his way. He said: "He objects to inclement weather, first, because he feels uncomfortable; secondly, because it interferes with business. The reason is not far to seek. So long as the weather is in any way bearable, the Parisians of any and every class turn out. Many of them get belated, attacked in the streets, or, if they escape that danger, find their premises rifled at their return. Servants are of little use. If of doubtful character, they are probably in league with the criminals themselves. If honest, they turn out also, or else go to bed or to a carouse with their fellows at the top of the house, where their rooms are invariably situated. The concierge is of no use to prevent crime. Though she is generally above suspicion as regards honesty, she is lazy, indifferent, and impertinent, and sometimes all three. A male concierge who concerns himself with the affairs of the house is a rarity, except in the better class dwelling. In nine cases out of ten the concierge is a woman, widow, or married. If the former, she is frightened at her own shadow; if the latter, the husband is generally absent when he is most wanted. He works the whole day. At 9 o'clock, or thereabout, he goes to the wine shop. The outer door is closed or open, as the case may be. The intruder has but to ring the bell, call out the name of one of the inmates, and obtain the run of the house. He can make his choice. He begins ringing on the first floor. If the door is opened, he has simply to inquire for no matter whom, seeing that the occupant of the first floor does not know his next-door neighbor on the same landing, let alone the family above his head. He shuts the door in the inquirer's face. The latter has the coast free, and repeats his manœuvre at every door until his summons meets with no response. The rest is a matter of plain sailing. It is needless to say that bad weather reduces his chances to a minimum; he must be hard-pushed indeed to go in search of business. If he has any money at all he goes to one of the theatres, but only to a certain class of them. The Gymnases, the Vaudeville, the Comedie Francise, and the Odeon never see him within their doors. If he be of a refined turn of mind at all, he visits the Palais Royal now and then, but as a rule the Ambigu and the Porte St. Martin are his favorite haunts. Of course not now, while Mme. Sarah Bernhardt is playing at the latter house. His invariable preference is for music. But for seats at the opera being too dear, he would crowd its gallery whenever his means permitted. As it is, he takes to the opera-bouffe. He very often forms part of the claque. I have known two or three that would whistle the 'Mascot,' or 'La Belle Helene,' from the first note to the last."—London Globe.

What to Drink.

The British Medical Journal, in an interesting article on breakfast beverages, observes:—

"Each of our commoner breakfast beverages, namely, tea, coffee, and cocoa, present sundry relative advantages and disadvantages, which have been well established by scientific experiments and general experience, and which are qualities that sometimes assume a special importance in certain conditions of health, habit, occupation, climate, and disease. Warm infusion of tea has been proved to have a marked stimulative and restorative action upon the brain and nervous system, and this effect is not followed by any secondary depression. It further increases the action of the skin, and raises the number of the pulse, while it has little effect upon urination, excepting simply as a watery diuretic. It tends to lessen the action of the bowels. Dr. Parks found that tea is most useful article of diet for soldiers. The hot infusion is a patent protective against extremes both of heat and cold; and Sir Ronald Martin proved it to be particularly valuable in great fatigue, especially in hot climates. Coffee, like tea, when used as an article of diet, especially affects the nervous system. It is a brain-and-nerve stimulant; in very large doses it produces tremors. It increases the action of the skin, and it appears to have a special power in augmenting the urinary water. It increases both the force and frequency of the pulse. Unlike tea, it tends to increase the action of the bowels. Coffee has been proved to be an important article in a soldier's dietary as a stimulant and restorative. Like tea, it acts as a nerve excitant, without producing subsequent depression. It is serviceable against excessive variations of cold and heat, and its efficacy in these respects has been established in antarctic expeditions, as well as in India an other hot climates. Dr. Parkes pointed out that coffee has a special recommendation in its protective influence against malaria. While admitting that the evidence on this point was not strong, he held it to be sufficient to authorise the large use of coffee in malarious districts. Coffee should be used as an infusion. If coffee be boiled, its delicate aroma is dissipated. The theobromin of cocoa is, chemically, identical with the thein of tea and the caffein of coffee. While tea and coffee are comparatively valueless as true foods, cocoa, by reason of the large quantity of fatty and albuminoid substances it contains, is very nourishing, and is of high dietetic value as a tissue-forming food. Compared with tea and coffee, it is a food rather than a stimulant, being akin to milk in its composition and place in the diet scale. It is useful to sustain the weakly, and to support the strong in great exertion, as a really assimilable and general form of nourishment

Calais harbor is at length really likely to be improved—a boon to channel crossers. The French Chamber of Commerce has guaranteed an adequate interest to the Government on the amount advanced.

HIS OWN EXECUTOR.

A Well-known Gentleman's Philanthrophy and the Commotion Caused by one of His Letters.

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

We published in our local columns yesterday morning a significant letter from a gentleman known personally or by reputation to nearly every person in the land. We have received a number of letters protesting against the use of our columns for such "palpable frauds and misrepresentations;" therefore, to confirm beyond a doubt the authenticity of a letter, and the genuineness of its sentiments, a reporter of this paper was commissioned to ascertain all the possible facts in the matter. Accordingly he visited Clifton Springs, saw the author of the letter, and with the following result:—

Dr. Henry Foster, the gentleman in question, is 63 or 64 years of age and has an extremely cordial manner. He presides as superintendent over the celebrated sanitarium which accomodates over 500 guests and is unquestionably the leading health resort of the country. Several years ago this benevolent man wisely determined to be his own executor; and, therefore turned over this magnificent property worth $300,000, as a free gift to a board of trustees, representing the principal evangelical denominations. Among the trustees are Bishop A. C. Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, Buffalo; Bishop Matthew Simpson, Philadelphia, Methodist Episcopal; President M. B. Anderson, of the University of Rochester; Rev. Dr. Clark, secretary of the A. B. C. F. M., Boston. The benevolent purpose of the institution is the care:—1st. Of evangelical missionaries and their families whose health has been broken in their work. 2nd. Of ministers, of any denomination, in good standing. 3rd. Of members of any church; who otherwise would be unable to secure such care and treatment. The current expenses of the institution are met by the receipt from the hundreds of distinguished and wealthy people who every year crowd its utmost capacity. Here come men and women who were once in perfect health, but neglected the first symptoms of disease. The uncertain pains they felt at first were overlooked until their health became impaired. They little realized the danger before them, nor how alarming even trifle ailments might prove. They constitute all classes, including ministers and bishops, lawyers, judges, statesmen, millionaires, journalists, college professors and officials from all parts of the land.

Drawing the morning Democrat and Chronicle from his pocket, the reporter remarked, "Doctor, that letter of yours has created a good deal of talk, and many of our readers have questioned its authenticity."

"To what do you refer?" remarked the doctor.

"Have you not seen the paper?"

"Yes, but I have not had time to read it yet."

The reporter thereupon showed him the letter, which was as follows:

CLIFTON SPRINGS SANITARIUM CO., }
CLIFTON SPRINGS, N. Y., Oct. 11, 1883. }

DEAR SIR: I am using Warner's Safe Cure, and I regard it as the best remedy for some forms of kidney disease that we have. I am watching with great care some cases I am now treating with it, and I hope for favorable results.

I wish you might come down yourself, as I would like very much to talk with you about your sterling remedy and show you over our institution.

Yours truly
[Signed] HENRY FOSTER, M. D.

"I do not see why anybody should be skeptical concerning that letter," remarked the doctor.

"Isn't it unusual for a physician of your standiog and influence to commend a proprietary preparation?"

"I don't know how it may be with others, but in this institution we allow no person to dictate to us what we shall use. Our purpose is to cure the sick, and for that work we use anything we know to be valuable. Because I know Warner's Safe Cure is a very valuable preparation, I commend it. As its power is manifested under my use, so shall I add to the completeness of my commendation."

"Have you ever analyzed it, doctor?"

"We always analyze before we try any preparation of which we do not know the constituents. But analysis, you know, only gives the elements: it does not give the all important proportions. The remarkable power of Warner's Safe Cure undoubtedly consists in the proportions according to which its elements are mixed. While there may be a thousand remedies made of the same elements, unless they are put together in proper proportions, they are worthless as kidney and liver preparations.

"I hope some day to meet Mr. Warner personally, and extend fuller congratulations to him on the excellence of his preparations. I have heard much of him as the founder of the Warner Observatory, and as a man of large benevolence. The reputed high character of the man himself gave assurance to me in the first place that he would not put a remedy upon the market that was not trustworthy; and it was a source of a good deal of gratification to me to find out by actual experiment that the remedy itself sustained my impressions."

The conclusion reached by Dr. Foster is precisely the same found by Dr. Dio Lewis, Dr. Robert A. Gunn, Ex Surgeon-General Gallagher and others, and proves beyond a doubt the great efficacy of the remedy which has awakened so much attention in the land and rescued so many men, women and children from disease and death.

A Dayton, O., man put a pistol ball in his stomach. As his digestion is good he may not digest yet.

The use of Pills, Salts, Castor Oil &c. and other nauseous, griping Cathartics is unnecessary, as a pleasant substitute is found in Dr. Carson's Bitters, which act as a Cathartic without griping or causing nausea. All druggists sell it. 50 cents a Bottle.

It is a seasonable bit of information to state positively that we needn't go to the sea shore after beechnuts.

The Triangle Dyes have attained a popularity unprecedented in the history of dye stuff. No wonder, for they are perfect in all their shades, 10 cents.

From MR. WILLIAM MAGARTH
Erindale, Credit P. O., Jan. 8th, 1883.

MY DEAR SUTHERLAND: Some two months since I became so afflicted with Rheumatism of the neck and right shoulder as to render my right arm nearly powerless. I determined to try your "Rheumatine" and the result is that I am now free from pain, and enjoy the full use of my arm. My general health is also much improved by the use of the medicine. The first two bottles relieved me—the third bottle freed me from all pain.

WM. MAGRATH.

J. N. Sutherland, St. Catharines.

A million bats are said to live in the dome of the Court House at Brehan, Ga. "What a bonanza for a base ball club!"

They all tell the same story. Mr. W. Thompson, Jeweller, Delhi, suffered for years from Dyspepsia, got no relief until he used Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. He says "it was just the medicine I needed. It has cured me."

"Do you believe in an omen?" was once asked Ned Sothern. "Only when it has a 'w' before it," was the prompt reply.

Important

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the cit .

"Yes," he said, "I have taken particular care to keep the matter a secret. I have employed a Connecticut detective to ferret it out."

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-St. West, Toronto, Canada.

A Clark County liar has been awarded the surcingle. He tells of a winter so severe that the springs in men's watches were all frozen.

" A. P." 151

Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil

THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY

FOR PAIN.

Relieves and cures RHEUMATISM, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Lumbago, BACKACHE, HEADACHE, TOOTHACHE, SORE THROAT, QUINSY, SWELLINGS, SPRAINS, Soreness, Cuts, Bruises, FROSTBITES, BURNS, SCALDS, And all other bodily aches and pains.

FIFTY CENTS A BOTTLE.

Sold by all Druggists and Dealers. Directions in 11 languages.

The Charles A. Vogeler Co. (Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.) Baltimore, Md., U.S.A.

WANTED—STEADY EMPLOYMENT and good pay given to every lady owning a sewing machine. Material sent and returned by mail. Send one dollar with your application as a guarantee that the material we furnish will be returned when finished. FINDLAY & CO., Manufacturers, Detroit, Mich,

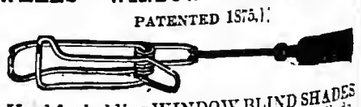
1883—ST. JOHN EXHIBITION—1883

Leather Belting, Fire Engine Hose, &c. Four First Prizes and Two Diplomas. The highest of all Awards for Leather Belting and Fire Engine Hose were accorded by the Judges at the St. John Centennial and Dominion Exhibition, to ROBIN & SADLER, Montreal, over all competitors.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR DOLLAR tweeds makes the price 90 cents; these goods are worth $1.50, and make beautiful ladies' Ulsters. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR CELEBRATED black Silks, that is our dollar silk, will cost you only 90 cents; our $1.50 silk, only $1.35; all goods marked in plain figures. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR ALL-WOOL Jersey blankets; our $4.50 blanket for 4; see our Dungannon coverlets, weight 7 lbs., only $1.95, or $1.75 net cash; this discount is allowed on all parcels of one dollar and over. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.



10 PER CENT. DISCOUNT OFF ALL DRY goods, including new fall stock, all goods marked in plain figures; all goods sold for cash only. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF GREY COTTONS—or a ten cent cotton for nine cents; sheetings, Shirtings, grey flannels, table Napkins, A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF ALL DRESS GOODS silks, satins, velvets, brocades, black and colored, cashmere, tweeds, cloakings, A. B FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

WELLS' WINDOW SHADE CLASP.

PATENTED 1875.

Used for holding WINDOW BLIND SHADES without rollers, pins, or cords. Saves blinds, money and patience. Looks orderly and neat. Is durable and cheap. Retailed by all dealers everywhere. Trade supplied wholesale by the manufacturers. The TORONTO INDUSTRIAL WORKS CO., 96 Church street, Toronto.

Dominion Line of Steamships.

Running in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec every Saturday during the summer months, and from Portland every alternate Thursday during the winter months. Sailing dates from Quebec:—

*Sarnia,	Oct. 20	Oregon,	Nov. 10
Montreal,	" 27	Dominion,	" 17
Ontario,	Nov. 3	Toronto,	" 24

Rates of passage: Cabin, Quebec to Liverpool $50, $60, $65, $80; return, $90, $108, $117, $144 according to steamer and berth. Intermediate $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and staterooms in steamers marked thus: * are amidships, where but little motion is felt, and no cattle or sheep are carried on them. For further particulars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway Agent or local agents of the Company, or to

DAVID TORRANCE & CO.,
General Agents, Montreal

CURRENT

CANADIA

It is now definitely ann ment will be convened 17th of January for the d

A disastrous fire took pla distillery, near Windsor and 400 cattle fattening burned to death.

As an evidence of the minion Lord Lorne stat speech that the number land to the North-west
3,000 in 1880 to 12,000 i

According to the offici number of immigrants up to October 31st w
153,055 up to the same
these over 67,000 passe
States.

Mayor Beaudry, of M himself as a candidate for the tenth time. He bitter enemies, but the show that he has also a friends in Montreal.

Very Rev. Dean Baldw cently elected Bishop of be consecrated at Londo
inst. Revs. Dr. Carmich church, Montreal and D
ston, are spoken of as hi

The Salvation Army
pleted a new brick build in Kingston. It is a pla building, capable of a bably a thousand peopl that it will be formally inst.

The New Glasgow, N. said to employ 150 han ning night and day. Su be run night and day, Napanee, Ont., glass w it is not intended to o
again.

The admirers of the lat have been circulating su memorial fund, and som been subscribed. It is amount to $6,000 if pra scribers are largely tho nection with the schools

Lord Lansdowne had tled in his new Vice-reg wa when anonymous let to him threatening his l tell whether these missi ious pranks of men with or the work of fiendish

The election of Mr. servative M. P.P., Ca void by the court on t consequence os the corr eral agents and friends
open and liquor selling election. As it was sh kept open by the friend party had to pay its ow

At an Orange meetin
the 5th John White, M intended to introduce h tion bill again at the House of Commons if Lodge of the Order des matter was left in the tee of five at the late s and it lies with them t to take.

The Halifax Chronicl
ficulty of procuring ho
the Moncton knitting that operators have to Upper Provinces. It d time, that hundreds and constantly leaving th
Scotia for employme States, thinking they than at home.

On Thanksgiving d
Home building was for onto, the Mayor presid
The new building is si road, at the north-west
It is of "Modern Eng tecture, built of red bri four stories high and Ample accommodation children, one half of th
ed for the girls.

James Jameison, o
tenced on the 3rd inst.
prisonment in the pen
the barns and their co
iling near the city.
ed on his own confessi
he wandered into the night in an intoxicated tempting to light his straw. He confessed to be sent to penite temptations way. H prison for barn burnin

There will probably test in Lennox Cou vacant in the House
Court avoiding the e
Macdonald. Sir John a candidate again, pr seat for Carlton Count Esq., of Napanee, ha
the Conservatives in Allison, of Adolphin didate, was nominate vention. Both parties
It has not yet been election will take pla

GREAT

At a fair at Ruth
Limerick, a faction
cently and forty pe
A lively fight also t mob and the police,
made.

Messrs. Moody and of evangelistic meeti land, on the 4th inst.
on purpose for their 6,000 persons, and is cess. The prospects
ful series of meetings

The ex Governor G
Louise arrived safe
5th inst., after a sho
They were received
tions at home.

The Pope is repo himself in very st scheme of the Briti wholesale exportati their native land.

CURRENT EVENTS.

CANADIAN.

It is now definitely announced that Parliament will be convened at Ottawa on the 7th of January for the despatch of business.

A disastrous fire took place at the Walkerville distillery, near Windsor, on the 6th inst., and 400 cattle fattening in the stables were burned to death.

As an evidence of the progress of the Dominion Lord Lorne stated in his Liverpool speech that the number of letters from England to the North-west had increased from 4,000 in 1880 to 12,000 in 1882.

According to the official Gazette the total number of immigrants arriving in Canada up to October 31st was 166,933, against 99,055 up to the same date last year. Of these over 67,000 passed on to the United States.

Mayor Beaudry, of Montreal, announces himself as a candidate for the mayoralty for the tenth time. He has certainly some bitter enemies, but the successful results show that he has also a great many warm friends in Montreal.

Very Rev. Dean Baldwin, of Montreal, recently elected Bishop of Huron, expects to be consecrated at London, Ont., on the 28th inst. Revs. Dr. Carmichael, of St. George's, Montreal and Dr. Wilson, of Kingston, are spoken of as his successor.

The Salvation Army have nearly completed a new brick building for a "barracks" in Kingston. It is a plain, substantial brick building, capable of accommodating probably a thousand people. It is expected that it will be formally opened on the 16th inst.

The New Glasgow, N. S., glass works are said to employ 150 hands, and to be running night and day. Such glass works must run night and day, if run at all. The Japanese, Ont., glass works are closed and it is not intended to open them this year again.

The admirers of the late Rev. Dr. Ryerson have been circulating subscription lists for a memorial fund, and some $3,600 has already been subscribed. It is hoped to raise the amount to $6,000 if practicable. The subscribers are largely those engaged in connection with the schools of this province.

Lord Lansdowne had hardly become settled in his new Vice-regal residence at Ottawa when anonymous letters began to be sent to him threatening his life. It is hard to tell whether these missives are the mischievous pranks of men with little better to do, or the work of fiendish Fenians.

The election of Mr. Hammill, the Conservative M. P.P., Cardwell was declared void by the court on the 6th inst., in consequence of the corrupt practice of several agents and friends keeping their bars open and liquor selling on the day of the election. As it was shown that bars were kept open by the friends of both sides each party had to pay its own costs.

At an Orange meeting in Brockville on the 5th John White, M. P., stated that he intended to introduce his Orange incorporation bill again at the next session of the House of Commons if the Supreme Grand Lodge of the Order desires him to do so. The matter was left in the hands of a committee of five at the late session of that body, and it lies with them to decide what course to take.

The Halifax Chronicle states that the difficulty of procuring home female labor for the Moncton knitting factory is so great that operators have to be imported from the Upper Provinces. It deplores, at the same time, that hundreds and hundreds of girls are constantly leaving their homes in Nova Scotia for employment in the United States, thinking they can do better there than at home.

On Thanksgiving day a new Orphans Home building was formally opened at Toronto, the Mayor presiding at the ceremonies. The new building is situated on Dovercourt Road, at the north-west corner of the city. It is of "Modern English domestic" architecture, built of red brick, 156 feet in length, two stories high and very tastily finished. Ample accommodation is provided for 200 children, one half of the space being arranged for the girls.

James Jameison, of Kingston was sentenced on the 3rd inst. to fourteen years imprisonment in the penitentiary for burning the barns and their contents of a farmer residing near the city. Jameison was convicted on his own confession. He stated that he wandered into the barn to sleep one night in an intoxicated condition, and in attempting to light his pipe set fire to the straw. He confessed his crime and wanted to be sent to penitentiary to get out of temptations way. He was once before in prison for barn burning.

There will probably be a very lively contest in Lennox County for the seat made vacant in the House of Commons by the recent avoiding the election of Sir John A. Macdonald. Sir John declined to become a candidate again, preferring to retain his seat for Carlton County, and M. W. Pruyn, Esq., of Napanee, has been nominated by the Conservatives in his stead. Mr. D. W. Allison, of Adolphinstown, the former candidate, was nominated by the Reform convention. Both parties are now hard at work. It has not yet been announced when the election will take place.

GREAT BRITAIN.

At a fair at Ruth Keale, a few miles off Limerick, a faction fight took place recently and forty persons were wounded. A lively fight also took place between the mob and the police, but a few arrests were made.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey began a series of evangelistic meetings in London, England, on the 4th inst. The iron hall, built on purpose for their services, holds nearly 6,000 persons, and is said to be a fine success. The prospects are for a very successful series of meetings.

The ex Governor General and the Princess Louise arrived safely in England on the 4th inst., after a short and pleasant voyage. They were received with great demonstrations at home.

The Pope is reported to have expressed himself in very strong oppostion to the scheme of the British Government of the wholesale exportation of Irishmen from their native land. Whether this will have the effect of checking emigration to much extent remains to be seen.

The new County Franchise Bill in the Mother Land, besides enfranchising the great mass of farm laborers, will do so for the people of one hundred and fifty towns or places not purely agricultural, in which there is a population of over 10,000 persons, their total reaching three millions. The extent of the reform proposed can be judged by these facts.

UNITED STATES.

Thursday 29th inst., has been appointed Thanksgiving day in the United States, by proclamation of President Arthur.

The total receipts from the United States internal revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30th last were $144,000,000.

The Texas papers say that the cotton crop of that State is nearly one-third less than last year. The crop is reported light all over the Southern States.

An American paper says: "The export from this country exceeded the imports by $117,326,909 during the past year. Our imports were $54,744 662 less than for 1882, and our exports $74,030,799 greater.

The United States Postmaster-General is now considering the advisability of allowing an increase in the weight of letters for single postage from one half ounce to one ounce. Some such increase is needed in Canada.

A Panama dispatch reports that 10,000 men are at work on the Panama Canal, and that the number will be increased to 15,000 next year. There are in use 30 steam excavators, 40 locomotives and 800 tip carts.

The immigrants coming to America during the past season by the aid of the Tuke fund numbered about 5,000, of whom all but 1,800 came to the States. Most of them are now comfortably settled in various employments, and are justifying the good opinion which caused their selection by the committee in Ireland.

The first bale of cotton ever picked from the field by machinery was exhibited at the Charleston Cotton Exchange a few days ago. The condition of the cotton was pronounced by cotton men as good as that of hand-picked cotton. The machine used will harvest two and a half to three full bales a day.

At Steubensville, Ohio, at an old Roman Catholic burying ground, one day last week, a metallic coffin was opened containing the body of a young lady in a good state of preservation. The position of the body gave unmistakable evidence that she had been buried alive. No one seemed to know who it was.

The State elections in the ten states that took place on Tuesday 6th inst., were, on the whole, favorable to the Republicans and go to give more favorable indications for the Republican party at the Presidential election next year. A notable feeture of the elections was the defeat of Ben Butler for Governor of Massachusetts by a good majority.

There seems to be very serious difficulty brewing in the Southern States in regard to the irrepressible "color question." At Danville, Virginia, recently a deadly conflict took place between a crowd of whites and negroes in which six negroes were shot and others wounded. Such conflicts, it is feared, will become more general as the ill feeling increases. There is yet an intense excitement.

At Madison, Wisconsin, the entire roof, inside walls, and the iron and stone columns of the new south wing of the State Capitol building fell in on the 8th inst., killing several of the workmen and badly injuring others. The cause of the accident is supposed to have been the defective iron columns. They were made of large plates of boiler iron put together stovepipe fashion, and the joints were not bolted together. A thorough investigation of the case is ordered.

A farmer named Jacob Lieb, living near Erie, Pennsylvania, recently concealed all his greenbacks, mortgages and other similar papers in the oven of an unused parlor stove in order to escape thieves. The first of the month there was a snow storm and the farmer, being out at the time, his wife resolved to please him by a warm parlor when he got home, to his dismay he found his hid treasure, amounting to about fifteen thousand dollars, the earnings of his lifetime were consumed.

Another destructive cyclone passed through some parts of Missouri recently Hundreds of houses were demolished and others more or less injured. In and about Springfield ten persons were instantly killed and over fifty more or less injured. In that locality a Roman Catholic church was wrecked, a cigar factory destroyed, and a school house blown down, from which about fifty children escaped without much serious injury. The path of the storm was only a few yards wide, but wherever it struck the ruin was appaling.

A Child for $20.

The Columbia, (Neb.) Democrat says: On Monday last a man with four children, claiming to be from Nibrara country, this State, arrived in town, and while here he met another mover, to whom he proposed to sell his little, four years old. As shockingly inhuman as this may seem, the little boy was then and there sold to the stranger for the sum of $20. The little fellow, when told by his beast of a father what he had done, and that he must go with the stranger, wept bitterly, imploring his father not to take him away from his little brothers and sisters. "No, you can not stay, you must go," was the stern command. The child again kissed his brothers and sisters, and was put in the stranger's waggon and started off, but so grieved and pained was his little heart at being thus ruthlessly torn from those he loved that, after having gone a short distance, he jumped out of the waggon, went back again and begged not to be sent away with strangers. But he was taken back and put into the waggon. So touching was this inhuman circumstance that the wife of the purchaser wept bitterly.

Every subscriber for a paper can do much for the paper by becoming a reporter for it. That would greatly help the editor in geting out a readable sheet. The trouble with the average subscriber is that he is not contented with being a reporter. He wants to write the editorials.

Street Scenes in Lisbon.

Among the street scenes in Lisbon may be noted two men carrying a bedstead and mattress slung upon a pole, a la Chinatown; a man driving a flock of turkeys; places at the public fountains divided by classes—this side for gentlemen, this for menials, etc.; the Praza do Comercio, or, as the English call it, "Black-Horse square," after the equestrian statue of Joseph I., which stands in the middle; the Passeio Publico, with its marble basins, its trees, flowers and pretty girls; the cathedral, rebuilt since the great earthquake of 1755; the palace Ajuda, where the royal family (the population of Portugal is scarcely more than one-half that of the state of New York) usually dwells; and the theatre San Carlos. The male peasant wears a woollen night cap for a head-dress, the female, nothing. The male of the genteel class wears a shiny silk hat with a very narrow brim; the female, whatever may be the fashion in Paris. The gentry wear French costumes; the peasants black homespun woollen jackets and trousers. You meet English people at every turn. Most of the few industries which flourish in Portugal are in their hands: the wine trade, the fruit trade, the shipping, the mining, and even the sardine fishery—in fact, since the Methuen treaty Portugal has become little more than a British province. It has nominally a protective tariff, but really enjoys free trade, the entire coast and the frontiers being in possession of smugglers. What with the small population of the country, its almost ruined condition, and its utter dependence upon England, its crown becomes a mockery, and both its "ancient" and "modern" nobility a caricature.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

Smoking in Mexico.

While waiting for coffee, and afterward during pauses in the conversation, the gentlemen of the family—and not infrequently the ladies also—settle gracefully back in their chairs and enjoy a cigarette or two. I learned a lesson at my very first dinner in Mexico. It was at a hotel table, and a stranger Mexican seated beside me, who happened to finish his dinner first, innocently lighted his cigar for the usual table smoke, which I, in the depth of my ignorance, regarded as a personal insult, and indignantly left the table. Since that day I have become "learned in the ways of the Egyptians," and cannot only tolerate the national custom with equanimity, but (be not horrified, oh, fastidious friends) occasionally take a dinner cigarette myself. When one is in Rome it is well to do as Romans do. These tiny Mexican cigarettes, rolled up in corn husks or tissue paper, are not at all like the strong smelling things we have in the United States. These are not much larger than straws, the husk is sweet to the taste, and they have a delicate fragrance which is very pleasant. In Mexico everybody smokes at all times and in all places—at the theatre, in the ball-room, everywhere. In making formal calls or more extended visits, politeness demands an immediate and frequent exchange of cigaretttes and "light"—with many courteous words, as "after you, senora" (referring to the match)—precisely as our ancestors were wont to proffer and accept the civilities of the snuff-box. Every Mexican lady's pocket is supplied with match-box and cigarette-holder of more or less elegance, and the dainty fingers of many a fair young senorita are discolored like polished bronze at the tips from much cigarette rolling.

Turkish Brigands.

A new and very successful way of dealing with brigands has been adopted by the inhabitants of the village of Kossovo, in Turkey. For some time past the numerous bands of brigands in the district have rendered life almost intolerable. They not only infested the roads, rendering locomotion impossible, but also made raids into the neighboring villages. The whole of the villages in the district of Dike at last hit upon a novel expedient for restoring peace. Whenever the prolonged absence of any villager gave rise to suspicion that he was doing a little bit of "brigandism," his house was immediately set fire to and burned to the ground; and when the missing man returned, besides finding his house reduced to ashes, he was subjected to the additional annoyance of being at once handed over to the authorities. This system has been carried to such an extent that several persons suspected of brigandage have besn actually compelled by their neighbors to set fire to their houses. It is to be regretted that the same plan can not be adopted with burglars in the metropolitan district, several of whom are supposed to occupy surburban villas, and who would be ineffably disgusted on returning home after a successful venture to find their dwellings in ruins.—St James's Gazette.

Twins Born in a Street-Car.

Between 8 and 10 o'clock on a recent night two babies were born in a street-car on Fifth Street, near Franklin avenue, St. Louis, Mo. The mother, the wife of a German lumber-piler of North St. Louis, named Lutz, had boarded the car at Park avenue, in the southern part of the city, and was on her way home when the trouble came on. The car was stopped, a physician summoned, and the patrol waggon called. They wanted to place her in the waggon and take her home, but she insisted on riding home in the car. They let her have her way, and although a monster crowd collected and travel over the car line was stopped, the car remained stationary until two children were born. The car then proceeded northward, and the mother and the babies rode home in it. At last accounts all were doing well.

"I see you are growing a mustache, George," said she, as she caressed the lappel of his coat. "Ye-es," stammered George, blushing furiously, "I—I am trying to cultivate one, Arabella." "Don't it feel funny on your lip," she asked. "Well, no," he laughed, regaining his composure, "it seems to be quite natural." "I wonder how a mustache would feel on my lip," she said, with a far-away, absent look in her eyes. "You needn't wonder long, then," said George, as he bent down. "Oh, you forward thing!" she exclaimed. "I've a good mind to make you take that back again." And he did.

How Medicine is Taken

It is to be feared that to most people medicine is not an erudite science or learned art, but is little more than the common administration of physic. They cannot understand medicines without drugs, and its virtue and power are popularly measured by the violence of its operations. Its very name is, in ordinary parlance, synonymous with physic. Take from it its pills and potions, and for them you take away its whole art and mystery. They do not believe in a scheme of treatment, however deep-laid and skillful, which does not include a certain statutory dosage. So that, as a rule, medical men are practically compelled to give their patients a visible object of faith in some form of physic, which may be at most designed to effect some very subordinate purpose. And it is remarkable how strongly even among the educated classes, this feeling prevails. Cures by the administration of mixtures and boluses is so fixed and ancient a tradition that it is only very slowly that the world will give it up. The anxiety of the friends of the patients wants to do more than follow the simple directions of "nursing," which have been so carefully indicated, and possess apparently so little remedial power. There is nothing of the unknown about them in which a flattering hope of great advantage can nestle. Thus it is necessary to educate the world into a belief in medicine apart from drugs, which finds its power in curing in adaptation of the common conditions of life and applications of physiological facts—a medicine which takes into its hands the whole life, and orders and fashions its every detail with scientific definiteness. It is found in everyday practice that this popular understanding of the modern spirit of medicine constantly checks the little tentative advances of a more scientific treatment, and it is necessary that it should be generally understood how powerfully the various processes of the economy may be affected by the manipulation of the condition of common life.—British Quarterly Review.

Starters for Stories.

Following the prevailing literary fashion: Slush, slush, slush!——I first saw the light of day——"Push the eglantine aside, Hester."——It was night—night in the great city.——It was night—night on the lonely downs.——A dull sun was rising on a perfect day.——A dull drizzling day on the Cornish coast.——It was Herbet Delany's 21st birthday.——It was a beautiful afternoon toward the close of August.——Geoffrey Marmalade had been a bachelor for many years.——Born of humble parents, John Gray grew up to manhood.——Yes, it was very hard for all of us to part with Lilith Jane; but——Only a gin-miller's daughter!—And yet how fair—how wonderously fair she was!——On a sultry day toward the close of August, 18—, the heir of Jagshurst lay dying.——The birds were twittering sweetly that morning in leafy June, when Clara Montmorenci——"No! The speaker was a fair pale girl of some nineteen summers.——A bright, glowing fire, a cheerful room, books everywhere—what more did Herbert Vane need to be happy?—Puck.

No wonder Cetewayo, is always at war. He has 400 wives. Even in this civilized country a man with that many wives couldn't expect to have much peace.

A Disproved Theory.

"What's the matter, Slocum?" asked one Brooklyn, E. D., young man of another, who wore a bicycle cap, and looked as though he ought to be in B E D.

"I was going across a vacant lot last night after I left my summer girl's house, in Bushwick, when a big beast of a dog chased me."

"Catch you?"

"Ya-as, rather."

"Why didn't you shoot him?"

"Well, you see I had no gun, and besides I'd been reading a story that's going the rounds of the papers now about the Hon. Phil Hoyne, of Chicago, wherein he says that he frightens dogs by taking his hat off. His theory is that the dog reflects, and thinks the human apparition is tearing himself to pieces."

"Well, did you try the honorable gentleman's racket?"

"Umph, umph, I guess he thought I wasn't tearing myself to pieces fast enough, and he took a holt to help. The (his language was such) brute has my new Fedora hat yet, unless he's through with it."—New York Truth.

Adverse to a Miscellaneous Crowd

It was in Chicago, of course, though for that matter it might have been in any city of Connecticut or Massachusetts.

"Will you go to the ball, this eve?" he inquired.

"Not this eve," she replied, certainly in not the most gracious manner possible: and then she added, "S'mother eve, possibly."

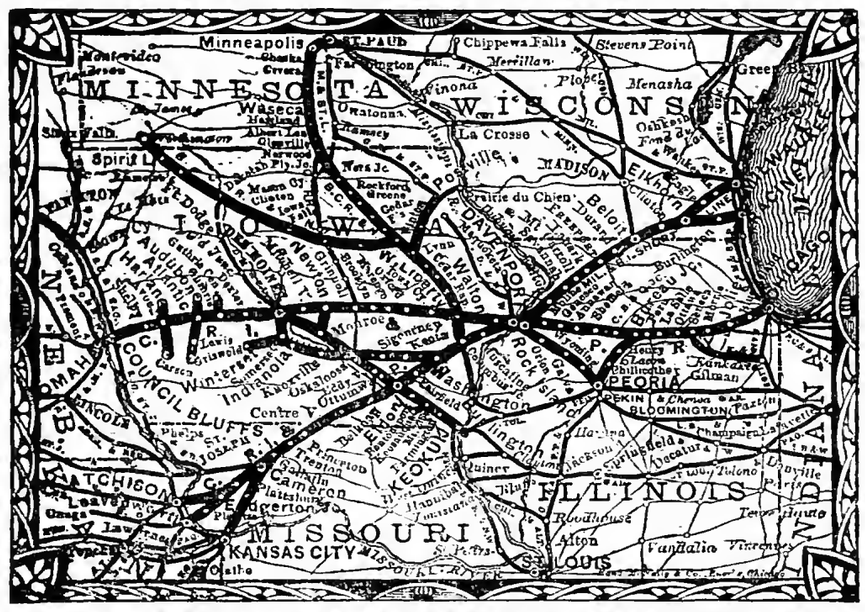
"But Mrs. Stockyards Porcine certainly sent you an invitation!"

"Oh, yes, of course; but I felt obliged to present my compliments and regrets."

"Well, if you ain't a funny woman. The soiree will be one of the most fashionable and select given on the west side, this season."

"I suppose so, but still I did not want to go."

"Private reasons, eh?"



"Well, if you must know, all of my divorced husbands have been invited, and I don't wish to mix promiscuously in such a miscellaneous crowd."

A Russian Victim.

The return from Siberia of the Russian writer Tchernischefski, who has been in exile since 1862, is announced. He is now turned 60, and it can well be believed that, apart from the effect of years, he has greatly aged. He was until the time of his arrest the editor of one of the leading Russian reviews, the Sovremennik, or Contemporary. But although the tone of the periodical was under Tchernischefski's direction liberal and even radical, it was not to his connection with the Sovremennik that his deportation was due. He was accused of editing one of the secret revoluticnary prints which in 1862 first made their appearance in Russia: and, charged with high treason, was found guilty and sentenced to capital punishment. The sentence was afterward commuted to deportation for life. He was exposed in one of the public squares in St. Petersburg, a sword was broken over his head in token of loss of nobility, and he was carried away to the gloomy region from which he has just come back.—St. James Gazette.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Notice—John Ford.
Estray—Geo. Watts.
Tenders—C. M. church.
Boy Wanted—John Noble.
Light! Light!—H. Parker,
Auction Sale—D. Melville & Co.
Change in Business—James Brander.
Substantial Goods—Reynolds & Son.

The Standard.

MARKDALE, NOV. 15TH, 1883.

BANQUET AT PRICEVILLE.

In Honor of A. Webster, Esq.

Thursday evening last was the time appointed to banquet Mr. Alex. Webster. The evening was very fine and a large number turned out to do honor to whom honor is due.

Mr. W. has been a resident of Priceville the greater part of the last twenty-six years, during which time he has been engaged in various undertakings but the greater portion of which he followed the mercantile life. He was always foremost in advocating or assisting in any project that was for the welfare of the place or its citizens. His business capabilities, together with wonderful energy and will power has carried him safely through many projects of public enterprise, and has crowned his various undertakings with satisfactory results. He has, however, disposed of his village property, the grist mill, to Mr. McGowan, and his mercantile business to Mr. Brander, from near Toronto, and is about to take his departure from Priceville and will locate on his farm on Young st., North, seven miles from Toronto.

The supper was given at the Commercial Hotel. Over ninety sat down to a table laden with the best the market could afford, got up in the usual tasty and sumptuous style of mine host, Mr. Atkinson and better half. Many leading men of the district were in attendance, among whom were Mr. Blyth, M. P. P. for South Grey, F. McRae, Reeve of Glenelg, Dr. Christoe, Reeve of Artemesia, Thorp Wright, Deputy Reeve of Artemesia, Geo. Rutherford, of Shelburne, T. Kells, R. Oliver, and Mr. Robb. The Durham Chronicle, Flesherton Advance, and Markdale STANDARD were also represented by their several proprietors. After full justice was done in supplying the wants of the inner man, Dr. Christoe was voted to the chair, and Mr. Robb to the vice-chair. The usual loyal and other toasts were proposed and responded to. Our space will not permit us to particularize, therefore we cannot do justice to the speakers, suffice it to say those present were unanimous in proclaiming the guest, Mr. Webster, a man of undoubted integrity and high moral worth, high in the estimation of all who knew him, and in whose departure the village will be a heavy loser; the very best wishes of the community would follow him and his excellent lady and family in their new home. With the exception of a few sarcastic remarks in reference to municipal matters, from some of our officials, from whom we might expect better things, the proceedings passed off in an exceedingly enjoyable manner.

WORTHY OF NOTICE.

Many are they who have been deceived by purchasing supposed real plated ware from pedlars and others. It is a difficult matter to judge the quality of this class of goods, hence the desirability of dealing with those who are not only practical experienced dealers, but whose reputation is valued higher than the all-mighty dollar. We are glad to see that our jeweller Mr. W. A. Brown is making this electro silver plated ware line a specialty in his business and to this end he has just opened the finest stock of plated ware ever brought into Markdale from the Meridan plate Co, suitable for table use, holiday gifts, wedding presents &c., consisting of castors, butter coolers, pickle dishes, tea sets, cake baskets, card stands, spoons, knives, forks, napkin rings &c., &c. The goods are worthy your careful inspection. The stock is large and varied, being altogether in advance of anything previously shown in this place. His watches and general jewellry is also a credit to the proprietor as well as the place. Mr. Brown is a man of undoubted integrity who we can cheerfully recommend to the confidence of the public. Be sure and see this stock before purchasing.

NORTH GREY FALL ASSIZES,

Trial of Joseph Lambert for Murdering His Father.

Acquitted on the Ground of Insanity.

DAMAGES FOR INJURIES AGAINST THE NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

OWEN SOUND, Nov. 7.—At the assize court here to-day several cases of minor importance was disposed of.

Wilton v. the Northern Railway. The plaintiff in January last was driving along the road near Thornbury with his ox team, and going across the track at a crossing was struck by a passing train, resulting in the plaintiff getting his leg broken, and receiving other injuries. Verdict was given for plaintiff for $350.

THE LAMBERT PARRICIDE.

The case of Joseph Lambert, of Holland township, for the murder of his father, George Lambert, in Holland township last May, was then brought before the court. The murder took place in Holland township, near the village of Williamsford, on the line of the Toronto, Grey, and Bruce Railway. The prisoner came into the house about an hour before tea and got a shot gun, which he loaded, and then proceeded up stairs. When the father came in to tea and was in the act of washing his hands the son fired a shot through a stove pipe hole, which took effect in the victim's back causing him to fall on the floor. The prisoner then re-loaded the gun and fired the second shot, taking effect in the dying man's head. After this he took his dead father by the boot leg and hauled him away in the garden about fifty yards from the house, where he attempted to prepare a grave for the reception of the body. It was at this stage of the crime that the prisoner was arrested. Since his confinment in gaol here he has taken matters quite cooly, occasionally showing signs of eccentricity. A number of witnesses were examined to-day to sustain the plea of insanity set up by the prisoner's counsel, including Drs. Barnhart and Manley, the latter of whom declared the prisoner a monomaniac. The trial was very short, and the jury after a short absence returned with a verdict of not guilty on account of insanity. His Lordship Justice Osler remarked that he agreed with the Jury's finding.

The prisoner was defended by Mr. James Masson, Alfer Frost prosecuting on behalf of the Crown.

THE GRAVE.

Mr. John Black, the oldeat and one of our most respected citizens died on Tuesday the 13th inst., after a short illness at the age of 79 years. Mr. B. was a native of Glasgow, Scotland, has been a resident of Markdale for some 15 years during which time he lived a retired life. He was of a very cheerful disposition, was well educated, and appreciated highly the society of such, he was kind hearted and won the friendship and esteem of old and young.

Personals.

Mrs. Dundass and Mrs. Archie Speers, jr., arrived from Alexandria, Min., recently.

Miss McPherson left Markdale for home, Markham Tp., recently.

Miss Wilmot returned to Milton recently.

Oscar Wright and Ab. Rutledge has returned from Owen Sound business college, having completed their course in book keeping, and received their diploma's.

Mr. Joseph Tees, of Manitoba and formerly of Montreal, has been visiting friends in this vicinity and left on Tuesday with a car load of stock for his farm in the N. W.

Mrs. Dunlop has gone to Oshawa, where she will remain some time for her health.

Thos. Wilson and Thos. Morrow, left for Manitoba last week.

MR. W. G. PICKELL'S semi-annual sale of live stock was held on his farm near Flesherton, on the 10th inst., and as usual was well attended and a success in every way. It was ably conducted by Mr. A. S. Vandusen whose sensible and honorable manner of conducting the auctioneer business is fast gaining for him a very favourable opinion as auctioneer in this section. There were some seven hundred dollars worth of very fine cows young stock and hogs disposed of at fair prices to the proprietor and sufficiently reasonable to pay the purchaser. As Mr. Pickell intends holding such sales in future those in need of good stock may look forward to them as favourable opportunities for purchasing the same.

The Tax Sale.

The county sale of lands for arrears of taxes took place last week, and we hope to see a change in the arrangements for advertising such properties before another year. The present mode of advertising all parcels of property, no matter in what locality in the county they may be, in one paper in the county is unjust, and unfair to those in the neighborhood of such parcel of property who may have a claim upon the same. The question has been before the public in years past, and we hope each representative at the coming session of the county council will advocate the just claims of their several municipalities, viz: That the property to be sold for taxes in any township be advertised in the paper, published in such municipality, or if none, then in one published in an adjoining one. This is nothing more than a just and fair request on the part of ratepayers.

Messrs. Palliser, Palliser & Co., of Bridgeport, Ct., the well known architects and publishers of standard works on architecture, have lately issued a sheet containing plans and specifications of a very tasteful modern eight room cottage with tower, and also with the necessary modifications for building it without the tower, and with but six rooms if desired. In its most costly form, the outlay is estimated at $3,000; without the tower it has been built for $2,500; and if only six rooms are included, the cost may be reduced to $1,700 or $2,000. Details are given of mantels, stairs, doors and casings, cornices etc. The publishers have found it the most popular plan they have ever issued, and state that it has been adopted in more than five hundred instances within their knowledge. The same firm issue specifications in blank adapted for frame or brick buildings of any cost; also forms of building contract, and several books on modern inexpensive, artistic cottage plans which are of great practical value and convenience to everyone interested.

DEATHS.

BLACK—In Markdale, on the 13th inst., John Black, Esq, aged 79 years.

CHANGE IN BUSINESS,

To the residents of Priceville and surrounding district.—Having purchased the business of Mr. Alexander Webster of this place, I have come among you as a citizen I hope by honorable dealing, strict attention to business and by studying the various wants of my customers, and keeping a well selected stock of fresh and seasonable goods at right prices, to merit that confidence and liberal support which my predecessor enjoyed.

I have just opened a large and well selected stock of fresh and seasonable goods in Dry Goods, Ready-made clothing, Hats, Caps, Boots and Shoes, Crockery, Hardware &c., to which I would respectfully solicit an inspection. Hoping that our social intercourse may be pleasant and our business transactions satisfactory, I am yours respectfully,

JAS. BRANDER.

Priceville Nov. 12, 1883.

A. HILL,
Fashionable Tailor,
OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.
A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

Markdale and Toronto TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clochs, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personaliy, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,
The Jeweller,
MARKDALE,

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.95 to $1.00; Spring $0.60 to $1 00; Barley, 45 to60; Peas, 65; Oats, 30c Butter, 18c; Eggs, 22c; Potatoes, 40c; Hay, $8 .00; Pork, 5.50 to 6.00; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.10; Spring, $1.00 to $1.12; Barley, 50c to 70c; Oats, 37c to 40c Peas, 70c to 73c; Hogs, $6.00 to $6.25; Potatoes, per bag, 90c to $1c; Butter, dairy, 18c to 20c; eggs, 22c to 25c.

WANTED, Smart boy as an apprentice in the wood working department of a wagon shop. Apply to.
JOHN NOBLE.
Markdale November 14, 1883.

TENDERS. Tenders will be received by Thos. Hill, up to the 1st December for the supply of 20 cords of green, sawed maple and beech wood, two feet long, to be delivered at the Methodist church, 5 cords in december and the balance in January.
Markdale November 13, 1883.

NOTICE. The undersigned will be at the bank at Markdale from the 20th to the the 23rd December for the purpose of collecting sale notes, as they become due at the above date. Those interested will please be prompt and save further trouble and costs.
JOHN FORD.
Annan P. O., November 8th, 1883 166-69

ESTRAY. Came to the premises of the subscriber, lot East half 2, con. 7 Holland, about the 12th October last, four head of two year old cattle, one bull, one steer and two heifers, color mostly, red. The owner is requested to prove property, pay expences, and take them away. Unless claimed by Nov. 30th, will be offered for sale.
GEO. WATTS.
Holland November 13th 1883. 166-69

WANTED, Eight girls, at Miss Green's dress making parlor. Six apprentices and two assistants. 161-tf.

TEACHER WANTED, Male or Female, for School Section No. 15, Township of Euphrasia, holding third class certificate, duties to commence 1st of January, 1884, apply stating salary expected, to
JAMES STRUTHERS, Sec.
155-57 Markdale P. O.

NOTICE. Having given up possession of Barrhead Mill, and purpose removing from this place shortly, I hereby notify all parties indebted to me to call at Lucas' Bank and settle their account and save further trouble or costs.
W. J. ROWE.
Oct.24,'83.

ESTRAY. Came into the premises of the subscriber, Lot North ½ 2, Con. 12, Euphrasia, about the 8th October, two heifers rising two years. The owner is requested to prove property, pay expences, and take them away.
SAMUEL SMART.
164-66

TEACHER WANTED For School Section No. 6, Artemesia, male or female, holding second or third class certificate. Duties to commence 2nd day of January, 1884. Apply stating salary to
JOHN HAZARD.
Sec.-Treas. to Trustees.
Flesherton Station P.O.
Artemesia, Oct, 25, '83. 164-65

ESTRAY. From the premises of the subscriber, lot South ½ 12, con. 11 Euphrasia, in the month of May, 5 yearling calves, 1 steer and 4 heifers, mostly red with a few white spots. Any person giving such information as will lead to their recovery will be suitably rewarded. Any person harboring them without advertising them will be prosecuted according to law.
GEO. TAYLOR,
Euphrasia Nov. 2, 1883. 155-57

FARMS FOR SALE. Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are clearsd and under ultivation. Lot S part 15, con. 12. Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to
J. G. IRVING,
Markdale.
Oct.16.1883. 16

FARM FOR SALE. Lot 89 and 90 second range west of T. & S. Road, Glenelg, 100 acres, 85 of which are cleared and under cultivation fit for reaper and mower to work on. Buildings and fences in good repair, soil clay loam, well watered, and in a good state of cultivation. This is a desirable farm and well located being 2½ miles from the flourishing village of Markdale, For further particulars apply on premises or by letter to 162-72 WM. MUTRIE,
Markdale P. O.

FOR SALE, A choice grain farm, Lots 109 and 110, 2nd East T. and S. Road, Artemesia, containing 100 acres, 80 acres cleared and in high state of cultivation, clear of stone and fit for machinery of any kind; soil clay loam. The farm is well fenced, has 15 acres fall wheat in, about 50 fruit trees bearing, and is situated in a beautiful section of country two and a half miles from Markdale, a thriving village on the T. G. & B. railway. Good reasons for selling. Possession given next spring. For further particulars apply on the premises to
164-66 JOHN MERCER,
Markdale P. O.

AUCTION SALE
—OF—
VALUABLE PROPERTY
—FIFTY—
OWEN SOUND TOWN LOTS
—FIFTY—

Situated in the west end of the town and the only available lots in the market convenient to the railway and shipping interests.

In view of the fact that the Canada Pacific Railway Company have secured the Toronto, Grey & Bruce Road, which will make Owen Sound their terminus and transhipping point, and consequently the best purchasing and shipping port in North Western Ontario, it should convey to every one that town property at this point must increase in value and became a profitable investment. The above lots are offered for sale partly to test the present market value, the Vendors intend to reserve every third lot at an advance of 25 per cent on auction prices day of sale.

To actual purchasers coming from a distance half railway fare on the T. G. & Bruce and N. & N, Western roads, will be returned on their paying one third of purchase money.

Terms of sale—Ten per cent of amount day of sale, and the balance to make one third of purchase within 10 days, the balance to be paid in 5 equal annual instalments, with interest at 6 per cent per annum, secured by Mortgage on property, or if paid in cash 10 per cent off. To purchasers erecting within one year brick dwellings worth not less than $1,000, a relate of 10 per cent will be allowed off the purchase money of lot on which the erection is made.

Sale at the Queen's hotel, Owen Sound, Thursday Nov. 29th, 1883, afternoon and evening. For further particulars and conditions of sale apply to D. MELVILLE & Co. or JAS. SUTHERLAND, Owen Sound.

LIGHT! LIGHT!!
REFINED COAL OIL
18cts a gallon in two barrel lots and upwards.

HEAD LIGHT OIL
25cts. a gallon by the barrel.

TEAS
At Wholesale Rates.

H. PARKER,
Druggist, - DURHAM.

J. G. IRVING,
MARKDALE,
Manufacturer of all Kinds of
PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of
IRON - PUMPS
SUPPLIED.

J. W. FORD

Is giving splendid satisfaction in

CRISTING,

By the New Process at the

Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

ROBT. ASKIN,
MARKDALE,
Has opened out a First-Class
UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,
And therefore has supplied a want long felt,
COFFINS,
CASKETS, SHROUDS,
and all
FUNERAL FURNISHINGS
supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse
for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—
PICTURE FRAMING
Done on short notice.
ROBT. ASKIN.

AUCTION SALE
—OF—
VALUABLE PROPERTY
—FIFTY—
OWEN SOUND TOWN LOTS
—FIFTY—

Situated in the west end of the town and the only available lots in the market convenient to the railway and shipping interests.

In view of the fact that the Canada Pacific Railway Company have secured the Toronto, Grey & Bruce Road, which will make Owen Sound their terminus and transhipping point, and consequently the best purchasing and shipping port in North Western Ontario, it should convey to every one that town property at this point must increase in value and became a profitable investment. The above lots are offered for sale partly to test the present market value, the Vendors intend to reserve every third lot at an advance of 25 per cent on auction prices day of sale.

To actual purchasers coming from a distance half railway fare on the T. G. & Bruce and N. & N, Western roads, will be returned on their paying one third of purchase money.

Terms of sale—Ten per cent of amount day of sale, and the balance to make one third of purchase within 10 days, the balance to be paid in 5 equal annual instalments, with interest at 6 per cent per annum, secured by Mortgage on property, or if paid in cash 10 per cent off. To purchasers erecting within one year brick dwellings worth not less than $1,000, a relate of 10 per cent will be allowed off the purchase money of lot on which the erection is made.

Sale at the Queen's hotel, Owen Sound, Thursday Nov. 29th, 1883, afternoon and evening. For further particulars and conditions of sale apply to D. MELVILLE & Co. or JAS. SUTHERLAND, Owen Sound.

LIGHT! LIGHT!!
REFINED COAL OIL
18cts a gallon in two barrel lots and upwards.

HEAD LIGHT OIL
25cts. a gallon by the barrel.

TEAS
At Wholesale Rates.

H. PARKER,
Druggist, - DURHAM.

J. G. IRVING,
MARKDALE,
Manufacturer of all Kinds of
PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of
IRON - PUMPS
SUPPLIED.

J. W. FORD

Is giving splendid satisfaction in

CRISTING,

By the New Process at the

Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

ROBT. ASKIN,
MARKDALE,
Has opened out a First-Class
UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,
And therefore has supplied a want long felt,
COFFINS,
CASKETS, SHROUDS,
and all
FUNERAL FURNISHINGS
supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse
for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—
PICTURE FRAMING
Done on short notice.
ROBT. ASKIN.

Local and Oth

NOTICES in these columns any individual or Society cents a line for the first cents a line each subsequen

GRAIN, beef, and pork into market freely.

REJUVENATOR stoma taking the lead, sold barber.

MR. JOHN HANBURY councillor for Ward Manitoba.

ALL WHO are indebte signed will please cal settle. A. McINTYRE.

THE STORES and sho ed in Markdale on Th and services held churches.

MR. J. L. BROWNE his bride safely at will make their home trict, B. C.

HON. A. M. Ross, t cial Treasurer was ele ation, for West Huron last.

TENDERS.—We will at this office up to Th inst., for the supply o two foot wood and 10 be delivered in Decem when delivered.

DressStuffs

Dress stuffs in shades, varying 10 cents up.

Tweeds in Eng and Canadian, in and most fashion

TORO

SELLS CHEAP

C. REYNOLDS & SON.

YOU CAN

Buy more good substantial Goods for $1 at Reynolds' than any other house in town. Our Dress Goods, Mantle Cloths, Tweeds etc., are the newest under the Sun, and cheaper than the cheapest.

GLOVES

We have a Job Lot of Ladies' Kid Gloves on hand, usually sold for 75c., at 25c. per pair. Genuine Josephine Kid Gloves for $1.10 per pair, every pair guaranteed.

Woollen Goods.

Our flannels are unsurpassed for quality and prices, all patterns, Plain, Grey, etc. BLANKETS---We have a good assortment of White and Grey Blankets from $1.75 per pair and up.

We have just the Ganzies the people are all looking for, good and heavy, all wool and at 85c. per pair, only.

Boots and Shoes.

Our stock of Boots and Shoes are the Cheapest and best in Canada. We buy from one of the leading manufacturing houses in the Dominion, and don't you forget it.

Come in and give our 30c. Tea a trial, it beats anything and everything.

Don't fail to see the Bargains before buying one dollar's worth of goods at any other house.

GO TO

C. Reynolds & Son.

CHOICE GOODS

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

Grain, beef, and pork are comming into market freely.

Rejuvenator stomach bitters are taking the lead, sold by Smith, the barber.

Mr. John Hanbury has been elected councillor for Ward No. 1, Brandon, Manitoba.

All who are indebted to the undersigned will please call at once and settle. A. McIntyre.

The stores and shops were all closed in Markdale on Thanksgiving Day and services held in the various churches.

Mr. J. L. Browne has arrived with his bride safely at Victoria. They will make their home in Nicola district, B. C.

Hon. A. M. Ross, the new Provincial Treasurer was elected by acclamation, for West Huron, on Saturday last.

Tenders.—We will receive tenders at this office up to Thursday the 22nd inst., for the supply of 10 cords dry two foot wood and 10 cords green to be delivered in December cash paid when delivered.

A choice lot of seasonable goods just arrived at Trimble & Wright's, and all at prices to suit the cheapest buyers.

A Severe snow storm set in on Sunday night and has continued since, the snow is now over 12 inches deep and sleighing tolerable geed.

Customers will consult their interest by coming early in the day to Trimble & Wright's and avoid the great rush in the afternoons.

Mr. W. C. Jewel, dentist, of Meaford, who formerly made professional visis to Markdale, died at his residence, on Monday the 5th inst., aged 51 years.

The storm of Sunday last was one of the worst for 20 years on the Northern lakes. Six men from Markdale were on the Campana, which vessel is however safe with her load.

Mr. Wm. Anderson, a well-to-do farmer has lived 30 years in Glenelg township and informed us that he has never been in Owen Sound. He is not at all anxious to go there either.

The Bell-ringers.—The concert given on Monday evening by the Alleghanian troupe was something above the ordinary. The Swiss bells were something new to a Markdale audience and was highly appreciated, while the singing by the troupe was simply grand. Those who had not the good fortune to attend missed a rare treat. The company appear to be of a highly respectable class.

If you wish to subscribe for the Globe, Mail, Star, Farmer's Advocate or Montreal Witness or renew your subscription for any of the above papers hand in your name and subscription to this office.

Dentistry.—T. F. Brown, L. D. S., of Woodstock, will be in Markdale on and after the 15th November for two weeks, filling, extracting, plate work &c satisfactory done. Charge moderate office at W. A. Brown's Jewellry Store.

There is a diagram of a simple invention for hanging up hoggs and beeves while butchering, in the Farmer's Advocate for November, weich is worth to farmers the price of that valuable jonrnal for a year.

Never in the history of Markdale was there such a dearth of fire wood as the present week. We are no exception to the rule we are sorry to say, and it is almost a miracle that we published this week.

Changed Hands.—W. J. McFarland has sold his mill property to Plewes Bros., of Bracebridge and Glen Huron. Those gentlemen appear to be thoroughgoing business men. They purpose commencing business forthwith, but will not make any important changes until spring when they purpose enlarging the mill, raising the dam, and putting in the new roller system and will run it as a merchant mill. They also purpose opening a flour and general feed and provision store.

A Lodge of the Sons of Temperance was recently organized at the town line appointment of the P. M. Church at which place an open lodge was held on Tuesday evening last which was a success notwithstanding the stormy weather.

A fatal accident occurred at Clarksburg, on Wednesday the 7th inst., whereby Mr. Thos. Loughead lost his life by a heavy plate falling on him while assisting to raise the new foundry, he died almost instantly. He leaves a wife and family of six to mourn their sad loss.

Standard Time.—Mostly all the Canadian and American cities and large companies have adopted the standard time which will take effect next Monday throughout America. Toronto time, which will be the time for this district also, will be 19 minutes faster than the present Toronto time.

Serious Accident.—Last Friday evening, as Mrs. Geo. Anderson, of the Back Line, Melancthon, was in an outbuilding searching for eggs, her feet slipping, she caught a log with her left hand, in the vain endeavor to prevent falling; but her hand getting bound between two logs, the small bone of the forearm was snapped an inch or so above the wrist. Dr. Norton adjusted the fracture.—Shelburne Free Press. (The above person was formerly a highly respected resident of Markdale.—Ed.)

Strange but True.—A woman in Wisconsin left her husband and two children. In order to disguise herself she dressed in men's clothing. She soon after courted a girl and married, they lived happy together but had no family, strange but true.

Support It.—The local newspaper is not only an educator but it is a panorama of every day events. It aims to return value received for what you do for it whether individually or in the aggregate. Strive then to look upon it as one of the essentials that you must have. In doing so the local paper will become what you can count it and its mission will be a success, An exchange hits the nail on the head in the following:—"It is absurd for the residents of rural municipalities to suppose that because they get large city weeklies for the same money that they paid for a good local paper, that they receive more value for their money. This is a mistaken idea. Any man who takes the least interest in the affairs of his township or county, if he can afford only one paper, he should take the one published in his own county. The local paper furnishes its readers with the news of the entire district, market reports, agricultural news; county, town and township Council reports, accounts of agricultural society and shows; and local news generally, none of which the city papers can pretend to do. It will thus be seen that neither the Globe, Mail, or any other city weekly can supply the place of the local paper."

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK

DressStuffsTweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN.

MR. FLINTSHIRE'S MARRIAGE

Mr. Flintshire retired from the Indian civil service at the age of 50, and returned to England with the fixed intention of marrying for money. Being a bachelor, his pension was more than sufficient for his wants, and his savings amounted to a considerable fortune. But he was a very careful man, to say the least, and he had always cherished the idea of finding a rich wife who would keep him. Hitherto he had been unsuccessful, because he had, to a limited extent, allowed sentiment to interfere with his choice. But now that his income had diminished in consequence of his retirement, he resolved to be guided entirely by expediency, and to permit neither age nor any other disqualification to baulk his design.

It is hardly surprising that with such broad views as this he had comparatively little difficulty in discovering his opportunity. He was chatting one day with his doctor in rather a despondent mood, in consequence of the unsatisfactory state of his liver, when the medical gentleman, to cheer him, remarked:

"My dear sir, you need not feel uneasy. You will be well in a month, and you will live to be as brisk and lively at 84 as old Mrs. Mumblewood."

"Who is Mrs. Mumblewood?" inquired Mr. Flintshire.

"A patient of mine—a wonderful old lady. As I tell you, she is 84, and yet comes to see me in an omnibus to save a cab fare," said the doctor, laughing. "You will hardly believe it when I tell you she is enormously wealthy."

"Is she a widow?" inquired Mr. Flintshire, pricking up his ears.

"Yes. Her husband was old Mumblewood, the contractor, who died worth, as they say, a quarter of a million. The old fellow came from nothing, but the widow is a shrewd, clever old lady, as brisk as you or I."

"She can't last much longer, I suppose?" remarked Mr. Flintshire, absently.

"Well, that is a professional secret," said the doctor, laughing again. "However, it is safe to predict that she has lived the best part of her life."

"I should like to see her," said Mr. Flintshire, in quite a hearty tone for him. "The sight of her will do one more good than a course of medicine."

"It will be cheaper, at any rate," said the doctor, with unconscious irony. "Let me see—I should like to have a look at you next week. Now, Tuesday morning at 12 o'clock is old Mrs. Mumblewood's hour, and you might arrange your visit accordingly."

Probably the doctor had no other designs in his mind than the wish to secure another fee, and in this he succeeded, for Mr. Flintshire at once undertook to call on the day and at the hour mentioned.

It seems incredible that any man should seriously think of paying court to an old lady of 84. Yet Mr. Flintshire was quite prepared to do so if it turned out that Mrs. Mumblewood was anything like as rich as was supposed, and he made the appointment with the most deliberate intentions.

He had no difficulty in learning all about the old lady, who resided in Sloan street, and was well known in the neighborhood. The result of his inquiries was highly satisfactory, for though the deceased contractor had not left anything like a quarter of a million, the widow had inherited a large fortune, which must have considerably increased in consequence of her penurious habits. She lived in a small house, attended only by two old servants who had been respectively cook and butler to her late husband. She could hardly be spending £500 a year, to judge from the stories that were told about her, and the natural inference was that her saving must alone amount to a fortune.

Under these circumstances Mr. Flintshire did not fail to keep his appointment. He considered the widow an excellent chance, and though her miserly propensities rather interfered with his original design of being supported free of expense, this drawback was counterbalanced by the probability of her speedy demise. Even if he should have to keep her for a few years, her fortune, which would come to him, would only be proportionately increased. He therefore quite made up his mind to marry her, nor did his purpose waver when he found Mrs. Mumblewood an illiterate old lady, with a skin like parchment, a face that might have been carved from a block of wood, and a tongue that was constantly saying bitter things.

The meeting at the doctor's house, which was their first introduction, soon ripened into intimacy. Mr. Flintshire "made the running"—to use a sporting phrase—with dexterity and determination. He insisted on giving the widow a lift home in a cab, and from that day forward he never failed to send her some little token of regard. Singular as it may appear in an old lady of 84, Mrs. Mumblewood was evidently flattered by these attentions, and, though she soon intimated to him she suspected he had designs on her fortune, she readily accepted his assurance that his politeness arose from pure friendship. Before long Mr. Flintshire got into the habit of calling nearly every day, and though the hospitality he received was of a very meagre kind, he could not help admiring the strict economy which the widow practiced in her domestic arrangements.

It was only natural, however, that the old proverb about the course of true love never running smooth should have been exemplified in Mr. Flintshire's case. If the widow received his attentions with complacent satisfaction, he was much less favorably regarded by another member of the household. He perceived that he had an enemy in the butler from the first moment that ancient retainer opened the door to him. This individual was a surly, not over-clean old man of 60 or thereabouts, whose chief duties appeared to be to keep off intruders from his mistress, since he apparently discharged no other functions. It was perfectly obvious that old Numb was jealous of everyone who entered the house, and, probably, had an eye to his mistress' fortune. He was never polite to Mr. Flintshire, though the latter, from motives of policy, took great pains to make himself agreeable, even going to the length of an occasional gratuity. Unfortunately the man appeared to have considerable influence with the old lady, who was evidently a little afraid of him. Mr. Flintshire, who did not intend to be refused when he made his proposal of marriage, realized that he must not leave Mr. Numb out of his calculations. The consequence was that, after mature deliberation, he one day asked the butler to give him a few words in private, and thus delivered himself:

"Mr. Numb," he said, mysteriously, "has the possibility of your mistress marrying again ever occurred to you?"

"No, it hain't," said the man, shortly.

"Well, Mr. Numb, perhaps not, though you could hardly have imagined that I could see so much of that excellent lady as I have done lately without conceiving a very great regard for her. Now, supposing," said Mr. Flintshire, quite jocosely, "supposing I were to aspire to gain your mistress' hand, what would you say?"

"I should say, don't you wish you may get it?" returned Numb, calmly.

"I am quite serious," said Mr. Flintshire, frowning a little. "Of course, I know it is not usual for a gentleman to consult a lady's butler before proposing marriage to her. Indeed, the idea is ridiculous. But you have lived in your mistress' service so long that she regards you as a friend and adviser, and, under the circumstances, I think it only right to mention the matter to you. A word from you, Mr. Numb, might prove very useful."

"Very likely," said Mr. Numb, in an oracular tone.

"Well, now, come, Mr. Numb. Just consider. I am not a foolish and extravagant man who would play ducks and drakes with your mistress' money. On the contrary, I am a careful man, and not a poor one either. I think we should live a little better, Numb, if I were master here; your wages might be raised; and—and—well, Numb, on my wedding day, I dare say I might give you a five-pound note. What do you say to that?"

Mr. Flintshire spoke in his most earnest and persuasive tone, but failed to move a muscle of Mr. Numb's stolid face.

"Or—or ten. Shall we say ten, Numb?" said Mr. Flintshire, eagerly.

"Make it fifty," said the butler, with a perfectly impassive countenance.

"Fifty! Bless my soul. Ahem! It's a very large sum," gasped Mr. Flintshire. "Can't we split the difference and meet half-way. Say twenty or twenty-five."

"Fifty," repeated Numb, stubbornly.

"Well, well! fifty, then," said Mr. Flintshire, with resignation. "It's a large sum, but ——. However, say fifty."

The butler said fifty, apparently rather to oblige Mr. Flintshire than from any interest he felt in the discussion—judging, at least, from his tone and manner. Nothing more passed at this remarkable interview, but the next day Mr. Flintshire proposed to Mrs. Mumblewood and was immediately accepted.

After this matters went smoothly enough, and though Mr. Flintshire fretted a good deal about the £50 he had promised to Numb, he did not consider the money thrown away. The alacrity with which Mrs. Mumblewood had accepted him plainly revealed that he owed his success to the butler's interference. When once he was married he flattered himself that Mr. Numb's dominion would soon come to an end. Meauwhile, it was prudent to be polite to him, for since he acted as the old lady's confidential adviser, he might make himself disagreeable by suggesting settlements and other undesirable complications. Mr. Flintshire had previously discovered that the butler was a remarkably shrewd man of business, and had served in his youth as a clerk in a lawyer's office.

Nothing of the kind occurred, however, and the marriage was performed in a neighboring church without fuss or ceremony. Mr. Numb received his £50, together with a promise of a rise in wages, which Mr. Flintshire intended, in his own mind, as a preliminary to dismissing him. The wedding banquet and the auspicious event in no way disturbed the even tenor of the household. The only change that occurred was that from henceforth Mr. Flintshire was promoted to the dignity of paymaster of the establishment, the widow stopping all supplies with promptitude the moment she had changed her name.

Mr. Flintshire did not trouble to announce his wedding in the papers. There was nothing to be gained by doing so, and his wife did not appear to desire it. He settled down readily enough to his new state of life, and devoted himself to ministering to his wife's comfort in a very laudable manner. The chief aim he had in view was to prevent her from making a will. He strongly suspected that she had made one before her marriage, in which the name of Mr. Numb figured conspicuously; but that document was now null and void by operation of law. If his wife, therefore, did not make a fresh one he would, at her death, inherit everything as her husband, and he was, accordingly, quite content to leave matters where they were at present.

If Mr. Flintshire deserved domestic happiness as a reward for his perseverance, he certainly did not attain that desirable consummation. To begin with, his wife was crotchety and fractious, as old people generally are, but, in addition to these failings, she possessed a remarkably vigorous temper. Mr. Flintshire, to serve his own purposes, staid by her side from morning till night, and she made a perfect slave of him. Being morbidly fearful of offending her, he dared not venture to retaliate, and never was an unhappy husband more henpecked than he. Another source of annoyance was that the whole household seemed to be in league to plunder him. The simple domestic arrangements which had sufficed when the old lady held the purse were no longer sufficient. His wife was the first to propose a more liberal table, and Mr. Numb manifested a perfectly fiendish ingenuity in suggesting costly little dishes for her. In a word, the housekeeping expenses increased to an enormous extent, and all attempts at introducing economy proved unavailing.

The last, but not the least, of the bridegroom's troubles was the presence in the house of Numb, the butler. So long as this man remained, Mr. Flintshire felt that he was only the nominal head of the establishment. Mr. Numb did precisely as he pleased, and his influence with his mistress showed no signs of diminishing. Yet Mr. Flintshire did not see his way to getting rid of him. If he attempted to exercise his authority his wife might be driven to take some desperate course. He ventured on one occasion to hint that Numb's services might with advantage be dispensed with, but the suggestion called forth such a torrent of reproaches and invectives that Mr. Flintshire trembled at his temerity. Numb staid on and haunted him like a veritable Old Man of the Sea, drawing high wages, increasing the weekly bills, and what was far worse, enjoying the larger share of his wife's confidence.

The one bright spot in the midst of Mr. Flintshire's tribulation was that his wife evinced no desire to make a will. He therefore felt tolerably secure about the future, which was a great consolation to him. Nevertheless, a year of this anxious life so undermined his constitution that, in all probability, another twelvemonth would have either killed him or rendered him hopelessly imbecile. Fortunately for him, these dreadful contingencies were averted by the sudden death of the old lady, who expired in her sleep without having given the slightest indication of her approaching end.

The sad event had much the same effect upon the bereaved husband as a summer shower has upon a parched garden. It revived him instantly and called forth all his former energy and vitality. His first step was to make a minute and careful examination of the deceased lady's effects, without, as he had anticipated, finding a trace of a will. The precaution was hardly necessary, for he was certain she had not made one, but the search satisfied his mind, and he lost no time in venting his revengful feelings against Mr. Numb. He nursed his resentment until the day of the funeral, but immediately upon his return from following his wife to the grave he summoned the butler to his presence. The man shuffled into the room with a hang-dog look, as though he anticipated his fate, but Mr. Flintshire remarked that his expression was insolent and defiant.

"Numb," said his master, sharply; "you will be good enough to leave this house within an hour. I won't stand any more of your insolence, and it was only out of consideration for the poor lady who has gone that I have bone with you so long. I will pay you a month's wages, and I warn you not to attempt to make off with any of my property."

"Two can play at that game," snarled the butler, fumbling in his pocket, and producing a document. "Suppose this house and everything in it was my property, and I was to ask you to clear out; what would you say then?"

"It is a perfectly idle proposition," said Mr. Flintshire, loftily. "What is that paper?"

"It is a copy of the old lady's will. My lawyer has the original."

"Is it dated since my marriage?" inquired Mr. Flintshire with a shade of anxiety.

"Oh, no!—long before," answered the butler, with a grin.

"Then, it is not worth the paper it is written on," said Mr. Flintshire, waving aside the document. "I don't want to see it. It is of no consequence whatever."

"I shouldn't be too sure if I was you," returned Numb, maliciously, as he put the paper back in his pocket. "I fancy you will laugh the other side of your mouth before the day is out."

"Get out of my sight this instant!" cried Mr. Flintshire, losing his temper. "If you have not left the house within an hour I shall send for the police."

The butler appeared quite unmoved by this threat, and disappeared with perfect self-possession. His confident air troubled Mr. Flintshire a little, though he hardly knew why. It was obvious that the man did not believe that the will he spoke of was void, but that was only his ignorance. Nevertheless, Mr. Flintshire resolved to call immediately upon the firm of solicitors who had been in the habit of acting as his wife's legal advisers, and accordingly he hailed a passing hansom, and drove to Lincoln's inn.

"Are you Mr. Flintshire?" inquired the senior member of the firm in question, upon his new client being ushered in, "the gentleman who recently married our late client, Mrs.—Mrs. Mumblewood?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Flintshire, struck with uneasiness at something strange in the lawyer's tone and manner. "Possibly you were unaware of our marriage."

"I never heard of it till to-day. I regret to say I have to make a most extraordinary and painful communication to you," said the lawyer, speaking as though he could hardly realize what he was about to say. "I have had Mr. Numb here this morning, and it was from him I heard of your—your marriage."

"Good heavens, what is the matter?" gasped Mr. Flintshire, beside himself with nervous apprehension,

"I really hardly like to break the news to you, but the fact is our late client was secretly married to this Mr. Numb some years ago. I had no idea of it till this morning. It is the most extraordinary state of things I ever heard of in my life," said the lawyer, leaning back in his chair.

"It's a lie—a base, infamous conspiracy!" cried Mr. Flintshire, foaming at the mouth.

"I'm afraid it is true. In fact, since seeing Mr. Numb I have inspected the marriage registry at Somerset house," said the lawyer. "The most startling thing is that this old lady, whose meanness amounted to a mania, deliberately committed bigamy, with her husband's concurrence, in order to save money."

"If it is true, he shall hang for it! He shall refund every farthing and pay me damages. I will inform against him before the nearest magistrate," cried Mr. Flintshire, gesticulating wildly, and looking very odd and excited.

He did not carry out any of these threats, however, for the melancholy reason that he went raving mad.—London Truth.

The Missing Links.

Josiah H. Stringly, forty years ago was leaning on his ox-cart in front of the Baptist meeting-house of Oshkosh when the steeple was struck by lightning. Mr. Stringly was stunned, his oxen killed, and the cart was apparently annihilated. After recovering from the effects of the lightning, Mr. Stringly became a book agent and practiced that calling until about a week ago, when an indurated swelling on his right cheek attracted his attention. He found that it was caused by a link of an ox-chain, and on trying to pull the link out of the cheek twelve feet of heavy ox-chain and the missing ox-cart were recovered—the latter in perfect condition, with the exception of the tires which were slightly corroded. This story teaches us that we should never play with lightning and should always tell the truth.—New York Times.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

Some Curious Facts About the Five Pound Notes—Honorable Dealings.

In the course of five years the paid notes amount to 77,745,000 in number, and they fill 13,400 boxes, which if placed side by side would reach two and one-third miles. If the notes were placed in a pile they would reach to a height of five and two-third miles, or if joined end to end they would form a ribbon 12,445 miles long. Their superficial extent is said to be rather less than that of Hyde park. They weigh over ninety and two-thirds tons, and their original value was over £1,750,626,600. The greatest of rogues might be inclined to find some comfort in the extent and intricacy of such a store of old paper. Of course, however, they are most systematically arranged, and any note of the seventy-seven millions may be pounced upon with the utmost celerity and precision. At the end of five years these old notes are thrown into a furnace specially constructed for the purpose, and are burned. It is a curious fact, however, so firm in texture is the paper of a genuine Bank of England note that burning alone can hardly destroy it. The authorities have in a little glazed frame the remnants of a note which was in the great fire of Chicago. Though completely charred and black, the paper still holds together, and the printing of the note is said to be sufficiently legible to establish its genuineness and to warrant its being cashed.

There are some other notes here which were cashed after having gone down in the Eurydice a few years ago, and reduced to little better than pulp. Indeed, the scraps and fragments which sometimes come into a bank to be cashed have a really ridiculous appearance. On the occasion of a recent visit, for instance, the officials had under examination a number of fragments of discolored paper, none much bigger than a sixpence and when put together presenting to the unskilled eye, not the slightest resemblance of a note. And yet it was pretty confidently asserted that the paper would be cashed. It is beneath the dignity of the Bank of England to take, or even appear to take advantage of accidents to their notes, and if there is any possibility of establishing the identity of one of them, it is sure to be duly honored. Even where a note is entirely destroyed, proper evidence of the fact of destruction will be accepted and payment made. A lost note will in some cases be paid, and there is one occasion recorded upon which the liberal attitude of the directors in a case of this kind involved them in a loss of £30,000. A bank director declared that he had lost a note for that amount, and, upon his giving an indemnity for the sum in the event of the note ever turning up, the money was paid to him. Many years after his death an unknown person presented the missing note. The paper was undeniably good, and the bank had no alternative but to cash it, as it was payable to bearer on demand, and as the heirs of the bank director who had lost it repudiated all liability, the money could not be recovered.

Ambitions to be an Author.

In 1869, a young girl from a Southern State came to one of the large Eastern cities to seek her fortune at authorship. She had a few hundred dollars; was pretty, quick witted, and had absolute faith in her own genius.

She would write a novel, she said, or a poem that would astonish the world and bring her fortune. After this had been done then she intended to go home crowned with fame, to become the queen of her little village.

The novel and the poem was written, and went the rounds of the publishing-houses seeking in vain a publisher. She wrote other novels to no better purpose. She wrote essays, newspaper articles, and carried them herself to every editor, using her pretty face and girlish wiles to force a sale.

After a few months her money was gone. Her clothes grew shabby. Her face, a little sharp now and pinched, had become familiar in every newspaper office. Her eyes had lost their dewy softness, and shone hard and defiant. Often she was hungry.

The end of the story is easily guessed. She was sent home at last, ruined in health and in reputation. This is a true story in every detail.

The girl had ability enough to earn her living in a half dozen ordinary ways; but she had not the ability to express herself in writing, and here is the fatal mistake which she and so many other young people make.

They are blind and indifferent to all kinds of success but that of authorship. Yet many a man and woman who can hardly write a well-expressed letter have more sound practical sense, executive talent and refinement of feeling, than the versified or story-teller who hold the public breathless for a time.

But the ambition to succeed as an author is harmless enough, provided disappointment does not disable the mind for other work. It is a career which requires no capital or "plant" of any kind. Neither is influence needed to secure a new aspirant a hearing, although there is a wide-spread belief among unsuccessful writers that there is a ring composed of editors and a few well-known writers, whose object is to crush unknown genius and forbid it a hearing.

On the contrary, there is not an editor in the country who would not hail with absolute delight a new writer of power, who could bring fresh strength to his columns.

Send your manuscript, therefore, boys, and girls, to the magazine you prefer. You may be assured that it will be fairly read and judged. If you do not succeed, it will be because you have not the especial talent for writing. Give it up. You have other ability; use that. Turn to any profession or trade rather than hang around newspaper offices in the unhonored ranks of the hangers-on of literature.—Youth's Companion.

A young man who had been assisted away from the home of a girl whose society he yearned for, wrote next day to the cruel parent as follows; "I did not mind what you said to me, though your language was pretty rough, but when you kicked me with that No. 11 boot you hurt my feelings. I shall make no further effort to win your daughter. If she inherits your style of feet and any of your versatility in the use of them, I feel that I could not be entirely happy with her."

Strength of China.

Some very important statistics are given regarding the strength of the Chinese army and navy by the St. Petersburg Gazette:—"China has two separate armies. The imperial army proper is known under the name of the Army of the Eight Banners. It is divided into eight corps, each being distinguished by a peculiar banner. This army almost forms a military caste, for it is composed exclusively of the descendants of the Mantchus, Mongolians, and Chinese rebels who in 1601 invaded China and dethroned the old Imperial family. During peace the men of this caste are allowed to conduct any common business, being forbidden only to leave their city without a permit from the commanding officer. The officers excel their men only in gymnastics. According to the Chinese notions no man is fit to be an officer unless he is an athlete. This army numbers 210,000 men. Of these over one-half are stationed in Pekin and the rest in a few large Provincial cities. This military caste can by no means be regarded as a regular army. The second or provincial army is called the army of the Great Banner. Each of the eighteen provinces of the Empire is obliged by law to keep a certain number of soldiers, and their aggregate, according to the official statistics, is 650,000 men. There are 80 generals and over 7,000 officers. The provincial army is composed chiefly of mercenaries, while the majority of the officers are of the military estate. These two armies amounting to 700,000 men, are all the force the Celestial Empire has to rely on in case of war.

"The Imperial Guard, about 18,000 strong is the flower of the army. Of the Guard infantry 5,200 men are provided with muzzle-loaders presented by the Czar of Russia; the rest are armed with flint guns, lances and shields. Half of the cavalry, about 2,000 men, are armed with Chassepot rifles. The artillery has 32 bronze guns, bought in Russia, and a few mortars. There are 1,750 educaetd artillerymen. The army of the Governor of Chjily, about 80,000 strong, is also reorganized. The men are instructed by English and French officers. The army has breech-loading rifles and Krupp steel cannons. According to German writers, up to 1879 Krupp had sent to China 150 heavy guns and 275 field guns. The army of the Governor of Khan-Zu and Shan Zee, 40,000 strong, is said to be supplied with all the modern arms and to be drilled according to the principles of Moltke and Manteuffel. This army fought successively against Yakoob Beg, and, indeed, proved itself the best disciplined army in China. It is obvious, then, that in China, there are only about 120,000 men properly armed and drilled, while the rest of the soldiers can be regarded only as undisciplined and unarmed reserves.

"As to gunpowder and arms the Chinese apparently have an abundant supply of their own. There are eight excellent arsenals, directed chiefly by Englishmen. The arsenal of Jian-Zu, for instance, turns out daily 3,600 pounds of powder. At the arsenals of Nankin, and Shanghai the American guns of Remington and Spencer are manufactured. At the Fu tcheu-fu arsenal submarine mines are prepared. At the Lutchue-su arsenal cartridges and arms are manufactured. The forts are found at the mouths of the great rivers Si-kiang, Min and Yang-tse-Kiang, to protect the great cities, Canton, Fu-tceu, and shanghai. In the interior of the country all the large cities are also defended by forts. The capital city of Pekin is, of course, the most strongly protected. It is defended by Fort Daku, amply provided with Krupp cannons, and is surrounded by stone walls from forty to seventy feet thick and about forty feet high. Nine gates lead to the city, and these are defended by cannons mounted in the numerous towers.

"China has three separate fleets. The Canton fleet comprises twelve gunboats, of which nine were made in England and are in charge of English officers. The Fu-kiang transport vessels; these were made at Fu-tcheu under the supervision of Frenchmen. This fleet is in excellent order, and it is in charge of Chinamen. The Shanghai fleet is composed of nine gunboats, two frigates and several transport vessels. All of these were made by the Chinamen themselves and are rather insignificant. Recently China has got from England eight iron-clads, armed with guns of the largest calibre. The strongest and most effective part of the Chinese fleet is made up of thirteen small gunboats, named after the letters of the Greek alphabet, of 1,350 tons displacement. They are built of steel, and are propelled by twin screws driven by compound engines of, together, 2,600 indicated horse power. They each carry two twenty six ton ten-inch breech-loading guns, mounted upon centre pivots, one forward and one aft. Each of these heavy guns commands a nearly all around fire. The charge of the gun is 180 pounds of powder, the weight of projectile 400 pounds, and the penetrative power equal to piercing eighteen inches of solid, unbacked iron plate. They carry besides in each four forty-pounder breech-loading guns, two Nordenfeldts and four Gatlings, and, furthermore, two steam cutters fitted with spar torpedoes. The vessels are also armed with a formidable steel knife edge spur or ram. Without claiming too much for these vessels, says the London Times, it should be remarked of them that the penetrative power and range of their guns measured by the accepted official standard, exceed those of any gun yet afloat, except those of the English "Inflexible" and the Italian "Duilio." No unarmored ship that carries guns can be compared for a moment with them, and no armored ship equals them in speed.'

Utilizing the Sun.

News of a curious invention comes from the south of France. A Frenchman, who has patented a machine for the use of concentrated solar rays as a general motive power, has set up three of his machines in Algeria for the French Government. He is now carrying on experiments at the Island of Porquerolles near Hyeres, where he is threshing Indian corn and raising water by the action of the sun's rays. Sir Charles Dilke has also lent him part of his land at Cape Brun, near Toulon, for his experiments, and he purposes to utilize the sun in boring the holes for blasting, for tree planting in the hard rocks, as well as in pumping water from the winter wells into the summer cistern.

A QUEER MARRIED COUPLE.

The Story of two Women who Pretended to be Man and Wife.

In the spring of 1869 there appeared the town of Barrett, in the western part of Monroe county, a couple calling themselves Rev. Joseph Israel Lobdell and wife. The man was of medium height, dressed in tattered hunting garb, and carried a long single-barrel rifle. He wore no hat, and his head was covered with thick black curly hair, streaked with gray. The woman was taller than the man, and was meanly clad. She was fine looking, wore spectacles, and her conversation showed that she was educated and intelligent. For two years the strange couple roamed about the township, living most of the time in the woods, but frequently making their appearance in the village, where the man would deliver wild and incoherent harangues on religion, and both would beg for food and shelter. In 1871 they had become such a nuisance to the inhabitants that they were arrested on charge of vagrancy, and commited to jail in Stroudsburg. While in jail the discovery was made that they were both women. Soon afterward it was learned that they together left the almshouse of Delaware county, N.Y., a short time before their appearance in this county. The almshouse authorities of Barrett, thereupon took them back to Delhi, where the following strange history of the pair was learned:

In 1854, Lucy Ann Lobdell, the 17-year-old daughter of an old lumberman living at Long Eddy, on the Deleware River, was married to George Slater. She was known far and wide as an expert shot with the rifle, not only at the target, but in hunting the wild game for which that part of the valley was then famous. After a year of married life, Slater deserted his wife, leaving her in destitute circumstances, with an infant two months old. Her parents were very poor, and unable to give her a home. They were willing to relieve her of the care of her child, however, and she finally placed it in their charge. She then dressed herself in male attire and disappeared.

Soon afterward a young man of prepossessing appearance opened a singing school in the village of Bethany, Wayne County, Pa. He gave his name as Joseph Lobdell, and became a great favorite among the young women of the village, nearly all of whom joined his singing class. He was a good singer and violinist, and had a fair knowledge of music. Before the term of the school was over he became engaged to one of his pupils, the daughter of one of the leading citizens of Bethany. The day was set for the wedding. News of the presence of the young singing master in Bethany reached Long Eddy, and suspicion was aroused that he was the missing Lucy Ann Slater, whose musical accomplishments were well known in her native town. Investigation proved that the suspicion was correct. The information was obtained by a young man of Bethany, who had been a rival of the music teacher for the hand of the young lady. He told the secret to a few companions, and they planned to capture the teacher on a certain night and tar and feather her. This became known in some way to the girl Lobdell was to marry, and, notwithstanding her mortification, she warned the teacher of her danger, so that she escaped from the town by night and returned to Long Eddy, where she resumed female attire for a short time.

Early in 1856 she again put on male attire, and for eight years lived the life of a hunter, roaming the forests of Sullivan, Delaware, Wayne, and Pike counties. She rarely came into the settlements, and then to exchange game and furs for ammunition and necessary supplies. According to her subsequent statements, her wild life was one of thrilling adventure and privation. Her narrow escapes with wild animals and her sufferings from cold, hunger and sickness during her career in the woods she recorded in a book entitled "The Life and Adventures of Lucy Ann Lobdell, the Female Hunter of Long Eddy." She returned to Long Eddy in 1864, broken in mind and body. Her child had been placed in the poorhouse at Delhi. She once more resumed the habiliments of her sex, and, after wandering about the valley for a year or two, an object of pity and charity, she also sought the shelter of the almshouse.

In the summer of 1868 a young woman giving the name of Marie Louise Perry became an inmate of the poorhouse at Delhi. She was in poor health, a stranger in the county, and evidently well educated. She declined to give any account of herself, but it was learned a few months afterward that she was the daughter of well-to-do parents in a Massachusetts village, and was a graduate of a school in Boston. It was rumored that she had run away from home, married a man to whom her parents objected, and been deserted by him. This rumor she neither denied nor admitted to be true.

An intimacy grew up between Mrs. Perry and Lucy Ann Lobdell. They became strongly attached to one another, although their habits, character and antecedents were so widely different. Learning that the almshouse authorities had informed her parents of her whereabouts, the girl resolved to leave the institution, and Lucy Ann Lobdell accompanied her. They were not heard of again in Delaware county until they were discovered in the Strawsbury jail, masquerading as man and wife, and were returned to the Delhi poorhouse. They remained there but a short time, and then left the place again and resumed their roaming life in the woods, insisting on every occasion that they were man and wife. A marriage ceremony between them had been performed in 1869 by a Wayne county Justice of the peace, he being ignorant of the fact that the parties were both women. In 1876 they appeared together in Honesdale, Wayne county. The "husband," it was then seen, was violently insane, but the "wife" clung to him with an affection that was remarkable. For the good of both, the lunatic was placed in jail. The grief of the other at the separation was pitiful, and she begged to be allowed to share her "husband's" cell.

There is now on the court records of Wayne county a document which was drawn by the unfortunate companion of Lucy Ann Lobdell at this time. It is a petition for the release of her "husband, Joseph I. Lobdell," from jail, on account of his failing health. It was written with a split stick for a pen, with ink made from the juice of poke berries. It reviewed the case of the "Female Hunter" from a psychological standpoint. The language used was clear, correct, and logical, showing that the writer, though a voluntary outcast, was a person of superior education.

"Joseph J. Lobdell" was finally released from jail, and the couple then took up their residence on a small farm in Damascus township, Wayne county, where they lived peaceably until 1880, when the "husband" wandered away, and finally became an inmate of the Delhi poorhouse again. She is now in the Williard Asylum for the Insane. The "wife" still lives on the Damascus farm, and insists that her name is Mrs. Joseph Lobbell.

Lucy Ann Slater's child, a daughter, was taken from the Delaware county poorhouse soon after her mother became an inmate there, and was adopted by a wealthy Wayne county farmer. She grew up an attractive young woman. There lived in the vicinity a dissolute young man named Kent, who tried to win the girl, but she rejected him. One night in the summer of 1871, as she was returning from an errand at a neighbor's, she was seized by two men, gagged, and thrown into a waggon, which was driven away toward the Delaware River. A thunder storm came up, during which the girl became unconscious. When she recovered she was lying on the shore of an island in the Delaware River. She had evidently been thrown into the river, but had been washed ashore. She was discovered and taken off the island by a man named Page. She was so dazed that she was unable to give any account of herself, and was permitted to wander away from the locality. When she was missed from her home a search was at once begun for her. She was found three days afterward wandering in the woods, a raving maniac. It was days before she recovered her reason. She could remember nothing except being kidnapped and hearing the roar of water. She said she recognized Kent's voice as that of one of her abductors. He was arrested, but escaped from jail and left the country. The girl has since been happily married.

A Conscientious Conductor.

"How did I become Superintendent?" answered the railroad official. "Why, it was this way: I was conductor of the morning passenger express, and one day as we were coming down by the junction we struck a misplaced switch and ran into a freight train that was standing on the siding. As we were running about thirty-five miles an hour, of course it piled things up a good deal. Our engine was smashed all to pieces, the 'smoker' telescoped the baggage car and the forward passenger coach ran up on the heap and rolled up. I was standing on the platform at the time the thing happened, and luckily was slung off about thirty feet beside the track. When I picked myself up everything was confused, the air was filled with clouds of escaped steam, and about fifty passengers were somewhere in the wreck. Of course, it was what you might call an 'emergency,' but there's no such word as that in the company's dictionary. I had my orders, and knew what do to. The roof of the smoking-car lay near me, and I heard a man crying out from underneath it. After about ten minutes' work, I got the stuff all cleared away, and reached him. He was very weak and groaning. 'Oh, heavens!' he said, 'this timber presses on me so, I can't move. Both my legs are broken below the knee.' 'Think you'll be here till the next train?' I asked. 'Oh, yes,' he moaned. 'Then you'll need a stop-over check, sir, I said, and I made out a paste-board and gave it to him. 'Young man,' he said, 'I observe you have neglected to fill in the day of the month, but under the circumstances, your omission is excusable. I am a director of the company, and, if I survive, your attention to duty shall be rewarded.' The old gentleman pulled through and is now Vice-President. That's how I'm Superintendent, and—" he continued musingly, as he fingered his lantern watch-charm. "I believe in the old saying that the companyhas rights which the public is bound to respect, and rules which they must conform to."—[Life.

"Ireland needs to be informed," writes Mr. John Bright; "but a large portion of Ireland is not willing to learn. I believe in just measures, and in their effect, and in time and patience, and I am ready to hope, and even to believe, that within a reasonable period we shall see a change for the better in Irish affairs."

Men should be too broad, liberal, and sensible to entertain intense hatred, says a Kansas paper, "for they alway result in misery—and occasionally in shooting."

It is said that the name of the Bag o' Nails Inn, in London, was a puzzle to everybody till an antiquary renovated one of the old signs, and discovered that Bag o' Nails was a corruption of Bacchanals.

Work and Hurry.

Mr. Herbert Spencer thought that the most valuable piece advice he could leave us in departing from our shores was to be less restless—to work less and play more. Overwork was the besetting sin of Americans, according to the English philospher, who spoke with more feeling and the stronger emphasis on the subject because he himself was a victim of the very excess against which he warned us. He had come to the United States, in truth, with the hope of restoring tone to his nervous system, so shattered by indiscreet application to study that he was unable to sleep sound.

Sensible people here, however, knew very well that working too hard was not an American vice. The men who complain most of overwork are usually those who are unfitting themselves for exertion by bad habits of self-indulgence. They could do their work without undue strain if they did not otherwise overtax their nerves.

But there is another very frequent cause of nervous prostration. It is hasty and unmethodical labor, the habit of hurrying. But that cause, it seems, is commonly active in London no less than in New York.

The London Lancet warns the "city men," that is, the business men, that they are wearing themselves out with unnecessary hurry and bustle. It also tells physicians that they could do far more to prevent the spread of nervous disease if they undertook to cure this vicious mental habit, then they can hope to do by dealing only with the particular ills which come from it.

One of the chief characteristics of business life, the Lancet says, is to be always in a hurry. The moment a lad enters a business house "he begins to make believe to others, and so quickly to himself, that he is overwhelmed with work. The result is the formation of a 'mental habit' of hurrying, which before long becomes the keynote and motive of the whole life. It is the custom to write and speak as though commercial men were really as much pressed for time as they pretend to be. Now, the simple fact is that all their haste and turmoil, prejudicial and often ruinous as it is, is artificial.

The bustling, hurrying man, as a matter of fact, is a poor worker, and accomplishes comparatively little in a day. Too much of his steam power is expended in kicking up a dust. The habit of hurrying and of feeding in a hurry is fatal to good work, and diminishes the amount of work a man can get through with. The friction is too great. So little of practical value is accomplished, despite all the superfluous expenditure of energy, that he cannot go home at night with the sweet consciousness of duty done, of a day's work completed. He has left too many stitches to be taken up.

The men who accomplish the most never seem in a hurry, no matter how much they have to do. Everbody must have observed that. They are not troubled for lack of time, for they make the most of the minutes by working in a cool, clear, orderly, and methodical fashion, finishing each job properly, and not wasting their nervous force on trifles or expending it in bustle. They are more likely to be hunting up new work to do, in order to give their faculties more varied employment and to exercise some which are not sufficiently used.

Too much to do! The highest pleasure and greatest satisfaction are found in work only, and the more work a man has to do, if it is work to which he is adapted, the better he likes it. The men to pity are those who can get nothing to do, and those whose only business is to hunt for pleasure for itself—the fellows who have no other occupation than that of killing time. But we are also sorry for the men whose manner, as described by the Lancet, suggests a boiler worked up to the highest pressure and only saved from bursting by frequent letting of steam.

Too Much Timber.

"Well, what's the matter now?" asked Simpkins' wife as he staggered in about 3 o'clock in the morning.

"Well (hic) an' 'e said: 'Putsh stick in 'm so (hic) soda.' So I saysh: 'Putsh stick in mine.' Then I gesh—

"Well, I guess," remarked Mrs. Simpkins, laying considerable stress upon the personal pronoun, "that he put a whole cord of wood in your soda, and that it all went to your head." And when Simpkins woke up the next morning he thought so too.

Twenty-four O'Clock.

A peculiar clock, which marks the hours from one to twenty-four, has recently been completed by a Wilmington manufacturer. The new timepiece is of the kind soon to be adopted by several of the railroads. The most conspicuous innovations are in the marking upon the dial and in the movement of the wheels which run the hands. The minute hand, instead of making twelve revolutions to every revolution of the hour hand, as in the ordinary clock, makes twenty-four revolutions while the hour hand passes around once.

Penetrated to the Bone.

Alderman John Baxter, Toronto, Canada, avers that St. Jacobs Oil will penetrate to the bone to drive out pain. I know it, for I have tried it; it hits the mark every time.

Darwinian theory: There is a boy in Norristown who "sprang from a monkey." The monkey belonged to an organ-grinder and attempted to bite the boy.

Mrs. J. McPhee, Appin, writes:—During the last eight years I have used almost every medicine recommended for Biliousness, but found nothing equal to Carson's Bitters. If you suffer try it. Price 50 cents,

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,

Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

FOR SALE.

Farm of about 145 acres, 10 miles from Toronto; brick house; outbuilding nearly new; good young orchard just commencing to bear; about 16 acres timber. ROBERT JAMES, Jr., Newton Brook, P. O., Ont.

THE INDUSTRIAL UNION

TORONTO, ONTARIO.

Provides for its members in sickness and distress. For particulars address the Secretary. Agents wanted.

OAKLAWN FARM,

The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in the World.

Percheron-Norman Horses

WORTH $2,500,000.00

Imported from France and Bred since 1872, by

M. W. DUNHAM,

Wayne, Du Page Co., Illinois,

35 miles West of Chicago, on C. & N.-W. R'y.

Prices low for quality of stock, and EVERY STALLION GUARANTEED A BREEDER.

390 Imported the Past Three Months, consisting of finest animals, with choicest pedigrees, Registered in the Percheron Stud Book of France, and the Percheron-Norman Stud Book of the United States. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue No. 20

SPY-GLASSES.

This is an article invaluable to every farmer. With it he can bring up his farthest field and lay it at his feet. It is also useful to the Tourist, at Fairs, at Horse Races, etc. They are made with brass frame, and will last a life-time. Sent prepaid for $1.00 each: three for $2,50

JAMES LEE & CO., MONTREAL, P. Q.

A FAIR OFFER!

If you will send us with this slip 35c. or 9 three cent stamps, we will mail you post-paid a sample package containing 100 useful articles, which are required in every house, with instructions by which you can make from $2 to $4 per day. Suitable for both sexes. This is no humbug, as the samples are well worth the money, and may be returned if not satisfactory. Show this to your friends.

JAMES LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

A PRINTING OFFICE $1.25

THE WORLD'S SOLID RUBBER FAMILY FONT for marking Linen, Cards, Books, etc. Combines the convenience of metal type with the flexibility, durability, and elegance of the rubber stamp. For $1.25 you can get 125 to 150 letters, with Ink Holder, Pans, Tweezers, etc., all in a neat box with directions; only $1.25, the price you would pay for a single name.

A BIG THING.—With the outfit we send by mail for $1.25, any boy or girl, man or woman, can print 500 cards an hour, visiting or business, and can go in any residence or store and take their orders and print the cards while there. In ten minutes you can print a pack of cards and deliver them. This whole outfit can be carried in your pocket, and you can travel over Canada printing cards in every city and village you pass through. Sent post-paid to any address of receipt of $1.25 or 3 for $2.

J. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

Barometer & Thermometer.

The only reliable Compound Barometer and Thermometer in existence. It foretells the changes in the weather with never-failing accuracy, and is likewise a complete and accurate thermometer. The advantage to farmers in possessing this instrument, particularly in the summer season is therefore apparent supplying as it does a means by which Farmers can Foretell Exactly what the Weather will be on the morrow, and thus arrange their plans for work accordingly. In the haying and harvesting seasons it will save its cost a hundred times over.

Sample by mail $1.25; sample by express $1; 1 doz. by express, $8.00; 3 doz. by express, $18.

J. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

CANADIAN MUTUAL AID ASSOCIATION Co-operative Life Assurance. Provide for families in case of death. W. PEMBERTON PAGE, Sec., 87 King St. West, Toronto. Agents wanted.

$1.50.  $1.50.

281.

Solid Silver Brooch

MADE IN ANY NAME.

We advertise extensively and wish to ascertain the relative merits of different papers, as not five per cent of our patrons refer to the paper in which they have seen our advertisement.

As the season is advancing when we make new contracts, we adopt the following plan, which we shall use as a guide in selecting papers in which to advertise for the coming year.

The public will readily understand the value of the information we get and why we can afford to pay liberally for it. We wish to impress upon our many thousands of patrons throughout the Dominion that this is a bona fide offer, and not a trade trick to sell goods.

The illustration at the head of this advertisement is a SOLID SILVER BROOCH, which we will furnish with ANY NAME DESIRED for $1 00 when accompanied by the annexed 50c. coupon. In no case will we send the brooch at the price without this coupon. The brooch is elegant and beautifully finished, and is good value for twice the price.

We send by mail, prepaid, and guarantee satisfaction. The proprietors of this paper endorse the above statement and guarantee.

AUXILIARY COUPON, VALUE 50 CTS.

CHAS. STARK,

52 CHURCH STREET, TORONTO.

Send for our 96- page Catalogue, containing over 600 illustrations of Firearms, Silverware, Watches, Jewellery, etc.

RHEUMATINE

An Internal Remedy and a SURE CURE for all kinds of

RHEUMATIC COMPLAINTS!

If you are suffering from

Kidney Complaints

SAMBO AND DINAH.

These lively "culled people" are exceedingly popular wherever introduced, both with young and old. They are each eleven inches high, and are dressed in Southern costumes of the old plantation style. They will dance to music, bow, fall down, rise up, etc., without the manager being any where near them, and the secret of their movements can only be discovered by the closest examination. SAMBO and DINAH are intensely funny creatures, their comical antics and queer motions making them jolly company for a winter's evening, especially to those who enjoy a hearty laugh By mail, 10c; 3 pairs, 25c.

J. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

THE FAMILY RECORD.

This should be in every home. A large Stone Engraving, size 18 x 24, printed on beautiful tinted plate paper. In the centre we see an open book in which to register the names and births of each member of the family. On the left hand a beautiful scroll for the marriages, on the right another beautiful scroll upon which to inscribe the deaths. Surmounting it all in handsome type we have the words: "God Bless our Home." Underneath we have places for photographs of father and mother, and all around the picture are similar spaces interspersed with beautiful flowers and leaves, the whole finished off in first class style. We feel sure this will supply a want long felt.

☞ Sample by mail 25c., 3 for 50c., 1 doz. $1.50.

JAS LEE & CO. Montreal, P. Q.

THE HARP-ETTE,

$1,50 or $2,50,

The best Low-priced String Instrument in the world. The easiest instrument to learn to play, and as sweet and melodious as a fine harp or violin. By means of the instructor anyone with an ear for music can learn to play several tunes in a few hours. THE HARP-ETTE is played with the thumb and forefinger same as a regular harp. You can learn how to play it in five minutes. It is tuned with pegs and a key (a key goes free with each one), and it is adjustable to any pitch: will play any tune both for solo music and accompaniments to voice, organ or flute; good for dance music. You can learn one of the easy waltzes in a few minutes. They are very handsome in appearance, being thoroughly made of hard wood, highly finished and are an ornament to any room. It is a great favorite with the ladies, and thousands are learning to play it. Price, 10 strings and key, only $1.50; 16 strings, only $2.50. Instructor and 14 popular airs, set to music for the Harpette, free with each; 20 per cent. discount if three are ordered at one time.

J. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

GOLD WATCHES, RINGS, AND REVOLVERS!

Given Away! Given Away!!

To every one who buys one of our GOLD WATCH STATIONERY PACKAGES price only 60 cents. Contents:—6 Sheets Commercial Note, 6 Sheets Superfine Tined Note, 6 White Commercial Envelopes, 6 Beautiful Tinted Envelopes, 1 Reversible German Silver Penholder 1 Cold Water Pen, 1 Imitation Gold Pen, 1 Lead Pencil, 1 Key Ring, 1 Boot Buttoner, 1 Glove Buttoner, 1 Magnificent Chromo, size 16x22, 1 Beautiful Crayon Drawing, 10 Popular Songs, 10 Beautiful Cromo Cards (blank) and a cash present of from 5 cents upwards. No Lottery. Every one gets a Cash Present who buys a package. Read! Read! Read!!! With every 5,000 packages we give away FREE 1 Gold Hunting Case Watch, 1 Lady's Silver Watch, 1 Gent's Silver watch, 1 Nickel Stem Winding Watch, 6 Solid Gold Rings, 6 Rolled Gold Vest Chains, 6 7-shot Nickel Plated Revolvers, 12 Gold Plated Neckchains, 24 pairs Alaska Diamond Earrings, 25 Beautiful Stone Engravings, Gold Dollars 50, 25, 10, and 5 cent pieces. Therefore by sending us 60 cents you will get more than 60 cents worth of goods, and perhaps one of the above handsome presents. Our profit is so small that we can give no discount whatever, no matter how many packages are ordered. DON'T BUY any Stationery till you have sent for one of our Gold Dollar Packages, and we know you will always after buy of us. REMEMBER: The Stationery and other things contained in the package are well worth 60 c., without the cash prize which is in every package and you also stand a chance of getting a handsone Watch or Gold Ring. When you want some nice stationery order of us and you will be sure to get value for your money, and probably a great deal more. A Complete Sample Package with a cash present of from 5 cents upwards in every package. By mail, post paid, for only 60 cents. Order now.

JAMES LEE & CO. 517 Lagauchetiere-st, Montreal, P. Q.

Robt. S. Rae.

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

THE BEST PLACE

TO GET

A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery,

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

Markdale monthly Cattle FAIR.

A regular Monthly Cattle Fair will be held in the Agricultural Grounds, Markdale, as follows :

—1 3—

SATURDAY	.....	Nov. 3
Do.	.....	Dec. 8

MARKDALE

Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats !

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and deliivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23, 1882. 80-ly

Health is Wealth!

Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment, a guaranteed specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Fits, Nervous Neuralgia, Headache, Nervous Prostration caused by the use of alcohol or tobacco, Wakefulness, Meutal Depression, Softening of the Brain, resulting in Insanity and leading to misery, decay and death, Premature Old Age, Barrenness, Loss of Power in either sex, Involuntary losses and Spermatorrhœa, caused by over-exertion of the brain, self-abuse or over-indulgence. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser a written guarantee to refund the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by A. Turner &Co., ole authorized Agent for Markdale Ont. John C. West &Co. sole proprietor Toronto.Ont.

ALEX KAY

BooT & ShoE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises. Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and Positively cures Piles. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by A. Turner & Co

---

SEEING IS BELIEVING.

GENTLEMEN,—

If you want a first-class

Buggie or Wagon

call at

MCKENNA & MASON'S

CARRIAGE WORKS

MARKDALE.

They can supply you with anything from a

Lumber Wagon

up to

Extension Top Phæton.

To buy from them is o

SAVE MONEY!

They are both practical workmen, and employ none but

PRACTICAL WORKMEN

They guarantee their work Second to none for Lightness of Draught and Superiority of Finish.

They use nothing but First-class White Oak for Wagons, and thrice Extra Second Growth Hickory for light work.

The immense amount of work turned out of McKenna & Mason's shop is sufficien proof of the wide reputation they enjoy for doing good work.

The BEST is the CHEAPEST in the END Poor cheap work we positively will not take.

Special attention given to Re-Trimming and Repainting all classes of Carriage Work.

Satisfaction guaranteed (or No Pay) in

HORSESHOEI NG

SHOP—On Mill Street opposite to Sproule's Hotel.

McKENNA & MASON.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Wilson Benson

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,

CHEESE, SALMON,

LOBSTERS, SARDINES

In endless variety.

DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

WILSON BENSON.

July 6, 1882.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows :

GOING NTH.			GOING SOUTH
Read Down.				Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	Toronto	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	Cardwell Junc.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	Orangeville...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	Mount Forest..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	Teeswater	5 00	2 45
11 50	8 30	Flesherton	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	Markdale,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	Owen Sound....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNicoll, Gen. Pass. Agt. Edmund Wragge, General Manager

MISCELLANEOUS

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate, It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

The Standard to the end of 1884 to new subscribers for $1.00, cash.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-fiive cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

The United States Treasury report shows a decrease in surplus revenue of $12,664,000.

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

The Toronto Daily World clubbed with the Standard the balance of this and all of next year for $3.50.

FORTUNES FOR FARMERS AND MECHANICS.

Thousands of dollars can be saved by using proper judgement in taking care of the health of your self and family. If you are Bilious, have sallow complexion, poor appetite, low and depressed spirits, and generally debilitated, do not delay a moment, but go at once and procure a bottle of those Electric Bitters, which never fail to cure, and that for the trifling sum of fifty cents.—Tribune. Sold by A. Turner & Co.

England is experiencing a cold snap, accompanied by heavy snowfalls in some places.

WOMAN'S TRUE FRIEND.

A friend in need is a friend in deed. This none can deny, especially when assistance is rendered when one is sorely afflicted with diseases, more particularly those complaints and weakness so common to our female population. Every woman should know that Electric Bitters are Woman's true friend, and will positively restore her to health, even when all other remedies fail. A single trial always proves our assertion. They are pleasant to the taste, and only cost fifty cents a bottle. Sold by A. Turner & Co.

The reports from all points in the lake region show that there was widespread damage by the storm of Sunday night and Monday. The loss of life was exceedingly small considering the number of disasters on the lakes. The keeper of the Colchester Reef light-ship was believed to be in danger, and a tug has been sent to rescue him.

NEVER GIVE UP.

If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the rapid improvement that will follow; you will be inspired with now life; strength and activity will return; pain and misery will cease, and henceforth you will rejoice in the praise of Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by A. Turner & Co., Markdale.

Another Victim.—On Tuesday evening of last week an old man named John McKernan, a laborer, came to Mr. Jno. Tucker, for whom he occasionally worked, and borrowed 25 cts., ostensibly to pay for his supper, promising to come to work the next day. Next day he did not come to work as he promised; but nothing was thought of it till Friday morning, when on the dry dock being pumped out his body was found there. A bottle of whiskey, half emptied, showed the use he made of the 25 cts., and the cause of his death. As he had evidently fallen in by accident while intoxicated, it was not deemed necessary to hold an inquest.—O. S. Times.

The Shipping Interests of Owen Sound.—As we go to press the harbor is full of steamers and sailing vessels loading for Georgan Bay and Lake Superior ports. Among the boats which are loading we may mention the Magnet, Africa, Argyle, Enterprise, Bentley, Fannie Campbell, Robb, and Elgin. The amount of freight to be moved here far exceeded the expectations of the Owen Sound S. S. Company, and they have had to add vessel after vessel to the fleet to move the freight so freely sent forward since the change in management of the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway. The through trade via Owen Sound has become of great importance, and the position of the port of Owen Sound will always command a large share of the trade of Toronto and the northern and western portions of Ontario Owen Sound has now practically three railways, although only one terminates here. The connections, however, of the Credit Valley, Hamilton & North-Western and Toronto, Grey & Bruce are so close that we have the same service as if the three roads ran in here. Next year we look for a still further development of the trade so auspiciously begun in the present season.—O. S. Advertisor.

MARKDALE

PLANING, SASH, DOOR AND FURNITURE FACTORY.

—o——oOo——o—

Lumber Planed or Matched While Waiting.

—x—

Sash, Doors, and Mouldings always on hand or made to Order. All kinds of lumber, Lath and Shingles kept in stock. Furniture of all descriptions to be seen at our Warerooms. Lumber and cordwood will be taken in exchange for Furniture.

George Grant & Co.,

Proprietors.

WM. HOGG,

FLESHERTON STATION,

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods!

— IN —

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes, &c

—o—

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold very low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Station.

Nov. 1st, 1883.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

—AT—

Bulmers Photograph Gallery

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we ared not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

New FALL Importations

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats, Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

VOL. 4.

The Markdale

Is issued every Thursday Street. Ma

Terms—$1 per year i not paid within three m

Professional and bus space and under, per ye

Whole column	$
Half column
Quarter column
Two inch space
Three inch space

Casual advertisements insertion, 3 cents per insertion, nonpareil mea

Editorial notices, or umn 10 cents per line f each subsequents inserti

Stray animals &c., ad $1, the advertisement lines.

—JOB PRI

The Standard office ment of poster as well a cial attention to order filled with dispatch.

C. W. RUT

EDITOR AND P

SAMUEL W

WELL DIGGER A orders promptly dence—Snider's Hill, G

B. Ghent, M.D., M Physician and Sur Graduate of University.

" " Hon. Graduate, of the " " Ave " " Opthalm Member Coll. Physicians

J. P. MARSHA

DENT

GRADUATE OF T of Dentistry, wi Hotel, Markdale, on the nesday of each month a Hotel, Flesherton, the third Wednesday in each tice of his profession.

January 9th, 1883.

Lega

Frost &

BARRISTERS, AN Law, Solicitors i ancers, &c., Owen Sou Flesherton, Office ope heretofore.

Alfred Frost, County Crown Atto

J. MAS

BARRISTER, MAST in Chancery, Notar cer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FA

Offices—Owen Sou Poulett St.; Branch offic McFarland's Store, on every week.

Creasor & M

BARRIS ... SOLI ances, &c. &c.

Offices in Owen Sou over W. F. Wolf's Store MARKD

Over W. J. McFarland's and Friday of each week Funds to lend on r

John Creasor, Q. C. Markdale, March 15, 1

Alexander

ISSUER of Marriage Life Insurance Ag in B. R. &c. Convey Auctioneer for the Count Merchants, and Land S tended to and charges m Priceville, Sept. 17, 18

Wm. Br

ISSUER OF MARRIA Commissioner in B. Conveyancing in all it attended to and carefully N. B.—Money to Lend curity.

W. C. RIC

BUILDER, CONTRA TECT.—Residence o dale.

Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1

JOHN N

MARKD

GENER'L BLA

HORSE SH

A SPECIA

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 11. MARKDALE, ONT., NOV. 22. 1883. No. 167.

The Markdale Standard

Is issued every Thursday, at the office, Mill Street, Markdale.

TERMS—$1 per year in advance; $1.25 if not paid within three months.

Professional and business cards one inch space and under, per year, $4.

	1 YR.	6 MO.	3 MO.
Whole column	$50 00	$27 50	$15 00
Half column	27 00	15 00	10 00
Quarter column	15 00	10 00	6 00
Two inch space	7 00	4 00
Three inch space	10 00	5 00

Casual advertisements 8 cents per line first insertion, 3 cents per line each subsequent insertion, nonpareil measure.

Editorial notices, or notices in local column 10 cents per line first insertion, 5 cents each subsequents insertion.

Stray animals &c., advertised 3 weeks for $1, the advertisement not to exceed twelve lines.

—JOB PRINTING.—

THE STANDARD office has a splendid equipment of poster as well as fine job type. Special attention to orders by mail. Orders filled with dispatch.

C. W. RUTLEDGE
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

E. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O. Physician and Surgeon, Priceville, Graduate of University. Vict. College. " " New York, and Hon. Graduate, of the same, " " Ayleth Medical Institute. " " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y. Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST.

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCERS, &c. &c.
OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in MARKDALE; Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
Funds to lend on reasonable terms.
JOHN CREASOR, Q. C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown,

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

JOHN NOBLE,
MARKDALE.
GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING
A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large ommercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

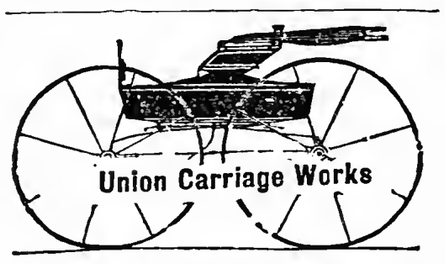
COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,
CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.



GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail

{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.
FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from
FIRST CLASS MATERIAL
In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs
will receive prompt attention.
All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time consistent with good workmanship.
GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.
Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside
D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor
Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.
HENRY FOSTER.
Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

MISS. GREEN,
DRESS AND MANTLE
ROOMS.
DUNLOP'S BUILDING MARKDALE.

All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.
Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

William McLeod,

BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,
MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel.
159-3m

A. HILL,
Fashionable Tailor,
OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.
A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

ONLY $2.00
—FOR—
THE STANDARD
—AND—
The Farmers' Advocate
AND HOME MAGAZINE,

Together with a copy of the Farmers' Hand Book for 1884, advertised in this paper. Without a rival in Canada, and unsurpassed in Arerica, for Stock Raiser, Dairyman, Fruit Grower.

We are enabled, by a special arrangement, to offer that well-known agricultural paper, THE FARMER'S ADVOCATE, now in its 19th year of publication, clubbed with this journal for the above small sum.
"SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS."
The Advocate is the acknowledged agricultural authority of Canada, and combines with, under its Home Magazine department, the best family paper published in the Dominion. Its motto—
"PLAIN, PRACTICAL AND PAYING INFORMATION," and its best energies are devoted to the interest of the farmer and his family. Over 400 pages every year. Just what is wanted for every owner of farm, Garden, or Orchard.
IMPROVEMENTS IN EACH DEPARTMENT IN 1884.

SUBSCRIBE NOW.
Balance of the year FREE. Send for sample copy.

EUGENIA
Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made extensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.
GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND
Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.
LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.
Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted
691y. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

ROBT. ASKIN,
MARKDALE,
Has opened out a First-Class
UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,
And therefore has supplied a want long felt,
COFFINS,
CASKETS, SHROUDS,
and all
FUNERAL FURNISHINGS
supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse
for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—
PICTURE FRAMING
Done on short notice.
ROBT. ASKIN,

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

Rev. T. J. Snowdon was unable to fill his appointments of last Sabbath owing to illness. At last accounts he was recovering.

The shriek for "wood," "wood," is still heard. As high as $1.75 per cord for stove wood has been paid lately, so scarce is it.

Building operations are about over for the season. It is altogather likely that next season there will be considerable additions to our village.

Notwithstanding the dull times, real estate transactions are numerous. Several gentlemen from Lansdowne have purchased farms near here at good figures, during the past week.

The few days of sleighing that we had last week caused a marked increase in business.

Municipal matter are still uncertain. It is rumored that J. J. Middleton will be an aspirant to the Reeveship of Proton.

The storm of last week put a stop, for a while at least to the work on the drains. Mr. Wheelock P. L. S. has oversight of the work.

District Dashes.

The Grange Hall, near Heathcote, was burglarized the other night, and $80 in cash stolen.

50 persons united with the C. M. church at Heathcote—the result of special services held recently.

During the wind storm of Sunday the 11th, several windows in Dundalk were blowen in.

The Hanover Post has doubled into subscription in six months no wonder It's worth double what it was a year ago.

The competition between the Mt-Forest photographers, King and Barnes is interesting, each of the proprietors had an increase in their family this month.

Mrs Mary McKechnie, mother of Neil McKechnie of Glenelg died on the 13th inst., at the advanced age of 98 years, The united ages of her five surviving children reach 306 years.

Meaford can boast of having the only elastic Web manufactory in the Dominion. We heartily wish the new enterprise success.

IN THE GOODS AND CHATTELS
—OF—
JOHN KIRKPATRICK,
(DECEASED.)
NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to Section 34, of Chapter 107, R. S. O. the creditors of John Kirkpatrick, late of the township of Euphrasia, County of Grey, deceased, who died on or about the 21st Oct. 1883, and all parties having claims upon his estate are, on or before the FIFTEENTH DAY OF DECEMBER, 1883 to send by post, prepaid, to Richard Woods, Rocklyn P. O., in the County of Grey, one of the executors, of the personal estate and effects of deceased, their christian and surnames, addresses and description, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and nature of the securities (if any) held by them, and in default thereof the assets of the said deceased will be distributed, having regard only to the claims then received, or those of them which the executors then have notice.
JOS. MANAREY, RICH. WOODS. } Executors.
Dated this 5th day of November, 1883.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,
BANKERS,

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.
Allowed on Savings Deposits.

Drafts issued and Collections made on points, at lowest rates.
W.M. LUCAS,
Manager.
September 23, 1880. 2-ly

Euphrasia Counell.

A meeting of the township council of the township of Euphrasia, was held pursuant to adjournment on the 2nd day of November, 1883.

Members all present.

Minutes of last sesssion of council read and confirmed.

By-law No. 333, appointing deputy returning officers, and poling places for next municipal election, carried through the different stages and passed.

Mr. Ellis was authorized to get 9 and 10 side line, between the 7th line and 9th chopped and cleared.

On motion of Mr. Erskine and Mr. Ellis the township was made into five divisions, each member of council to ascertain what number of road scrapers are at present in one of such divisions, with a view of furnishing one such scraper for each road division within the township.

On motion of Mr. Patterson and Mr. Ellis, a resolution was passed, in reference to union S. S. No. 2, Euphrasia and Holland, and the clerk ordered to send a copy thereof to the corporation of Holland.

The treasurer was authorized to receive from the clerk the sum of $ 3.00 handed to him by Hugh Johnston, in lieu of paying James Yelland for fenceviewing.

The treasurer was allowed the sum of $15, for special services in connection with the purchase of Canada Permanent Loan and Savings company debentures.

The treasurer was ordered to remit and pay as follows, viz:

To Dr. Maclean, Meaford, $45, for professional services, rendered to R. Robertson; For selection and distribution of jurors, Thomas Gilray, Reeve $4; Joseph N. Boyd, assessor, $4; Robert Dunlop, clerk, $6.

The Reeve's orders were issued on the Treasurer to pay as follows, viz:

John Bear $10.75, cutting down hill on 6 and 7 side road con. 1; G. Reekie, $6.75, repairing road scrapers; E. Boyce, $6.87, building culvert on town line St. Vincent; J. Fawcett, $36, clearing grubbing and ditching; David Wilson $8, plank and repairing bridge; Joseph Burns, $13.95, building culvert on 15 and 16 side road con. 4; John Clugston $5, gravel for roads; A. A. McConnell, $7.50, work on 6 and 7 side line, con. 5; A. Teeter $3.37, labour on deviation town line; James Clugston, $15,00 stoning road 7th line at lot 16; Robt. Loughead, $14.50, labour on 24 and 25 side line; James Stewart $3.50, labour on town line deviation; Wm. Dales, $60, building bridge on 21 and 22 side road, con. 3, the order to be retained by the Reeve, until work be completed; Messrs. Neil & Wilson. $3, repairing culvert; Abraham Holden $8.50, repairing road scrapers; H. Fenwick, $5.22, labour on town line deviation; William Dales, $92, building bridge and approaches at Cann's mill, 24 and 25 side line.

The Reeve was ihstructed to get the deviation on 6 and 7 side line between the 3rd and 4th concessions, surveyed as soon as possible.

On motion being made and seconded the council adjourned until the first day in December next.

ROBERT DUNLOP, Clerk.

Meaford Road.

From a correspondent.

New mail carrier, Mr. J. Cooey has the contract for carrying the mail between Vandeleur and Flesherton for the next four years. He has got a new horn to let the citizens know of his arrival.

New Teacher, Mr. R. McLoughry has been engaged for 1884 to teach the "young idea how to shoot," in this section.

Mr. R. Smith has rented his farm he intends living in Flesherton.

Mr. S. Coleman tax collector has been paying his annual visit to this neighborhood.

Frames and Motto's cheap at Hamilton's Photo Gallery.

"THE CRY OF THE OUTCAST POOR."

Scenes and Sights in London Slums.

From this remarkable pamphlet which has attracted no little attention, we make the following extracts:—

"Few have any adequate conception of what the pestilential rookeries are where tens of thousands of the London poor are crowded together. To get into them you have to penetrate courts reeking with poisonous and malodorous gases arising from accumulations of sewage and refuse scattered in all directions and often flowing beneath your feet; courts which the sun never penetrates, and which are never visited by a breath of fresh air. You have to ascend rotten staircases, which threaten to give way beneath every step, and which, in some places, have already broken down, leaving gaps that imperil the limbs and lives of the unwary. You have to grope your way along dark and filthy passages swarming with vermin. Then, if you are not driven back by the intolerable stench, you may gain admittance to the dens in which these thousands of beings herd together. Should you ascend to the attic, where at least some approach to fresh air might be expected to enter from an open or broken window, you find that the sickly air which finds its way into the room has to pass over the putrefying carcasses of dead cats or birds, or viler abominations still. Here is a hole in the wall which has been repaired by the landlord. He has done it by nailing a few pieces of an old soap-box over the place, and for this has put 3d. a week upon the rent! And this is the best paying property in London! Three shillings, four and sixpence, and 6s. a week, is readily paid for one of these horrible rooms. Houses that have been condemned by the authorities as unfit for habitation are very gold mines to sleek speculators, who fatten upon the wretchedness of the poor.

"Every room in these rotten and reeking tenement-houses is occupied by a family, sometimes two. In one cellar have been found a father, mother, three children and four pigs! In another room his wife just recovering from her eighth confinement, and the children running about half-naked and covered with dirt. Here are seven people living in one underground kitchen, and a little dead child lying in the same room. Another apartment contains father, mother, and six children, two of whom are ill with scarlet fever. In another nine brothers and sisters, from 21 years of age downward, live, eat, and sleep together. Here is a mother who turns her children into the street in the early evening, because she lets her room for immoral purposes until long after midnight, when the poor little wretches creep back again if they have not found some miserable shelter elsewhere. In many cases matters are made worse by the unhealthy occupations of those who dwell in these habitations. Here you are shocked as you enter by the air laden with particles of the superfluous fur pulled from the skins of rabbits, rats, dogs, and other animals in their preparation for the furrier. Here the smell of paste and of dying match-boxes, mingling with other sickly odors, overpowers you; or it may be the fragrance of stale fish or vegetables not sold on the previous day and kept in the room overnight. Who can wonder that young girls wander off into a life of immorality? Who can wonder that the public-house should still be 'the Elysian field of the tired toiler?'

A MAN ILL WITH SMALL-POX,

"Immorality is but the natural outcome of conditions like these. 'Marriage,' it has been said, 'as an institution is not fashionable in these districts.' And this is only the bare truth. Ask if the men and women living together in these rookeries are married, and your simplicity will cause a smile. Nobody knows. Nobody expects that they are.

INCEST IS COMMON;

and no form of vice and sensuality causes surprise or attracts attention. The only check upon communism in this regard is jealousy and not virtue. The vilest practices are looked upon with the most matter-of-fact indifference. Entire courts are filled with thieves, prostitutes, and ticket-of-leave convicts. In one street there are 95 houses, 32 of which are known to be brothels. In another district are 43 of these houses, and 428 fallen women and girls, many of them not more than 12 years of age. A neighborhood whose population is returned at 10,000 contains 400 who follow this immoral traffic, their ages vary from 13 to 50; while the moral degradation of the people is deplorable. Some idea may be formed from an incident which was brought to our notice. An East End missionary rescued a young girl from an immoral life and obtained for her a situation with people who were going abroad. He saw her to Southampton, and on his return was violently abused by the girl's grandmother, who had the sympathy of her neighbors, for having taken away from a poor old woman her means of subsistence.

"The misery and sin caused by drink in these districts have often been told. In the district of Euston-road is one public house to every 100 people, counting men, women, and children. Immediately around one chapel in Orange street, Leicester square, are 100 gin-places, most of them very large, and these districts are but samples of what exists in all the localities which we have investigated. Look into one of these glittering saloons, with its and you may be horrified as you think of the evil that is nightly wrought there, but contrast it with any of the abodes which you find in these fetid courts, and you will wonder no longer that it is crowded.

MOTLEY, MISERABLE CROWD,

"There are those who endeavor to live honestly, and they outnumber the dishonest, but what are their wages? A child 7 years old may easily make 10s. 6d. a week by thieving, but what can he earn by such work as match-box making, for which 2¼d. a gross is paid, and the makers have to find their own fire for drying the boxes, paste, and string? Before he can gain as much as the young thief he must make 56 gross of match-boxes a week, or 1,206 a day, which is impossible. Women, for the work of trousers finishing, (i. e., sewing in linings, making button-holes, and stitching on the buttons.) receive 2½d. a pair, and have to find their own thread. For making men's shirts they are paid 10d. a dozen; lawn-tennis aprons, 3d. a dozen; babies' hoods from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. a dozen. In one house were found a widow and her half-idiot daughter making paillasses at 1¾d. each. Here is a woman who has a sick husband and little one to look after. She is employed at shirt finishing at 3d. a dozen, and by the utmost effort can only earn 6d. a day, out of which she has to find her own thread. Another, with a crippled hand, maintains herself and a blind husband by match-box-making, for which she is remunerated on the liberal scale mentioned above, and out of her 2¼d a gross she has to pay a girl a penny a gross to help her. Here is a mother who has taken away whatever articles of clothing she can strip from her four little children without leaving them absolutely naked. She has pawned them, not for drink, but for coals and food. A shilling is all she can procure, and with this she has bought seven pounds of coals and a ton of bread.

"The child-misery that one sees is the most heart-rending and appaling element in these discoveries; and of this not the least is the misery inherited from the vice of drunken and dissolute parents, and manifest in the objects that we constantly meet in these localities. Here is one of 3 years old picking up some dirty pieces of bread and eating them. We go in at the doorway where it is standing and find a little girl 12 years old. 'Where is your mother?' 'In the mad-house. 'How long has she been there?' 'Fifteen months.' 'Who looks after you?' The child, who is sitting at an old table making match-boxes, replies, 'I look after my little brothers and sisters as well as I can.' 'Where is your father?' 'He has been out of work three weeks, but he has gone to a job of two days this morning.' Another house visited contained nine motherless children. The mother's death was caused by witnessing one of her children being run over. The eldest was only 14 years old. All lived in one small room, and there was one bed for five. Here is a poor woman deserted by her husband and left with three little children. One met with an accident a few days ago and broke his arm. He is lying on a shake-down in one corner of the room with an old sack round him. And here in a cellar kitchen, are nine little ones, without food and scarcely any clothing.

STUNTED, MISSHAPEN, AND OFTEN LOATHSOME

"These wretched people must live somewhere, and it must be near the centres where their work lies. It is notorious that the Artisans' Dwellings act has, in some respects, made matters worse for them. Large spaces have been cleared of fever-breeding rookeries to make way for the building of decent habitations, but the rents of these are far beyond the means of the abject poor. They are driven to huddle more closely together in the few loathsome places left to them, and so Dives makes a richer harvest out of their misery, buying up property condemned as unfit for habitation, and turning it into a gold mine because the poor must have shelter somewhere, even though it be the shelter of a living tomb. The State must make short work of this iniquitious traffic, and secure to the poorest the rights of citizenship; the right to live in something better than fever dens, the right to live as something better than the uncleanest of brute beasts. This must be done before the Christian missionary can have much chance with them. Meanwhile, the committee of the Congregational Union have determined to commence operations in three of the very worst districts in London, in each of which a mission-hall and other buildings will be erected and a house-to-house visitation will be organized."

The Light of the Future.

It will not be electrical illumination, say the scientists. That involves too much cost. Electricity is developed by violence; that is, by waste and the disturbance of atoms of matter, which is necessarily expensive. For sensational uses, for spectacles, for the lighting of city squares, streets and parks, where expense is a minor consideration, the electrical light will, of course, be employed; but the great mass of the community will never be able to use this costly illuminator to banish the darkness from their humble dwellings. Nature has been searched to find how light can be generated under the cheapest conditions, and the glow-worm has been hit upon as furnishing a hint for the cheap but effective domestic light of the future. The various insects which emit flashes of light in the dark, does so with an exceedingly small expenditure of mechanical force. It has been suggested that curtains, wall paper, and the coverings of furniture could be so prepared, that, by a slight disturbance of the air, they would emit a steady but mellow light at a cost of far less than a candle or a kerosene lamp. Scientific men are now at work on this problem, and if it should be successfully solved, it would be a very great benefit to the poor of all nations.

Some Facts about Peanuts.

If, as some people believe, Africa sent a curse to America in slavery, she certainly conferred a blessing in the universally popular peanut which grows so well throughout the Southern regions that we shall soon be able to cut off their now large importation altogether. In Virginia they are called "peanuts"; in north Carolina, Georgia and Mississippi, "pinders"; in Alabama, "ground-nuts" and in Tennessee, "goobers."

The preparation of peanuts for the market is an interesting operation. They are first put in an immense cylinder, from which they enter the brushes, where each nut receives fifteen or sixteen feet of brushing before it becomes free. After this cleansing process the nuts drop on an endless belt, which revolves very slowly. On each side of the belt is a row of girls—black, white, tan-colored and crushed strawberry, some of them—whose duty it is to separate the poor nuts from the good ones.

Those of the nuts that "pass" go on to the next room, where more girls await their arrival and put them in bags which, when filled, are sewed up and branded as "cocks," with the figure of a rooster prominent on each sack. These are the "No. 1" peanuts. The poorer nuts, which are separated by the girls at the endless belt, are all picked over again; the best are singled out and branded, after being put in the sack, as "ships." The "ships" are not so large nor so fine in appearance as the "cocks," but are just as good for eating.

The third grade of nuts is known as "eagles," and the cullings that are left from the "eagles" are bagged and sent to a building where the little meat that is in them is extracted by a patent sheller. This "meat"—for by this name it is known to the dealers—is put up, clean and nice, in 200-pound bags and shipped for the use of confectioners and manufacturers of peanut candy,

There is also an oil made from some of the nuts, and in this specialty, I am told, a large trade is done by wholesale druggists. Of the peanuts there is nothing wasted, for even the shells are made useful, being put in immense sacks and sold to livery men for horse bedding, and a very comfortable, healthful bed they make.

I see by one of the Atlanta papers that a mill is to be built for the manufacture of peanut flour, which it is said makes most excellent biscuit. In parts of Georgia I have eaten pastry made from peanut flour and it was excellent, resembling cocoanut in taste somewhat although much more oily and sweet. The kernels of the peanuts are ground between ordinary millstones and the flour is "bolted" or sifted through wire sieves in order that all the coarse, sharp pieces and the leather-like skins may be removed. The refuse—if it may be so called—makes excellent food for pigs.

The cultivation of the peanut will, before long, be one of the industries of the South, and bids fair, in time, to rival cotton growing as an occupation, the profits to each acre of land being about the same, and peanuts are much easier to grow than cotton, requiring less care and attention.

There is one objection, however, to peanut flour as a steady diet. It is said to be very injurious to the teeth, causing them first to turn yellow and then decay.

A Lucky Fisherman.

In the vast amount of business transacted at the Baltimore, Md., Post Office, Mr. M. V. Bailey, Superintendent of the Mails, is kept exceedingly busy, but somehow he finds a spare hour or day to go fishing, and from his experience he gives his testimony, that St. Jacobs Oil is the best remedy in the world for rheumatism, sprains, sore feet and joints, bruises, etc. It is the remedy for fishermen and gunners, who should always keep a bottle on hand.

A sweet thing in bric-a-brac—An Egyptian molasses jug.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollors, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator, Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

The fashionable Susan now writeth her nick-name "Sioux."

They all tell the same story. Mr. W. Thompson, Jeweller, Delhi, suffered from Dyspepsia, got no relief until he used Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. He says "it was just the medicine I needed. It has cured me."

A nod thing in bonnets—A sleeping beauty in church.

Mr. R. A. Harrison, Druggist, Dunnville, Ont., writes that the Triangle Dyes, give the best satisfaction of any dyes ever sold in that section. 30 colors. All perfect. 10 cents.

A sign of an early fall—A bar of soap on the celler steps.

FIFTEEN MILLION OF HORSES are now owned in America, and more than a million a year must be bred to keep up the supply. The largest portion of these are used for agricultural and heavy draft purposes, and such horses bring from $175 to $250 each. It would be impossible to breed them if it were not for the great breeding establishment of M. W. Dunham, Wayne, Ill., from which goes out to all parts of America more than half a million dollars worth of Percheron-Norman stallions annually.

Professor Christisson says that alcohol is a poison for which there is no antidote.

A placard at the entrance of the Reno (Nev.) Jail reads: "Standing room only."

GREATEST DISCOVERY SINCE 1492.

For coughs, colds, sore throat, bronchitis, laryngitis, and consumption in its early stages, nothing equalls Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." It is also a great blood purifier and strength restorer or tonic, and for liver complaint and costive conditions of the bowels it has no equal. Sold by druggists.

A tip-top man—The one who lifts his hat.

Young, middle-aged, or old men, suffering from nervous debility or kindred affections, should address, with two stamps, for large treatise, WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

An oat is better than a wink to a blind horse.

WHAT'S SAVED IS GAINED.

Workingmen will economize by employing Dr. Pierce's Medicines. His "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" and "Golden Medical Discovery" cleanse the blood and system, thus preventing fevers and other serious diseases, and curing all scrofulous and other humors. Told by druggists.

Returning bored—The defeated candidate on his way home.

Mrs. J. McPhee, Appin, writes;—During the last eight years I have used almost every medicine recommended for Biliousness, but found nothing equal to Carson's Bitters. If you suffer try it. Price 50 cents.

A King street store advertises "Real imitation lace."

Testimonial from MR. B. C. LUNDY, of Niagara Falls, Ont., a highly respected citizen, having lived near Drummondville and at the Falls for the past 50 years

Niagara Falls, Ont., Oct. 20th, 1883.

J. N. SUTHERLAND; Dear Sir,—For the past year my brother, Wm. Lundy, of Lundy's Lane, has been a great sufferer from Rheumatism. By my advice he procured and used 6 bottles of your preparation "Rheumatine" with this result—that he is now quite free from all rheumatic pain, and able to attend to his business.

Your medicine "Rheumatine" has also been of great benefit to myself. Some weeks ago I was taken with a most severe attack of Sciatica. I suffered such pain that I could not move or leave the house. I purchased and used two bottles of "Rheumatine." In my case also the medicine was a success, for I am completely cured and as well as ever. I have every confidence in "Rheumatine" as a cure for rheumatic complaints, and heartily recommend it to others.

Yours truly,
(Signed) B. C. LUNDY.

"I claim the right of way," says the hay-scales in the street.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-St. West, Toronto Canada.

The age at which many marry—The parsonage.

A. P. 152.

THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY
FOR PAIN.
CURES
Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica,
Lumbago, Backache, Headache, Toothache,
Sore Throat, Swellings, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, Scalds, Frost Bites,
AND ALL OTHER BODILY PAINS AND ACHES.
Sold by Druggists and Dealers everywhere. Fifty Cents a bottle.
Directions in 11 Languages.
THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO.
(Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.) Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR DOLLAR tweeds makes the price 90 cents; these goods are worth $1.50, and make beautiful ladies' ulsters. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR CELEBRATED black silks, that is our dollar silk will cost you only 90 cents; our $1.50, silk only $1.35; all goods marked in plain figures. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR ALL-WOOL Jersey blankets; our $4.50, blanket for $4; see our Dungannon coverlets, weight 7 lbs., only $1.95, or $1.75, net cash; this discount is allowed on all parcels of one dollar and over. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. DISCOUNT OFF ALL dry-goods, including new fall stock, all goods marked in plain figures; all goods sold for cash only, A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF GREY COTTONS—or a 10 cent cotton for nine cents; sheetings, shirtings, grey flannels, table napkins. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF ALL DRESS GOODS, silks, satins, velvets, brocades, black and Cloored, cashmeres, tweeds, cloakings. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

WANTED—STEADY EMPLOYMENT and good pay given to every lady owning a sewing machine. Material sent and returned by mail. Send one dollar with your application as a guarantee that the material we furnish will be returned when finished. FINDLAY & Manufacturers, Detroit, Mich.

THE LILY
is a perfect gem, equal to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most faatidious. Manufactured only by
THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.,
78 YORK STREET, TORONTO.

ELM CITY
HARNESS OIL.
BASED ON NEATS FOOT OIL.
Is the finest harness dressing made. It softens and preserves the leather, and gives it a fine finish. Ask your saddler for it.
F. F. DALLEY & CO.,
HAMILTON, ONTARIO.
Sole Agents for the Dominion

DR HOFFMAN'S GERMAN BITTERS

50c. | A GENUINE GERMAN DYSPEPSIA CURE. | 50c.

No injurious mineral, no poison, no irritating acid.

Acts on a different principle from other Bitters.

Possesses tonic, aperient and Digestive properties, and a principle that soothes the inflamed membranes, opens up the absorbing vessels of the Stomach and Liver, cures Dyspepsia, Catarrh of the Stomach, Liver Complaint, Constipation, &c.

Wm. Goldsmith, of Collingwood, Ont., suffered for years with the worst form of Dyspepsia; tried physicians and every remedy advertised without benefit. One bottle of Hoffman's German Bitters cured him.

Wholesale by Lyman Brothers, and Northrop & Lyman, Toronto.

—THE—
NEW VARIETIES
—OF—
SEEDS

Offered in the Rural's next Free Seed Distribution are alone worth more, at retail prices, than the combination price of both papers.

The WEEKLY MAIL
AND THE Rural New-Yorker

and the eight kinds of entirely new varieties of Farm, Vegetable and Garden Seeds—all one year for

ONLY $2.75

THE RURAL NEW-YORKER now in its 34th year, is accepted in all parts of our country as the leading journal of Agriculture and altogether unrivalled in the nality and enterprise with which

THE RURAL'S NEXT FREE SEED DISTRIBUTION, IS AS FOLLOWS AND WILL BE SENT WITHOUT CHARGE TO THOSE WHO SUBSCRIBE FOR BOTH PAPERS:

FIRST
THE RURAL UNION CORN. Twenty years' selection, from three kinds at first. Prolific, very early, six feet high. Large kernels, small cob. Never offered for sale.

SECOND
CLEVELAND'S RURAL NEW-YORKER PEA. "I would not sell my stock for $1000," says the originator. The earliest and best in cultivation. It will not be offered for sale in two years.

THIRD
THE CROSS-BRED DIEHL-MEDITERRANEAN WHEAT. The hardiest and most prolific of wheats.

FOURTH
THOUSAND-FOLD RYE. A new rye of great promise.

FIFTH
HORSEFORD'S MARKET GARDEN PEA. An intermediate of great productiveness. Not offered for sale.

SIXTH
BLACK CHAMPION OATS. A selection from many foreign varieties. Not offered for sale.

SEVENTH
THE RURAL GARDEN TREASURES. One-hundred kinds (mixed) of the choicest annual, biennial and perennial flowers collected at the Rural Grounds and imported from Europe.

EIGHTH
TOMATOES of all the newest kinds, together with several originating at the Rural Experiment Grounds and never offered for sale—not less than 10 kinds in the packet.

FOR $2.75
you get one packet each of the entire collection; THE WEEKLY MAIL to the end of 1884, and THE RURAL NEW-YORKER to the end of 1884.

ADDRESS
THE MAIL,
Toronto, Canada.

CURRENT EVE

CANADIAN.

A new Roman Catholic ... dedicated at Desoronto, O... 10th inst. It cost $4,000.

Rev. Archdeacon Lauder ... to be appointed Chaplain ... in place of the Rev. Mr. J... ed.

Hon. A. M. Ross, the ... Treasurer for Ontario, ... acclamation for West Hur... inst.

The total weekly earnin... Trunk railway are report... and the corresponding ... $355,583, showing an incr...

It is proposed to estab... works company in Montre... of $100,000, and applicati... to the Quebec Legislature ... Incorporation.

A very fine new Metho... dedicated at Sarnia on Su... It is a beautiful brick bui... accomodating about 1,20... costing over $30,000.

Notice has been given in ... Gazette that application will b... ment for an Act to incorpo... Temperance and General ... pany, with headquarters ...

A gambler named Mac... $250 by the Toronto Poli... few days ago for playin... game—Faro. The penal... under the provisions of ... law, passed over 200 year...

Frog catching for the ... market has become quite ... some parts of Canada. ... Trent, Ont., thousands ... caught. The hind legs a... ed in barrels on ice, and ...

Recently a young ... S. H. Collins, a student ... Agricultural College. G... denly of hemorrhage of ... father is a minister in E... deceased had been but a ... country.

A recent report shows ... weeks earnings of the ... railway to be $132,000, ... of miles of road in operat... corresponding week of l... ings were $67,000 and ... miles 899.

Four members of ... Tetrault were drowned ... cross Mitchell's Bay, ... small boat during a hea... The victims were the ... children. They leave ... other children.

The Canadian Pacific ... completed and in working ... mit of the Rocky Mou... beyond Calgary. This i... sand miles west of Winn... stated that the entire r... ocean will be complete... years.

The fine new buildin... pleted in Montreal for a... logical College, were fo... the 16th. Senator F... liberal member of the ... The buildings are of sto... 120x80 feet and four st... about $40,000.

There are several ... families in Toronto no... has been investigating ... His impression is that ... make out a worse case ... order to enlist sympat... soon be a strong outc... grants if so many paupe...

Another barn burn... tramps took place at Y... Toronto, recently. T... ed to Thomas Mulholl... was $500, without insur... was sleeping there and ... mischief was done. M... there are similar accid... causes.

The Toronto Coffee ... has now been in active ... over one year and the ... encouraging. A divide... has been declared on the ... beside a sum laid by for ... persons are every day se... ments at the two houses ... More houses are propos...

At the presentation ... an address of welcome ... ernor General by the ... Council, Lord Lansdo... had been a farmer at ... but not a very successfu... given too much of his t... travel to the neglect of ... many other farmers do...

Montreal intends to h... winter carnival, to com... ary. The sum of $10,... to meet the expenses. ... tions announced are a... Indians, Norwegian s... maux village, tobboga... like, besides an ice pala... last winter was a gran... brought thousands of s... seekers to the city.

A deputation of the ... Association of Toronto, ... sentatives of the City C... the Hon. O. Mowat an... bers of the Provincial G... days ago, asking for l... women to vote. The ... himself personally not ... he gave scant encour... such measure would be...

A young boy named W... been for years driving ... Osgood station, near C... and has recently been

CURRENT EVENTS.

CANADIAN.

A new Roman Catholic Church was opened at Desoronto, Ont., on Sunday last. It cost $4,000.

Rev. Archdeacon Lauder, of Ottawa, is to be appointed Chaplain of the Senate in place of the Rev. Mr. Johnson, deceased.

Hon. A. M. Ross, the new Provincial Secretary for Ontario, was re-elected by acclamation for West Huron on the 10th inst.

The total weekly earnings of the Grand Trunk railway are reported at $367,781, for the corresponding week last year $355,583, showing an increase of $12,198.

It is proposed to establish a new glass works company in Montreal with a capital of $100,000, and application will be made to the Quebec Legislature for an Act of incorporation.

A very fine new Methodist Church was opened at Sarnia on Sunday 10th inst. It is a beautiful brick building capable of accommodating about 1,200 persons and cost over $30,000.

Notice has been given in the Canada Gazette that application will be made to Parliament for an Act to incorporate the Canada Temperance and General Assurance Company, with headquarters at Toronto.

A gambler named Mathieson was fined $50 by the Toronto Police Magistrate a few days ago for playing a prohibited game. The penalty was inflicted under the provisions of an old English statute passed over 200 years ago.

Frog catching for the United States market has become quite an industry in some parts of Canada. Along the River Thames, Ont., thousands are now being caught. The hind legs are skinned, packed in barrels on ice, and exported.

Recently a young man named H. Collins, a student of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, died suddenly of hemorrhage of the lungs. His father is a minister in England, and the event had been but a few weeks in this country.

The annual report shows that the gross earnings of the Canadian Pacific railway to be $132,000, and the number of miles of road in operation 1,931. The corresponding week of last year the earnings were $67,000 and the number of miles 800.

Two members of a family named Hall were drowned in attempting to cross Muddy Bay, near Chatham, in a boat during a heavy storm recently. The victims were the man, wife and two children. They leave a family of five children.

The Canadian Pacific railway is now open and in working order to the summit of the Rocky Mountains, 120 miles west of Calgary. This is about one thousand miles west of Winnipeg. It is now stated that the entire road to the Pacific coast will be completed in about two years.

The fine new buildings recently erected in Montreal for a Methodist Theological College, were formally opened on the 16th. Senator Ferrier, a leading lay delegate of the Church presided. The buildings are of stone, of neat design, 120x80 feet and four stories. They cost over $40,000.

There are several pauper immigrant families in Toronto now, and the Mayor has been investigating into their cases. His impression is that the mendicants take out a worse case than need be, in order to enlist sympathy. There will soon be a strong outcry against immigrants if so many paupers come.

Another barn burning by smoking tramps took place at York township, near Toronto, recently. The barn belonged to Thomas Mulholland, and the loss is $500, without insurance. The tramp was sleeping there and while smoking the fatal act was done. Almost every week brings similar accidents from similar causes.

The Toronto Coffee House Association has been in active business for a little more than a year and the financial report is encouraging. A dividend of 6 per cent has been declared on the year's operations, and a sum laid by for rest. Over 1,200 meals are every day served with refreshments at the two houses now in the city. More houses are proposed.

At the presentation of an address of welcome to the new Governor General by the Carleton County Council, Lord Lansdowne stated that he had been a farmer at one time himself, if not a very successful one, as he had given too much of his time to politics and turned to the neglect of his farm. A good many other farmers do the same thing.

Montreal intends to have another grand winter carnival, to commence in February. The sum of $10,000 is being raised to meet the expenses. Among the attractions announced are an encampment of Indians, Norwegian skating, an Esquimaux village, tobbogan parties and the like, besides an ice palace. The carnival last winter was a grand success, and it brought thousands of sight and pleasure seekers to the city.

A deputation of the Women's Suffrage Association of Toronto, and some representatives of the City Council, waited on the Hon. O. Mowat and the other members of the Provincial Government a few days ago, asking for legislation entitling women to vote. The Premier expressed himself personally not unfavorable, but he gave scant encouragement that any such measure would be introduced soon.

A young boy named William Powell, has been for years driving the mail bags from Osgood station, near Ottawa to Russell, and has recently been suspected of robbing the mails. He confessed his crime and told where a large number of letters had been concealed or destroyed, and how some hundreds of dollars of money had been taken. The carelessness of the country postmaster in sorting the mails on the floor and in locking the mail-bag, had much to do with the matter. The boy has been sentenced to imprisonment.

The official report of the Bureau of Industries for the Province of Ontario shows a great falling off in the principal grain crops last harvest. The total number of bushels of fall wheat harvested is estimated at 21,329,329 against 40,921,201 last year, the average yield per acre being not quite half as much. The average yield of spring wheat was a little better than last year. The yield of barley is estimated at 18,690,380 bushels against 24,284,407 bushels in 1882. The yield of oats is put down at 55,482,797 bushels, being an increase of about 25 per cent over last year. The quantity of rye is estimated at about 3,000 bushels, being half a millon less than '82; and the yield of peas at 10,728,137 bushels, being somewhat of a falling off. The hay crop is much better than usual.

GREAT BRITAIN.

It is proposed to construct a ship canal through Ireland, separating the North and the South. A syndicate is being formed in London for that purpose.

A large sum of money has been collected on this side of the Atlantic in aid of the families of those punished for the murder of Lord Cavendish and Mr. Burke in Dublin. It has just been distributed by Miss Ford, of the Irish World.

UNITED STATES.

In Chicago over 600 persons are employed in the manufacture of sausages, and the quantity made is reported to be about 130 tons per day.

The United States Supreme Court has recently given a decision that the suicide by an insane person does not invalidate his life insurance policy.

The United States railway companies have spent over thirty millions dollars on railroads in Mexico. Over 1,600 miles of track have been completed.

In East Buffalo, recently, a large cooper-shop in course of erection was blown down and six persons instantly killed. Seven others were badly injured.

There has been a decrease of the United States surplus revenue during the past year of $12,644,000. This is largely owing to a decrease of the taxes levied in several departments.

A man named Robert Herman, now a convict in the Albany Penetentiary, for forgery, is reported to have become heir to the estate of Baron Bernstein, in Germany, valued at two million dollars.

A large fire took place in Norfolk, Virginia, recently, destroying 7,000 bales of cotton, 50 car loads of lumber, and a number of cars, besides other things. The loss is estimated at over half a million.

The N. E. Farmer says that the crop of buckwheat in the United States this year is very small. But little was sown in most of the States, and there were frosts that destroyed the most of it before it was ripe.

The missionary committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States, at its recent session in New York, voted $48,000 to aid in supporting the colored conferences of the Southern States.

The full quota of the United States Army is 25,000 men, but there are now something like 2,000 less than that, as the number of enlistments do not keep pace with the losses, by deaths, desertions, and other causes.

A large paper factory is at work as Savannah, Georgia, for the manufacture of wrapping paper out of rice straw and palm leaves. Over four tons a day of excellent wrapping paper is the daily output from such materials.

At Savannah, New York State, a train of three box cars on the West Shore road, was thrown from the track, and went down an enbankment thirty feet. The cars were badly broken up, and about thirty men badly injured. But one was instantly killed.

The St. Louis Grand Jury has indicted a number of prominent persons for participation in gambling enterprises, and sharply censures the Governor for pardoning convicted gamblers, and recommends the withdrawl of the pardoning power from His Excellency.

The following is a statement of the United States currency outstanding at November 1st: Old demand notes, $58,800; legal tender notes, all issues, $346,681,016; one-year notes of 1863, $40,815; two-year notes of 1863, $10,750; two-year coupon notes of 1863, $20,350; compound interest notes, $214,770; practional currency, all issues, $15,366,241: total $362,392,742.

A family of destitute Irish immigrants, consisting of a man, wife, four children, and an infirm old woman, mother of the wife, were returned from New York to Ireland a few days ago by the State Board of Charities. The family state that they were helped out by the poor law guardians of Mayo, Ireland. There has been a good deal of complaint made about pauper immigration this year.

Some time ago Lafayette Cook, an eccentric citizen of Auburn, Maine, predicted that he would die on the 11th of November. That day he appeared in his usual health, went out for a walk, and returning he told his friends he would prepare for his coffin, which he did. He then laid down on a lounge and soon fell asleep and died the next morning. He could not be roused. An examination was made but no evidences of poison could be found in the body.

A Javanese Superstition.

One of the grossest of Javanese superstitions is that the "kaiman"—the Javenese name for the crocidile—is actually the evil spirit personified. The dervishes for their own motives of profit, of course, do all that is in their power to foster this belief. "Sedan" (Satan) is the name bestowed upon the crocodile by the natives of Java, and every incident or misfortune, whether death by misadventure, pestilence, failure of crops, &c., is attributed to his agency, it being presumed that on such occasions the spirit is for some reason or other, displeased with the people. In order, therefore, to appease the supposed demon's wrath, the Javanese, instigated, of course, by their dervishes, come to the conclusion that some animals must be slain and offered up to him as a sacrifice, and arrangements are accordingly made for that purpose as follows: The person who is suffering from any calamity which he supposes to have proceeded from the anger of "Sedan," goes at once to the chief magistrate or Mayor of his village (kapelia kampong) and a consultation takes place. After this the Mayor causes all the inhabitants to be summoned together by means of the beating of a peculiarly shaped wooden bell, which has a singularly doleful sound; when this tocsin is heard the Javanese assemble in great numbers and fix a day and hour for the sacrifice, which usually takes place at sunrise, and the sufferer from calamity is enjoined to bring two sheep and a goat to the dervish to be consecrated previous to the sacrifice. When the hour of sacrifice arrives the people collect in great numbers in front of the Mayor's residence, dressed in their holiday garments; the dervish makes his appearance, arrayed in a long gown and a turban of many colors. As he advances, the whole assembly prostrates itself, uttering prayers aloud. At a signal from the dervish the people rise, and, by the direction of the Mayor, are formed into pairs (in silence) for the sacrificial procession, the dervish proceeding at their head to the place of sacrifice. In front of the dervish walk four men, in vestments of various colors, having their faces painted with yellow. These men strew flowers and palms in the path of the advancing dervish. Next follow several persons leading the consecrated animals destined for sacrifice, after whom comes the official who is to slay the animals, attended by the Mayor and the men of the highest standing in the village. Then follow the rabble, the women taking the last place of all in the procession. They then pass through the main streets of the town or village until the place of ceremony is reached. In the case in question this was a large, sandy plain, near the seashore. A huge stone was set up to serve as an altar for the offering to "Sedan," the evil spirit. Here the leaders of the consecrated animals destined for sacrifice knelt down, while the dervish ascended the steps of the altar. As soon as he reached the altar itself the whole assemblage fell on their knees and joined him in a prayer, which was loudly uttered, and with many gesticulations; the dervish then, with most vehement adjurations, addressed the spirit himself, imploring him not to visit the Javanese with any further calamity. Strangely enough, from some water at hand two or three crocodiles at this moment put up their heads, a coincidence which, of course, produced a great impression on the superstitious assemblage. Probably, however, the truth was that the crocodiles were attracted by the rank smell of the goat. The dervish's addressed to the evil spirit concluded, room was made for the person who had been appointed to sacrifice the animals, which had previously been bound and laid upon the sand. This official advanced armed with a most formidable knife, and with considerable dexterity laid open the bowels of the victims, which he then placed in a row and decorated with gay-colored flowers. Next followed another prolix prayer from the dervish, after which he bestowed his blessings upon the entire assemblage, who, in the full conviction of having appeased the evil spirit, retired to their homes and smoked pipes of opium which they alleged to be for the glorification of their deities, but which it seems more reasonable to conclude was for their own self-gratification. Soon after the crowd had dispersed, that very sensible "evil spirit" crawled out of the water with a grunt of satisfaction and proceeded to devour the sheep and the goat with which the ignorance and superstition of the Javanese had provided him.
—Tinsley's Magazine.

An English correspondent draws attention to the increasing employment of girls in various business occupations in London, and adds the suggestion that instruction in the details of commercial clerks' work might be advantageously imparted in classes formed for that purpose, and instructed under proper supervision. There is, perhaps, no more interesting member of our youth than the well-mannered, well-taught girl, whose energies are addressed to the important work of earning her living. Perhaps no city in the world can present a more agreeable spectacle than London during the early morning hours, in which quiet, neatly dressed, and scrupulously well-behaved girls go in great numbers on foot, by omnibus, or rail to their various places of business. The girl of this class and period is a distinct and valuable product of rational education, and, as an embodiment of capable and modest self-reliance, is a clear addition to the civilizing influences of the time.

A niece of Kosciusko is said to be in one of the departments in Washington; a great-granddaughter of Jefferson is in the Interior Department, and a needy descendant of a relative of George Washington has lately received a government appointment.

Animal Intelligence.

At the north side of Dublin there is, at Clontarf, a sea inlet where the water at certain times of the tide is very shallow. A little stream flows under the road into the sea at this place The bridge beneath which it passes has pretty high parapets. A huge dog, a frequent companion during my student days, used to mount one of these parapets, employing it as a lookout when he happened for the moment to lose sight of me. Mrs. Comerford, widow of a distinguished barrister, was my landlady. This dog, aided by an accomplice named Bran, slew Mrs. Comerford's red cat, a great favorite, and buried him, all but the point of his tail, in the garden. The accomplices demeaned themselves in the most innocent manner, but betrayed considerable confusion when their delinquency was detected. It did not seem to occur to their canine minds that the mere tip of the poor cat's tail, when the body itself was out of sight, could possibly incriminate them. But to return to Clontarf. It was the practice among the lads about, when the depth of water suited, to wade out and catch little flat-fish. These abound in great numbers, and lie commonly on the sea-bed. The waders went in bare-legged, and when they happened to thread upon a fish, kept the foot in position until they could stoop down and secure their prey. One of the fisherboys was one day attended by his dog, and when the intelligent creature saw the work in which his master was engaged proceeded to help him by plunging about, and whenever he felt a fish kept his paw upon it until his master should come up and place it in his creel. This curious method of catching flat-fish is not confined to Clontarf. I was walking one day along Con's Water, called after the old chieftain of the name, Con or Constantine O'Neil, when I observed a barefooted lad wading in the shallow water—for the tide was out—and from time to time casting something on the bank. He was catching flat-fish with his feet. I did not detect his occupation, in which he seemed pretty successful, until I went close up in order to see what he was about.
Nature.

The Princess Victoria, betrothed at seventeen to the hereditary Crown Prince of Anhalt, is the great-great-granddaughter of King Frederick William II. of Prussia, while the Crown Prince of Anhalt, eleven years her senior, is the great-grandson of the same sovereign.

A critic of Ouida's novels suggests that her art, vigorous and clever as it is, is not a desirable art to cultivate. "There is a vantage-ground for the author of fiction midway between the equatorial fervor of Ouida's romance and the arctic temperature of garden-party flirtation. The Genoese lover who shoots himself in the moonlight, while his false mistress jeers at him in the presence of his rival, may be a no more heroic personage than the crazy youth who, seeing his lady walk off with a soldier, scrawls on a paper, 'This is thy work, Penelope Ann,' and walks into a pond in the neighborhood."

PERSONAL PARAGRAPHS.

What More or Less Prominent People are Saying and Doing.

It is said that Mr. Blaine is always looking out for the Maine chance.

Jules Verne is growing fat, and his hair is turning white. He is fifty years old.

Thirty smacks have been built by the Baroness Burdett-Coutts for the Yarmouth fishermen.

Albert Bierstady, who has been sketching in the Alps, has lately returned to America.

Dr. Henry Power, F.B.C.S., says that shortsightedness is a defect of culture and civilization.

During his stay in Boston Matthew Arnold will be the guest of Professor Norton, of Cambridge.

Over the door of her summer cottage by the sea, at Gloucester, Miss Elizabeth Stuart Phelps has this inscription: "Let your peace rest upon it."

It is thought that the strength of the late Mr. Yale, of New Haven, like Samson's, lay in his locks, as he left eight million dollars, accumulated through their means.

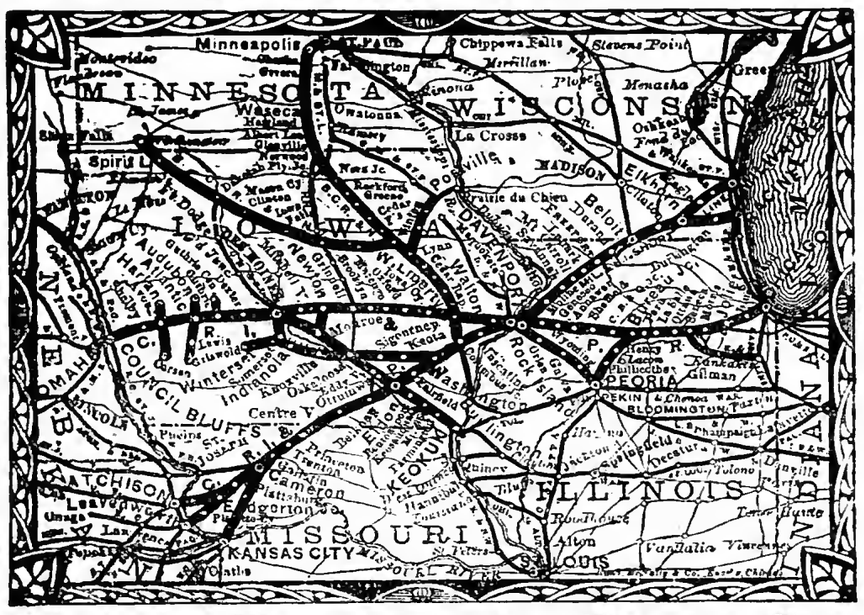
An American physician recommends beefsteak and baked potatoes as perhaps the least harmful of the things that can be eaten at night, especially, he says, if the beef be underdone.

Miss Nichols, a graduate of the Hollis ston High School, seventeen years old, received the entrance prize of two hundred dollars to Smith College, having passed the best examination.

The late Captain Mayne Reid wrote one of his works in Newport, Rhode Island, and it is only last year that the U. S. government gave him a pension for his services in their Mexican War.

Professor Morse says that the genuine old Satsuma ware is very rare, and only about ninety years old at the most, and that the National Museum of Japan, at Tokio, has but three specimens.

President Eliot, of Harvard, has had a letter from Professor Jowett, Master of Balliol, Oxford, and translator of Plato's Dialogues, urging that some arrangements be made in regard to American students going to Oxford.



Sarah Wilson, a negress of seventy-seven, who has had a good education, has been teaching a private school for young children in New Haven, Connecticut, for sixty years. Her father was a Slave in that city, and bought his freedom.

One of the members of the Corean embassy, a fluent French talker, Yen-Kil-Chin, is to remain in the United States for a course of instruction under Professor Morse, of Salem, Massachusetts, being anxious to master English.

Mr. Bronson Alcott's oldest grandson has taken a photograph of him sitting on the porch of his study. Mr. Alcott reads his own letters and dictates replies, although not yet recovering the use of his paralyzed side. He suffers from not being able to express his ideas in words, although his mind is clear.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE,
Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN,
Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

The Standard.

MARKDALE, NOV. 22ND, 1883.

STANDARD TIME.

The change of time which took place on Monday morning by the cities, telegraph lines and railroads throughout the continent, has, we believe been made universal by all classes. The first indication of the change on Monday morning in this village was Moffat's foundry whistle which called the labourers to work at 17½ minutes earlier than usual. We understand that all the village fell in line. The school and churches have all done likewise, and our friends from the country will require to make a note of it on Sunday next in order to be in time for church. Seldom do we experience such an important and universal change with as little friction.

OBITUARY.

It becomes our duty this week to chronicle the death of one of the pioneers of this district, in the person of Mr. Alex. Rutledge, who departed this life on Sunday evening last, 18th inst., at the age of fifty-seven years. He was widely known and universally respected, his cheerful disposition, considerate and obliging demeanor, together with unquestioned integrity, won for him fast friends as far as his acquaintance reached. He has been a resident of this district over thirty years, the last fifteen of which he has been in the hotel business in this village. His health has been poor the most of the past year, the last four weeks of which he was confined to his bed. His disease, bronchitis and asthma, developed rapidly, resulting as above. The body was followed on Tuesday by a very large concourse of sorrowing friends to the Methodist cemetery. An appropriate an impresive sermon was preached on the occasion by Rev. W. Casson. The departed had no family, his sorrowing widow will accept our condolence in her present bereavement.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

MAPLE CREEK, Nov. 10th.

To Editor Standard.

DEAR SIR,—Having been a resident of the N. W. Territory for the past six months, perhaps a few ideas regarding the climate and general appearance of this western country would be interesting to the readers of the STANDARD.

Many people of Ontario have imagined the far west to be equally as good, if not better, as a grain producing country, than that of Manitoba, but they who form such an opinion make a great mistake. Manitoba is just as fertile as it has been represeuted, especially Qu'Appelle valley and the principal part of southern Manitoba, which for richness of soil cannot be surpassed anywhere in the Dominion. We see a marked change though in the appearance of the country as we travel westward; vegetation seems to disappear. You may travel a hundred miles without seeing a tree, nothing but sage brush seems to flourish in the greater part of this western region. even the grass refuses to grow in many places and where it does show signs of growth it is consumed by the fires that are constantly running over, it is nothing remarkable here to see fire running in May. To the traveller the country presents the same appearance from Moose Jaw to Calgary, a distance of four hundred and fifty miles. The soil becomes lighter after leaving Moose Jaw and the prairie more rolling, continuing so for forty or fifty miles when the land becomes almost worthless, sand hills and alkali bog holes being the most noticeable features. For many miles here and there a good strip of land is to be seen or a valley with a few sections of good grazing land, but seldom enough of it together to make a good neighborhood. There are at present very few settlers west of Moose Jaw. No grain of any account has yet been grown on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. A few farmers here sowed on breaking this spring, but the dry season together with not being properly cultivated, caused a failure. Scarcely any rain falls during the summer months, from May until October no rain fell of any account, a few little showers but not sufficient to do crops much good. Through the months of July, August, and September, no rain was seen at all. This accounts for the barren appearance of the prairie, even as far east as Moose Jaw farming has been very unsuccessful this year. Though this season is said to be an exceptionally dry one by all old settlers the climate is very changeable. Through the summer months the nights are very cool, and the middle of the day very hot. From 10 o'clock a.m. till 4 p.m. the sun strikes very warm, but as night approaches it becomes much cooler and an overcoat does not feel at all uncomfortable. The winters are said to be lighter than in Ontario, at all events there is less snow but not much difference in the temperature. The thermometer shows as low as thirty below zero in the coldest time. There has been no snowfall of any account here yet, though the ground is already frozen up. At Calgary snow falls every month in the year, it is distant from Winnipeg eight hundred and forty miles and about sixty from the foot of the Rockies. The C. P. R. have had to abandon work in the mountains from the severe cold. The water there is excellent and a drink of it after travelling over a territory where so much alkali water is found is regarded as quite a luxury. Bow river is a fine stream of pure water and worthy of mention, it unites with the Elbow near Galgary and afterwards forms the South Saskatchewan. It is an excellent place along these rivers for grazing purposes and ranching proves very successful there. I will mention a few of the leading towns along the C. P. R. Maple Creek is the first place of importance west of Moose Jaw, it has about a thousand of a population, including the mounted police and surrounding settlers. This valley containing about two townships is admitted to be one of the prettiest places in the North-West. The Cypress Hills are fifteen miles distant from here and yield any amount of timber. There are at present three saw mills busily engaged there. This valley is a favorite resort in winter for ranchers, it being well sheltered by the surrounding hills. Indians also take advantage of it through the coldest of the winter. Medicine Hat is destined to be the leading town of the North-West. It is distant from Winnipeg six hundred and sixty miles and west of Maple Creek sixty miles, is situated on the South Saskatchewan. This place has already over three thousand of a population and is not yet six months old. The coal mines have been opened up here this summer and are likely to prove very successful, the coal is pronounced to be of the best quality. Preparations are being made to work them more extensively next spring, which will give employment to quite a number of men. Only a couple of years ago buffalo might be seen here in hundreds but have since disappeared, not one has been seen within fifty miles of the C. P. R. this summer, Antelope though, are plentiful, it is no unusual sight to see eighty or a hundred in one drove. These are a few facts that have come within my observation the past few months. Thanking you for space in your columns, I remain,

Yours truly

EDWARD S. RUTLEDGE.

POISON

The Cause of the Sudden death of Rosannah Leppard.

Verdict of Coroner's Jury.

To-day (Thursday) the inquest into the death of Rosannah Leppard, which was adjourned two weeks ago in order to obtain an analysis of the contents of stomach. was resumed. It will be remembered by our readers that the circumstances attending the death of this woman indicated most strongly poison by strychnine. The jury requested that an analysis of the stomach and intestines might be had, and the Ceroner having obtained the authority of the Attorney General, forwarded them under seal in care of Constable Fields, to Dr. Ellis, Toronto, public analysist. His report confirmed the suspicions of the Coroner and Dr. Sproule, who made the post-mortem of the body. The main question to solve is who administrated the poison. So far there is not a title of evidence to show that the deceased committed suicide, but every fact seems to point to one of the most heartless, having been committed in our neighborhood, that has ever stained the annals of crime in our country. We would not attempt to prejudice the public mind in so serious a matter, but as a public journalist, place all the facts we can gather before our readers.

COLD-BLOODED MURDERS,

The morning after the first sitting of the Jury, Constable Fields was dispatched to make search of any medicines or drugs which might be found in the house where the deceased came to her end, or in the possession of her husband.

BLIND COOK TEETS.

While going through his chest he found a bottle, half-filled, labelled—

"STRYCHNINE—POISON!"

This he secured, also a Life Policy on the life of Rosannah Leppard for four thousand five hundred dollars, payable to Cook Teets in the event of her death. While these circumstances supply positive evidence of Cook Teets having poision in his possession without objective use for it, and that it was the identical kind of poison which caused the death of his wife, they also supply the motive for the suspected crime. Yet there is one important link missing. Strychnine is a poison that generally acts very quickly, producing death in from ten minutes to four hours. The evidence so far goes to show that Cook Teets was not in the company of his wife for a period of twelve hours or more before her death.

VERDICT OF CORONER'S JURY:

The verdict of the Coroners Jury was as follows:

1st.—That Rosannah Leppard came to her death by poison.

2nd.—That the poison was strychuine.

3rd.—The Jury believe, from the evidence adduced, that Cook Teets feloniously administered that poison to her.

The Coroner, immediately upon the finding, issued his warrant for the arrest of Cook Teets. When he came into the hall in charge of constable Fields, the Coroner, at his request, read over the verdict, and on hearing the last clause, he was visibly affected—a spasm passed over his haggard features, which he attempted to hide, passing his hand nervously over his face and sighing heavily. This man may be innocent of the horrible crime but a crowd of circumstances like hideous spectres with outstretched fingers and mocking gibe, seem to say—"Thou art the man!"—Flesherton Advance.

GREY FALL ASSIZES,

Continued from Last Week.

MONKMAN VS. YOUNG.—This was a case of seduction, the plaintiff residing in Arran and the defendant being a school teacher in the Algoma district. The action was undefended. Verdict for plaintiff $300. John M. Kilbourn for plaintiff.

MCFARLANE VS. KENNEDY.—Action for seduction. The parties reside in the township of Glenelg. Verdict for plaintiff $500. J. Creasor, Q. C., and R. A Pringle for plaintiff. Frost & Frost for defendant.

QUEEN VS. WM. LEE.—Defendant who resides in Sullivan, was charged with an indecent assault on Caroline Shepf, a little girl of 13 yrs. Verdict, guilty of common assault and sentenced to pay a fine of $20. James Masson for defendant.

HALL VS. PEARCE.—The parties to this case reside in the Township of Sullivan, and own mills on the same stream, The plaintiff who was lower down on the stream, sued the defendant for damages for backing up the water into sink holes and preveuting it coming down to him. Verdict for plaintiff $50. Jas. Masson for plaintiff. H. P. O'Connor and J. M. Kilbourn for defendant.

TINKIS V. SUTHERLAND.—Action for price of railroad ties, etc. The plaintiff lives on Manitoulin Island, and the defendant in Owen Sound. This was a very complicated case and was adjourned from Wednesday till Monday. Verdict for defendant for $50. J. Masson for plaintiff, Creasor & Morrison for defendant, STONE V. HARPER.—Seduction, undefended. Verdict for $200.

MARSHALL V. PARKS.—Action for slander. The parties live in the township of Collingwood. On the day of the Clarksburg fair last fall the plaintiff swore he heard the defendant singing the slander along the road while returning home. The defendant swore positively that he had not been away from home on that date, and had never spoken the slander complained of. After hearing the defendant swear that he had never spoken the slander the plaintiff was satisfied and withdrew the case. Creasor and Platt for plaintiff, Wilson & Evans for defendant NICKLE V. FERGUSON.—Action for six yrs. board of two children. Verdict for plaintiff. Creasor & Platt for plaintiff, Myers & Robb for defendant.

NICHOL V. COCHRANE.—Action for trespass and trover. The plaintiff lives in Mount Forest, and the defendant in St. Thomas. This was an action brought to recover goods sold by one Whalen to defendant after having given a chattle Mortgage on them to the plaintiff. Held that the chattle mortgage was made fraudulently, and a verdict was entered for the defendant. Stone & Masson for plaintiff, C. McDougall for defendant.

FLEMING V. HALL—Action on two promissory notes, nndefended. Verdict for plaintiff.

SING V. TROUT—Ejectment. This was an action on a dispute boundary line in Meaford of 3/20 of an acre worth about $12. Verdict for defendants. Wilson and evans for plaintiff, O. C. Pollard & F. Arnoldi, For defendants.

MCCONNELL V. MOONEY—Ejectment, undefended. Judgment for plaintiff

GARDNES V. KREOPFER—An Interpleader action. Verdict for plaintiff. J. Creopor, Q. C. for plaintiff; Z. A. Lash, Q. C. for defendant.

GALBRAITH V. HOGAN—Action to foreclose a mortgage. Defendant, a married woman, claimed that she did not understand it was a mortgage she had given, but that her husband was to be taken for balance of purchase money of property. Judgement for plaintiff. Jamos Masson for plaintiff, S. J. Lane Q. C., for defendant..

BARBER V. BARBER—Action brought by the widow of the late Nathaniel Barber of Derby, to recover dower in the lands left by her husband. It appeared that she was left a small annuity by the will, but not stated to be in lieu of dower. She subsequently signed a document releasing her dower, but being an illiterate woman, claimed that she was not aware of its effect. Decree for administration of estate and sale of property, the widow's dower to be a first claim on the proceeds. Creasor & Morrison for plaintiff. S. J. Lane Q. C., for defence.

QUEEN V. WM. BREWSTER—Shooting with intent to maim and to do grievous bodily harm. Found guilty of unlawfully wounding fined $100. A. Frost for crown, J. Creasor, Q. C. for prisoner.

QUEEN V. SMITH—Feloniously wounding with intent to maim, etc., when first called the defendant was out. A bench warrant was about to issue when he appeared and stood trial. Verdict guilty of common assault, fined $50. A. Frost for Crown. J. Creasor Q. C. for defendant.

QUEEN V JAS. FREE—The prisoner was accused of stealing four sheep from James Lyons of Holland, He was a drover, and was driving about a hundred sheep along the town line of Holland and Euphrasia, when Mr. Lyons missed his sheep, and afterwards found them with those of Free's, The Jury after hearing the case. acquitted him. A. Frost for the Crown, Jas. Masson for the defence.

Personals.

Mr. Jas. Bowes, jr., Reeve of St. Vincent was in Markdale Monday.

Mr. James Allen, Ex. Reeve of Amabel and wife were in town this week.

Mr. and Mrs. James Johnston of the Johnston House Owen Sound were in town Tuesday.

Thos. Wilson and Thos. Morrow went to Manitoulin, not Manitoba as stated in the STANDARD. last week.

Chatsworth.

From a correspondent.

Sleighing is gone.

Division court was held here on Monday last 12th inst., quite a number of cases were heard.

The monthly cattle fair last Monday was well attended and a large number of cattle changed hands.

The squirrel hunt on Thanksgiving day resulted in a victory for Capt. Young.

Maxwell.

From our own correspondent.

Lots of snow and good sleighing.

Mr. Patterson, school teacher, is leaving at the end of the year.

Rev. L. Hall, and family have returned to Feversham, he having resigned his ministerial charge intends commencing business store keeping and milling with his brother.

The Maxwell lodge of the Sons of Temperance held their first open meeting in the Methodist church last Tuesday evening the 18th. Mr. R. Gordon filled the chair with credit Rev. Messrs. Shaw & Dobsin gave addresses, the choir discoursed choice selections of music, while readings and recitations were given which altogether made a rich programme. This lodge is only recently organized yet it has a membership of about forty and is in a prosperous condition.

BIRTHS.

FINNERTY—In Markdale, on the 7th inst.. the wife of Mr. P. Finnerty, of a daughter.

CONNOLLY—In Glenelg, on the 3rd inst., the wife of Mr. Thos. Connolly, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

CLARK—NOBLE—At Flesherton, on the 17th inst., by the Rev. D. C. McDowell, Mr. Wm. Clark, house builder and architect, to Mrs. Noble, widow of the late James Noble, all of Markdale.

DEMMA—WILLIAMSON—At the manse, by the Rev. Mr. Kees, on the 19th inst., Mr. Justin Demma, of Berkeley, to Miss Elizabeth Williamson, of Toronto, PRICE—MUSTARD—By Rev. R. Ross, of Chatsworth, Mr. John H. Price, of Holland, to Miss Margaret Emma Mustard, of Holland, on 7th inst.

DEATHS.

RUTLEDGE—In Markdale, on the 18th inst., Mr. Alex. Rutledge, aged 57 years.

FOR SALE, A fine driving mare five years old, sound and gentle.

Apply to W. J. ROWE, Barrhead Mills.

TEACHER WANTED. For School Section No. 17, Euphrasia, a male or female holding third class certificate. Duties to commence January 2, 1884. Apply stating salary to JOS. MANAREY, Sec. Trustee, Rocklyn P.O.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.95 to $1.00; Spring $0.60 to $1-00; Barley, 45 to60; Peas, 65; Oats, 30c Butter, 18c; Eggs, 22c; Potatoes, 40c; Hay, $8 .00; Pork, 5.00 to 5.50; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.10; Spring, $1.00 to $1.12; Barley, 50c to 70c; Oats, 37c to 40c Peas, 70c to 73c; Hogs, $6.00 to $6.25; Potatoes, per bag, 90c to $1c; Butter, dairy, 18c to 20c; eggs, 22c to 25c.

NOTICE. The undersigned will be at the bank at Markdale from the 20th to the 23rd December for the purpose of collecting sale notes. as they become due at the above date. Those interested will please be prompt and save further trouble and costs.

JOHN FORD.

Annan P. O., November 8th, 1883 166-69

ESTRAY. Came to the premises of the subscriber, lot East half 27, con. 7 Holland, about the 12th October last, four head of two year old cattle, one bull, one steer and two heifers, color mostly red. The owner is requested to prove property, pay expences, and take them away. Unless claimed by Nov. 30th, will be offered for sale.

GEO. WATT.

Holland November 13th 1883 166-69

WANTED, Eight girls, at Miss Green's dress making parlor. Six apprentices and two assistants. 161-tf.

TEACHER WANTED, Male or Female, for School Section No. 15, Township of Euphrasia, holding third class certificate, duties to commence 1st of January, 1884, apply stating salary expected, to

JAMES STRUTHERS, Sec.

155-57 Markdale P. O.

NOTICE. Having given up possession of Barrhead Mill, and purpose removing from this place shortly, I hereby notify all parties indebted to me to call at Lucas' Bank and settle their account and save further trouble or costs.

W. J. ROWE.

Oct. 24, '83.

ESTRAY. From the premises of the subscriber, lot South ½ 12, con. 11 Euphrasia, in the month of May, 5 yearling calves, 1 steer and 4 heifers, mostly red with a few white spots. Any person giving such information as will lead to their recovery will be suitably rewarded. Any person harboring them without advertising them will be prosecuted according to law.

GEO. TAYLOR,

Euphrasia Nov. 2. 1883. 155-57

FARMS FOR SALE. Lot 117, con 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are clears and under ultivation. Lot S part 15, con. 12, Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared: all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to J. G. IRVING, Markdale.

Oct. 16. 1883. 16

FARM FOR SALE. Lot 89 and 90 second range west of T. & S. Road, Glenelg, 100 acres, 85 of which are cleared and under cultivation fit for reaper and mower to work on. Buildings and fences in good repair, soil clay loam, well watered, and in a good state of cultivation. This is a desirable farm and well located being 2½ miles from the flourishing village of Markdale. For further particulars apply on premises or by letter to 162-72 WM. MUTRIE, Markdale P. O.

LIGHT! LIGHT!!

REFINED COAL OIL

18cts a gallon in two barrel lots and upwards.

HEAD LIGHT OIL

25cts. a gallon by the barrel.

TEAS

At Wholesale Rates.

H. PARKER,

Druggist, - DURHAM.

STANDARD TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clochs, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personaliy, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,

The Jeweller,

MARKDALE.

Local and Ot

NOTICES in these colum any individual or Societ cents a line for the fir cents a line each subsequ

J. H. HULL, raised on Monday.

FOR SALE.—A bay old, apply at Mr. Ge dale.

REJUVENATOR ston taking the lead, sold barber.

THE supply of woo increased during th sleighing.

MR. WM. HASKETT a fine brick dwelling next season.

Motto frames 8½x Motto frames 17x2 photograph gallery.

AN INTERESTING let other column from ledge of Maple Creek

MR WM. DOUGLAS erect a brick reside adjoining the village

If you wish to s Globe, Mail. Star. F or Montreal Witness subscription for a papers hand in your scription to this offic

DressStuff

Dress stuffs i shades, varying Io cents up.

Tweeds in E and Canadian, and most fashio

TORO

SELLS CHEAP

C. REYNOLDS & SON.

YOU CAN

Buy more good substantial Goods for $1 at Reynolds' than any other house in town. Our Dress Goods, Mantle Cloths, Tweeds etc., are the newest under the Sun, and cheaper than the cheapest.

GLOVES

We have a Job Lot of Ladies' Kid Gloves on hand, usually sold for 75c., at 25c. per pair. Genuine Josephine Kid Gloves for $1.10 per pair, every pair guaranteed.

Woollen Goods.

Our flannels are unsurpassed for quality and prices, all patterns, Plain, Grey, etc. BLANKETS---We have a good assortment of White and Grey Blankets from $1.75 per pair and up.

We have just the Ganzies the people are all looking for, good and heavy, all wool and at 85c. per pair, only.

Boots and Shoes.

Our stock of Boots and Shoes are the Cheapest and best in Canada. We buy from one of the leading manufacturing houses in the Dominion, and don't you forget it.

Come in and give our 30c. Tea a trial, it beats anything and everything.

Don't fail to see the Bargains before buying one dollar's worth of goods at any other house.

GO TO

C. Reynolds & Son.

CHOICE GOODS

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

J. H. Hull, raised his carriage house on Monday.

For Sale.—A bay horse six years old, apply at Mr. Geo. Walkers Markdale.

Rejuvenator stomach bitters are taking the lead, sold by Smith, the barber.

The supply of wood was materially increased during the few days of sleighing.

Mr. Wm. Haskett, intends building a fine brick dwelling on his park lot next season.

Motto frames 8½x21 and 10x14,30c. Motto frames 17x21, 55cts, at the photograph gallery.

An interesting letter appears in another column from Edward S. Rutledge of Maple Creek N. W. T.

Mr Wm. Douglas, is prepairing to erect a brick residence on his farm adjoining the village next spring.

If you wish to subscribe for the Globe, Mail, Star, Farmer's Advocate or Montreal Witness or renew your subscription for any of the above papers hand in your name and subscription to this office.

On Tuesday seven hunderd and one parcels of goods were sold at McFarland's and everybody pleased.

What the People Say—That Hamilton's photograph gallery is the cheapest place in the county to buy frames.

While the sleighing lasted McFarland and his clerks were so busy they hadn't time to eat their dinner's.

Bring in your time pieces and have them properly adjusted to keep new standard time.—W. A. Brown Jeweller.

Bargains Bargains.—Miss Burch has opened out a cheap lot of hats, fethers, and flowers, dress, mantle, trimming, etc., all orders carefully excuted.

Motto's 8½x21 and 10x14, 5cts. Motto's 17x21, 12cts. Perforated card board white and silver, 12cts. Tin foil, 5cts, at Hamilton's photo. gallery.

Those watersoaked dennims moccasins, cottons, sateens. Jeans, and ulster, clothes, at McFarland are almost sold out' secure some before they are all gone.

The Shelburne school trustees have decided to use the old school books and have rejected both the new series, for the time being at least, that's sensible. We consider it a piece of wholesale bungling having three sets of school books in use in the Provence at the same time.

Many of the citizens of Markdale were aroused from their slumbers at midnight Tuesday night by what the majority thought was an alarm of fire which however was nothing more than a charivari party.

The Public will no doudt be pleased to learn that Dr. Carter, formerly of this place is again coming to take Dr. Sproule's place in his absence to parliament. Dr. Carter is expected by the 1st January.

Dentistry.—T. F. Brown, L. D. S., of Woodstock, will be in Markdale on and after the 15th November for two weeks, filling, extracting, plate work &c satisfactory done. Charge moderate office at W. A. Brown's Jewellry Store.

Every town and village has its own peculiarities, but never have we struck a place with as many bad boys to the square foot as Durham. They are, to all appearance, uncontrolled by either parental or legal authority, and ran the streets Sunday as well as week days, seeking to do evil. This is certainly a deplorable state of affairs. So says a traveller.

True merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increased sales, as a prominent druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits;" It is the grand specific for diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, $5,000 bottles have been sold during the last three months. For sale by A. Turner & Co. Markdale.

Extensive Sale.—Mr. John Mercer has sold his farm, lots 109 and 110 second range east of T. & S. Road Artemesia about two miles east of Markdale and will have a credit sale on above premises next Monday the 26th inst., commencing at 12 o'clock, noon, terms 14 months credit on approved paper. Mr. Mercer has a fine stock of horses together with cattle, sheep, pigs, farm implements &c.—Geo. Noble Auctioneer.

Mr. Hanbury will move to his farm, about five miles northwest of the city, some time next week. He will not be a candidate at the next municipal elections for the city. A number of settlers in the neighborhood of his farm home have expressed a wish that he should offer himself as a candidate for the reeveship of their township, and it is not unlikely he will consent. Mr. Hanbury is a pretty safe man, and may be trusted not to encourage extravagance.—Brandon Sun.

He Didn't go.—Prof. Jackson, a barber, colored, in Meaford has had considerable free advertising recently, and we think his trade must consequently largely increase. It appears he has been (owing to his complection) an undesirable citizen to some probably white skinned, but certainly black hearted, resident of that town who have sent him letters threatning his destruction if he didn't leave the town at a certain date. That date has passed and the professor continues to lather and shave unmolested, and why not.

AUCTION SALE

—OF—

VALUABLE PROPERTY

—FIFTY—

OWEN SOUND TOWN LOTS

—FIFTY—

Situated in the west end of the town and the only available lots in the market convenient to the railway and shipping interests.

In view of the fact that the Canada Pacific Railway Company have secured the Toronto, Grey & Bruce Road, which will make Owen Sound their terminus and transhipping point, and consequently the best purchasing and shipping port in North Western Ontario, it should convey to every one that town property at this point must increase in value and became a profitable investment. The above lots are offered for sale partly to test the present market value, the Vendors intend to reserve every third lot at an advance of 25 per cent on auction price day of sale.

To actual purchasers coming from a distance half railway fare on the T. G. & Bruce and N. & N. Western roads, will be returned on their paying one third of purchase money.

Terms of sale—Ten per cent of amount day of sale, and the balance to make one third of purchase within 10 days, the balance to be paid in 5 equal annual instalments, with interest at 6 per cent per annum, secured by Mortgage on property, or if paid in cash 10 per cent off. To purchasers erecting within one year brick dwellings worth not less than $1,000. a relate of 10 per cent will be allowed off the purchase money of lot on which the erection is made.

Sale at the Queen's hotel, Owen Sound, Thursday Nov. 29th, 1883, afternoon and evening. For further particulars and conditions of sale apply to D. MELVILLE & Co. or JAS. SUTHERLAND, Owen Sound.

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK

DressStuffsTweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN.

A GIRL'S FOLLY.

A small, superior cottage of bright-red brick, sweet-scented woodbine trailing over its rustic porch, a green lawn before it surrounded by flowers, and a charming country laudscape spreading out in the distance. Inside, in its small but pretty parlor, on the red-table cover waited the tea-tray with its cups and saucers. The window stood open to the still, warm autumn air, and the French porcelain clock on the mantle-piece was striking 5.

A slender girl of some 20 years came in. She was very lovely. But her light-blue eyes bore a sort of weary or discontented look, and her bright brown hair was somewhat ruffled. She wore a print washing dress of black and white, neither very smooth nor very fresh, and a lace neck-collar fastened with a bow of black ribbon. Glancing round the room and seeing nobody in it, she went to the open window, stood there in a deep reverie, and then leaned out to pick a rose. Its thorns pricked her delicate fingers, and she let it fall with a pettish exclamation.

Mrs. Reece came in next. A middle-aged, faded woman of care, in a small widow's cap and neat black gown. She looked flushed and fatigued.

"Have you made the tea, Alison?"

"No, mamma."

"Oh, but you might have made it! I wish you would, child! I am very tired!"

Alison turned from the window, brought the tea-caddy from a side-table, and put two caddy-spoonsful of tea into the metal teapot. Then she carried it out to the boiling water in the kitchen, and brought it in filled. On days dedicated to some special household work the young servant had to be spared as much as possible. This was ironing day, and Mrs. Reece had stood at the board herself, ironing what they called the fine things, which meant laces and muslins, and helping generally. She was not strong, and a little work tired her. But she sat down to pour out the tea as usual. Alison taking a seat which faced the window.

"Why have you not changed your frock this afternoon?" exclaimed Mrs. Reece, suddenly noticing that her daughter wore the cotton she had put on in the morning. And it may as well be stated that at that time, many years ago now, the dresses worn by young ladies, whether of cotton or silk, were universally called "frocks."

"Oh, I don't know," carelessly replied Alison. "It does not matter."

"Did you forget that Thomas Watkyn was coming!"

"Not at all," said Alison, in a slightly contemptuous tone, her fair face flushing rosy red, and her blue eyes roving outward to the distant green meadows, to the sheaves of the golden corn, and to the already changing tints of the foliage. "I'm sure the frock is good enough for Thomas Watkyn! And I don't see why he need be dancing to our house so often, mamma."

"Alison, be silent. You are behaving ill, and you know it."

"I am very sorry you should think so, mother. I do not wish to behave ill to you."

"That is behaving ill—saying those last words; because you know well that I did not mean you were behaving ill to me, but to Thomas Watkyn."

Alison Reece pouted her cherry lips, and ate a whole slice of thin bread and butter before replying.

"Mamma, how particular you are!"

"I never thought you could behave so. Six months ago you would not have believed it yourself."

"Would you please let me have a little more milk in my tea?"

"You treat Thomas Watkyn outrageously," continued Mrs. Reece, as she passed the milk jug. "One fine day you smile on him, draw him on—yes, you do, Alison; don't interrupt me—and the next day you will hardly speak to him a pleasant word. But he is worth more than that other; that foolish Vavasour, with whom you have been flirting lately."

"Worth more!" retorted Alison, resenting these charges, which she knew were all true, and having no other answer at hand.

"Yes; infinitely more. Compare a dandy fop like Vavasour with Thomas Watkyn! Alison, you must alter your behaviour. You are engaged to young Watkyn, and——"

"There was no engagement," interrupted Alison.

"It is equivalent to one. He comes here openly to court you; you have until lately responded to it. Why! don't you see that he worships the very ground you read on?"

A pretty blush and a conscious smile illuminated the girl's face.

"I say things must not go on as they are going," replied Mrs. Reece. "Either tell Thomas that you can not marry him, and beg him not to come here, or else make up you mind to do so and cease your silly flirtation with the other."

"It's not a silly flirtation,' angrily replied Alison.

"Indeed, I see not what else it can be."

"I don't flirt; he does not flirt. He calls here sometimes, and we talk a little; and—and—I'm sure's there nothing in that to make a fuss about."

"And how often do you meet him when you are out? and how often do I see him strolling with you about yonder fields? Alison, take care that in trying to grasp the shadow you do not lose the substance."

"What substance?" asked the young lady, innocently.

"Thomas Watkyn. A union with him would be a very substantial one indeed; a thoroughly good settlement in life for you. Mr. Vavasour at best (looking at him in this light) is but a shadow. These aristocratic, flirting fops rarely have marriage in their heads. The amusement of the moment, the talking sentimental nonsense with a silly girl; that is all they look after. Will you take another cup of tea?"

"Oh, no, thank you. This lecture is as good as ten cups of tea."

"Then ring the bell."

Patty, the young servant, came in and carried away the tea-tray. Mrs. Reece went up stairs to put away the clothes ironed that day, and Miss Reece went back to the open window, leaned against its side frame and fell into a reverie.

She had a pretty good notion herself that matters would not go on much longer; Thomas Watkyn would not let them. More than once he had said to her a few words, and she had laughed them off. He was a fine man and a good man, and a well-educated man for those days; but he was a farmer. Alison had thought herself fortunate that he should choose her, for she was not of much account in the world, and could say with the milkmaid in the old song: My face is my fortune; and if she was not desperately in love with him she liked him very much, esteemed and respected him.

But a stranger made his appearance in the place, one Reginald Vavasour, who had come to read with the clergyman, previous to passing some examination. A high-bred man of good family—there could be no doubt of that—and a man of fascinating manners, given to take the female by storm. He had accidentally made the acquaintance of pretty Alison Reece, had talked a great deal of lazy nonsense to her for his own amusement, just to pass the time away during the intervals of his attendance in the Rev. Mr. Taber's study, and Alison was supremely fascinated. Beside that slender young aristocrat, whose clothes were of perfect cut, and whose easy manners (not to say insolent) were as perfect as his clothes, whose very drawl betrayed his conscious superioriority to men of rustic locality, no matter what their standing might be, what could plain unpretending Thomas Watkyn be in Alison's sight? Nobody.

Yet he was good-looking in his way, this Thomas Watkyn. A well-known, well-made, fine man, beside whom the other looked a boy, with a calm, sensible face, and quiet, unobtrusive ways. But again, who could admire a homely face, its steady, thoughtful, kindly eyes, and its brown, old-fashioned whiskers, when there was another face over the next field, whose dark orbs were of a flashing brilliance, and whose curled-out black moustache was killing? Not silly, inexperienced, vain Alison Reece.

Leaning against the window-frame Alison watched a tall, straight figure coming across the meadows, and her brow went into a scowl. It was Thomas Watkyn—and she wondered what brought him so early this evening; she wished he would stay away for good. Or, if not good—for something pricked her heart and conscience there—at least for a few weeks. She did not care for Tom, and she knew it, and she supposed she would marry him sometime. Unless indeed—sometimes Alison dreamed dreams of Mr. Vavasour appearing some fine morning to carry her off in a carriage and four, the horses and postboys displaying white favors. She had no true love for Mr. Vavasour; but she was very pretty, with all a pretty girl's vanity, and his admiration of her was just so much subtle incense.

A thought of vexation crossed her mind, as Mr. Watkyn came in at the gate, that she had not changed her frock as usual. Some kind of perverse obstinacy had caused her not to do it, because she knew that he would be there that evening, and that Mr. Vavasour would not. She walked out to the rustic porch awaiting his approach, and she grew more vexed still as she saw his keen, honest gray eyes scanning the untidy dress in mute surprise.

"Good evening, Alison."

"Good evening," she replied, meeting his offered hand. "You are come early."

"I must leave early. I have but a few minutes to give you."

"It was scarcely necessary to come at all, was it?"

"I knew you would be expecting me. But I will come to-morrow, Alison, about this hour. I want to have some conversation with you, and——"

"To lecture me, pray?"

"No; that is over. However, I will not enter upon it now. My uncle came in this afternoon from Barcester, and as he leaves us again early to-morrow, I must not be away long this evening.'

"Your father is at home, I suppose?"

"Oh, yes."

"You were not here yesterday evening?"

"I staid away purposely. Would you have cared to see me had I come?"

"I can't say whether I should or not. You have not been very pleasant with me of late, Tom."

"Not as I once was, perhaps. How can I be? But I do not think I have made myself unpleasant."

"We hardly get a laugh from you. You have grown graver than a judge."

"Have I not had cause?"

"Cause!" she lightly repeated. "What cause?"

"Alison, this pretence of indifference does not become you. I say that I do not care to enter upon matters now. If I did I might recall the doings of only the last two days to your memory, and ask you whether they have or have not held cause."

"Well?"

"Take Sunday. In the morning you scarcely looked at me as we came out of church; in the afternoon, when I would have joined you and walked home with you, you threw me over with supreme scorn and went away side by side with Vavasour. And in the evening you were pacing the meadows with him."

"It was no harm. He was not eating me."

"Take yesterday," continued Mr. Watkyn, his face, his gentle voice full of the deepest pain. "He had holidays it must be supposed, from his studies, and he and you were roaming about together nearly the whole of the livelong day."

"And he came in and took a cup of tea with me and my mother afterward," answered Alison, with saucy, laughing insolence. "Mamma thinks him charming."

"He is an idle, heartless——"

"Well, why do you stop?"

"I was going to say—vagabond. And in one sense he is."

"He comes of a race who can afford to be idle. He does not have to till the ground by the sweat of his brow. He was born with his bread and cheese provided for him."

"With a silver spoon in his mouth," added Mr. Watkyn, affecting a lightness he did not feel, for her contemptuous tone tried him. "Well, good evening, Alison."

"Oh, good evening, if you are going."

He stood looking at her, and their eyes met. Alison caught the shadow of pain in his, and in her own there arose a remorseful pity; she had the grace to feel ashamed of herself. Her lips broke into a tender smile, a pink flush shown in her dimpled cheeks.

"You are very silly, Thomas."

"Am I?" he returned, holding her hand lovingly in his. "Fare you well until to-morrow evening, my dearest."

"There! Your dearest! And just now you were ready to call me hard names."

"Until to-morrow," he repeated with a smile, as he quited her.

Alison got a perfumed note the next morning from Mr. Vavasour; gilt-edged paper, crest on the seal. It told her that he was to be so "gloriously busy" that day he feared he should not have time to call at the cottage; but would she meet him in the willow walk at dusk. And it ended: "Your faithful Reginald Vavasour."

The vain expectations of Miss Alison Reece bubbled up aloft; her face and heart were alike in a glow. "Your faithful Reginald Vavasour!" she repeated to herself. "It must mean that he intends to be faithful to me for life. And what a grand, beautiful name Reginald Vavasour is! Compare it with the mean old common-place one—Tom Watkyn!"

Tea was over, and Alison, all in readiness for the interview with Mr. Watkyn, was steeling her heart against it and against him who was coming to hold it with her. She had changed her frock today, and wore a fresh, bright-colored muslin, blue ribbons at the neck and wrists, and a blue knot in her hair.

She waited impatiently; she wanted the interview over and done with, that she might be off to keep that other with Mr. Vavasour. But Thomas was late.

Pacing the garden path in the rays of the fading sun, she stood looking over the little iron entrance gate, her blue eyes roaming hither and thither in search of one whom she could not yet see. Unconsciously she broke out into the verse of a homely song:

Oh dear, what can the matter be,
Dear, dear, what can the matter be,
Oh, dear, what can the matter be,
Johnny's so long at the fair!
He promised to buy me a bunch of sweet posies.
A bunch of green mosses, a bunch of sweet roses.
He promised to bring me a knot of blue ribbons
To tie up my bonnie brown hair.

The hum of the last words was dying away on the air when the well-know form of Thomas Watkyn came into view. He wore his usual dark-blue evening frock-coat and quiet waistcoat; he dressed well always when his day's work was over, but not in the fashionable attire of fashionable Mr. Vavasour.

"Good evening, Alison," he said, as he reached the gate. "What a lovely evening it is!"

Removing his hat, he gazed up at the sapphire sky, action and countenance alike full of reverence; and Alison, who had not been taking any particular notice before, looked around her, her face softening at the splendor of nature's glory.

"What a glorious sunset!" he continued, his voice taking a hushed tone. "Glorious, glorious!"

"How solemnly you speak, Thomas!"

"I am feeling solemn, I have been feeling so ever since I came out, but I don't know why, unless it is that heavenly scene that makes me so."

"It is very grand," she said, fixing her eyes on the bank of golden clouda in the western sky, where the sun wos just slipping down behind the purple hill tops in the distance, like a ball of ruby flame. Tiny bits of foam-like clouds flecked the limpid blue of the heavens, a warm golded glow glided the earth, freshened and vivified with a past shower. The musical twitter of birds going to their rest filled the woodlands, and, as Alison looked, a strage feeling of awe stole into her heart, for the glory that lay around seemed more than earthly.

"There are moments," he said, in a dreamy manner, "when I fancy these sunsets must be given to us as a faint reflex—though I suppose that's the wrong word—of what we shall find in heaven; given to us by God to turn our thoughts and hopes toward it. Oh, Alison! it is more than beautiful!"

The ruby flame was changing to a soft and brilliant rose color, inexpressibly lovely. It was indeed a rather remarkable sunset, one not often vouchsafed to the human eye.

"You make quiet sure of going to heaven, Tom!" she exclaimed in a flippant tone, for she wanted to ward off all serious conversation, lest he should begin to lecture.

Thomas Watkyn turned his eyes upon her, surprise, if not reproof in their depths, "I hope I am," he answered, "under God."

"Young people do not often think of these things."

"The young die as well as the old, child; remember that."

"Won't you come in, Thomas?" she asked, in a softened voice, as they presently strolled up the path, and he halted in the porch.

"Not this evening, Alison, What I have to say I will say here."

Alison flushed to the roots of her wavy hair, and moved a step or two away from him.

"Look!" she cried, pointing to the blazing western sky, "that bank of golden clouds is changing to crimson now."

He went forward, for he had already sat down, and looked again at the gorgeous panorama.

"Yes, it is, as I say, a glorious sunset. We may never see another like it on this side of eternity," he added, dreamily, seeming to lose himself in solemn thoughts.

Alison laughed—her little musical laugh that had often set his pulses beating wildly. "You are always looking at the dark side of things, Tom. I hope we shall yet watch many a sunset together.

"Do you really, Alison?"

"Why, of course we must see the sunset if we live," she returned, in a hard, matter-of-fact tone. "As we are neighbors we may likely see some of them in company."

"That was all, was it? Sit down Alison."

"I prefer to stand."

Nevertheless, Mr. Watkyn drew her somewhat peremptorily to his side and made her sit down on the bench. "What I want to say to you, Alison, is about young Vavasour."

"Oh, indeed!" she retorted.

"I do not like to see you make yourself a simpleton with that man; I will not see it; for, if you continue to do it, I shall say farewell to you and not trouble this side of our grounds again."

Alison's face turned white; a habit it had when she was startled or very angry; and the remaining softness faded out of her heart, just as the golden glow was beginning to fade out of the western sky.

"Simpleton do you call me! Thank you."

"It is nothing else," he returned. "A short while, and this man will be leaving the place forever—leaving you. You will feel vexed then, Alison, at having made your intimacy with him so conspicuous."

"He will not be leaving," she retorted, "When he does leave it will only be to come back again."

Her companion shook his head. "No, that is not likely. Yesterday Mr. Tarbey called at the farm; in talking with my father he mentioned incidentally that young Vavasour was only to be with him this one term. The fellow may not have anything especially bad in him; I should not wish to imply that; but he is idle and heartless, and, in pretending to make love to you, Alison, he is but amusing himself and fooling you."

"How dare you say he is making love to me!"

"I say he is pretending to do it. Alison, you must know it to be so—if you would but speak the candid truth."

"Very well, then? Pray what if he is?"

"Only this. That you can not continue to listen to him and keep me in your train. It must be one or the other of us, Alison, from this night. You must choose between us."

"Then I choose him," she said, wrathfully rising.

"Do you mean it?" asked Mr. Watkyn, rising in his turn.

The girl did not answer. He chest was heaving with agitation; Thomas Watkyn's gray eyes took a tender light as they gazed at the pretty, changing, uncertain face.

"Alison," he said, and his voice was wonderfully considerate. "I have known you from childhood; I have loved you all your life. Twelve months ago there arose an understanding between us that you would be my wife; until recently I never supposed that you could have any other thought. But you have filled my breast with cruel fears; tortured it, my dear, and I can not bear them longer. You must be to me what you used to be, or give me up."

Alison's eyes grew sullen. Why could not this Tom Watkyn let her alone? She did not altogether want to break with him. Whet harm was she doing in talking to Reginald Vavasour? Reginald was ten times the gentleman that he was?—and his voice had a sweet, soft lisp!—and he wore a diamond ring on his white hand!

"Oh, my dear—my best and dearest—give up this folly! Let things be with us as they used to be! Don't you care for me?"

"No," the replied to him in her cross and contrary spirit, conscious all the while of a latent wish that Mr. Vavasour had been buried in the sea before coming to disturb the peace. "No!"

"Then you decline to marry me, Alison? You have not loved me as I love you!"

The sad, passionate fervor nearly scared her breath away; the heartfelt sorrow, all too plain, touched her with a qualm. But she was in an obstinate mood.

"Mr. Vavasour does not hurt you. I wonder you should concern yourself with him!"

"No trifling," sternly spoke Thomas Watkyn. "I tell you it must be him or me."

She would not answer.

"Will you give him up, Alison, from this night?" he pleaded.

"No." What inward spirit of evil prompted her to speak that short, sullen word, Alison never knew. But it was spoken.

"Very well."

For long afterward the pain and pathos in those two short words haunted her like a wail from the grave. Thomas stood before her, calm and self-possessed.

"I will never trouble you again, Alison," he said quietly. "Will you kiss me once—ere we say farewell forever?"

She felt awed at the sternness, the reality that was stealing upon their interview, and trembled at the thought of leaving him. But she did not believe it would come to that in the end, and she was too proud and wilful to take back her answer unsolicited.

With a playful air, half saucy, half defiant, she shyly held up her red lips, while he kissed her with a long, lingering kiss, such as we give the dead.

"Good-bye," he said huskily. He strode away leaving her standing in the glow of the sunset, a wild, scared look on her young face.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Island of Lepers.

At the end of a week's voyaging we stood under a beautiful dawn, gazing upon an island, the first land seen since we left San Francisco. It rose from a sea which the rosy east and the blue sky had painted to the tint and lustre of the interior of a shell. The high hills of the island are graceful in shape, and delicately shaded. But we give it a wide berth. No ship stops there, for it is Molokai, island of lepers. There nearly a thousand poor creatures, separated from the congregation of their kind, carry about their living loathsomeness amid the tropic glories. This is the one island of the world "where every prospect pleases and only man is vile. It is a pretty general belief in this region of the world that Molokai, with its human horrors, is a product of what is conventionally called civilization. The fate of Capt. Cook is so significant that at an earlier period it might have been thought a myth. When he discovered these islands he was received as a long-expected god; soon after he was killed. Had it been realized by the islanders what deadly taint was to be left in their blood by that crew, not one of them would have escaped the fate of their leader, whom the anger and injustice of his subordinates changed from a god to an enemy. The leprosy is the serpent in all this Hawaiian paradise, and it was unknown before the advent of civilization.

Although the reason why Capt. Cook was killed is not stated, I believe, in English books, nor alluded to on his monument in Hawii, there is good reason for believing the statement made by a native converted, Obookiah, in 1811: "Capt. Cook, he came to Owhyhee in a ship, and had a great many sailor. One day the sailor tie a boat to the share with a rope, and in the night the wind and the wave come and broke the rope. Then the sailor come and say Owhyhee steal the boat, and they didn't—the wind and the wave carried him away. The sailor got mad, and Owhyhee men got mad; wouldn't give sailor no log, no cocoanut, no banana, no wood. Then sailor go ashore and fined no wood, and so he get an old wood god, take him on board ship and burn him in caboose. Owhyhee men get mad because the sailor burn up the old wood god. Then sailor began to fire bullets on Owhyhee men, who hold up blankets to keep off the bullets, and then boards, but they did no good. Then Capt. Cook heard the noise and came running down to see what was the matter. Then one man say you kill Capt. Cook, but he 'fraid; then a man say I will, and he came behind him and kill with a spear. They cut him in pieces and carried him up into the mountains and burnt him. They 'fraid his soul live and go back to King George and tell him Owhyhee men kill Capt. Cook, and so they burnt up soul and body together." This was taken down from the old native's lips, he saying, "my grandfather told my father, and my father tell me".—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

Hot Water for Inflamed Mucous Surfaces.

Dr. George R. Shepherd, Hartford, Conn., says in the Medical Record:—I have used hot water as a gargle for the past six or eight years, having been led to do so from seeing its beneficial effects in gynecology. In acute pharyngitis and tonsillitis, if properly used at the commencement of the attack, it constitutes one of our most effective remedies, being frequently promptly curative. If used late in the disease or in chronic cases, it is always beneficial, though perhaps not so immediately curative. To be of service it should be used in considerable quantity (a half pint or pint) at a time, and just as hot as the throat will tolerate. I have seen many cases of acute disease thus aborted and can commend the method with great confidence. I believe it may be taken as an established fact, that in the treatment of inflammations generally, and those of the mucous membrances in particular, moist heat is of service, and in most cases hot water is preferable to steam. All are familiar with its use in ophthalmia and conjunctivitis, as also in inflammation of the external and middle ear, and I feel confident that those who employ it for that most annoying of all slight troubles to proscribe for, viz., cold in the head, or acute coryza, will seldom think of using the irritating drug mentioned in the books nor of inducing complete anæsthesia with chloroform in preference to the hot water douche.

The Childhood of a Poet.

The wind that goes blowing where it ...oth. once, in the early beginning of ...s century, came sweeping through the ...rden of this old Lincolnshire rectory, ... as the wind blew, a sturdy child of ...e years old with shining locks stood ...ing his arms upon the blast and lett... himself be blowing along, and as he ...elled on he made his first line of ...ry and said, "I hear a voice that's ...king in the wind," and he tossed his ..., and the blast whirled on, sweeping ... the great abyss of winds. One might ...ps still trace in the noble familiar ... of our Poet Laureate the features of ... child, one of many deep-eyed sons ... daughters born in the quiet rectory ...ng the elm-trees.

...lfred Tennyson was born on the 6th August, 1809. He has heard many ... many a voice calling to him since the ... when he listened to the wind as he ...ed alone in his father's garden, or ...d the other children at their games ...busts. They were a noble little clan ...ers and of knights, coming of a ...ghty race, with castles to defend, with ... tournaments to fight. Somersby ... far away from the world, so be...ound in its echoes (which must come ... softened through all manner of ... and tranquil things, and as it were ...ed into pastoral silence), that though ...ghty part of the century was stirring ... the clang of legions, few of its rumors ... to have reached the children. They ... heard at the time of the battle of ...loo. They grew up together play... their own games, living their own ...rand where is such life to be found as ... a happy, eager family of boys and ... before Doubt, the steps of Time, the ...ks of Chance, the blows of Death, ... come to shake their creed!

Those handsome children had beyond ... children that wondrous toy at their ...mand which some people call imagi...on. The boys played great games ... Arthur's knights; they were champ... and warriors defending a stone heap, ...again they would set up opposing ...ps with a king in the midst of each. ... king was a willow wand stuck into ... ground, with an outer circle of im...ds to defend him of firmer, stiffer ... Then each party would come ... stones, hurling at each other's king, ... trying to overthrow him. Perhaps ... day wore on they became roman..., leaving the jousts deserted. When ...ner-time came, and they all sat round ... table, each in turn put a chapter of ...istory underneath the potato bowl—... endless histories, chapter after chap... diffuse, absorbing, unending, as are ... stories of real life which each sunrise ... on a new part; some of these ro...es were in letters, like Clarissa Har...

... Alfred used to tell a story which ...ed for months, and which was called, "The Old Hosse."

Alfred's first verses, so I once heard ... say, were written upon a slate which ... brother Charles put into his hand one ...day at Louth, when all the elders of ... party were going into church, and ... child was left alone. Charles gave ... subject the flowers in the garden ...and when he came back from church ... Alfred brought the slate to his ... other all covered with written lines of ...ick verse. They were made on the ...els of Thompson's Seasons, the only ... he had ever read. One can picture ...self to one's self, the flowers in the ...den, the verses, the little poet with ...ting eyes, and the young brother scan... the lines. "Yes, you can write," ... Charles, and he gave Alfred back the ...e.

I have also heard another story of his ...andfather, later on, asking him to write ... elegy on his grandmother, who had re...ntly died, and when it was written, ...tting ten shillings into his hands and ...ying, "There, that is the first money ... have ever earned by your poetry, and ...ke my word for it, it will be the last."

Mrs. Thackeray-Ritchie, in Harper's ...gazine for December.

CABIN LACONICS.

BY BRUDDER ROMULUS.

De man am mighty smaht wid figgers ... kin git de right answer when he sets ... wn to add up his own sins.

De same win' dat blows out de taller ...p, kin'les de burnin' cabin.

Heaps ob people b'lieve de sun rises in ... wes' jes' 'kase dey am too lazy to git ...p in de mawnin' in time to fin' out for ...nselves.

De thief am a heap bigger rascal when ... happens to git inter yo' own chicken-...s'.

Ef yo' dun go 'long fru' life widout ...akin' new frien's, you am apt to hab a ...ighty lonsesome time ob it when de ole ...es am turned inter de new pastur' lot.

Ef yo' happen to be a gen'lum, nebber ... inter an argyment wid de common ...fer 'bout de muddy side ob life; de ...is am all ergin' yo' 'kase he am right at ... wile yo' am only vis'tin'.

De chap dat knows jes' how menny ...ies der am in his buddy, an' how well ... am fitted togedder, trabbels up hill all ...ay when he sets out to be an atheis.'

De minnits dat we lose am berry ap' to ...dder us 'bout gittin' a good grip on de ...w minnits dat keep a cummin'; it am ...e dead leabs dat kiber up de path fru' de ... woods.—Life.

The Barber's.—Never say dye.

The Pawnbroker's.—Never too late to lend.

The man who is fond of his ante
And dotes upon flushes and straights,
Most usually visits his uncle
If not smiled upon by the Fates.—Life.

FARMER'S CORNER.

Winter Feeding of Fowl.

The health of fowl, especially in cold weather, depends greatly on the regularity and frequency of feeding. As corn is the staple grain, it should ke kept within reach of the fowl so that they may help themselves at pleasure and thus they will regulate the quantity taken at one time as suits their convenience and comfort. Filling the crop is injurious at all times, and particularly so in severe weather. A large fowl, when stinted, and seeing corn but twice, and often but once in a day, will fill the crop to repletion, taking in a half pint or more at a feed. This chills the fowl, and if inclined to be tender, brings on indigestion, which is difficult to manage at that season. If fed in this manner, where there are many fowl and the quantity insufficient, the master fowl take the whole at the expense of the others.

I have found that the better way to feed fowl in cold weather, more especially laying hens, is to keep corn by them the whole time. I put in troughs at the side of the building. In this manner they will have an equal chance, and will fill up the crops at night. If it is not all digested by morning the fowl is not strong or in perfect health. My rule for feeding laying hens in cold weather is sometimes varied, but I generally endeavor to give a soft, warm feed in the morning. I sometimes mix chopped onions with it, but as a rule I give them separately. This vegetable is an excellent antidote for disease, and the fowl become extravagantly fond of it. They will eat onions at any time of the year and at large or in confinement. In making the mush I use unbolted corn meal scalded with boiling water, with sufficient grease or drippings to make the whole palatable. The greasy matter softens the meal and couses it to become digestible. The food should not be so soft as to be mushy or sloppy, neither should it be so stiff as to choke the fowl when swallowing it, but just thick enough to stand up and keep in shape.

I am particular as to the manner and matter of the feed of my fowl at all times, and especially so in cold weather when they yield the larger profit in eggs. My aim in keeping fowls is eggs alone, therefore it becomes necessary to be careful concerning the feeding. The health depends upon it, also the profit. Regularity is important with stock as well as all farm stock. Habits once formed are permanent, and fowl may be trained to suit the needs and ends of the keeper if persevered with. But the keeper must be always regular, for the fowl become impatient of delay and know their regular periods. It is as easy to raise eggs in cold weather as in warm, and far more profitable, if the keeper is not afraid of trouble and constant care.

The fowl must be attended to, and it is no small matter where the flocks are large to keep a steady supply of water when the weather is so severe that it freezes in a few hours. They must also have warm shelter, comfortable roosts, and ground floor for scratching. Laying hens are active, and their activity must be promoted. As soon as the old fowl are through the annual moult, which should occur before going into winter quarters, they should be supplied with egg-producing food. The vegetables should be fed separately. I often give some at the time of giving other food, and the fowl mix as suit their appetites. Whole corn is the main reliance, and is always at hand. The other feeds are interspersed and varied from time to time, always observing; the regular period with some kind of food that is palatable.

Agricultural Notes.

This is a proper time of the year in which to gather and sow many kinds of forest-tree seeds. Beech nuts, acorns, walnuts, hickory nuts, etc., are now prime for planting.

The climate of Oregon and Washington Territory is said to be especially adapted to hop growing. The success of the hop yards on the Pacific coast has induced greatly increased planting, which will have its effect on prices another year.

There is probably less diversity in the food of hogs than in the food of any other stock. The great bulk of the pork fattened in this country is made on corn, though enough other grain should be given to secure variety and make the animal eat more heartily.

Brewers say that an unusual amount of malt was kept over from last year. This accounts for the dulness of the barley market up till now. The new barley is generally inferior to last year's crop, being largely stained by the wet weather which prevailed at harvest.

John J. Thomas says that seeds should not be covered a depth of more than five times their diameter. Fine seeds should be covered with soil made proportionately fine. The general practice is to cover too deeply. Seeding with the drill increases this tendency but has the advantage of securing greater uniformity of depth.

There is likely to be a revival of the interest in cooking food for stock, which prevailed some years ago. At that time the advantage was found to be decided, but so also was the cost, and after a brief trial the experiment was abandoned. Its revival now is a sign that the important staple stock food, corn, is a short crop.

It is a good plan for every grower of fruit to put his name on packages as made ready for market. It will operate as a check on dishonesty, and if the fruit is put up as it should bee the grower will, in a few years, make a reputation that will bring ready sales and good prices. Honesty pays in fruit growing as in everything else.

Some growers of potatoes throw out all the little ones as more trouble to take care of than their value. They are now rarely used for seed, as it has been learned by dear experience that many small potatoes are unreliable. Still if not too hurried these small potatoes are worth saving to feed to cows in winter, in connection, of course, with other food.

In some places where apples this year are scarce, and fruit evaporators are plentiful, farmers are using the dryers to save their corn A very moderate heat is all that is needed, and with this immature corn is very quickly dried, sufficiently to allow of its being put in cribs. Fire drying of late corn, especially of the sweet varieties, is nearly always advisable for that intended to be saved for seed.

Irregular feeding of stock produces inferior meat. If the animal is fed to satiety one day and starved the next, it will not produce a streak of fat and a streak of lean, as the Irishman hoped to do with his pig. Under such feeding fat is accumulated on the inside, where it can be quickly absorbed when the starvation time comes. Food given irregularly injures digestion, and does not effect nearly so much good as it should.

The largely increased use of potatoes suggests the idea that they are one of the most important staples. They are, in fact, sixth in the list, corn, wheat, hay, cotton, and oats, each in their order exceeding the tuberous crop. By the census of 1880 potatoes were valued at $73,000,000, while wheat was valued at $500,000,000, and corn $600,000,000, in round numbers. The comparative smallness of the potato crop is accounted for by the fact that through the south our northern potatoes are but little used, and in 1880 they were used more sparingly in many places through the north than they are now.

The milk of cows at this season is always richer than during the first flush from eating green grass in the spring. One reason is that there is less of it. As cows advance towards the time to bring forth their young there is more cream proportionately in their milk from the fact that the albuminoids are retained to build up the fœtus. It is, however, not good policy to milk ordinary cows nearer than within three or four weeks of calving. The little that is gained within the last six weeks of milking does not pay. The calf is poorer for it, and the cow, unless fed unnaturally high, is not so good for the coming months, when she should be at her best.

Luther and Numismatics.

Mr. Weil, member of the Numismatic society of Berlin, says with reference to the numismatic knowledge at the time of the reformation:—"Luther had greatly at heart to render the names of precious stones, animals, etc., in good German, as may be gathered from his questions, directed to the learned Spalatin, court chaplain and privy council or of the Elector Frederic the Wise; Luther also appeals often to the former for explanations of Roman coins. We learn that few antique coins existed at that period at Wittenberg among the learned. They had only a few Greek and some imperial Roman ones. Luther, however, refrained from giving the value of these coins in his translation of the Bible, and calls them simply groats, mites, etc., in order to remain clear and intelligible."

An Electric Railway.

The longest electric railway in the world is that between Portrush and the Giant's Causeway in Ireland, a distance of six miles. Its cost was $225,000. The force to work it is generated by a waterfall in the Rush river, which has a head of 24 ft., and is equal to about 90 horse power. There is no doubt as to the success of this venture, as the power costs nothing. This road is a tramway, but the other electric railways, in Berlin and elsewhere, are elevated roads. A New York inventor is about to introduce an electrical engine of two horse power for propelling cabs and carts through streets, and yachts and other small boats through water. Electrical machines take very little room, make no noise, require no coal, and no doubt will at some time in the future supersede horseflesh in propelling vehicles of all kinds through the streets of the cities and over country roads.

Cheap Paper.

Although paper has now hundreds of uses unknown a few years back, it is steadily getting cheaper. The recent reduction in the price of the New York City daily papers from four to two cents is largely due to the cheapness of the materials which go to make them. Wood and other material is now largely used in its manufacture, the supply of rags and cotton waste being not only inadequate but too costly. The Japanese have taught us various uses to which paper may be put. We can construct houses of it; also every article of furniture and the domestic utensils, including the pots and kettles used for boiling water. The best car wheels are now made of paper.

To disinfect a room, place an ordinary house shovel over the fire until it become thoroughly hot (but not red hot); then take it to the centre of the room and pour on the shovel an ounce of No. 4 or No. 5 carbolic; lean the shovel so that no fluid can fall to the floor. and the carbolic will be readily given off in vapor sufficient to fill an ordinary room. This will disinfect the air of the room, and as genuine carbolic (more properly called phenol or phenylic alcohol) is not a mineral corrosive acid, the vapor will in no way injure pictures. metals, or fabrics.

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,

Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

The use of Pills, Salts, Castor Oil, &c., and other nauseous, griping Cathartics is unnecessary, as a pleasant substitute is found in Dr. Carson's Bitters, which acts as a Cathartic without griping or nausea. All Druggists sell it. 50 cents a Bottle.

"The slugger, Sullivan, never goes armed," says a sporting journal. He doesn't need to.

1883.-ST. JOHN EXHIBITION.-1883

Leather Belting, Fire Engine Hose, &c. Four First Prizes and Two Diplomas. The highest of all Awards for Leather Belting, and Fire Engine Hose were accorded by the Judges at the St. John Centennial and Dominion Exhibition, to ROBIN & SADLER, Montreal, over all competitors.

FOR SALE.

Farm of about 115 acres, 10 miles from Toronto; brick house, outbuilding nearly new; good young orchard, just commencing to bear; about 16 acres timber. ROBERT JAMES, Jr., Newton Brook P. O., Ont.

WELLS' WINDOW SHADE CLASP.

(PATENTED 1875.)

Used for holding WINDOW BLIND SHADES without rollers, pins, or cords. Saves blinds, money and patience. Looks orderly and neat. Send for sample, 20 cents, agents' circulars 3c. Orders from the trade solicited. Agents wanted. TORONTO INDUSTRIAL WORKS CO., 96 Church street, Toronto.

BOOKS!

	Cents.
Ladies' Crochet Manual	20
Ladies' Work Box	20
Books of Pantomimes, etc., etc	30
Piano without a Master	60
Melodeon without a Master	60
Violin without a Master	60
Stammering and its Cure	30
Bashfulness Cured	20
House Painting Plainly Taught	30
Public School Dialogues	15
Dramatic Dialogues	15
Comic Dialogue	15
Primary School Dialogues	15
Young Men's Key to fortune	30
Taxidermist's Guide	25
Jolly Tit-Bits for Mirthful Mortals	25
Grammar Made Easy	20
How to Speak and Write	15
How to Pronounce Difficult Words	15
Slang and Vulgar Phrases	15
The Art of Ventriloquism	15
How to Live 100 Years	15
How to be an Orator	15
True Politeness	20
The Lover's Own Letter Writer	25
Manual of Punctuation	20
Art of Beautifying the Hair	30
Pocket Dictionary	35
Hand Book of Polite Conversation	20
Young's Book of 400 Secrets	50
Kendall's Treatise on the Horse	25
The American Horse Owner's Guide	25
Hunting, Trapping and Fishing Made Easy	25
Elocution Made Easy	20
Book of 500 Curious Puzzles	30
Art and Etiquette of Making Love	30
Personal Beauty	25
Dick's Quadrille Call Book	50
The Young Wife's Cook Book	25
Boxing without a Master	20
How to Write Shorthand	50
MacCabe's Art of Ventriloquism	25
Guide to Health and Long Life	15
Waltz Instructor	15
Bits of Humor	15
Wigwam and Cabin	15
Yankee Stories	15
Idle Hours with the Humorists	15
Sports and Pastimes of Various Nations	15
Stories of the Whale	15
History of the Horse	15
Book of Shipwrecks	15
Yankee Drolleries	15
Hunting the Elephant	15
Hunting in South Africa	15
The Pilgrim's Progress	25
Æsop's Fables	25
Farm Fireside Cook Book	25
Leisure Hour work for Ladies	20
Salt, Pepper and Mustard	20
Laughing Gas	20
Life in the Back Woods	20
Brudder Bones' Stump Speeches	30
Clog Dancing without a Master	20
Black Jokes for Blue Devils	25
Book-Keeping without a Master	50
The American Business Man	25
Day's Ready Reckoner	50
How to Amuse an Evening Party	30
Ready-Made Speeches	50
The Young Debater and Chairman's Assistant	30
The Amateur Painter	25
Common Complaints and how to Cure them	25
How to Write a Letter	25
How to Woo and Win	15
Singing Made Easy	25
The Little Flirt	10
The Comic Songster	25
Captain Jinks' Musical Album	25
Harp of Erin Songster	25
Pearls from the English Opera	25
Sparkling Gems of Song and Music	25

J. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

SEVERAL FIRST-CLASS IMPROVED FARMS FOR sale in the county of Essex; soil unsurpassed. Box 89, Leamington.

THE INDUSTRIAL UNION

Furnishes indemnity against loss of time by sickness or accident at comparatively low rates. For particulars enclose stamp to the secretary, Toronto, Ont.

AGENTS WANTED

$1.50.  $1.50.

281.

Solid Silver Brooch

MADE IN ANY NAME.

We advertise extensively and wish to ascertain the relative merits of different papers, as not 5 per cent. of our patrons refer to the paper in which they have seen our advertisement.

As the season is advancing when we make new contracts, we adopt the following plan, which we shall use as a guide in selecting papers in which to advertise for the coming year.

The public will readily understand the value of the information we get and why we can afford to pay liberally for it. We wish to impress upon our many thousands of patrons throughout the Dominion that this is a bona fide offer, and not a trade trick to sell goods.

The illustration at the head of this advertisement is a SOLID SILVER BROOCH, which we will furnish with ANY NAME DESIRED for $1.00 when accompanied by the annexed 50c. coupon. In no case will we sell the brooch at the price without this coupon. The brooch is elegant and beautifully finished, and is good value for twice the price.

We send by mail, prepaid, and guarantee satisfaction. The proprietors of this paper endorse the above statement and guarantee.

AUXILIARY COUPON
VALUE 50 CENTS.

CHAS. STARK,

52 CHURCH STREET, TORONTO.

Send for our 96-page Catalogue, containing over 600 illustrations of Firearms, Silverware, Watches, Jewellery, etc.

RHEUMATINE!

An Internal Remedy and a SURE CURE for all kinds of

RHEUMATIC COMPLAINTS!

If you are suffering from

Kidney Complaints

QUASSIA CUP.

Water poured into the cup is instantly impregnated with the Medical properties of the Wood, making the most convenient and the best remedy known for Headache, Heartburn, Sour and Distressed Stomach, General Debility, and every form of Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Constipation, Piles, Sick Headache, and every form of Liver and Kidney Complaint.

On rising in the morning drink pure water from the Quassia Cup, and it will be the means of REMOVING ANY FOUL TASTE FROM THE MOUTH, with which so many are troubled on awakening, and will also give you a keen appetite for breakfast. The Quassia Cup is invaluable for preventing any distressed feeling in the Stomach after eating, which causes languor and weakness suffered by so many on account of poorly digested food. By the use of the Cup, regularly, three or four times a day, Sick Headache is cured. For Biliousness no other remedy is so well adapted for self-treatment, as many of the preparations for a disordered liver contain mercury, while Quassia does not, and is always fresh, taken from the Cup in the prescribed way. It is foolish to take nauseous mixtures when a pure, fresh Tonic can be obtained so easily and cheaply. By toning the stomach and exciting the liver to perfect digestion, it enriches the blood and the blood thus strengthened gives vigor to the heart, life the nerves, power to the muscles, and tone to the whole system, after trying it only a few days the glow of health will be seen in your face. elasticity in your step and buoyant spirit in your whole expression.

	No. 1 Size.	No. 2 Size.	No. 3 Size.
Sample by mail	$ 35	$ 50	$ 75
1 doz. by express	2.00	3 00	4.00
1 gross "	15.00	24.00	36.00

J. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

Breech-Loading Shot-Gun!

For $3 90.

Our Breech-Loading Gun, having been extensively introduced in England and France, where they have given universal satisfaction; and wishing to introduce them into Canada, we have concluded to sell these weapons at a price which brings them within the reach of all. Our Breech Loader has a blue barrel, thoroughly tested, guaranteed perfectly safe and accurate, case hardened, handsome stock, and every part of it made of the very best material. Length of barrel 30 to 36 in., weight 6½ to 7 lbs. The improved patent breeech makes it far superior to, and less liable to get out of order than any other Breech-Loading Shot-Gun costing several times as much. We will send a gun securely boxed to any address in the United States or Canada on receipt of $3 90. The above offer is made to introduce this incomparable Gun in this country. If you do not wish a gun for your own use, you will have no trouble in disposing of it at a handsome profit. In selling them at $3.90 each, we feel sure that the gun going into a neighborhood will sell ten more. Beware of imitations. We guarantee goods to be exactly as represented, or money refunded; 5 per cent discount if three are ordered at one time.

JAMES LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

Robt. S. Rae.

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

THE BEST PLACE
TO GET
A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery,

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

Markdale monthly Cattle FAIR.

A regular Monthly Cattle Fair will be held in the Agricultural Grounds, Markdale, as follows :

—1883—

SATURDAY	.....	Nov. 3
Do.	.....	Dec. 8

MARKDALE
Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats !

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and deliivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23, 1882. 80-ly

J. W. FORD

Is giving splendid satisfaction in

CRISTING,

By the New Process at the

Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

J. G. IRVING,
MARKDALE,
Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

ALEX KAY

BooT & ShoE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises. Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and Positively cures Piles. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by A. Turner & Co

---

SEEING IS BELIEVING.

GENTLEMEN,—
If you want a first-class

Buggie or Wagon

call at

MCKENNA & MASON'S

CARRIAGE WORKS
MARKDALE.

They can supply you with anything from a

Lumber Wagon
up to
Extension Top Phæton.

To buy from them is o

SAVE MONEY!

They are both practical workmen, and employ none but

PRACTICAL WORKMEN

They guarantee their work Second to none for Lightness of Draught and Superiority of Finish.

They use nothing but First-class White Oak for Wagons, and thrice Extra Second Growth Hickory for light work.

The immense amount of work turned out of McKenna & Mason's shop is sufficien proof of the wide reputation they enjoy for doing good work.

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END
Poor cheap work we positively will not take.

Special attention given to Re-Trimming and Repainting all classes of Carriage Work.

Satisfaction guaranteed (or No Pay) in

HORSESHOEI NG

SHOP—On Mill Street opposite to Sproule's Hotel.

McKENNA & MASON.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Wilson Benson

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.
DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

WILSON BENSON.

July 6, 1882.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows :

GOING NTH.			GOING SOUTH
Read Down.			Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	TORONTO	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	CARDWELL JUNC.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	ORANGEVILLE...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	MOUNT FOREST..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	TEESWATER	5 00	2 45
11 50	8 20	FLESHERTON	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	MARKDALE,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	OWEN SOUND....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE, General Manager

MISCELLANEOUS

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate. It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

WONDERS NEVER CEASE.—We noticed lastweek a circumstance which occurred in Wisconsin where two females were married as man and wife, no family of course. The Thornbury Standard reports the marriage of William Johnston of Clarksburg to James Mullarkey of Glenelg on the 28th ult. we will expect the same results to follow.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

A GLEN HURON correspondent to the Collingwood Enterprise says. Mr. Plewes, with his characteristic dash and enterprise, has embarked in a new venture. It is actively engaged in buying up large quantities of barley for direct shipment to Pennsylvania. This is one of the brothers who purchased McFarland mill property recently in this place.

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.
From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure, Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

THE Toronto Daily World clubbed with the STANDARD the balance of this and all of next year for $3.50.

FREE OF CHARGE.
All persons suffering from Coughs, Colds Asthma, Bronchitis, Loss of Voice or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, are requested to call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, free of charge, which will convince them of its wonderful Merits and show what a regular dollar-size bottle will do. Call early.

"What would you do if you were me and I were you ?" tenderly enquired a young swell of his lady friend, as he escorted her home from church, "Well she said. "If I were you I would throw away that vile cigarette, cut up my cane for firewood, wear my watch chain underneath my coat, and stay at home nights and pray for brains" The talk was finished in silence, and it is persumed that for once in his life the young man thought hard.

DO NOT BE DECEIVED.
In these times of quack medicine advertisements everywhere, it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise and which really does as recommended. Electric Bitters we will do as recommended. They invariably cure Stomach and Liver Complaints, Diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary difficulties. We know whereof we speak, and can readily say, give them a trial. Sold at fifty cents a bottle, by A. Turner & Co.

JUST THE THING.—We have just received several thousand envelopes suitable for dunners circulars, &c., which we are prepared to furnish, with advertising cards neatly printed in the corner or blank, at prices which will astonish the natives. We have also replenished our stock of billheads, which had run low, by a choice assortment, comprising some new and convenient sizes not before introduced into this town, and which we are enabled to dispose of at remarkably low rates. Merchants and business men generally will find it profittable to give us a call when in want of printing of any kind.

A VEXED CLERGYMAN.
Even the patience of Job would become exhausted were he a preacher and endeavoring to interest his audience while they were keeping up an incessant coughing, making it impossible for him to be heard. Yet, how very easy can all this be avoided by simply using Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Trial Bottles given away at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store.

BAD OFF.—A young settler near Wapella, Man., after experiencing the miseries of a bachelor's life for a year or more, writes to a more fortunate friend in the east as follows:—You will be thinking that I am never going to wright to you again, but between housekeeping and cooking I never get time to write to anyone. Say old fellow, for heaven's sake get me a wife. Send her by rail, by mail or any other way she can come, and if she can't come I will go and fetch her. There is nothing in the guise of a woman within forty miles of me. Ask every young lady that comes into the shop if she will marry a man on sight, and if you strike one send me word. Get one that is white, or has been ; if she is not pretty white I will not be able to tell her from my bed clothes." Here is a chance for some one. His dispair has cured him of being over critical, and now any one will satisty him who is white.—O. S. Advertisor

MARKDALE
PLANING, SASH, DOOR AND FURNITURE
FACTORY.

Lumber Planed or Matched While Waiting.

Sash, Doors, and Mouldings always on hand or made to Order. All kinds of lumber, Lath and Shingles kept in stock. Furniture of all descriptions to be seen at our Warerooms. Lumber and cordwood will be taken in exchange for Furniture.

George Grant & Co.,
Proprietors.

WM. HOGG,
FLESHERTON STATION,

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods!

— IN —

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes, &c

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold very low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Station.

Nov. 1st, 1883.

—Good Work Guaranteed—
—AT—

Bulmers Photograph Gallery
FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we ared not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

New FALL Importations

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S
FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats, Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

The Markdale
Is issued every Thursday, at Street, Markdale
TERMS—$1 per year in advance not paid within three months
Professional and business space and under, per year, $
1 YR.
Whole column $50 00
Half column 27 00
Quarter column 15 00
Two inch space 8 00
Three inch space 10 00
Casual advertisements 8 cents insertion, 3 cents per line insertion, nonpareil measure
Editorial notices, or notices column 10 cents per line first each subsequents insertion.
Stray animals &c., advertisement $1, the advertisement not lines.

VOL. 4.--

JOB PRINTING
THE STANDARD office has cial attention to orders filled with dispatch.
C. W. RUTL
EDITOR AND PRO

SAMUEL WAR
WELL DIGGER AND orders promptly att dence—Snider's Hill, Owen

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R. Physician and Surgeon Graduate of University, Vic " " New Hon. Graduate, of the same " " Ayleth " " Opthalmic Member Coll. Physicians & S

J. P. MARSHAL
DENTIST
GRADUATE OF TORO of Dentistry, will Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st Tuesday of each month and a Hotel, Flesherton, the th third Wednesday in each m office of his profession.
January 9th, 1883.

Legal.
Frost & Fr
BARRISTERS, AND A Law, Solicitors in C ancers, &c., Owen Sound, Flesherton, Office open ev heretofore.
ALFRED FROST, J.
County Crown Attorne

J. MASSO
BARRISTER, MASTER in Chancery, Notary eer, &c.
A NUMBER OF FARMS
OFFICES—Owen Sound, Poulett St.; Branch office i McFarland's Store, on Fri every week.

Creasor & Mo
BARRIS...RS, SOLICI ances, &c. &c.
OFFICES in Owen Sound, over W. F. Wolf's Store a
MARKDA
Over W. J. McFarland's S and Fridsy of each week.
Funds to lend on rea
JOHN CREASOR, Q.C.
Markdale, March 15, 188

Alexander B
ISSUER of Marriage Li Life Insurance Agen in B. R. &c. Conveyanc Auctioneer for the County Merchants, and Land Sale tended to and charges mad
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880

Wm. Bro
ISSUER OF MARRIAG Commissioner in B. R Conveyancing in all its b attended to and carefully ex
N. B.—Money to Lend o security.

W. G. RICH
BUILDER, CONTRAC TECT.—Residence on dale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 188

JOHN N
MARKDA
GENER'L BLA

HORSE SH
A SPECIA

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 12. MARKDALE, ONT., NOV. 29. 1883. No. 168.

The Markdale Standard

Is issued evesy Thursday, at the office, Mill Street, Markdale.

TERMS—$1 per year in advance; $1.25 if not paid within three months.

Professional and business cards one inch space and under, per year, $4.

	1 YR.	6 MO.	3 MO.
Whole column	$50 00	$27 50	$15 00
Half column	27 00	15 00	10 00
Quarter column	15 00	10 00	6 00
Two inch space	7 00	4 00
Three inch space	10 00	5 00

Casual advertisements 8 cents per line first insertion, 3 cents per line each subsequent insertion, nonpareil measure.

Editorial notices, or notices in local column 10 cents per line first insertion, 5 cents each subsequent insertion.

Stray animals &c., advertised 3 weeks for $1, the advertisement not to exceed twelve lines.

JOB PRINTING.

THE STANDARD office has a splendid equipment of poster as well as fine job type. Special attention to orders by mail. Orders filled with dispatch.

C. W. RUTLEDGE
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O.
Physician and Surgeon, Priceville,
Graduate of University. Vict. College.
" " New York, and
Hon. Graduate, of the same,
" " Ayloth Medical Institute.
" " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y.
Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCES, &c. &c.
OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in
MARKDALE;
Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
☞ Funds to lend on reasonable terms.
JOHN CREASOR, Q. C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124-1y

JOHN NOBLE,
MARKDALE.
GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING
A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above then caber to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 150-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.

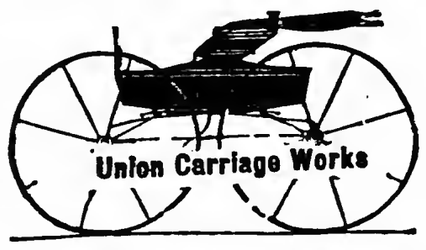
Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,
CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail



{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.

FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from
FIRST CLASS MATERIAL
In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs
will receive prompt attention.
All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time
consistent with good workmanship.
GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.
Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside
D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor
Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

William McLeod,
BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,
MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel.
159-3m

MISS. GREEN,
DRESS AND MANTLE ROOMS.
DUNLOP'S BUILDING MARKDALE.

All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.
Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

A. HILL,
Fashionable Tailor,
OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.
A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

IN THE GOODS AND CHATTELS
—OF—
JOHN KIRKPATRICK,
(DECEASED.)

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to Section 34, of Chapter 107, R. S. O. the creditors of John Kirkpatrick, late of the township of Euphrasia, County of Grey, deceased, who died on or about the 21st Oct. 1883, and all parties having claims upon his estate are, on or before the
FIFTEENTH DAY OF DECEMBER, 1883
to send by post, prepaid, to Richard Woods, Rocklyn P. O., in the County of Grey, one of the executors, of the personal estate and effects of deceased, their christian and surnames, addresses and description, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and nature of the securities (if any) held by them, and in default thereof the assets of the said deceased will be distributed, having regard only to the claims then received, or those of them which the executors then have notice.
JOS. MANAREY, RICH. WOODS. } Executors.
Dated this 5th day of November, 1883.

EUGENIA
Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made extensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.

GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND

Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.

LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.

Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted
691y. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

ROBT. ASKIN,
MARKDALE,
Has opened out a First-Class
UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,
And therefore has supplied a want long felt,
COFFINS,
CASKETS, SHROUDS,
and all
FUNERAL FURNISHINGS
supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse
for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—
PICTURE FRAMING
Done on short notice.
ROBT. ASKIN.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,
BANKERS,

Money Loaned
IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.
Allowed on Savings Deposits.

☞ Drafts issued and Collections made on points, at lowest rates.
W.M. LUCAS,
Manager.
September 23, 1880. 2-ly

Four People Murdered in Their Beds—Fifty Thousand Dollars Supposed to Have Been Carried off

JACKSON, Mich., Nov. 22.—Jacob Crouch, aged 70, the wealthiest farmer in the county, his daughter and her husband Henry White, and Moses Haley, visitor, were found dead in bed this morning, evidently murdered. All had been shot through the head behind the ear. It is supposed they had been chloroformed first, as no signs of a struggle appeared. Each victim was lying as if asleep and an odor of chloroform was noticeable when the bodies were discovered. Mrs. White was also shot through the left arm. No clue has yet been discovered although tracks around the house indicated that guard was placed while the murder was being perpetrated. Crouch was a wealthy farmer living seven miles southwest of Jackson, and owner of an extensive sheep ranche in Texas. It is rumored he had just received about $50,000 from Texas in payment of sales made on the ranche. Bankers here state no money was deposited by Crouch, and it is presumed that the money was in Crouch's hands. Polly was stopping at Couch's, having just come from Texas with a large amount of money for the purpose of buying blooded stock. The theory is that he (Polly) was followed from Texas by the murderer, or murderers, for the porpose of robbery. The house was thoroughly ransacked and everything of value carried away. A young girl, an adopted daughter of the Whites, and a negro aged 18 sleeping upstairs, say they heard no firing, although the negro says he heard a thumping noise about the middle of the night. He thought it was caused by the fierce wind that was blowing. Mrs white was expected to become a mother shortly. The murder caused intense excitement. Hundreds of people flocked to the scene. A young negro named Boles has been arrested and jailed to await the results of the coroner's inquest to-morrow. An empty cartridge box was found in his room Crouch was worth about two million dollars.

District Dashes.

Creemore is soon to be a Police Village.

Several stores in Shelburne are being lit with gas.

W. H. Flesher, of Flesherton, has moved to Parry Sound.

The Shelburne Free Press is materially improved recently.

Wm. Garbett, of Glenelg, sold his farm to Thos. Greenwood.

Mr. Yost, of Bentinck, lost a fine bred cow worth $200, recently.

H. J. Middaugh will likely be a candidate for mayor of Durham.

Samuel Russel, of Proton, has sold his farm to A. R. Henderson, of Toronto.

Edward Williams, of Proton, sold his farm to David Cowan, Esq., of Leeds County.

Alex. Cornett, Esq., of Leeds Co., has purchased David Ferrier's farm in Proton, for $3,000.

The grist mill at the Sauble, on the Garafraxa road, has been overhauled and is again running.

The Dundalk Herald of last week had a lengthy article on the position of township councillors, very sensible.

The North Grey teachers have decided that there are serious defects in both the authorized series of readers.

A joint stock company for the purpose of encouraging the locating of manufacturing and other desirable enterprises in Walkerton is talked of in that town.

$150,000 FIRE IN PORT PERRY.—On Saturday night a most disastrous fire occurred at Port Perry, destroying the best part of the village. Fortunately no lives were lost.

A farmer near London, named Frank Meyers, aged 35 years, left his wife with five small children and eloped with a girl of sixteen, they are supposed to have gone to San Francisco, he having purchased two tickets for that place.

The Steamer Eclipse Lost with Nearly all the Crew.

WIARTON, Ont., Nov. 26.—The steamer Eclipse left Algoma for Port Sarnia, was caught in a gale on Wednesday night off Pine Tree harbor and is supposed to be lost with nearly all hands, as a part of the wreck and three bodies came ashore with life preservers marked Eclipse. Papers found on one of their bodies identify it as that of Capt. Wm. Bush of Sarnia. John Drew was cut loose from the steamer alone on a scow, which drifted ashore at Pike bay, and he is the only known survivor. Another of the bodies is believed to be that of James Moore, the engineer, of Thesselon.

WIARTON Nov. 27.—John Drew, the only known survivor of the steamer Eclipse, states that he was asleep when cast adrift by the steamer. He awoke to find himself alone on Lake Huron and a fearful gale raging. He heard the steamer's whistle several times and then neither saw nor heard any more. At daylight he saw land about a mile distant, and about 4 p. m. the barge went ashore at Little Pike bay, and he jumped ashore and started for Wiarton, 16 miles distant.

He does not know the names of the crew, but they numbered seven. Some fishermen were out in a boat at Pine Tree harbor and saw three bodies floating near the shore with life preservers on marked "Str. Eclipse," and what appeared to be the upper works of a steamer. On one of the bodies was a watch and $22.25. On another there was a watch and $22, and on the third $8.92. Papers found identify one as Capt. Bush of the barge Etta, and J. Moore, engineer of of the Eclipse.

Osprey.

From a correspondent.

A cowardly attack was recently made on a young man named John Graham, near his fathers residence on the centre line Osprey, by three men, two of them living in Maxwell and the other in the neigborhood of Wareham. Mr. Graham is an able bodied young man and could easily manage any two of the cowards had he not been seized treacherously by one of them until he was almost kicked to death by another. Mr. Graham is recovering.

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

J. J. Middleton & Sons have opened a branch store in Torento.

Nomination day draws on the names of new candidates for municipal offices are becoming numerous, but nothing reliable can be ascertained, further than reported previously.

Our police trustees are threatened with a law suit for allowing an obstruction to remain on the sidewalk, in the shape of an enclosure around the front of a new building. One of our villagers ran against it one dark night and received some severe bruises, and it is said shook the building.

Our merchants unanimously vote "business dull," indeed it could scarcely be otherwise, considering the state of the roads. Apart from the influence of the season on them, they are out of repair, the council whose term of office is just expiring have been rather remiss in their duty as road commissioners. It is to be hoped that their successors will be more attentive to this matter.

Your correspondent acquainted you of the return of Mr. Higginbotham of Inistog, from Manitoba. He took up land while there, intending to remove their in the spring. He left his son in perfect health, but had only been home a week or so, when he received a telegram informing him of his son's death in the hospital in Winnipeg. The sad event has thrown a gloom over all who knew the young man, as he was highly respected.

If you wish to subscribe for the Globe, Mail, Star, Farmer's Advocate or Montreal Witness or renew your subscription for any of the above papers hand in your name and subscription to this office.

A BULL FIGHT.

Bulls Biting the Dust.—An Espada's Narrow Escape.

All the world, the sporting world of Havana, have been on the tiptoe of eager expectation for a week. For had not the famous cuadrilla (quartet) of fighters come over expressly from Spain to show the Habanaros how to fight the bulls? Bull fights they have here every year, but the native fighters are not of the elite of the arena. This particular fight should have taken place a week ago, but heaven interposed. The rains fell and converted the arena into a swamp. But Sunday last was bright and sunny, and in the afternoon a cool breeze came up to sift the heated atmosphere. The fight was to take place at four in the afternoon in the "Piaza de los Toros," at Regla, a small village to which you are ferried over from Havana in a boat resembling a baby New York ferryboat. The boat was thronged with an excited crowd of men of all ages and kinds. The Southern blood is hot and there was a babel of tongues. There was the hoarse animal cry through it all, and the desire of witnessing from a vantage ground of safety the glory of gore, the wild delight of torture and the risk to human life and limb.

IN THE ARENA.

"A la plaza, caballeros!" was the cry. "Gentlemen, to the arena!" We entered, and all your readers have read or heard of bull fights in a general way, I know. But as not one in a thousand has seen one I purpose describing briefly what I saw. The Regla arena can seat about six thousand persons. The price of entrance was from $3 (Spanish) to $2, with $10 for the boxes on the upper tiers. The tiers were packed with civilians, military and sailors, smoking talking, and uttering wild cries. Happily there were no ladies present. A rather rusty band was jarring out a medley of sound. The tiers of human beings made an animated circle surrounding an open ring, around which ran wooden barricades, with here and there a recess for a fighter, if close pressed by the bull. The president of the games entered, and was greeted by a shout of applause from the impatient throng. The sports were about to begin. He took his seat. A bugle sounded and the march of the fighters into the arena followed. The arena was of earth, hard and spring to the foot.

MARCH OF THE TOREROS.

An uproar rose among the spectators as two by two the picturesque cavalcade entered. Two by two they marched—the capaldores (cape bearers, with scarlet capes) banderilleros (dartmen with darts), picadores (the prickers on horseback, with lances partially blunted), matadores or espadas (swordsmen, whose duty it is to slay the bull at the end), the puntillero (with a dagger, his business being to give the finishing stroke, if necessary), and the mulieteros (muleteers, who drag off the carcass of the slain animal). Brave they look in their trappings of silver and gold; their short, black velvet jackets, with gaudy decorations; their jaunty Andalusian caps, with knotted hair queues hanging from under; their black velvet knee breeches and parti-colored hose displaying to advantage their shapely calves. A lithe, active set of men they were, notable rather for their agile bearing than for strength or weight. A light hand and light heels as well as a cool head are needed in a bull fight. In they marched to the braying of the rusty band, each pair in turn saluting the president. Sorry steeds were those of the picadores, and they were blindfolded, not to see the bull. It was a gallant show as far as it went. The company of gallant men who were to fight—not man to man as the gladiators of Rome fought, but a poor beast—separated, divested themselves of their gaudy cloaks, seized their weapons and scarfs to be used in the fight and awaited the onset.

THE BULL.

A shrill bugle sounded. It was the signal for the entry of the bull. Five thousand throats yelled themselves hoarse in a fever of excitement. A moment's pause and a sleek, blackcoated, powerful animal dashed and snorted into the very middle of the arena. A moment he stood there, as though dazed by the light, the crowd and the tumult of voices. Then, with lowered horns and angry eyes, he made a blind rush at the first bright object he saw. It was a red cloak trailled before him by one of the capidores, who lesped lightly aside. Another and another crossed him at every turn in bewildering succession. He makes a sudden side lunge and a capidor, neat of limb and trim of apparel, is down. The bull rushes at the prostrate man, but the capidor knows his business. He tosses a cloak to the animal, and paws it. In a moment the others draw near and draw the brute's attention off. Another swift turn and the bull gores the horse of a daring picador. Horse and man go over in a heap, and from the poor horse's flank runs a stream of blood. The capidores are swift to work with their cloaks and draw the animal off again.

The picador remounts and the blinded horse is driven in a canter around the arena to take his place again at another dangerous point. The bull and bistormetors are never at rest, and a succession of such events takes place faster than I can write them down. Another lunge and another horse and rider are overthrown, and the horns of the bull are bloody. The same tactics are resorted to to draw off the infuriated animal from the prostrate men and beast. The bull careers around the arena, the fighters leap over the barricades or hide themselves behind the

AN ESPADA'S DANGER.

The man who was first thrown was one of the espadas, whose office it is to kill the bull. He was young and handsome. I had seen him lounging in the cafes days before, the centre of an admiring crowd. He may have primed himself with drink, or he may have been over-ambitious and eager to distinguish himself. He felt the disgrace of his fall, for, under the circumstances, a disgrace it was. He approached the maddened animal as though it were a tame cast. In an instant the cat had tossed him. There was an awful still among the thousands there, for death was surely coming to a man. The more cautious fighters had scattered themselves over the arena, and the bull had the man at his mercy. Cloak and power of motion were gone. The beast lowered his head and dashed at the prostrate and helpled form. "He is dead," said my Spanish friess under his breath. I looked with all my eyes, as all present looked. The fellow turned a pale face to the animal and a palid smile flickered faintly over his countenance. He expected the death he had invited, and the smile said this, "If I must die I will at least die game." The bull rushed, his horns were within three inches of the man whom none could succor, when, by God's grace only, the animal made a sudden turn and sought other foes. "Fuera, alguera!" "Get out! go away!" shouted the people to the espada. They had had enough of him. But the man felt his danger and dishonor. One who enters an arena to kill a bull should not let himself be tossed twice within about five minutes. He nerved himself and redeemed himself by doing daring things, touching the bull on the forehead in full course and stepping aside. Then came the banderilleros, with their gayly trimmed darts. Their business is to entice the bull toward them, meet him in full course and plant their darts in his brawny neck. This was well and safely accomplished. The barbs pierced, the animal shook his head and tossed his horns in pain and anger, and rushed madly at anything or anybody. Again and again were a horse and rider overturned. Sometimes a mounted picador actually succeeded in frightening the bull off with the shake of his lance. Sometimes he saved his horse himself by a skilful swerve, but more often the bull's horns found the horse's flanks, and the blinded animal quivered with agony and fright. It was cruel sport.

THE DEATH.

When the bull had been badgered enough the espada came out, sword in one hand and in the other a red scarf to wave the bull on, that he might deal him the mortal blow. With uplifted sword he saluted the President. A stalwart, swarthy fellow, square shouldered and firm of limb, he was evidently a veteran at the business, though his years cannot have numbered over thirty. The others with their cloaks drew the bull this way and that toward the espada, who with fixed face and steady eye, and sword now uplifted, now veiled under the scarf, awaited his opportunity for the mortal stroke. At last they came face to face, the man and the bull. They eyed each other a few seconds. The bull pawed the earth and glared at the object before him. He had a fair foe at last who shrank not and moved not. The man stood fixed as fate, the sword low down, hidden by the scarf, and in his eye death. Face, body, arm were rigid with resolution. The bull seemed positively to consider and take in the situation. Another pawing of the earth, as if to feel the ground sure under his hoofs. Then there was a wild dash and a black, horned mass hurled itself at the man, who stood still as a statue. Something flashed in the air. The espada leaped aside. The bull stood transfixed, quivering with astonishment, feeling something in him he had never felt before. Just behind that left shoulder was the handle of a sword and two inches of the blade quivering out. The rest was buried in the body of the animal.

A moment of surprise and suffering—who can tell what that moment meant?—and, with the sword buried nearly to the hilt in him, the brave animal dashed again at his foes with apparently undiminished strength and spirit. The espada approached, and, by a deft movement, drew out the blade. The neck and flanks of the bull were streaming with blood and the sweat of agony was on him. A few more passes of the scarfs and the mortal foes faced each other as before. The bull seemed to recognize his enemy and again paused before rushing. He rushed. There was another gleam of something in the air. It was a merciful cruelty. One swift lunge and the keen blade must this time have cleft the heart. The huge beast fell at the espada's feet in a swift and mortal agony. He fell on his back in a death quiver, one leg shivering in the air. In a moment all was over. It was a clean, sure stroke; no surgeon could have given a better. The arena, open to heaven rang with the tumultuous plaudits. The victor saluted the President. The muleteers entered, and the dead carcass of the beast that had given such "brave sport" to thousands of Christians was dragged out ignominiously. I was sick of it. I did not go there for sport. I went to see this people.

A SICKENING SPECTACLE.

My Spanish friend prevailed on me to wait and see another. The process was much the same as I have described; but I cannot go over the loathsome details. The espada on this occasion was the young man whom I have described as coming so near his death in the first fight. I suppose he was somewhat unnerved, and he had reason to be. He simply butchered the animal to death—but no, a butcher is surer and swifter. I saw two strokes dealt. At the second the beast vomited quantities of blood in the middle of the arena. I had seen more than enough, and left the place, my companion with me. Outside I heard a shout, whether of derision or applause I cannot say. The bull was slain at last, and that at least was a comfort. There remained two to be slain. I heard afterward that a horse was fairly disembowelled before the eyes of the populace and a man badly injured. I looked in vain for the familiar, rueful Don Quixote face and figure of our friend, Mr. Bergh, riding on his benevolent Rosinante to stop the cruel combat. Of course I wished to see no man injured, but I confess that my personal sympathies were first with the blinded horse and secondly with the bull. I have seen my first and last of so revolting a spectacle, and I am happy to add that many Spaniards and Cubans to whom I have since had occasion to speak about the matter are wholly of my way of thinking. It is a rude relic of barbarism and paganism that must either die out speedily or ought to be killed out.

He Wanted to Know.

Dumley was making an evening call, and the nice little boy of the family had been allowed to remain up a little later than usual.

"Ma," he said, during a lull in the conversation, "can whiskey talk?"

"Certainly not," said ma. "What put that absurd notion in your head?"

"Well," he replied, "I heard you say to pa that whisky was telling on Mr. Dumley, and I wanted to know what it said."—Philadelphia Call.

The King and Queen of Denmark are to visit the Queen at Windsor Castle after a visit to the Prince and Princess of Wales.

ODDS AND ENDS.

From a hygienic aspect nickle is as harmless as iron. German silver requires to be well silvered to make it harmless.

He who is conscious of his ignorance, viewing it in the light of misfortune, is more wise than one who mistakes superficial polish for real knowledge.

To each of the families of eight of the Phœnix Park murderers there has just been paid the sum of £206, 3s. 9d., by an emissary of the Irish World.

A savant has discovered that man descended from the bear. Probably the bear was at the top of a hill; in that case the man showed a heap of good sense.

Last year England consumed, in addition to the eggs marketed by her own farmers and poultry-keepers, including the enormous supply from Ireland, no fewer than 810,- 868,080 foreign eggs or 2,250,000 per day.

One noticeable object in the hall at Crichel is the weighing-chair, and on the table beside it is a book in which the respective weights of all guests are recorded. The Prince of Wales is credited with nearly sixteen stone, and Lord Beaconsfield with twelve stone.

The immigrants that arrived at New York in 1882 were carried thither by 30 different navigation companies, which made in all 1,021 voyages, and carried, including cabin-passengers, 513,397 persons, making an average of about 500 passengers for each voyage.

General Withers, the Kentucky horse-breeder, says that the best stock follows the limestone rather than clay and sandstone formations. It forms a perpetual fertiliser for the land, and gives out a pasturage upon which is knit the bone and firm muscular tissue.

An old Dutch tavern-keeper, who had his third wife, thus expresses his views on matrimony—"Vell, you see, de first time I married for love, dat vas goot; then I married for beauty, dat vas goot, too, about as de first; dis time I married for money, and dis is petter as booth."

A French nobleman, on an official mission to China in 1859, wrote:—"I shall be believed when I say that the cowardice of the Chinese troops is one of those fables of which history is too often made up. The courage was equal on both sides; the Mongols had numbers, we had resources; we know how to conquer, they how to die."

In 1870, when the Post Office acquired the British telegraphic system, the daily number of local telegrams was between 400 and 500. The number now is nearly 6,000 per day. Including provincial as well as metropolitan, the numbers have increased from 12,000 per day, in 1870 to above 50,000 in the present year.

Third-class passenger receipts on the railways of the United Kingdom in 1882 rose from £15,000,000 to £16,000,000 sterling, an increase of more than 6 per cent. The third-class receipts are now more than double first and second put together, both first and second showing a decrease on the takings of 1881. This decrease was more marked in the first than in the second, being £51,000 in the first as against £21,000 in the second.

Farmers have long had a prejudice against the presence of barberry-bushes near growing corn-fields. They said the berries helped to bring about rust in the wheat. This prejudice was usually regarded by scientific men as a mere superstition. Now, however, it is known that the rust-fungus does actually live in one of its alternating generations in the leaves of the barberry. Its mother-cells exist in the form of little bright-colored bags, protruding from between the surface-cells of the barberry leaves.

The other day, on a certain railway, a man got into one of the carriages, and presently began talking to a fellow-passenger. After a time, he asked the gentleman whether he had heard the story about how a man travelled without a ticket. The gentleman said he had not; so the man asked him to lend him his ticket, that he might show him how it was done, and began fiddling about with it, but pretended that the story had suddenly slipped out of his head, but that he would be sure to remember it soon. After a time, the train got near London, and, as the man still could not remember the story, he returned the gentleman his ticket. This struck the gentleman as being very curious, and so he watched the man. When the man got to the barrier and was asked for his ticket, he said he had given it up; but the ticket-collector denied it, and, after a good deal of altercation, the man pulled some silver out of his pocket, and was about to pay for his fare, when he suddenly said—producing a small piece of ticket—that he could prove that he had given up his ticket, because he remembered playing with it in the train and tearing off a small piece, and that if the ticket-collector looked he would find a ticket with the piece torn off. On looking the ticket-collector found a ticket with a piece torn off, and, of course, immediately begged the man a thousand pardons.

The Hon. Billa Flint.

Life Senator of the Dominion Parliament, Belleville, Ontario, Canada, writes; "I tried St. Jacobs Oil for ague in my face and toothache. It acted like a charm. A few times rubbing with it took away all soreness and pain; far better than having them drawn at the age of seventy-seven."

Because a certain flower is sweet, it by no means follows that all flour is wheat.

Mrs. J. McPhee, Appin, writes:—During the last eight years I have used almost every medicine recommended for Biliousness, but found nothing equal to Carson's Bitters. If you suffer try it. Price 50 cents.

In the spring-time look out for floods and to-rents.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-st. West, Toronto, Canada.

"Till moons shall whacks and weigh no more."

To be permanently esteemed any article must have virtues so marked as to be plainly apparent. The good name of the Triangle Dyes is evidence of merit. They prove themselves always reliable. 10c.

LOST!

The Terrible Fate of a Small Body of Men and the Future Hanging Over Many Others.

The keeper of the Eddystone lighthouse recently discovered a bottle containing the following pathetic sentences, the last expressions of a small band of shipwrecked men:

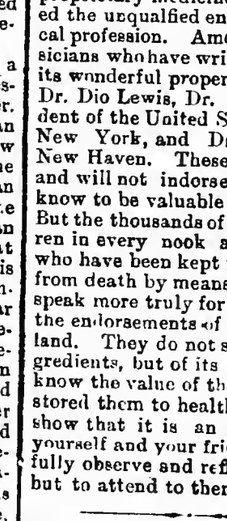
"We have been living on a raft for ten days and for more than half of the time without water. We have hoped against hope and now are ready and waiting for death. Anything is better than this agony. We cannot endure it more than a few hours longer. Yesterday we saw a vessel and thought we were safe but it passed on without seeing us. To-day we have abandoned hope. Such a death, away from friends and in such agony, is terrible. To look into the cannon's mouth requires bravery, but to face death coming slowly but surely needs only despair. There is no hope."

* * * * * *

The only difference between the experience of these men and thousands of others on land to-day is that the shipwrecked men realized their fate while the others do not. They are in just as certain danger but are wholly unconscious of it. They are aware that their heads pain them frequently; that their appetite is fickle; that they are losing flesh or possibly bloating; that their skin is often hot or feverish, alternating with distressing chills; that at times breathing is difficult; that the ambition is gone and despondency frequently occurs. People notice these things but think they are caused by some cold or indigestion, and hence give them no further thought. Anyone of the above symptoms recurring at intervals indicates a diseased condition of the kidneys which is certain to result in Bright's disease if permitted to go on unchecked. What the terrors of this terrible disease are can never be described, but it has carried off some of the finest men and most noble women America has ever produced. "About one-third its victims," says Dr. Roberts, the highest authority on the subject, "through neglect to take the disease promptly in hand on its first appearance, die of uremic poisoning (in convulsions or by diarrhœa). Many die from watery suffocation, from gangrenous erysipelas in the legs, thighs and gemtals, pneumonia, heart disease, apoplexy, intestinal ulcerations, paralysis, etc., all of which troubles are the result of Bright's disease."

Another high authority says: "Diabetes and Bright's disease of the kidneys always terminate in death if discovered too late, but yields readily to treatment if taken in time. Thousands of people who pass thick, yellow matter with brick dust sediment and complain of a slight backache, headache, dizziness, imperfect vision, cold back, hands and feet, general debility, etc., etc., are victims of this deadly disease (unknown to themselves) and when, at last, overcome by its exhausting influence they present themselves to their medical attendant he, nine times out of ten, will write out a prescription for malarial poison or, discovering their terrible condition inform them that they have come too late."

To permit the kidneys to rot away or to suffer limestone deposits to accumulate in the bladder is criminal carelessness, especially when it can be entirely avoided by care and the use of the proper means. For this purpose, however, there is but one known remedy and that is Warner's Safe Cure, better known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. It is true there are many preparations that claim to cure or relieve these troubles, but no remedy has ever been found that absolutely does this except the one above mentioned. It is, actually, the only proprietary medicine which has ever received the unqualfied endorsement of the medical profession. Among the number of physicians who have written at length regarding its wonderful properties, are the well-known Dr. Dio Lewis, Dr. Robert A. Gunn, president of the United States medical college of New York, and Dr. Frank Gallagher, of New Haven. These men are men of science and will not indorse anything they do not know to be valuable in the highest degree. But the thousands of men, women and children in every nook and corner of America, who have been kept from disease and saved from death by means of Warner's Safe Cure, speak more truly for its value than could all the endorsements of every physician in the land. They do not speak of its chemical ingredients, but of its healing power. They know the value of the remedy, for it has restored them to health. The above facts all show that it is an absolute duty you owe yourself and your friends to not only carefully observe and reflect upon these things, but to attend to them in time.



The cow boy was the original cow-catcher.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

If some people had an ear-rake, it would be a good thing for them.

A.P 153

THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY
FOR PAIN.
Relieves and cures
RHEUMATISM,
Neuralgia,
Sciatica, Lumbago,
BACKACHE,
HEADACHE, TOOTHACHE,
SORE THROAT,
QUINSY, SWELLINGS,
SPRAINS,
Soreness, Cuts, Bruises,
FROSTBITES,
BURNS, SCALDS,
And all other bodily aches and pains.
FIFTY CENTS A BOTTLE
Sold by all Druggists and Dealers. Directions in 11 languages.
The Charles A. Vogeler Co.
(Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.)
Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

FOR THE
Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.
THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

The use of Pills, Salts, Castor Oil, &c. and other nauseous, griping Cathartics is unnecessary, as a pleasant substitute is found in Dr. Carson's Bitters, which act as a Cathartic without griping or causing nausea. All druggists sell it. 50 cents a bottle.

A bad neighbor—a mule in the next lot.

They all tell the same story. Mr. W. Thompson, Jeweller, Delhi, suffered for years from Dyspepsia, got no relief until he used Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. He says "it was just the medicine I needed. It has cured me."

The book-worm will be a tomb when he dies.

Testimonial from Wm. Leggett Esq., Collector of Customs at Niagara Falls, Ont.

Oct. 22nd, 188[illegible].

MR. SUTHERLAND: Dear Sir.—My servant, Mary Bruce, who has been in my employ for several months, had been suffering for some time previous with Rheumatism, and was unfit to perform her duties when she came to my house. I advised her to use Rheumatine, which she consented to. I ordered one bottle, which did not make any apparent change, but after taking the second and third she commenced to improve. She continued to take the balance of six bottles, which has made a complete cure. She feels now as well as when she was only ten years of age. Not only has Rheumatine removed the Rheumatism, but otherwise improved her health. From what I know of her case, in addition to several others, I have great pleasure in recommending your Rheumatine to those afflicted in like manner.

Yours very truly,
WM. LEGGETT, Collector of Customs.

STOVE AND TIN BUSINESS FOR SALE AT RENFREW; rare chance; must be sold. Address, J.C. HYETT, Renfrew, Ont.

THE INDUSTRIAL UNION
Furnishes indemnity against loss of time by sickness or accident at comparatively low rates. For particulars enclose stamp to the secretary, Toronto, Ont.

AGENTS WANTED.
$1400 WILL BUY A BRICK Blacksmith Shop and Foundry 90x35 with cupulo; Frame 2 story Woodshop and Paint Rooms; Machine Shop with engine boiler, shafting and pulleys for iron and wood lathes; Circular and Upright Saws, Drills, &c. Good Frame Dwelling House, 2 wells, good yard, splendidly situated, in one of the most thriving incorporated villages on popular line of railway, and best agricultural district in Western Ont. Address X. Y. Z., care S. Frank Wilson, Prop. Auxillary Publishing Co., 33 & 35 Adelaide Street West, Toronto, Ont.

1883-St. John Exhibition-1883
Leather Belting, Fire Engine Hose, &c.
Four First Prizes and Two Diplomas. The highest of all Awards for Leather Belting and Fire Engine Hose were accorded by the Judges at the St. John Centennial and Dominion Exhibition, to ROBIN & SADLER, Montreal, over all competitors.

A FAIR OFFER.

If you will send us with this slip 25c. or 9 three-cent stamps, we will mail you, post-paid, a sample package containing 100 useful articles, which are required in every house, with instructions by which you can make from $2 to $4 per day. Suitable for both sexes. This is no humbug, as the samples are well worth the money, and may be returned if not satisfactory. Show this to your friends.

JAMES LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q.

ELM CITY
HARNESS OIL,
BASED ON NEATS FOOT OIL,
Is the finest harness dressing made. It softens and preserves the leather, and gives it a fine finish. Ask your saddler for it.
F. F. DALLEY & CO.,
HAMILTON, ONTARIO.
Sole Agents for the Dominion

The Broadway Jewelry Packet

ontains.—1 Lady's Imitation Coral Set, Pin and drops; 1 Miss's Imitation Coral Necklace; 1 Lady's Imitation Coral Shawl Pin; 1 pair Lady's Imitation Coral Cuff Pins; 1 Gents' Imitation Coral Scarf Pin; 1 pair Lady's Bracelets; 1 Lady's Shawl or Veil Pin; 1 Lady's Gold plated Stone Ring; 1 pair Amethyst Cuff Buttons; 1 pair Engraved Gilt Cuff Buttons; 1 pair Japanese Sleeve Buttons; 1 set Cameo Ear Drops; 1 set Alaska Ear Drops; 1 Lady's Jet Set, Pin, and Drops, Gents' Watch Chain; 1 Lady's long Guard Chain; 1 set Alaska Diamond studs; 1 Lake George Diamond stud; 1 Gold-Plated Collar Button; 1 set Gents' Engraved Shirt Studs; 1 Gents' Cameo Stone Ring; 1 Lady's Ring marked "Friendship"; 1 Lady's Hat Pin; 1 Lady's fancy Gilt Set; 1 Gents' Alaska Diamond Bosom Pin; 1 Gents' Lantern Charm for Watch Chain; pair Rose Coral Ear Drops; 1 Gents' Scarf Ring. The entire lot, postpaid, $1 25; 2 doz. packages by express, $12.

J. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

NEWS SUMM

Interesting Items from all P... World.

CANADIAN.

Wm. Howe, a son of the late ... Howe, of Nova Scotia, died in the ... Hospital at Ottawa, a few days ...

Archbishop Lynch of Toronto ... in present position for twenty-... the anniversary was celebrated ... go in Toronto.

The old Zion Congregational ... Adelaide street, Toronto, having ... sold for a new church up-town, ... been let for a variety theatre.

The Kingston Cotton Compa... order from Scotland for a quant... cotton. The first shipment was ... days ago. Are the tables turnin...

Patrick Gardner, an old man ... mills, died as a pauper in the ... hospital, and in his clothes was f... cent receipt for $1,380 besides $1...

The Ottawa Parliament build... is lighted by electric light durin... session. The United State... lighting Company are now putt... apparatus.

Sir Charles Tupper reports his ... much improved since he took up h... England. He will probably ... take part in the next session of ... Commons.

The Emerald Phosphate mines ... Ingham, on the Ottawa river, has ... an American company for ... operations will, probably, be c... large scale.

A prize fight took place at Ma... Ottawa, a few days ago betwe... named Clarke of that village and ... Chicago bully, for $50 a side. ... arm broken in the fight, and ... side off for Chicago again.

The first annual Fat Stock ... under the auspices of the Provinci... and Arts Association will ... Toronto on the 14th and 15th of ... large sum of money will be dis... prizes, and a large attendance is ...

An Act will probably be aske... the coming session of Parliament ... affirming the Union of the ... churches in Canada. This is dee... by in order to secure the valid... the deeds of the various churche... all other property.

An Asylum for Orphan Chi... wife has been in existence near ... the time, and of late it has been ... about over three-fourths of the in... during the year. A medical e... ordered and the enquirers recom... establishment be closed up.

It has, at last, been decided tha... regard to the validity of the ... J. J. Hawkins as M.P. for ... will take place on Wednesday ... before Judge Galt, at Chath... is to determine whether J. J... Hon. D. Mills is entitled to t... House.

Charges have been made ag... Gueson, Sheriff of Frontenac, ... defect of duty and over charg... there was an investigation at ... week, and he was acquitted. ... charges against Mr. Corbett, ... Kingston, but the investigation ... been indefinitely postponed.

Fire at the Central Prison pr... nearly destroyed one of the large ... The loss was about $30,000, cove... insurance in several companies. ... The fire was not known but it i... have been accidental. It occu... After the 370 prisoners had bee... their cells for the night.

At a meeting of temperance m... Peterford, Norfolk County, it w... take steps to have the questi... portion of the Scott Act submitt... voters of that county at an early ... will also soon be submitted in Oxfor... the necessary number of names ha... added to the petitions.

Hon. Adam Crooks, in conse... of continued ill health, has been ... resign his position as Minister ... in the Provincial Cabinet. ... Q., Esq., late M.P. for West ... has been appointed in his stead. ... practical knowledge of ed... affairs, having been a school te... and inspector for many years.

The Buffalo Herald says that at ... N. W. T., the population is chiefly ... United States and the man from C... the minority, but as distance ea... The he increases in numbers and ... at Regina, and from that po... town, he is all pervading, and th... question between strangers is, "W... Ontario did you come from?"

Lightning is said to have struck ... the Grand Trunk Railway nea... Ont., during a recent sto... firemen on the top of the cars w... and laid flat on their ba... engineer and fireman thought, at ... the boiler had exploded, and t... were paralyzed to their bones. ... recovered in a few minutes, but h... remembrance of their experience.

At the recent great Chicago ... competition the manager of Bow Pa... Brantford had two anim... awarded on exhibition, which carri... the prize in two year old short ho... as well as first prize in short horn ... and also first prize on grade cow ... and of the best female in the y... against all heads. Bow P... the property of the late ... Esq., who first established ...

A deputation of representative... leading banks and money compan... waited on the Hon. O. Mow... Chicago asking for the Governmen... to encourage the immigration ... farmers from Great Britain to ... Hon. Mr. Allan stated th... he represented had, during ... year or so, brought out 100 substa... whose aggregate wealth was ... about $40,000. The Premie... acknowledged the importance of ... and asked for suggestions a... best way to proceed.

A cheese and butter business o...

NEWS SUMMARY.

Interesting Items from all Parts of the World.

CANADIAN.

Wm. Howe, a son of the late Hon. Joseph Howe, of Nova Scotia, died in the Protestant Hospital at Ottawa, a few days ago.

Archbishop Lynch of Toronto has occupied the present position for twenty-four years. The anniversary was celebrated a few days ago in Toronto.

The old Zion Congregational Church, on Adelaide street, Toronto, having been abandoned for a new church up-town, has recently been let for a variety theatre.

The Kingston Cotton Company have an order from Scotland for a quantity of plain cotton. The first shipment was made a few days ago. Are the tables turning?

Patrick Gardner, an old man of Smith's Falls, died as a pauper in the Kingston Hospital, and in his clothes was found a deposit receipt for $1,380 besides $148 in cash.

The Ottawa Parliament Buildings are to be lighted by electric light during the coming session. The United States Electric Lighting Company are now putting up the apparatus.

Sir Charles Tupper reports his health very much improved since he took up his residence in England. He will probably soon return to take part in the next session of the House of Commons.

The Emerald Phosphate mines near Buckingham, on the Ottawa river, has been sold to an American company for $125,000. Operations will, probably, be carried on on a large scale.

A prize fight took place at Manotic, near Ottawa, a few days ago between a man named Clarke of that village and Beaudry, a local bully, for $50 a side. Clarke had his arm broken in the fight, and Beaudry left off for Chicago again.

The first annual Fat Stock Exhibition under the auspices of the Provincial Agricultural and Arts Association will be held in Toronto on the 14th and 15th of December. A large sum of money will be distributed in prizes, and a large attendance is expected.

An Act will probably be asked for of at the coming session of Parliament in Ottawa affirming the Union of the Methodist Churches in Canada. This is deemed necessary in order to secure the validity to the title deeds of the various churches, colleges, and other property.

An Asylum for Orphan Children and Girls has been in existence near Ottawa for some time, and of late it has been reported that over three-fourths of the inmates died during the year. A medical enquiry was ordered and the enquirers recommend that the establishment be closed up.

It has, at last, been decided that the trial in regard to the validity of the election of J. J. Hawkins as M.P. for Bothwell shall take place on Wednesday, January 5th, before Judge Galt, at Chatham. The issue is to determine whether J. J. Hawkins or D. Mills is entitled to the seat in the House.

Charges have been made against Mr. Carson, Sheriff of Frontenac, Ont., for neglect of duty and over charges of fees. There was an investigation at Kingston, last week, and he was acquitted. There are other charges against Mr. Corbett, Gaoler of Kingston, but the investigation into them has been indefinitely postponed.

Fire at the Central Prison premises recently destroyed one of the large workshops. The loss was about $30,000, covered by insurance in several companies. The origin of the fire was not known but it is supposed to have been accidental. It occurred shortly after the 370 prisoners had been locked in their cells for the night.

At a meeting of temperance men held in Waterford, Norfolk County, it was decided to take steps to have the question of the repeal of the Scott Act submitted to the electors of that county at an early date. It will also soon be submitted in Oxford County, the necessary number of names having been added to the petitions.

Hon. Adam Crooks, in consequence of continued ill health, has been compelled to resign his position as Minister of Education in the Provincial Cabinet. Geo. W. Ross, Esq., late M.P. for West Middlesex has been appointed in his stead. Mr. Ross has practical knowledge of educational matters, having been a school teacher and school inspector for many years.

The Buffalo Herald says that at Calgarry, N. W. T., the population is chiefly from the United States and the man from Ontario is in a minority, but as distance eastward is made the increases in numbers and influence of Manitoba, and from that point eastward is all pervading, and the leading question between strangers is, "What part of Ontario did you come from?"

Lightning is said to have struck a train on the Grand Trunk Railway near Georgetown, Ont., during a recent storm. Two brakemen on the top of the cars were paralyzed and laid flat on their backs. The engineer and fireman thought, at the time, that the boiler had exploded, and their flesh was paralyzed to their bones. They all recovered in a few minutes, but have a vivid remembrance of their experience.

At the recent great Chicago Fat Stock Exhibition the manager of Bow Park farm, near Brantford had two animals from the herd on exhibition, which carried off the first prize in two year old short horn steers, and as first prize in short horns of any age; also first prize on grade cow and first prize of the best female in the yard, competing against all heads. Bow Park farm is the property of the late Hon. Geo. Brown, who first established the herd

A deputation of representatives of the leading banks and money companies of Toronto waited on the Hon. O. Mowat a few days ago asking for the Government to take steps to encourage the immigration of tenant farmers from Great Britain to this Province. Hon. Mr. Allan stated that a committee represented had, during the past year or so, brought out 100 substantial settlers whose aggregate wealth was supposed to be about $40,000. The Premier readily acknowledged the importance of the question and asked for suggestions about the best way to proceed.

The cheese and butter business of Canada is assuming an important position among the industries of the country. Already this year nearly 900,000 boxes of cheese have been exported from Montreal, an increase of nearly 175,000 boxes over last year. It is estimated that about a million boxes will be exported altogether this year. This is the largest quantity ever known in Canada. Over 100,000 packages of butter have also been exported, being an increase of over 3,000 packages over last year. The total value of butter and cheese for exportation from Canada this year is estimated at $7,500,000.

Notwithstanding that the English Bible Christian Conference withheld their consent to the Canadian Bible Christian Conference entering the union of Canadian Methodism, it appears that the English body will not oppose the union. A portion of the Horton street congregation, London, decided to remain out of the Union, and to send to England for a minister. The English Conference have declined to send out a minister, and advised the London congregation to enter the Union.

It has been decided to have a centennial U. E. Loyalist celebration in Toronto next June, to commemorate the landing of the U. E. Loyalists in this Province in 1784. A meeting was held in Toronto a few days ago to make the necessary arrangements, and a number of the decendants of U. E. Loyalists were present, including Lieut.-Governor Robinson, Dr. Ryerson, Rev. Mr. Withrow and others. Dr. Canniff was appointed permanent chairman, and arrangements for the demonstration will at once be made. The time selected will be during the week of Toronto's semi-centennial celebration.

UNITED STATES.

In Maine nearly five millions cans of corn were put up in the canniers during this year.

It is said that the butter production of Iowa has been worth two million dollars a month during the past season.

A new grand mansoleum for the Vanderbilt family is now being built on Staten Island near New York, at a cost of over seventy thousand dollars.

Ex Governor Coburn, of Maine, recently sold $800,000 worth of western land in a single lot. This is said to have been the largest sale of farming land made by one person.

A law has just been enacted in Washington Territory extending the franchise to women equally with the men. A similar law has been some years in operation in Wyoming Territory.

It is reported that white ants, in large numbers, have appeared in the State House at Boston, and fears are entertained that they have attacked some of the important wood work of the building.

A very serious railway collision took place near Streator, Illinois, recently last. A rear passenger car was demolished and a number of persons instantly killed, while several others were terrible wounded.

Colored women in parts of Georgia have been discovered leaving their newly-born infants in the woods to perish. Two which were found were being attacked by flocks of buzzards, and their cries led to their discovery.

The old Lincoln homestead at Springfield, Illinois, has been leased for a term of years, the lessee's intention being to preserve it in the same condition as when its former owner left it to assume the Presidency of the United States.

There has been so much trouble and complaint about the American "trade dollar" that it is now proposed to call in all the silver coin of that denomination, and order it recoined or melted into silver bars. The trade dollar is intrinsically worth less than one dollar, and it has never been popular.

The paper manufacturers of the United States are beginning to feel the effect of the business depression. Fifty different paper mills throughout the North-western States are reported as closed down for three months, and more than two thousand operatives are idle in consequence.

In consequence of the depressed state of the iron trade a large number of the large rolling and other iron mills, at Milwaukee, Pittsburg, and other great manufacturing centres are being closed. Tens of thousands of men are reported to be thrown out of employment in consequence, and the out'ook for the winter is a gloomy one in consequence.

There was a sensational wedding of two of the Salvation Army officers at Kingston in connection with the opening of the New Barracks in that city. Capt. Addie, of St. Thomas, and Lieut. Miss McLaughlin, a Hallelujah Lass, were united. The wedded pair was drawn through the streets to the City Hall by a pair of white horses and there was a wedding feast.

The Witness says:—One of the most shocking fruits of inflammatory novels ever heard of is the attempted robbery and murder of a car driver in Milwaukee by two young cranks, made such by light reading. Mental poison that is known to have an enormous consumption must work untold harm in the minds of a rising generation in general when it proves its liability to break into such atrocities as that reported from Milwaukee.

GREAT BRITAIN.

A large number of the British soldiers are being withdrawn from Egypt. It is understood that the Government intend to reduce the troops in Egypt below 3,000.

It is estimated that the average number of houses now built per year in Great Britain is about 80,000. This is double the average number of forty years ago.

The celebrated Tichborne claimant will, it is reported, be released from imprisonment next year as a ticket-of-leave man, and his friends propose to set him up in a public house, and he will be pretty sure to "draw."

It is understood that the trial of O'Donnel, the murderer of the informer, will be postponed till next February, as the lawyers for the defence are asking for more time. Mr. Sullivan, his principal lawyer, is seriously ill.

The evangelistic meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in London are reported as very successful. Great crowds attend, and there is much good being accomplished. The meetings are expected to be continued about six months.

The Duke of Edinburgh, like a sensible man, has announced his intention to give up fiddling and sea going, and turn his attention to agriculture in future. It would be a capital thing if a good many others, similarly situated would do the same thing.

An English paper says that only one forest in England belongs to a private owner—Savernake, Lord Ailesbury's, in Wilts, of four thousand acres. It is full of splendid old trees, and what is known as "Grand Avenue," four miles long, is lined with beeches, in some places eight or ten feet deep.

There seems a determination in England to have a second Suez Canal. A syndicate of London bankers offer to furnish the money if the Government will go on with the work. De Lesseps advocates constructing a second canal alongside of the original one, with a sufficient amount of space between. Vessels can pass in through one and out through the other.

Admiral Porter has just been reporting that the present United States Navy is totally inadequate to afford any important protection to any one exposed city, in case of a war with a naval nation. He recommended the building of a number of war ships at once, and that two or three of them should be on Lake Erie, so as to at once destroy the entrance to the Welland Canal in case of difficulty with Canada.

The carrying of fire arms and shooting appear to have become common practices in the South. A few days ago at Lynchburg a boy of 16 named Richard Spooler shot and killed another boy of 17, named Richard Newcomer. The latter asked for a chew of tobacco and Spooler cooly replied, "I'll shoot you for asking," and drawing his revolver fired a deadly shot.

Study the Bible.

Of all poor excuses for neglecting the study of the Bible there is none poorer than that of the man who thinks he knows so much of what is in the Bible that he has nothing more to learn through Bible study. Wherever you see a man who thinks that he has got beyond the Bible, you may be sure that he is one who knows little—very little—of the real facts or teachings of the Bible; and what he stands most in need of is a new and thorough course of Bible study. Many a man, otherwised well versed in science or literature, has, for a time, committed the mistake of supposing that the Bible is a book which, once learned, is all learned; but in after years, when other literature had palled upon his taste, he has come back to the Bible to find in it, with delighted surprise, all that is newest and truest and most worthy of all, in what any man may know. There is no other book which so well repays continued study as the Bible; there is no other book which is at once so old and so new; there is none other which contains the words of eternal life in God's own setting. And, it may be added, there is no man more likely to do a good life-work effectively than he who knows the Bible intimately.—Selected.

He Felt no Effects..

Uncle Abe was fond of 'possum. Having caught one, he got his wife, Dinah, to cook it for him, and requested that it should be placed in the cupboard until morning. The favor was granted, and Uncle Abe lay down before a log fire and went to sleep. His son, Mose, coming in late, got the 'possum and ate it, laid the bones down at Uncle Abe's head, smeared the old man's face and hands with the grease, and went to bed. The following morning Uncle Abe awoke and asked Dinah: "Whar's dat 'possum?"

"In de cupboard," which she explored and found it missing.

Returning, Dinah enquired: "Abe, when did you eat dat 'possum? Dar's de bones at your head, yer face smells of 'possum, and yer han's are greasy."

"Maybe I did eat dat 'possum, but if I did it did me less good dan any 'possum I ever et."

In the Parlor.

"What does your sister say about me?" asked a young man of the small brother of the maiden he thought he loved.

"Oh, lots!" sententiously exclaimed the precocious boy.

"Well, tell me," said the youth, in a coaxing voice.

"She says you've got lots of money."

"Well, what else?"

"I don't like to tell."

"Oh, come; tell me and I'll give you some candy."

"Well, she says that if she ever married you she'd loan you to Farmer Cornstalk for a scarecrow."

A Noble Revenge.

Robert Louis Stevenson, in the concluding part of his "Silverado Squatters" in the December Century, describes an eccentric poor white and his story of a revenge: "A man, he told us, who bore a grudge against him had poisoned his dog. 'That was a low thing for a man do, now, wasn't it? It wasn't like a man that, nohow. But I got even with him—I poisoned his dog."

A young butcher was presented with a pair of twins. Wishing to inform his parents of the occurrence, he sent them this short, if not very lucid note:—"I have just become the father of twins. More next time. Form your son A—."

I once gave a lady two-and-twenty receipts against melancholy; one was a cheerful fire; another, to remember all pleasant things said to her; another, to keep a box of sugar plums on the chimney-place and a kettle simmering on the hob.—Sidney Smith.

People who in their normal state of health are free from consciousness of their nervous systems, sometimes learn sympathy with their fellow mortals who are less blessed, during the period of convalescence that succeeds a fever like the typhoid. A physician told me of himself, that months after recovery from this fever the noise which the clock makes before it strikes used to irritate him to such a degree that he would rush up to it, shake his fist menacingly and exclaim, "Do that again if you dare!" He was perfectly aware of the foolishness of his course, perfectly sensible of how it looked to other people, but the recurring noise was too much for him, and at last, in self-defence, he had to stop the clock.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

A Study of Husbands.

"We hear much about the art of winning a husband," says a female writer in The Argonaut. "Let us take a step further and make a study of keeping a husband. This is a wicked world, and man is dreadfully mortal. Let us take him just as he is, not as he ought to be. In the first place, he is very weak. The wife must spend the first two years in discovering these weaknesses, count them on her fingers, and learn them by heart. The fingers of both hands will not be too many. Then let her study up these weaknesses, with a mesh for every one, and the secret is hers. Is he fond of a good dinner? Let her tighten the mesh around him with fragrant coffee, light bread, and good things generally, and reach his heart through his stomach. Is he fond of flatte: yabout his looks? Let her study the dictionary for sweet words, if her supply gives out. Does he like to hear her talk about his brilliatn intellect? Let her pore over the encyclopædia to give variety to the depth of her admiration. Flattery is a good thing to study up, at all hazards, in all its delicate shades, but it must be skillfully done. The harpy who may try to coax him away will not do it absurdly. Is he fond of beauty? Here's the rub—let her be bright and tidy; that is half the victory. Next, let her bang her hair metaphorically and keep up with the times. A husband who sees his wife look like other people is not going to consider her 'broken down.' Though it is a common sneer that a woman has admitted that her sex considers more, in marrying, the tastes of her friends than her own, yet it must be considered ludicrous that a man looks at his wife with the same eyes that other people do. Is he fond of literary matters? Listen to him with wide open eyes when he talks of them. A man doesn't so much care for a literary wife if she will only be literary enough to appreciate him. If she have literary inclinations keep them to herself.

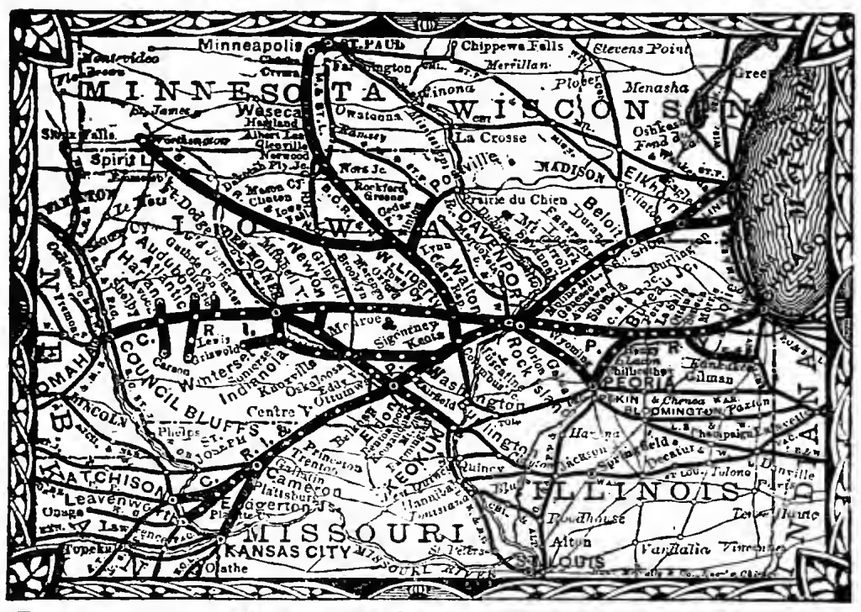
"Men love to be big and great to their wives. That's the reason why a helpless little woman can marry three times to a sensible, self reliant woman's none. Cultivate helplessness. Is he curious? Oh, then you have a treasure; you can always keep him if you have a secret and keep it carefully. Is he jealous; Then, woman, this is not for you; cease torturing that fretted heart which wants you for its own, and teach him confidence. Is he ugly in temper and fault finding? Give him a dose of his own medicine skillfully done. Is he deceitful? Pity him for his weakness; treat him as one who is born with a physical defect, but put your wits to work—it is a bad case. It is well not to be too tame. Men do not waste their powder and shot on hens and barnyard fowl; they like the pleasure of pursuing wild game—quail and grouse and deer. A quail is a good model for a wife—neat and trim, with a pretty, swift way about, and just a little capricious. Never let yourself become an old story; be just a little uncertain Another important fact is, don't be too good; it hurts his feelings and becomes monotonous. Cultivate a pleasant voice, so that this very mortal man may have his conscience prick him when he is in jeopardy; its pleasant ring will haunt him much more than would a shrill one. It is hard to do all this, besides taking care of the babies and looking after vexatious household cares and smiling when he comes home; but it seemes necessary. 'To be born a woman is to be born a martyr,' says a husband who for ten years had watched in amazement his wife treading the wine-press of her existence. It is a pitiful sight to some men. But if a wife does not make a study of these things the harpy will, to steal away the honor from his silver hairs when he is full of years, and the father of sons and daughters. At the same time, good wife, keep from trying any of these things on any mortal man but your own. These rules are only evolved in order to 'keep a husband.' The poor, weak creature would rather be good than bad, and it is woman's duty to hold him by every means in her power."

Dress and the Sex.

A lady recently asks us, says a writer in the New York Evening Post, if it did not seem a sad, sinful matter for people to waste so much precious time and thought on dress and personal appearance. Taking herself the affirmative of the question, she gave an interesting review of her personal history, and confessed that to her the retrospect was a bitter and sorrowful picture, over which might well be written: "Vanities of vanities, all is vanity." Opportunities for mental improvement and moral and spiritual growth had been lost past all recall in her devotion to the culture of personal beauty, and the study of how best to adorn herself in attractive attire. No one who heard her was disposed to quarrel with our friend in the valley of life for complaining of the glittering sunshine and glory that dazzled her young vision on the nether side of the hill-top. But it might be suggested that if she sinned at all, it was in neglecting one good thing in her absorbing love for another. Every good gift, we are told, comes from above; and if a woman has beauty as a natural bestowment, the right, aye, the duty, go along with it to prize and cultivate it with all possible and rational means, just the same as she would her mental gifts, were they great or small. She is equally bound to regard their culture as an obligation not to be overlooked or neglected. Instead of railing against regard for beauty of person and personal adornment, it would be far better to study how we can best use each and all good things without abusing them, and estimate them at their true value, and to let the outer and inner graces be cultivated together, Self-reproach and bitter regret will never then be thorns to vex us at the end.

Feminine Pleasantries.

A young man began to read a paragraph about a mine to his sweetheart, commencing "Youba mine," when she interrupted him with, "I don't care if I do, John."



"I am never missed a bit more when I go off on a visit," sighed a West Wayne street lady. "Why not?" asked her friend. "Because since I got married they all call me Mrs."

"That lady has very high color," said a man speaking of a customer who had just left the drugstore. "I don't call it high," was the druggist's reply; "I sell it to her at 25 cents a bottle. Surely that's cheap enough."

"I remember you very well," said the hotel-keeper, "but your wife has grown very thin. "Yes," "She was taller." "Yes." "And lighter complexion, was she not?" "Yes. Besides, you know, it is not the same one."

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Callatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundred: of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

The Standard.

MARKDALE NOV. 29, 1883.

TOO MUCH GOVERNMENT.

We believe the masses are of the same opinion as ourselves, viz: that we have too much government all the way up from the county council. Our township corporations are, we believe, generally managed with a due regard to economy, and with as few members in their council boards as can efficiently perform the business of the municipality, but why is it necessary to have in this county, say 40 representatives at the county council while half that number would transact the business as well, and in less time, and at about one half the expense. We think it is high time the ratepayers (who have to pay the piper) took the matter up and support only those candidates who make the reduction in the number of representatives at the county council a plank in their platform. We cannot expect our Deputy Reeves to press the matter that would be depriving themselves of the most desirable portion of their official duties, human nature is too strong to expect it, the matter must be pressed by the ratepayers if anything is accomplished. The question has been up in our county council and if we remember correctly, the house was almost equally divided. We cannot see that any undue advantage would be given any municipality should the number be reduced one-half, neither do we see that any would suffer any serious disadvantage, while the county would save at least $1,000 per year. If anything is done towards lessening the cost of government we must commence at home. We would like to have the opinion of the press on this question as well as that of our prominent ratepayers.

MUNICIPAL MATTERS.

Four weeks from Monday next will be nomination day and one week later municipal election.

In Glenelg we presume the present reeve will be elected by acclamation. J. A. McMillan and Wm. Glencross are candidates for deputy reeve. It is said Mr. Davis intends retiring from municipal honors; he has been a good man for that position. Mr. Dunsmore will likely be re-elected as councillor; We believe Mr. Mullarky will not seek re-election; Mr. P. Neil will likely be a candidate, he is a square man and will doubtless be elected; Mr. McCuaig will also be a candidate, and his prospects are said to be good for success.

In Holland matters are quiet, the present Reeve Mr. John Cameron will likely be elected without opposition; Mr, Shute, the Deputy Reeve will likely be the successful candidate for that office again; There will be a vacancy caused by the expected removal of Mr. John Deavitt to the N. W. The present council will likely seek re-election and doubtless many others.

There are various rumours in regard to the movements in Euphrasia. Mr. Giray will likely be re-elected as Reeve without opposition; Messrs. Ellis, Erskine and Fawcett are spoken of as probable candidates for the Deputy ship. The old council will seek re-election except Mr. Patterson, who it is said will withdraw at the end of his present term. Mr. Black will probably be a candidate, he is an intelligent well-to do farmer and would make a good councillor.

In Artemesia there appears to be complete silence, most, if not all the old council will likely be returned to power.

Osprey is so far quiet, time enough however. Whe hope our cosrespondent there will keep us posted.

In Proton there will be important changes. The present Reeve, Mr. McGregor will retire while a host of names are spoke of as probable aspirants.

EDITORAL NOTES.

The governor of the great state of New York, the population of which is about equal to that of the Dominion, receives a salary of about $10,000 a year, and in return gives his best energies to the active work of administration. Our Governor-General a mere ornamental personage in gold lace and knee-breeches, who does nothing but enjoy himself and figure at state ceremonials, costs us $118,054.90 per year.—Morning News.

Why should the Canadian people be called upon to pay the Governor-General's travelling expenses in addition to his very liberal salary of $50,000? Lord Lorne's trip during the fiscal year 1882 cost the country $15,000. What have the people to show for the money.—Morning News.

Personals.

Geo. Walker, of Cookstown, was in town this week.

Mr. C. Gregory and family, of Toronto, have removed to Markdale.

Mrs. Thos. Brook, of Thamesville, Kent County, is visiting friends in Markdale and vicinity.

Our esteemed young friend, J. Mitchell Reynolds, is home. He intends remaining for the winter.

James McLeod and family, have removed from Manitoulin, where they were located the past two years.

The latest arrival in Markdale is a man with but three letters in his name, and which is spelled the same from either ends.

What They are Saying.

GLENELG.

My re-election is sure—McRae.

A councillors position is not what its cracked up to be—Mullarky.

My prospects are good for Deputy Reeve—McMillan.

Don't be too sure—Glencross.

Are we going to be left without a representative—Markdale.

I'll accept it—P. Neil.

Think I'll step down and out—Davis.

If it is the wish of the people I will again offer myself as a candidate for councillor—Dunsmoore.

Me too—McCuaig.

MARKDALE.

Who'll be village police next year—the citizens.

We are not anxious for re-election—present trustees.

We must have more enterprise even it does cost something—the business men.

Then let's have it—C. W. R.

Why don't McFarland cover up that cellar-way?—Pedestrians.

EUPHRASIA.

I'm going to be Reeve another year—Gilray.

Haven't fully decided yet my course—Ellis.

Nor I—Fawcett.

I will resign—Patterson.

Think I will run for Deputy—Erskine.

Am not anxious about the matter—Boyd.

Its me runs this concern—Dunlop, clerk.

HOLLAND.

Cameron will be our Reeve—the ratepayers.

And I'll be Deputy another year—Shute.

I'll go to the N. W.—Deavitt.

My re-election is safe—Galbraith.

And mine—McKinnett.

Don't think I'll try it this year—Neely.

ARTEMESIA.

I have a mind to run for Reeve—Elliott.

There's no use—Christoe.

If he does I'll run for councillor—Boland,

It's about time Elliott had his turn at the helm—many ratepayers.

Me too—Wright.

I'm contented with my present position—McArthur.

So am I—McKee.

OSPREY.

There isn't a man in the Tp. can beat me—McGirr.

Just be careful—Sing.

I believe I could beat you myself—McIntyre.

STRAYED OR STOLEN.—A dark gray and white coley dog, white ring around his neck, short stubby tail. The finder will be suitably rewarded by leaving at the Revere hotel, P. J. McCasey.

The Red Light in the Sky.

EXPLANATION OF THE FIERY PHENOMENON SEEN IN THE WESTERN HEAVENS.

For the past three or four evenings a phenomenon has been noticed in the shape of a red light which illuminated the western sky as though a great conflagration was throwing its glare over the heavens. Meteorologists say that this light is probably the reflection from a stratum of decomposed vapors in the upper atmosphere. Electric storm in the sun and in our atmosphere have produced this decomposition. This opinion is based on experiments reported by Professor Tyndall of the reflective properties of vapors decomposed by electric action on a strong sunlight.

To show the extent of country over over which this phenomenon prevails, it may be mentioned that despatches have been received from a number of places in Canada and the United States stating that the light had been mistaken for a conflagration and the fire brigade called out.

MARRIAGES.

DIMMA—WILLIAMS—At the manse, by the Rev. Mr. Kees, on the 19th inst., Mr. Justin Dimma, of Berkeley, to Miss Elizabeth Williams, of Toronto, MCCUTCHEON—MCINNIS—At the Mansion House, Markdale, on Wednesday, 28th inst., by the Rev. J. S. Corcoran, Mr. Alex. McCutcheon, to Miss Mary McInnis, all of Euphrasia.

DEATHS.

MADILL.—In Holland, on the 24th inst., Mary, wife of Mr. Samuel Madill, aged 43 years.

BINNS—In Toronto, 23rd inst., Mr. John Binne, (hardware merchant,) of Oshawa, late of Chatsworth.

Credit Sale Register.

Parties getting their sale bills printed at this office will have a notice under this head free of charge.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 5TH.—Mr. Hugh McKenna, lot north ½ 15, con. 11, Euphrasia, will sell on his premises on the above date, his stock, implements, &c., by public auction. Sale to commence at 12 o'clock. Terms, 11 months' credit on approved joint notes. W. J. Sheperdson, auctioneer.

SATURDAY, DEC. 1ST.—Geo. Noble, auctioneer, will sell on the above date, at the Mansion House, Markdale, commencing at 1 o'clock a number of horses, cattle, buggies, cutters harness and sundry articles. Terms—Over $5 12 months' credit on approved paper or 10 per cent. off for cash.

Markdale Cattle Fairs.

SATURDAY	.....	Nov. 3
Do.	.....	Dec. 8

Dr. Armstrong has changed his address to that of Pic P. O. from that of Port Arthur.

OUR PHOTOGRAPHER, Mr. Hamilton, has just got out an extensive pamphlet giving full and complete directions and most useful advice to parties who contemplate having their pictures taken. Everybody ought to have one, you will find exceedingly useful information therein; call at the gallery and secure one, free.

ANOTHER IMMENSE shipment of 25,000 pounds of butter just made by McFarland direct to Liverpool, making in round numbers some 1,200 tubs or over 60,000 pounds that McFarland has shipped this season. We would like to hear of any village in the Dominion of similar size that can beat this shewing.

MANY PEOPLE like to see their names in print. We are preparing a list for publication of those in arrears for subscriptions for 1883, or any time previous, quite a large number will thus have the pleasure of seeing their signature should they continue on the black list to the end of this year. The list will be published in January.

GENTLEMEN, now is the time to order fine sewed boots as Wm. McLeod has secured the services of D. McKay for the winter. My work cannot be excelled this side Toronto, good stock and a perfect fit guaranteed. N. B. All our work warranted, no apprentices employed stand opposite Revere Hotel Wm. McLeod.

A TRUE STORY.—A resident of Melancthon was out hunting recently, and as a storm came up he crept into a hollow log for shelter. After the storm abated he endeavored to creep out, but found that the log had swelled so that it was impossible to make his exit. He endeavored to compress himself as much as possible, but with indifferent success. He thought of all the mean things he had ever done, until finally his mind reverted to the fact that, instead of subscribing for his local papers, he was in the habit of borrowing them from a neighbor and thus defrauding the poor printer. On this he says he felt so small that he slipped out of the log without an effort. Moral: Don't sponge from your friends the local paper, but subscribe like a man.—Shelburne Economist.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.95 to $1.00; Spring $0.60 to $1 00; Barley, 45 to60; Peas, 65; Oats, 30c Butter, 18c; Eggs, 22c; Potatoes, 40c; Hay, $8 .00; Pork, 5.00 to 5.50; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.10; Spring, $1.00 to $1.12; Barley, 50c to 70c; Oats, 37c to 40c Peas, 70c to 73c; Hogs, $6.00 to $6.25; Potatoes, per bag, 90c to $1c; Butter, dairy, 18c to 20c; eggs, 22c to 25c.

BOAR PIG. The thoroughbred boar CHESTER WHITE, will be for service at his pen, Markdale, forwith; a fine boar six months old. Terms—$1, at time of service.
168-71 WM. DOUGLASS.

NOTHING

Can be lost by sending for free specimens of the great farm and garden Journal of America.

The Rural New-Yorker.

It costs more to publish than any other of its class. It presents over 500 original engravings annually, of cattle, grain, fruits, etc. It has over 600 contributors—among them the best writers in the world. It owns experiment grounds of 82 acres worked in the interest of its subscribers.

A New Era in the agriculture and horticulture of America.

A $4 Weekly for $2 a Year.

It is original throughout. It is pure in tone and admits no ambiguous advertisements It is a farm, garden, religious, news, home, and literary paper all in one.

THE RURAL NEW-YORKER is for the north, south, east and west. It has become the leading rural paper by real worth, perseverence and enterprise—by its devotion to the true interests of all who till the land whether for pleasure or profit. It is printed upon fine tinted paper, 16 pages weekly, each page 11½x16½ inches. It combines the best features of the daily and weekly press with all that can instruct, elevate, and interest the rural home.

Its Free Seed Distributions have introduced or disseminated many of the most valuable seeds and plants now known. Among them may be mentioned the Beauty of Hebron, White Elephant, and Blush Potatoes, the Cuthbert Raspbepry, Clawson, Fultzo-Clawson, Surprise, Black-bearded Centennial wheats, and a hundred others.

The new varieties of seeds offered in the Rural's Free Seed Distribution are alone worth more at retail prices than the yearly price of the Journal. Specimen copies will furnish all details with original engravings.

WHY NOT send for free specimens and then judge for yourself?

34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

READY DECEMBER 1ST, 1883
—THE—
FARMER'S HAND BOOK
FOR 1884.
(Copyright secured.)

A COMPLETE RECORD OF FARM OPERATIONS.

This book will contain blank pages, ruled, so that the farmer can keep a correct diary of his farm accounts, of his purchases and sales of his produce, sales of live stock, grain, dairy, fruit, and poultry; also a calendar for 1884, giving the moon's changes, and also many useful tables, receipts, with memoranda pages, &c., for the farmers, not found in any other single book.

A NECESSITY TO EVERY INTELLIGENT FARMER. PRICE, 25 CENTS EACH.

Address—
THE FARMER'S ADVOCATE,
360 Richmond Street,
LONDON, ONT., CANADA.

325 ACRES | Fonthill Nurseries | 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address
STONE & WELLINGTON,
161-75 Toronto, Ont.

THOS. MATHEWS,
HarnesS EstaBlishmenT
MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!
IN CONNECTION.

STARTLING DISCOVERY!
LOST MANHOOD RESTORED.
A victim of youthful imprudence causing Premature Decay, Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, etc., having tried in vain every known remedy, has discovered a simple self-cure, which he will send FREE to his fellow-sufferers, address J. H. REEVES, 43 Chatham St., N. Y.

NOTICE.

The undersigned will be at the bank at Markdale from the 20th to the 23rd December for the purpose of collecting sale notes. as they become due at the above date. Those interested will please be prompt and save further trouble and costs.
JOHN FORD.
Annan P. O., November 8th, 1883 166-69

ESTRAY.

Came to the premises of the subscriber, lot East half 27, con. 7 Holland, about the 12th October last, four head of two year old cattle, one bull, one steer and two heifers. color mostly red. The owner is requested to prove property, pay expences, and take them away. Unless claimed by Nov. 30th, will be offered for sale.
GEO. WATT.
Holland November 13th 1883 166-69

TEACHER WANTED.

For School Section No. 17, Euphrasia, a male or female holding third class certificate. Duties to commence January 2, 1884. Apply stating salary to JOS. MANAREY,
Sec-Trustee, Rocklyn P.O.

FARMS FOR SALE.

Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are clearsd and under cultivation. Lot S part 15, con. 12, Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to
J. G. IRVING,
Markdale.
Oct.16.1883. 16

FARM FOR SALE.

Lot 89 and 99 second range west of T. & S. Road, Glenelg. 100 acres, 85 of which are clearel and under cultivation fit for reaper and mower to work on. Buildings and fences in good repair, soil clay loam, well watered, and in a good state of cultivation. This is a desirable farm and well located being 2½ miles from the flourishing village of Markdale, For further particulars apply on premises or by letter to 162-72 WM. MUTRIE,
Markdale P. O.

LIGHT! LIGHT!!
REFINED COAL OIL
18cts a gallon in two barrel lots and upwards.

HEAD LIGHT OIL
25cts. a gallon by the barrel.

TEAS
At Wholesale Rates.
H. PARKER,
Druggist, - DURHAM.

STANDARD TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clochs, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personaliy, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,
The Jeweller,
MARKDALE.

THE BEST PLACE
TO GET
A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!
North of Toronto, is at the
Markdale - Gallery.

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

J. W. FORD
Is giving splendid satisfaction in
CRISTING,
By the New Process at the
Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK

DressStuffsTweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

Nominations will take place on Monday the 31st Dec.

Rejuvenator stomach bitters are taking the lead, sold by Smith, the barber.

A key found near McFarland's store on Saturday last, was left at this office to find an owner.

A choice lot of ladies mantles, single and double shawls, furs &c., just opened out at Trimble & Wrights.

New arrival of oranges, best Spanish grapes, Dates and a variety of nuts at Montgomery's bakery.

Mr. Thos. Cook, tax collector in Glenelg, will be at the Revere House on the 6th December to receive taxes.

The election for Lennox in the Commons has resulted in a majority of five for Mr. Allison, reform candidate.

What the People Say—That Hamilton's photograph gallery is the cheapest place in the county to buy frames.

The Flesherton Advance of last week says Mr. P. Munshaw shot a fox, and in the next item thanks that gentleman for a piece of venison.

Those trap holes in our sidewalks should be repaired; whose duty is it; if some body gets their leg broken we will likely find out who will pay the damages.

J. P. Marshall, dentist, visits Markdale regularly on the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month, He is an excellent dentist and is very careful in his work.

If you want good value for your money go straight to Trimble & Wright's, Mammoth House the only large dealers in bankrupt stocks doing business in Markdale.

Considerable fall plowing has been done since our last paper was published. A severe frost set in on Tuesday last however and a fall of snow on Wednesday and now we have sleighing.

Dentistry.—T. F. Brown, L. D. S., of Woodstock, will be in Markdale on and after the 15th November for two weeks, filling, extracting, plate work &c satisfactory done. Charge moderate office at W. A. Brown's Jewellry Store.

Liberal Conservative Assocation.—The annual meeting of the East Grey Liberal Conservative Association, for the purpose of electing officers, and transacting other important business, will be held in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Friday, December the 14th, 1883. at 2 o'clock p. m. sharp. It is important that all sections of the riding be fully represented, as business affecting all parts of the riding will be discussed.

Trimble & Wright have just received a choice line of Japan tea per ex steamship Plynesian, only 25 cts per. lb, call and get a sample it is great value.

The Advance of last week had some sensible remarks anent school teachers salaries yet we think it had no right to censure our Markdale trustees for accepting a good offer. We do not consider it the trustees place to offer a teacher a higher salary than he asks.

True merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increased sales, as a prominent druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits;" It is the grand specific for diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, $5,000 bottles have been sold during the last three months. For sale by A. Turner & Co. Markdale.

Quite a number of cheese factories have been established in this county the past two years, all of which, we believe has been very successful. Now is a favourable time to commence making arrangements for the coming season and we think steps should be taken to have one established in the neighbourhood of Markdale. The business is profitable in itself besides being a great advantage and benifit to farmers in decreasing the labor in the dairy line and encouraging a mixed husbandry which system is the only safe one. Who will move in the matter.

President Arthur on Saturday granted a pardon to Mason, the sergeant who attempted to shoot Guiteau.

Allan McDougall beat a professional at Port Arthur on the 21st inst., in a 100 yd. race, $50 a side. About $1,000 changed hands.

We understand preparations are being made by a pushing man to have a steam, shingle, and saw mill ready for operation in Markdale next spring at furthest.

The C. O. O. F. lodge in this place has commenced a series of lectures, each member to take part in turn as his name appears on the roll, three each night. Members have the privelege of choosing their own subject. So far they have been very interesting.

A copy of the first issue of the Toronto Morning News is before us. "This is to be a Democratic newspaper, it will advocate doctrines which are old, immutable and eternal as the everlasting hills." The sheet is newsy spicy, and has a sensible ring, subscriptions $4 per year. Edmund E. Sheppard, editor and proprietor.

The change of time is now scarcely noticeable, a little bustling was no doubt experienced last Sunday in order to be in time to church, one lady in town, on looking for the hymn found to her astonishment that in her hury she had brought "Jackson's Lectures on how to raise children," in mistake for her hymn book. The books were somewhat similar outside but widely different otherwise.

One of our citizens who lately made a trip on the T. G. & B. R. came in to inform us that when next we go to Toronto we need not expect to get a square meal at Orangeville for 25c., as they have raised the rate to 40c. He considers it an imposition, as the train don't stop long enough for him to eat 40c. worth and predicts that lunch baskets will become fashionable if the rates don't go down.

An exchange remarks.—There is a great deal of false modesty and affection in this matter of furnishing news items. Many people hesitate in particular about sending personal notes to a newspaper regarding the movements of themselves or friends, lest the editor may think them anxious to see their names in the paper. He will think nothing of the kind, but on the contrary, is always pleased to get notes. The editor does not stop to consider the motive, being simply glad to get this much additional news; but if even the motive should be partially that of seeing one's name in print, what of it? Surely this is no crime. All the affected modesty in regard to seeing one's name in print is absurd. We all like it, and there isn't any use in saying we do not. Why not, then, be perfectly frank and honest in the matter, and make yourself a friend of your editor by sending notes direct to him, instead of leaving him to get on the track of them, and then possibly get a little aggravated because he occasionally indulges in an error.

SELLS CHEAP

C. REYNOLDS & SON.

—YOU CAN—

Buy more good substantial Goods for $1 at Reynolds' than any other house in town. Our Dress Goods, Mantle Cloths, Tweeds etc., are the newest under the Sun, and cheaper than the cheapest.

—GLOVES—

We have a Job Lot of Ladies' Kid Gloves on hand, usually sold for 75c., at 25c. per pair. Genuine Josephine Kid Gloves for $1.10 per pair, every pair guaranteed.

—Woollen Goods.—

Our flannels are unsurpassed for quality and prices, all patterns, Plain, Grey, etc. BLANKETS---We have a good assortment of White and Grey Blankets from $1.75 per pair and up.

We have just the Ganzies the people are all looking for, good and heavy, all wool and at 85c. per pair, only.

—Boots and Shoes.—

Our stock of Boots and Shoes are the Cheapest and best in Canada. We buy from one of the leading manufacturing houses in the Dominion, and don't you forget it.

Come in and give our 30c. Tea a trial, it beats anything and everything.

Don't fail to see the Bargains before buying one dollar's worth of goods at any other house.

—GO TO—

C. Reynolds & Son.

CHOICE GOODS

A GIRL'S FOLLY.

"He will turn back," she whispered to herself. "Surely—surely!—for I couldn't bear to lose him." But Mr. Watkyn went straight on to the gate.

"Thomas!" she called out. "Thomas!"

He turned then. "What is it!"

Perhaps she had it in her mind to humble herself to him—who knows? She did nothing of the kind. A moment's pause, possibly of indecision, and then she produced a note from the folds of her frock.

"May I ask you to do me a little favor, Thomas—for the last time?"

"What is it?" he repeated.

"If you would not very much mind going home by the hill, and would leave this note at Miss Ford's. I particularly wish her to have it this evening."

He paused for an instant, not replying. She went on hurriedly.

"I see that it is disagreeable to you. I have offended you too much."

"Not that," he answered, holding out his hand for the note, "but I can hardly spare the time for the long way this evening, as I have to call at Killick's for my father. However"——He said no more but took the note.

"Good-by, Thomas."

"Good-by for aye. God be with you!"

"What a solemn mood he is in, the stupid fellow!" she commented. "But I am glad he took the note! I shall be safe now."

Miss Alison Reece was a clever young lady. The direct and near way to Mr. Watkyn's home would lead him past the willow walk. She had devised this impromptu note to her dressmaker in the afternoon to prevent his taking that usual route. Had he seen young Vavasour cooling his heels within the precincts of the willow walk he would inevitably suspect he was waiting to keep a lover's tryst.

Alison leaned over the gate, and watched him as he walked away, watched him take the lane that led to the route she had wished, and disappear. She stood there until the gold in the clouds had changed to crimson, the crimson to purple, that spread itself like a royal mantle over the western hills. White mists began to settle on the brooks that but a moment ago had reflected the gorgeous rays of the setting sun. Somehow it seemed to make her shiver, and she crept up to her own room with a strange sense of loss at her heart.

Mrs. Reece had gone out after tea to sit with a sick neighbor, and Alison devoutly hoped that she would not be coming home yet, or there might be difficulty in getting away to keep her appointment. It was nearly time to be starting; at least, she might as well go at once, and then she should be safe from her mother. Putting on her hat she ran down stairs and opened the kitchen door.

"Patty, if mamma comes in and asks for me tell her I am only strolling about this lovely evening. I shall be in directly."

But the loveliness of the evening had gone. Somewhat to Alison's surprise the white mist had increased so greatly as to obscure everything but itself.

"How quickly it has come on!" she exclaimed.

Mr. Vavasour was waiting for her, and they paced for a few minutes the willow walk together. But for a very few; the young man said he was pressed for time; he had "heaps" of packing to do, not having touched it yet, and he was going away in the morning.

"Going away!" exclaimed Alison.

"Yes, and be shot to it!" said he. "I got a letter this morning recalling me home. My mother's ill, is ordered to Nice, and she wants me to accompany her. Fate is cruel to us, dear Miss Reece."

"But—you will be coming back here!" cried the startled Alison.

"I'm sure I don't know whether I shall be coming back here ever, or whether I may find myself banished to the remotest regions of Siberia," drawled the dandy twirling one end of his mustache. "Nothing seems certain in this sublunary world except uncertain changes. Old Tarbey was quite knocked down with the news. I wrote to ask you to be good enough to meet me here, knowing I should not have a minute all day to get down to your place—to tell you of it, and to say good-by."

There was a matter of-course carelessness in his voice and manner that grated terribly on Alison; her pride rose to the surface.

"Well, I suppose you will be glad to go, Mr. Vavasour!"

"Glad? Ah, I don't know about that. Glad to escape Tarbey and his grinding; immensly sorry to leave you. Wish you were going with me."

"You are too kind. I will not hinder you any longer; and I must be going home, too. Good night, and good-by."

Mr. Vavasour took her hand and held it. "Good-by, my dear Miss Reece," he said. "I shall often think of you and of our pleasant meetings, You will let me take a farewell kiss?"

He bent his face to hers. "How dare you sir?" she exclaimed, starting back from him. "Kiss me, indeed, and here! Until this night I had taken you for a gentleman."

"I beg your pardon," he said laughingly; "I meant no harm. Holloa, what a mist it is!" he broke off, as they came to the end of the walk and the open field beyond it. "One can hardly see ten yards before one. I must see you home,"

"No, no, no!" cried Alison, vehemently. "I know my way perfectly—better than you do—I shall go alone. You will have enough to do to get back to the parsonage; take care you don't miss the path. Good-by, sir."

She flew from him across the field and was lost in the mist. He took the opposite path.

"And so that's the last of Reginald Vavasour," thought Alison." It serves me right. What a simpleton I have been!—as Thomas called me. How I hope mamma has not got home."

The mist seemed to grow more dense every minute, and Alison really found her own gate with some difficulty. Her bonnet had not been put away above a minute when Mrs. Reece came in.

"Such a dreadful mist," she observed to Alison; I don't think I ever saw such a one. It came on suddenly after the most lovely sunset. Quite a remarkable sunset. I hope you noticed it, child."

"Thomas Watkyn took care I should do that, mamma. He called it divine."

"Indeed, it looked nothing less," replied Mrs. Reece. "I am glad you have had Thomas here.'"

Alison complained of a headache, and went up to bed; she was afraid of being questioned. If the evening could come over again she would treat Thomas Watkyn differently. She felt a little ashamed of herself; she felt a little uneasy.

"But I will make it up with him," she sighed, as she laid her head upon the pillow. "He will be sure to let me; he is so good and he loves me so truly."

Alison awoke betime, and to a vague sense of uneasiness. It was a fine morning, the mist all cleared away. As she stood at the window, the rising sun, lifting himself majestically in the east, tinted her cheeks in a rose-red flush, and threw down on the green meadows floods of golden light, while the songs of thrushes and larks broke out from every hedge and coppice.

"We must make the damson jam to day," observed Mrs. Reece to her as they rose from breakfast. "And if you would only wash up these breakfast things, Alison, while Patty goes about her other work. I should soon have the kitchen table clear and might begin it."

"Oh, very well," answered the girl cheerfully, for she had been taking herself to task for her past behavior, and meant to turn over a new leaf. "You shall have the table cleared directly, mother."

She was busy in the kitchen when she heard her mother open the front door and some one come in. "It is that chattering Mrs. Bennett," thought she, as she dried the teaspoons.

"Alison! come here" called her mother, in a quick voice.

She went to the parlor just as she was—her sleeves turned back at the wrists, a large brown holland apron on. Very pretty she looked with it all. But it was not Mrs. Bennett who sat with her mother; it was a venerable, white haired old gentleman—Mr. Watkyn the elder.

"I am come to ask about Thomas," he said, "I believe he came here last night, Miss Alison; at what time did he leave you?"

A prevision struck her, with a sort of terror, that something was wrong. "He left quite early," she faltered.

"Well, he has never come home."

"Not come home!" she said with a whitening face.

"I sat up till 1 o'clock, and then I thought the mist must have kept him, that he had staid at some friend's house, I knew not what to think, and that he would be home the first thing this morning. But we have not seen, and I can not hear of him."

Mrs, Reece impressed with the frightened, guilty look that Alison could not keep out of her countenance, and began to feel uneasy. "Can not you not tell what time it was when he left you!" she demanded sternly.

"It was before dusk; it was just after sunset, before the mist came on. It must have been near 7 o'clock."

"Which road did he take?" pursued Mrs. Reece. And very reluctantly Alison answered, for she saw it would bring on further questioning.

"The long way—round by the hill."

"Round by the hill!" echoed Mr. Watkyn, in alarmed surprise. "Why did he take that way?"

Alison flushed and paled alternatively; her lips were trembling. The fear creeping upon her was that he and young Vavasour had met and quarreled. Perhaps fought—and injured one another fatally. In these dread moments of suspense the mind is apt to conjure up far-fetched and unlikely thoughts.

"I asked him to go round that way," she replied, in a timid tone: "I wanted him to leave a note for me at the dressmaker's."

Old Mr. Watkyn sank into a chair, putting up his hands before his troubled face. "I see it all!" he breathed faintly; "he must have fallen down the Scar."

Alison uttered a scream of horror.

"Deceived by the mist he must have walked too near its edge," continued the old man. "Heaven grant that it may not be so! but—I fear it. Was he mad?—to attempt to cross the plateau on such a night!"

Catching up his hat, Mr. Watkyn went out swiftly. Mrs. Reece grasped her daughter's hands. They were icy-cold.

"Alison, what passed between you and Thomas last night?"

"Don't ask me, mother! Let me follow Mr. Watkyn; I cannot rest indoors. Oh, it can not, can not be as he fears!"

"Not one step till you tell me what passed," said the mother, firmly. "There's more in this than meets the eye."

"He asked me to give up talking to Mr. Vavasour."

"And you refused. Well?"

"He told me I must choose between them," continued Alison bursting into tears. "Oh, mother, it was all folly, all my temper; he could not see that, and when he went away he said he went for good."

Mrs. Reece drew in her thin lips sternly. She stood thinking.

"And what does it mean about you giving him a note for the dressmaker? I do not understand. You had nothing to write about."

The girl got her hands free and flung them before her face to deaden the sobs. But Mrs. Reece was a resolute mother at times, and she extorted the confession. Alison had improvised the note, and sent Thomas around the long way to deliver it, and so keep him from passing by the willow walk.

"Oh, child, child!" moaned the dismayed woman. "If he has indeed fallen over the Scar it is you who will have given him his death."

And it proved to be so. In taking the two miles round between the cottage and the farm a high and perpendicular precipice called the Scar, had to be passed. The table-land or plateau, on the top was wide and a perfectly safe road by daylight, since a traveller could keep as far from the unprotected edge as he pleased. But on a dark night or in a thick fog it was most dangerous. Deceived by the mist of the previous night, Thomas Watkyn must have drawn near the edge unwittingly and fallen over. There he lay, on the sharp rocks, when the poor father and others went to look for him, his death-like face upturned to the blue sky.

"Speak to me, Thomas! speak to me!" wailed Alison, quite beside herself with remorse and grief, as she knelt by him, wringing her hands. "Oh, Thomas, speak to me! I loved you all the while."

But Thomas neither spoke nor moved. The voice that had nothing but tender words for her was silenced now; the heart she had so grieved might never beat in joy or sorrow again.

No person had seen or spoken with him after quitting her on the previous night, save the dressmaker, little, industrious Miss Ford. She had answered his knock herself, and he put the note into her hand, saying Miss Reece had asked him to leave it in passing. "What a thick mist it is that has come on," he said to her in his pleasant, chatty way. "Ay, it is indeed, sir," she answered, and shut her door as he walked away.

For many weeks Alison Reece lay ill with brain fever, hovering between life and death. Some people said it was the shock that made her ill and took her senses away; others thought she must have loved the poor young man to distraction; no one, save her mother, knew it was the memory of her last interview with him, and the scheming to send him on the route that led to the accident, that had well-nigh killed her. But the young are strong in their tenacity of life, and she grew better by slow degrees.

One warm April afternoon, when the winter months had given place to spring, Alison, leaning on the arm of her mother, went to sit in the porch. She was very feeble yet. It was the first time she had sat there since that memorable evening with her ill fated lover. There she remained, thinking and dreaming. They could not persuade her to come in, so wrapped her in a warm shawl.

Sunset came on, and was almost as beautiful, curious, perhaps, that it should be so, as the one he and she had watched together more than six months before. The brilliant beams shone like molten gold in the glowing west, the blue sky around was flecked with pink and amethyst. Alison's eyes were fixed on the lovely scene with an enraptured gaze, her lips slightly parting with emotion.

"Alison, what are you thinking of?"

"Of him, mother. Of his happiness. He is living in all that glorious beauty. I think there must have been an unconscious prevision in his mind, by what he said that evening as we watched it, that he should soon be there. Oh, mother, I wish I was going to him! I wish I could be with him to-morrow."

The mother paused; she felt inclined say something, but feared the agitation it might cause.

"Well, well, child, you are getting better," she presently answered.

"Yes, I do get better," sighed the girl. "I supposed it pleased God that I should."

"Time soothes all thing. Alison. In time you will be strong again and able to fulfil life's various duties with a zest. Trials are good—Oh, so good!—for the soul. But for meeting with them we might never learn the way to heaven."

Alison did not answer. Her feeble hands were clasped in silent prayer, her face was lifted to the glories of the evening sky.

It was at the same sunset hour, an evening or two later, that Alison, who was picking up strength daily, strolled away to the church-yard. She wanted to look for a new-made grave in that corner where so many of the Watkyns lay buried.

She could not see it; the same gravestones that were there before were there now; there was no fresh one.

"Perhaps they opened the old vault for him," thought Alison, as she sat down on the bench just inside the gate, for she was too weak to walk back again without a rest.

The sun was going down to-night without any loveliness; just a crimson ball, which seemed to give a red light to the atmosphere, and to light up redly the face of a pale tottering man, who was coming up to the gate by help of a stick. He halted when he reached it. Alison turned sick and faint with all manner of emotions as she gazed at him, fright being uppermost.

"Alison!"

"Thomas?"

He held out his hand; he came inside; his pale sad face wore for her its old sweet expression.

"Oh, Thomas, I thought you were dead," she burst forth in a storm of sobs. "I came here to look for your grave. I thought I had killed you."

"They thought I was dead at first; they thought for a long while that I should die," he answered, as he sat down by her, keeping her hand in his. "But the skillful medical men have raised me up, under God. I hope in time to be strong and well again."

"Can you ever forgive me?" she wailed, bitter, painful tears falling down her cheeks like rain. "I shall never fergive myself."

"No? Then you must atone to me, Alison, instead. Be all the more loving to me during our future lives. We must pass them together, my dear."

"Do you mean it—still?" she gasped. "O Thomas! how good and true you are! If I can only be a little bit worthy of you!"

They walked home slowly, arm in arm. Neither could walk fast yet. Mrs. Reece came to the porch to meet them. God is full of mercy, she thought.

"I did not tell her, Thomas," she said, "she was so dreadfully low when she came out of the fever. I meant to tell her to-night."

"I have told her myself; it was best so," answered Thomas Watkyn.—The Argosy.

Very Proper.

An old maid from the country was visiting a city friend in whose house was a telephone. Early one morning there was a call for her and the servant went to her room.

"Miss Jane," she said, "there's a call for you at the telephone."

"I'll be there in a minute."

"Come now."

"I'm not dressed."

"You can't wait; it's a gentleman and he's in a hurry."

"A gentleman? Good heavens, then I won't move a step till I get on my clothes. Do you think I'd go down to that telephone and talk to a man without a dress on? I don't know what your city styles may be, but I do know what is proper in the country, and that man can wait till I'm ready or not see me, that all."

Clothing for Cold Weather.

The usual dress is sufficient in quantity, and often good in quality, but it is very badly distributed. There is too much about the trunk, and too little about the lower extremities. If one-quarter of the heavy woollen overcoat or shawl were taken from the trunk, and wrapped about the legs, it would prove a great gain. When we men ride in the cars, or in a sleigh, where do we suffer? About the legs and feet! When women suffer from the cold, where is it? It is about the legs and feet!

The legs and feet are down near the floor, where the cold currents of air move. The air is so cold near the floor that all prudent mothers say, "Don't lie there, Peter; get up, Jerusha Ann; play on the sofa; you will take your death of cold lying there on the floor." And they are quite right. If the room be well ventilated, the air down near the floor is very much colder than it is up above our heads. And it is in that cold stratum of air that our feet and legs are constantly. A few Yankees put them on the mantel-shelf, but the majority keep their feet on the floor.

Besides this, the feet and legs, on account of their being so far away, and on account of their size, with the air all about them, are disposed to be too cold, even without being in a colder atmosphere.

Under all these circumstances, men wear one thickness of wool and cotton and one thickness of black cloth about their legs, and three or four times as much about their chests; and now they often add an immense pad called a "Chest Protector." And women indulge in a still greater contrast.

During the damp and cold season the legs should be encased in very thick knit woollen drawers, the feet in thick woollen stockings (which must be changed every day), and the shoe-soles must be as broad as the feet when fully spread, so that the blood shall have free passage. If the feet are squeezed in the least, the circulation is checked, and coldness is inevitable. This free circulation cannot be secured by a loose upper with a narrow sole. If when the foot stands naked on a sheet of paper it measures three and a half inches, the sole must measure three and a half.

I will suppose you have done all this faithfully, and yet your feet and legs are cold. Now add more woollen, or, if you are to travel much in the cars or in a sleigh, wear a pair of sheep-skin drawers.

I have known a number of ladies afflicted with hot and aching head, and other evidence of congestion about the upper parts, who were completely relieved by a pair of sheep-skin drawers and broad-soled shoes. Three ladies in every four suffer from some congestion in the upper part of the body. It is felt in a fulness of the head, in sore throat, in palpitation of the heart, torpid liver, and in many other ways. It is well known that a hot foot-bath will relieve for the time being any and all of these difficulties. This bath draws the blood into the legs and feet, relieving the congestion above. What the hot foot-bath does for an hour, the broad-soled shoes with thick woollen stockings, and a pair of flannel drawers, with a pair of wash-leather drawers added, will do permanently. Of course I am speaking of cold weather. No one hesitates to multiply the clothing about the trunk. Why hesitate to increase the clothing about the legs? As a preventive of many common affections about the chest, throat, and head, including nasal catarrh, I know nothing so effective as abundant dress about the lower extremities.

The bath is a good thing, exercise is a good thing, friction is a good thing; but our main dependance in this climate must ever be warm clothing. Already we overdo this about our trunks, but not one person in ten wears too much clothing about the legs.—Dio Lewi's Monthly.

The Fool.

From Tourgeneff's "Poetry in Prose."

There lived a fool in the world. For a long time he remained content and happy; but slowly rumors reached him that everywhere he was held to be a brainless idiot.

Grieved was the fool, and began to think how he could stop these slanders. A sudden idea lightened his poor, darkened brain, and without delay he began to execute it.

He met an acquaintance on the street, who praised highly a renowned painter.

"Mercy!" exclaimed the fool, "this painter is almost forgotten. You do not know that? I did not expect to find you so naif. You are behind the time!"

His acquaintance blushed, and hurriedly agreed with the fool.

"What a beautiful book I read to-day!" another acquaintance said to him.

"Beg pardon, are you not ashamed? This book is good for nothing; all have long ago abandoned it."

And this acquaintance also made haste to quickly agree with the fool.

"What a marvelous man is my friend, N. N.!" said a third acquaintance to the fool.

"Why!" exclaimed the fool, "N. N. is known to be a scoundrel! to have robbed his relatives. Who does not know that? I pity you!"

The third acquaintance did as the others, and forgot his friend. Whosoever or whatsoever was praised in the presence of the fool, he made always a similar reply, adding sometimes the refrain, "And you believe yet in authorities?"

"Malicious, captious man!" began the fool's acquaintances to say of him, "but what a head!" "And what a tongue!" said others. "Ah, he is a man of talent!"

It ended in a publisher's asking the fool to control the critical section of his paper; and he began to beguile everybody, without changing his expressions or exclamations.

And now he who inveighed so much against authorities is himself an authority, and the youth worship and fear him. And what are the poor youth to do? If even it is not proper, generally speaking, to worship, fail to do it here and you will be pronounced stupid. Fools can make their way among cowards.—The Century.

Matrimonial Mention.

"Jamos, I hear that our mutual friend, Habberton, has married the Widow Mayham."

"It's a fact, and she's worth $50,000."

"He surely couldn't have been attracted by her face."

"Oh, dear, no; it was her figure."—The Hoosier.

HOW MOSAICS ARE MADE.

Piecing Together the Delicate Shades of Indestructible Pictures.

One of the very few industries of Rome is the manufacture of mosaics, the largest establishment being under the control of the Church, and employed almost entirely in the adornment of churches and religious establishments. The process of making a picture in mosaic is very slow, and requires the highest order of skill. To begin with, mosaic is made of glass, and its value consists in its being indestructible. The workmen in great pictures have to have something over 27,000 shades of colored glass to produce the tints requisite, as in a mosaic every color is necessary the same as in an oil painting. To make a picture the process is this:—A plate of metal of required size is surrounded by a raised margin an inch in height. A mastic cement of powdered stone, lime, and linseed oil is spread over the bottom of the plate and that covered with plaster paris to the level of the rim. Upon this the picture to be made is carefully drawn, and the mechanic's work commences. He takes a piece of glass of the exact tint necessary and fits it to its place, grinding to get the shape. Then he goes on, one piece at a time, till the picture is finished, then the face ground down to a smoothness, and the picture is set in its place.

Some of the greatest pictures of ancient and modern times are in mosaic, the tints, with all the delicate shades, being as carefully reproduced as in oil, and the effect being even greater. The ceilings of many of the great churches are entirely of mosaic, as well as many of the great altar pieces and other decorations. As they are utterly indestructible and never lose their color, they are very much prized. A picture in mosaic costs, but then it is eternal, barring fire and earthquakes.

All over Rome are small shops devoted to the manufacture of mosaic table tops, box covers, etc., the workman toiling all his life on one subject. The man who commences on St. Peter's, on table tops, or the Coliseum, never does another subject, and he becomes so skillful in this one subject that he is enabled to make them not only well but very cheaply He has only the tints to manage that enter into the one picture, and he places them mechanically and very rapily.—P. V. Nasby in Toledo Blade.

HOME DECORATIONS.

A pretty mat, intended for the top of a table, is made of drab felt. The edge is cut in sharp points; between these points are placed soft little tassels made of high colored crewell. The border of the mat is made by working with gay embroidery silks any pattern which suits the fancy of the maker. The old-fasgioned cross-stitch, or some modification of the feather-stitch, is pretty.

A pretty chair-back is made of an antique lace stripe put over silk. Have the lace in the center and on the silk stripes of the same width at each side; embroider a pretty vine. This is lovely, made of the lace and blue silk, with sprays of small pink buds, or of cardinal satin with daisies and buttercups on it. The top is turned down and hemmed, and the bottom may be finished with lace, or be made in points with a tassel on each point.

A handsome panel for the wall is made of a strip of black satin 15 inches long 7 inches wide. On this is embroidered in silk a bunch of pinks. The top and bottom of the panel are finished with bands of scarlet plush, about two inches wide. A brass wire is fastened to the top, and a silk cord to hang it by. On the bottom are fine silk balls of various shades of red. The panel should be lined with some material of sufficient body to keep it smooth. Another elegant panel is made of pale blue satin or plush, with a bird and nest painted on it in water colors.

TABLE COVER.—Take sixteen blocks of cretonne one quarter square. Arrange them so there will be a landscape on each of the four corners. In putting the blocks together lay one edge over the other and sew. Line with Turkey-red cotton. Put black dress braid down each seam and across, also around the side of border next to blocks. Sew firm on each side of braid, feather-stitch braid with shaded yellow, red and green embroidery [silk. Finish the lower edge of border with narrow ball fringe. This makes a lovely cover for most anything, and can be made smaller if desired,

How Palmer's Friends Got a Drink.

When track drivers get together they will have their fun. Doc Palmer, as all know, progresses through the world with an artifical leg. Some months ago Doc and a number of the boys found themselves in a Connecticut town. Hotel accommodations were decidedly precarious, and it was just Doc's luck to be quartered in a room meant to contain two, but affording shelter for half a dozen. Early in the morning the greater part of the party woke up with "coppers hot," and a diligent search failed to produce enough Federal money to pay for the necessary refreshment. In canvassing the situation Doc Palmer's artificial leg came in the range of vision of the greatest wag of the party. Catching up the leg, the conspirators filed down stairs, leaving the owner snoring in blissful ignorance of the theft. Ranged along the bar, each man was quickly served with his favorite beverage.

"How much do we owe you?" inquired the custodian of Doc Palmer's limb.

"Two dollars and forty cents," was the reply.

"All right. We'll leave this with you, and a man will come along soon and pay you the money." So saying, he handed the astonished barkeeper the leg.

"Very well," said that worthy, when he had recovered his breath, "I guess that's good security."

By and by a stumping sonud was heard on the stairs, and presently Doc Palmer made his appearance. He went straight to the bar and inquired for his missing property. The sequal was, Doc settled, but the boys gave him a wide berth until they considered it safe to approach him.

During a gale recently a part of the wall of the Dominion Bridge Company's works at Lachine, near Montreal, was blown down, causing a tremendous crash. Six of the workmen were caught in the ruins and badly injured, but none were killed.

MIMICS AMONG ANIMALS.

Birds, Fishes, and Insects that are Able to Change Color.

"Look out!" said a naturalist as the reporter was about to sit down in an olive-green plush chair An investigation of the seat brought to light a green snake of the exact hue of the plush, coiled up and fast asleep.

"Pull up another chair," said the snake owner with a laugh.

The reporter picked his way across the room, stepping on a horned toad that was huddled close to some Turkish figures on a rug, only to find the back of another chair occupied by a bright green lizard from South Carolina. A third trial, however was successful.

"No," said the naturalist, who was busy with a microscope, "they have not moved the Zoological Garden up here, but I have quite as good a display, though on a smaller scale. The difficulty you had in seeing the snake and anolis, and the fact of your stepping on the toad, are illustrations of the success of my experiments.

"If you have ever thought particularly on the matter," he continued, pouring a little carmine into a sea of radiolarians, "you must have noticed that in all nature there is a strong tendency to adaptation to locality. This is especially so in regard to color, and often true as to form. The little snake that you came near sitting on is a perfect mimic of the rich green grass in which it is found, and you would never suspect its presence if you did not see it move. I am confident that it can adapt itself to darker or lighter shades. This morning I had it on a light-green cushion, and in a few minutes it adapted itself to it so that it was almost invisible, and now you see it has assumed an entirely different hue."

"Is the change a physiological secret?"

"Not at all. We have well-defined ideas concerning it. In the first place, we know many animals change their color at a moment's notice, especially fishes and reptiles. Among the former the stickleback, perch, serranus, and dolphin are the most remarkable. In many this change is evidently made at the option of the fish. This is also true of the reptiles, and now for the explanation. Here is a microscopical section of a frog's skin. You see it consists of two distinct portions, the epidermis and the cutis. The former is made up of cells, while the latter contains nerves, fibres, and cavities for cell elements. These cells are filled with pigment or coloring matter, and are known as chromatophoses, and to their contraction and expansion is due the coloring of various animals, for all, from man down, have them, differing in color in different individuals and in various parts of the body. Different colors or degrees of intensity seem to cause a contraction or expansion of the cells. Thus, in the Gobins, the pigment cells, that are yellow when distended, assume an orange-colored hue when contracted, and the orange or red cells when shrunk become brown or black, as the case may be. Now, when a fish that habitually lives on a white bottom passes on to a black one the change is conveyed by the eye to the brain, and telegraphed, so to speak, to the pigment cells by way of what are called the sympathetic nerves, and the change is produced.

"How do we know this? By watching a blind fish pass from one colored ground to another. In such a case there is no change at all. The eye is the medium, yet there is probably no intelligent appreciation on the part of the animal that the change has been made. The experiments with the sympathetic nerves are very remarkable. By cutting one a fish has been shown spotted on one side and stripped on the other, and, in fact, the coloring is at the will of the skilled anatomist. The anolis, our common southern lizard, that seems to take the place of the chameleon, is the most wonderful in its power of changing color, adapting itself to a variety of hues.

"But probably the most striking mimics are those that imitate other objects and animals in form. Here," he continued, taking out a large steel engraving, "is a fish allied to our Lophius that was captured by the Challenger on her famous trip. You see, it is all covered with barbels of flesh that exactly resemble seaweed, both in shape and color, and when clinging to the bottom it is perfectly invisible so to speak. A number of our fishes are equally protected. Here is a sea horse that has recently been discovered in Australian waters. It has a prehensile tail, and clings like a ring-tailed monkey to the seaweed, and from its back and tail at intervals these long, pinkish streamers float, exact in their imitation of the surrounding weed. Other sea horses have more delicate ornaments that look like fine lace or streamers, and so escape detection.

"Among insects there are even more striking examples. Here is a caterpillar that I received from China. The finder informs me that when aroused it imitates a small shrew, so that birds that are following it suddenly draw off, when the inoffensive creature stops and raises its head, which appears to lengthen out and widen, assuming a ferocious aspect. Many insects resemble leaves and sticks, and one so resembles a pink orchid that it is with great difficulty distinguished from the flower. This is a defence from large enemies, but small fry taking it for a flower come near and are caught, so that its mimicry serves two ends—as a decoy and a protection.

"Among moths the cases of mimicry are often perfect, and I have seen them alight directly in front of me and been unable to perceive them for a few moments. The little moths of the genus alucita are remarkable for their imitation of the down of thistles and various plants. Their wings are beautifully frayed and silvered, and they come tumbling and rolling toward you, occasionally gently alighting on the bushes, and you would almost always take them for the innocent down of some plant. A still more wonderful insect mimic is the orange-tipped butterfly. When outspread and during flight it is very conspicuous, but when in the bushes it frequents, with its wings folded, it finds perfect protection in its resemblance to the flowers. In fact, persons who have been pursuing it have been astonished at its disappearance right under their fingers. In India there are butterflies that are exact in their imitation of flowers and leaves. Not only is the color imitated, but the spots of mildew that are common on leaves at certain times.

"Here is a lizard," the naturalist continued, taking down a specimen that was preserved in alcohol, "and is one of the most remarkable known. It is one of the Geckos, and its tail is a perfect mimic of the palm trees upon which the animal feeds. You see the edges and frayed ends are just the same; in fact, they seem made for each other. Here is another, called the Leaf-tailed Geckos; its tail resembling a leaf so exactly that even experts are deceived. The animal when observed creeps upon the under surface of the limb and holds up its tail, that exactly resembles a leaf growing on the limb. When hard pressed the animal has another expedient. Finding itself cornered by a bird or larger animal of any kind, it gives a jerk to its tail and throws it off to a distance of several inches and there it leaps and tosses about, attracting the attention of the pursuer until the lizard has escaped."

"But this would only serve for one attack," suggested the reporter.

"That is the strangest part of it," was the reply. "The tail grows again, and not only that, but two tails often appear, giving the creature a most strange appearance. Another Gecko is luminous at night, a protection that frighten off its foes and attracts its food—insects. Birds are also protected; their eggs invariably match the ground, and are spotted with different colors to make them in general inconspicuous. Many of the northern animals are white, as the bear, and arctic fox; and a great many birds and animals change to dark in summer, to match the vegetation, and when the ground is covered with snow assume a pure white hue. The ermine and ptarmigan are familiar examples. In fact, this mimicry is nature's endowment to her defenceless dependents."

A More Dangerous Position than Baseball Umpire.

"Bill, what was the orfn lest situation yer ever was in in yer life?"

"Well, yer see it is too harrerin' to a man's feelin's to think on."

"That bad?"

"Yes. I was down to Economy Flats, in Kansas, nigh onto ten year ago. There was a Haughty cultural show gotten up—a kind of a butter, cheese, and fruit circus, with flowers and temperance orators. But what took the bakery of the whole programme was a prize for little kids under one year of age."

"Goats?"

"No, babies!"

"Must a been a pretty sight?"

"You're right. There was seventy-six fond parrints as brought their cherubins and terrapins into the course, and each mother thort she was sure to get the bulge on the rest."

"They couldn't all win."

"Stands ter reason, no. Well, would yer believe it? Ef they didn't go an' pint me one of the jedges."

"Quite an honor."

"So I suppose. Well, we sampled out a chirpy little fellow an' put the ticket on him. Then the trouble began. Ef yer could could jest mix up a earthquake, storm at sea, a lynchin' bee in Colorado, a dog fight an' a Fourth ward caucus yer'd only get a mild form of the shakin' up us committeemen got into. One man's cheeks was so scratched up they had to put a wax mask onto his face. There wasn't more hair on the heads of them baby jedges than ud make whiskers for a six weeks' old mouse. Say, mister, let's take drink an' drown the recollections of such an orful incidence."

They drowned them.

Woman's Work in Germany.

With all their excellence in many departments, Germans have little to boast of in the actual comforts of life or the treatment of women.

To American ideas the relations of the sexes seem to be utterly incongruous, and the German woman seems to occupy the position of an Indian squaw. While the men may be seen in the beer-shops you may drive past fields where you will see women digging up the fields, not here and there, but in gangs. Again you will see a line of women mowing a crop or field-planting potatoes. When the marken-cart goes to town to dispose of the fruits of her labor, the woman goes as the farm hand to assist the husband.

The petty trades, the itinerant vendors on the streets, are, in multituds of cases, women where we should expect to see men. You will meet in the streets of the towns women carrying infants in their arms, yet bearing on their backs a tottering structure of wooden-ware which they are endeavoring to sell. The basket-weaver peddles through the streets the work of her hands.

Undoubtedly those who wish to see women enter more into the employments usually followed by men will scarcely care to recommend such vocations as these to our poorest women.

Setting a Dislocated Neck.

John Ibetson and his son Robert, of Troy, fell from the roof of a house on which they were working in East Syracuse. The distance was fifty feet. Ibetson is portly, and weighs more than 200 pounds. His son fell on top of him. When Mr. Ibetson was taken up he was completely paralyzed. The physicians who were called found that Mr. Ibetson's neck was dislocated in precisely the way which commonly results in cases of hanging. His arms and legs were powerless, his head immovable, and his body so devoid of sensation that he did not feel a pin thrust into him anywhere. He could speak. The doctors decided to try to repair the dislocation. Two strong men seized his feet, two more took hold of his head, and they pulled in opposite directions with all their might, while the doctors manipulated the bones of the neck. It was 4:30 p. m. before the man's neck was set. When the pressure caused by the displacement of the bones of the neck was removed from the spinal column the man raised his arms and said he felt better. Anæsthetics were next applied, and the patient said that he felt no pain during the operation. The doctors say that he will recover.

The proudest boast of man is that he is a reasoning creature. The possession of reason is the one characteristic by which he is most readily separated from the brutes around him. But there are many times presented to view phases of action and opinion, which may well lead the thoughtful person to question whether the mass of his fellow-beings can be called reasoning creatures. Certain it is that in very many instances they are the most unreasonable ones.

A Native Wedding in Java.

The following is from a private letter just received from Java: "The village through which we passed was en fete—garlands of leaves and flowers hung across the road, while a broad avenue leading off to the right was a mass of whitened earthy pots, set upright on smaller pots. We were whisked down this avenue, and found ourselves in an immense courtyard full of natives—there must have been hundreds of them. The carriage stopped, and a very dapper Japanese advanced, bowing and smiling and holding out his hand. Our salutations exchanged, he beckoned us to go with him to the Pan-doppo, a raised place, covered over, in the middle of the square, and opposite to his own house, for he turned out to be the wydono or chief man of the village. On this dais were a sofa, chairs and table; and, after we had been placed in the seat of honor, we were presented with wine, tea, brandy, and the inevitable gin and bitters; while our aimable host and some half-dozen native chiefs talked away in Malay, of which we knew not a word. The court was gradually filling with natives, while the gammelong, the national musical instrument, was kept going in a deafening manner.

"At last, after an eternity of waiting, a procession filed in, consisting of many mounted wydones and about a dozen men naked to the waist, painted over with yellow paste—a most hideous sight—and carrying immense red and yellow banners. Then followed people carrying offerings of fruit and flowers, and finally two closed carriages, followed by two men hideously painted with ochre and prancing on enormous pasteboard horses. They looked too comical with the long sticks between their legs. They were accompanied by an old haggard woman decked out with flowers, paper tassels, etc. Naked to the waist, with her gray hair loose, the contortions of this old lady and the pride with which she threw her head about were most amusing.

"The wydono came sailing forward and escorted us to his house, where in a back room was an estrade covered with beautiful white cocoanut matting, and here sat in state two of the most extraordinary figures possible, a woman whose face was one mass of ochre, with fantastically painted eyebrows, her head, neck, arms, and tunic covered with enormous diamonds; her companion, a man painted in like manner, and wearing a tall hat encircled with diamonds, and his ears covered with large pointed ass's ears of gold, also heavily enriched with diamonds. Behind this singular pair were two women, half-naked and painted yellow, holding peacocks' tails in their hands; while behind them again were two dummy figures similarly painted. The room was crammed with natives, and you may imagine our feelings when our host directed us to ascend the dais, himself remaining behind. After many signs and much hesitation we had to get up, and with our travel-stained boots to advance to those personages, who then rose and held out their hands to us. The wydono, evidently pitying our uncertainty, then motioned to us to come away, and soon we found ourselves in a room were a comfortable luncheon was prepared.

"After the repast, to our great relief, we were allowed to depart, our host giving me his arm most politely to the carriage. The ceremony we had witnessed was the marriage of a regent's or a prince's daughter with some Javanese functionary, and we happened on all the show by mere chance, the Resident of Dyocka having desired the wydono of that village to entertain us at tiffin."

Peter Cooper's Sympathy With Women.

Mrs. Susan N. Carter, the head of the Woman's Art School of the Cooper Institute, contributes an anecdotal paper to the December Century, in which she says of Mr. Cooper's aims: "'All I want,' he said, 'is, that these poor women shall earn decent and respectful livings, and especially that they shall be kept from marrying bad husbands.'

"This subject of unhappy marriages seemed to be a very prominent one in Mr. Cooper's mind. That women were often imposed upon, were ill-used and broken down, he had a lively conviction; and all his chivalry and sense of fatherly protection were enlisted to save them, so far as he could, from these ordinary misfortunes. While the world is now occupied with the question of what women can be taught, their 'higher education,' and many kindred subjects, Mr. Cooper's acute genius discovered, as by intuition, many years ago, the relation of women of the middle class to society, to industries, and the family. He saw that many of them could not marry, and he realized what must be the forlorn position of a number of elderly daughters of a poor man. He had noted the dangerous likelihood of giddy ignorant young girls marrying anybody for a home, even if the men they married were dissipated or inefficient; and he had the tenderest pity for poor widows or deserted wives. He talked many times, and at great length, on these subjects, and all circumstances and any sort of incident brought up this desire of his heart, to help women to be happy, independent, and virtuous.

"One of the last times he was at the school, and while a celebrated New York clergyman was giving a course of Lenten lectures to women, Mr. Cooper with his face all animated with his feeling about it, he said: 'Dr.——is of the wealthy class and he has been accustomed to deal with wealthy women. The world does not look like the same place to him that it does to me. If he could be in my place for a month, and read the letters I get from poor and suffering women, he would think that it would be best to have them taught anything which they could learn to enable them to lessen all this trouble.'"

Bishop Sepiacci, from Rome, will attend the Baltimore Council of Bishops.

Frank James, the outlaw, is said to be penniless and dying of consumption.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher presided at a tariff reform meeting in New York recently.

A new scheme for swindling veterans out of their pensions has been discovered at Washington.

The Pope has announced that he will try to stop financial mismanagement in the American church.

FOR SALE.

Farm of about 145 acres, 12 miles from Toronto; brick house, outbuilding nearly new; good young orchard, just commencing to bear; about 16 acres timber. ROBERT JAMES, Jr., Newton Brook P. O., Ont.

50c. | A GENUINE GERMAN DYSPEPSIA CURE. | 50c.

No injurious mineral, no poison, no irritating acids.

Acts on a different principle from other Bitters.

Possesses tonic, aperient and Digestive properties, and a principle that soothes the inflamed membranes, opens up the absorbing vessels of the Stomach and Liver, cures Dyspepsia, Catarrh of the Stomach, Liver Complaint, Constipation, &c.

Wm. Goldsmith, of Collingwood, Ont., suffered for years with the worst form of Dyspepsia; tried physicians and every remedy advertised without benefit. One bottle of Hoffman's German Bitters cured him.

Wholesale by Lyman Brothers, and Northrop & Lyman, Toronto.

FUN AND MYSTERY

ENDLESS AMUSEMENT FOR ONLY 30 CTS.

Have you seen it? The greatest collection of Games, Cards, Tricks Puzzles, Songs, etc., ever offered for anything like the money. AMUSEMENT FOR A WHOLE SEASON, for the old or young. Our NEW BUDGET contains the following: Heller's Conjuring Pack: the Mystic Oracle: Guide to Flirtation: 10 new Evening Games: Set of "Hold to Light Cards;" 1 Set Colored Chromo Cards; the Star Puzzle; 25 Ways to Get Rich; the "13" Puzzle; 5 Beautiful Face Pictures; Language of Jewels and Flowers; 101 Selections for Autograph Albums; 11 Popular Songs with Music, 13 New Tricks in Magic: Pack of Fun and Comic Cards; 1 Chinese Block Puzzle; the Roman Cross Puzzle; Great 25 Prize Puzzle; 1 set Transformation Pictures, change color right before your eyes, and Games of Fortune.

ALL FOR 30 CENTS, IN ONE OR TWO CENT POSTAGE STAMPS. By mail postpaid. Two Packages for FIFTY CENTS, five for ONE DOLLAR. Send at once and get the greatest bargain ever offered. Return this with order to avoid mistake.

JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

RHEUMATINE

An Internal Remedy and SURE CURE for all kinds of

RHEUMATIC COMPLAINTS!

If you are suffering from

Kidney Complaints

SOLID GOLD RINGS

ONLY ONE DOLLAR.

With a view to introducing our Real Gold goods we offer to send by Registered Mail, to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of only One Dollar, one of our Lady's or Gent's Elegant Solid Gold Band Rings, either engraved or plain. These rings are Warranted Gold and perfect in Design and Finish. They are such as are usually sold at $2 50 to $4. A chance is here offered to obtain a Gold Ring which will last a life-time at the nominal price of $1. Solid gold goods at their own recommendation, and there are none other so desirable for presents, as they serve as an everlasting remembrance of the giver. This is a special offer, and in ordering you will do well to send for both the engraved and plain rings, as if you wish only one you can easily sell the other to one of your friends at a handsome profit. If on receipt you are any way dissatisfied, you can at once return the ring or rings and we will promptly refund the money. Send strip of paper exact size of finger, and we will fit you perfectly.

JAMES LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

$1.50. $1.50.

281.

Solid Silver Brooch

MADE IN ANY NAME.

We advertise extensively and wish to ascertain the relative merits of different papers, as not five per cent. of our patrons refer to the paper in which they have seen our advertisement.

As the season is advancing when we make new contracts, we adopt the following plan, which we shall use as a guide in selecting papers in which to advertise for the coming year.

The public will readily understand the value of the information we get and why we can afford to pay liberally for it. We wish to impress upon our many thousands of patrons throughout the Dominion that this is a bona fide offer, and not a trade trick to sell goods.

The illustration at the head of this advertisement is a SOLID SILVER BROOCH, which we will furnish with ANY NAME DESIRED for $1.00 when accompanied by the annexed 50c. coupon. In no case will we send the brooch at the price without this coupon. The brooch is elegant and beautifully finished, and is good value for twice the price.

We send by mail, prepaid, and guarantee satisfaction. The proprietors of this paper endorse the above statement and guarantee.

AUXILIARY COUPON
VALUE 50 CENTS.

CHAS. STARK,
52 CHURCH STREET, TORONTO.

Send for our 96-page Catalogue, containing over 600 illustrations of Firearms, Silverware, Watches, Jewellery, etc.

Christmas and New Year's CARDS.

No. 1 Quality, 10 for 10c., 50 for 40c., 100 for 75c., 500 for $3, 1,000 for $5.

No 2 Quality—10 for 15c., 50 for 60c., 100 for $1.00, 500 for $4 00, 1,000 for $6.50.

The above two lines are very prettily got up, and will sell fast at 3c. and 5c. each. We can also fill orders for more expensive cards at lowest rates. Send us $1, $2, $3 $5 $10 or $25, and we will send you a nice assortment.

J. LEE & CO., MONTREAL, QUE.

A THRILLING STORY

RUTH BRANDON

THE AGENT'S DAUGHTER

Or, Science Against Savage Force

HIGHLY ILLUSTRATED

THIS WONDERFULLY ENTERTAINING TALE OF

LIFE ON THE FRONTIER

Among the Wild Indians of the Plains; delineates

A NEW PHASE OF WILD LIFE

In vivid portraits, in which alternating with

Terrible and Pathetic Incidents

Of Border Existence, are the most

SIDE-SPLITTING SCENES

—AND—

ASTOUNDING SURPRISES

The Heroine, Ruth Brandon, is a beautifully drawn character, having all the soft feminine graces with some of the self-reliance engendered by the residence on the Border.

The first chapters of this story will appear in THE WEEKLY MAIL of December 6th, and be continued in large instalments until concluded.

BE SURE TO SUBSCRIBE BEFORE THAT DATE SO AS TO SECURE THE OPENING CHAPTERS.

THE WEEKLY MAIL

WILL BE SENT TO ANY ADDRESS IN CANADA, THE UNITED STATES OR GREAT BRITAIN FOR ONE DOLLAR

FROM NOW TO THE END OF 1884.

Address——

THE MAIL,
TORONTO.

Robt. S. Rae.

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

Agents 1884 Wanted

READ THIS.

THE GREAT DOLLAR PAPER,

The Weekly Globe

FROM NOW TO END OF 1884

ONLY ONE—$1.00—DOLLAR.

THE * DAILY * GLOBE

THE GREAT CANADIAN PAPER.

Has the most extensive and influential circulation in British America, is noted for its extensive Cable and Telegraphic News, and is the great authority upon Commercial and Financial Matters throughout the Dominion.

SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year, . . . $7.00 | Half Year, . . . $3.50

Quarter Year, ... $1.75.

In order to increase our already large list of yearly subscribers to THE WEEKLY GLOBE, we make the following liberal and magnificent offer to every reader of this advertisement who wishes to take advantage of it at once.

For $3.50 we will send to any address in Canada or the U. S.,

THE WEEKLY GLOBE

from now to end of December, 1884, and in addition, A HANDSOME NICKEL OPEN-FACED STEM-WINDING WATCH.

The Watch is of convenient size; it is neat in appearance; it is a stem-winder, consequently requires no key; it is dust-proof, and a good time-keeper.

The above price includes postage upon Watch to any address in Canada or the United States. This offer only holds good until January 20th, 1884. We will start shipping watches on October 15th. Remittances should be sent at once, so as to enable us to procure necessary supply and fill orders with as little delay as possible. Address,

THE GLOBE PRINTING CO, (Limited),

TORONTO.

The Foremost Journal in the Dominion.

The Paper for the Farmer.

The Great Dollar Paper.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

MARKDALE

Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats!

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and delivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23, 1882. 80-1y

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

ALEX KAY

BOOT & SHOE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Wilson Benson

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,

CHEESE, SALMON,

LOBSTERS, SARDINES

In endless variety.

DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

WILSON BENSON.

July 6, 1882.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NTH.			GOING SOUTH
Read Down.				Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.			A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25		TORONTO	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00		CARDWELL JUNC.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45		ORANGEVILLE...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44		MOUNT FOREST..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15		TEESWATER	5 00	2 45
11 50	8 30		FLESHERTON	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45		MARKDALE,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55		OWEN SOUND....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.			A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE, General Manager

News Notes.

OWEN SOUND, Ont., Nov. 25.—The steamer Francis Smith, which was recently reported lost with 100 passengers, arrived here yesterday in good condition.

Miss Bell, a young lady pant-maker Toronto, has been arrested at Guelph for dressing in man's attire. Perhaps Miss Bell was only wearing the pants to show the quality of her sewing.

CHICAGO, Nov. 26.—All the railroads but the Michigan Central have adopted the twenty-four o'clock system.

The Grand Trunk Railway Company, always on the look-out to buy what it can't grab, is about to connect its system with the Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg, and thus secure a south shore route to Chicago. After a while, when the dog of monopoly gets a good grip, he'll give this country a shake which will make it feel sore.

A convention of railway men will shortly be held to draw up a uniform system of railroad signals. At present every road appears to have its own method of signalling.

What Constitutes a Nation?

Frequently of late Canada has been referred to as a nation.

Is Canada a nation?

What is a nation?

Is it a string of colonies joined together by Act of Parliament, but separated in every interest?

Can a nation officially speak two distinct languages?

Is the question of nationality settled when two of the colonies are fighting for a strip of disputed territory that neither cared for till the other claimed it?

What have we that is national?

Canada has a national day, when the shops and stores are shut; a Federal Parliament, where the provincial and party sore are opened.

We have nothing else national except the game of lacross and the Niagara Falls.

And half of the Niagara Falls belongs to the Yankees!—Morning News.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate. It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

THE Toronto Daily World clubbed with the STANDARD the balance of this and all of next year for $3.50.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

SEEING IS BELIEVING.

GENTLEMEN,—

If you want a first-class

Buggie or Wagon

call at

MCKENNA & MASON'S

CARRIAGE WORKS

MARKDALE.

They can supply you with anything from a

Lumber Wagon

up to

Extension Top Phæton.

To buy from them is o

SAVE MONEY!

They are both practical workmen, and employ none but

PRACTICAL WORKMEN

They guarantee their work Second to none for Lightness of Draught and Superiority of Finish.

They use nothing but First-class White Oak for Wagons, and thrice Extra Second Growth Hickory for light work.

The immense amount of work turned out of McKenna & Mason's shop is sufficien proof of the wide reputation they enjoy for doing good work.

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END Poor cheap work we positively will not take.

Special attention given to Re-Trimming and Repainting all classes of Carriage Work.

Satisfaction guaranteed (or No Pay) in

HORSESHOEI NG

SHOP—On Mill Street opposite to Sproule's Hotel.

McKENNA & MASON.

MARKDALE

PLANING, SASH, DOOR AND FURNITURE FACTORY.

Lumber Planed or Matched While Waiting.

Sash, Doors, and Mouldings always on hand or made to Order. All kinds of lumber, Lath and Shingles kept in stock. Furniture of all descriptions to be seen at our Warerooms. Lumber and cordwood will be taken in exchange for Furniture.

George Grant & Co.,

Proprietors.

WM. HOGG,

FLESHERTON STATION,

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods!

— IN —

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes, &c

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold very low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Station.

Nov. 1st, 1883.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

— AT —

Bulmers Photograph Gallery

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we are not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

New FALL Importations

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats, Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

VOL. 4.—

The Markdale

Is issued every Thursday, ... Street, Mark...

TERMS—$1 per year in ... not paid within three mont...

Professional and busine... space and under, per year,

1 YR

Whole column $50

Half column 27

Quarter column 15

Two inch space 7

Three inch space 10

Casual advertisements ... insertion, 3 cents per line ... insertion, nonpareil measu...

Editorial notices, or n... umn 10 cents per line first ... each subsequents insertion ...

Stray animals &c., adver... $1, the advertisement no... lines.

JOB PRINT...

THE STANDARD office has ... ment of poster as well as fi... cial attention to orders ... filled with dispatch.

C. W. RUTL...

EDITOR AND PRO...

SAMUEL WA...

WELL DIGGER AND ... orders promptly a... dence—Snider's Hill, Owen...

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R... Physician and Surge... Graduate of University, ...

" " ... Hon. Graduate, of the ... " " Aylesb... " " Opthalmic ... Member Coll. Physicians &...

J. P. MARSHA...

DENTIS...

GRADUATE OF TOR... of Dentistry, will ... Hotel, Markdale, on the 1s... nesday of each month and ... Hotel, Flesherton, the d... third Wednesday in each m... tice of his profession.

January 9th, 1883.

Legal.

Frost & Fr...

BARRISTERS, AND ... Law, Solicitors in C... ancers, &c., Owen Sound, ... Flesherton, Office open e... heretofore.

ALFRED FROST, J. ... County Crown Attorn...

J. MASSO...

BARRISTER, MASTER ... in Chancery, Notary ... ear, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARM...

OFFICES—Owen Sound, ... Poulett St.; Branch office ... McFarland's Store, on Fri... every week.

Creasor & Mo...

BARRIS... SOLICI... ances, &c. &c.

OFFICES in Owen Sound, ... over W. F. Wolf's Store ...

MARKDA...

Over W. J. McFarland's S... and Fridays of each week.

Funds to lend on rea...

JOHN CREASOR, Q.C. ...

Markdale, March 15, 188...

Alexander B...

ISSUER of Marriage L... Life Insurance Agen... in B. B. &c. Conveyan... Auctioneer for the County ... Merchants, and Land Sal... tended to and charges ma...

Priceville, Sept. 17, 188...

Wm. Bro...

ISSUER OF MARRIAG... Commissioner in B. ... Conveyancing in all its ... attended to and carefully e... N. B.—Money to Lend ... curity.

W. G. RICH...

BUILDER, CONTRAC... TECT.—Residence on ... dale.

Markdale, Jan, 24th, 18...

JOHN N...

MARKDA...

GENER'L BLA...

HORSE SH...

A SPECIA...

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 13. MARKDALE, ONT., DEC. 6. 1883. No. 169.

The Markdale Standard

Is issued evesy Thursday, at the office, Mill Street, Markdale.

TERMS—$1 per year in advance; $1.25 if not paid within three months.

Professional and business cards one inch space and under, per year, $4.

	1 YR.	6 MO.	3 MO.
Whole column	$50 00	$27 50	$15 00
Half column	27 00	15 00	10 00
Quarter column	15 00	10 00	6 00
Two inch space	7 00	4 00
Three inch space	10 00	5 00

Casual advertisements 8 cents per line first insertion, 3 cents per line each subsequent insertion, nonpareil measure.

Editorial notices, or notices in local columns 10 cents per line first insertion, 5 cents each subsequent insertion.

Stray animals &c., advertised 3 weeks for $1. the advertisement not to exceed twelve lines.

JOB PRINTING.

THE STANDARD office has a splendid equipment of poster as well as fine job type. Special attention to orders by mail. Orders filled with dispatch.

C. W. RUTLEDGE
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O.
Physician and Surgeon, Priceville,
Graduate of University. Viet. College.
" " New York, and
Hon. Graduate, of the same,
" " Ayleth Medical Institute.
" " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y.
Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCES, &c. &c.
OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in
MARKDALE;
Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
☞ Funds to lend on reasonable terms.
JOHN CREASOR, Q.C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

JOHN NOBLE,
MARKDALE,
GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING
A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

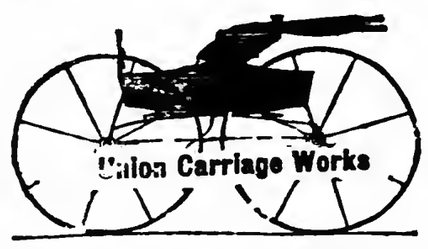
COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor.

GIBSON & McMILLAN,
CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.



GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail

{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED, from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.
FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from
FIRST CLASS MATERIAL
In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs
will receive prompt attention.
All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time
consistent with good workmanship.
GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.
Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside
D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor
Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

William McLeod,
BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,
MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel. 159-3m

MISS. GREEN,
DRESS AND MANTLE ROOMS.
DUNLOP'S BUILDING MARKDALE.

All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.
Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

A. HILL,
Fashionable Tailor,
OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.
A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

IN THE GOODS AND CHATTELS
—OF—
JOHN KIRKPATRICK,
(DECEASED.)

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to Section 34. of Chapter 107, R. S. O. the creditors of John Kirkpatrick, late of the township of Euphrasia, County of Grey, deceased, who died on or about the 21st Oct. 1883, and all parties having claims upon his estate are, on or before the
FIFTEENTH DAY OF DECEMBER, 1883
to send by post, prepaid, to Richard Woods, Rocklyn P. O., in the County of Grey, one of the executors, of the personal estate and effects of deceased, their christian and surnames, addresses and description, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and nature of the securities (if any) held by them, and in default thereof the assets of the said deceased will be distributed, having regard only to the claims then received, or those of them which the executors then have notice.
JOS. MANAREY, } Executors.
RICH. WOODS. }
Dated this 5th day of November, 1883.

EUCENIA
Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made extensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.
GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND
Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.
LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.
Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted
69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

ROBT. ASKIN,
MARKDALE,
Has opened out a First-Class
UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,
And therefore has supplied a want long felt,
COFFINS,
CASKETS, SHROUDS,
and all
FUNERAL FURNISHINGS
supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse
for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—
PICTURE FRAMING
Done on short notice.
ROBT. ASKIN.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,
BANKERS,

Money Loaned
IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.
Allowed on Savings Deposits.

☞ Drafts issued and Collections made on pointe, at lowest rates.
W.M. LUCAS,
Manager.
September 23, 1880. 2-ly

Chatsworth.

From a correspondent.

C. H. Matthews has leased his hotel here to Tuck & McLeod, late of Woodford. Matthews goes to Owen Sound where he will open in the same business, he is an off-handed obliging man and will no doubt receive a large share of patronage in his new stand. His farewell supper last Friday evening was largely attended. We wish him success.

The new men Tuck & McLeod are well and favourably known to the public and will doubtless retain their popular reputation in their new quarters. they take possession this week.

We have a short-hand writer here whom you should engage as reporter. You could then secure full report of the longest sermon if required.

The Oddfellows of this place together with a large number of others attended the late Mr. John Binns funeral in Owen Sound on the 19th. His unexpected demise cast a gloom over the village. He was highly respected here by all who knew him.

Preparations are being made for a tea-meeting in the Methodist church on Christm...

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

The Poliece Trustees once more breath freely, and sleep soundly, the threatened suit for damages having been dropped.

The addition of a number of buyers on the market, causes sharp competition, and some lively times.

Mr. T. Hanbury, has sold the property occupied by J. J. Middleton & Sons, as store and post office.

Mr. J. Marshall, returned from Iowa on Tuesday and was serenaded by the band.

SUICIDE.—Mrs. Thomas, a rather weakminded woman poisoned herself on Friday evening last. She took a quantity of saltpetre, but admitted taking something else. After suffering all day Saturday she died early on Sunday morning. No inquest was held, she leaves a husband and four small children.

The American Agriculturist for December closes the forty-second volumn of this leading farm journal with a most excellent number. It contains over ninety five original engravings by Forbes, Trumble, Folsom, Halm, and other artists. There are in all over one hundred original engravings, of which four are full-page, namely: "Home from the wood lot," "Typical Horses at the N. Y. Show," "Christmas comes but once a year," and a truly beautiful fiirst page cover. Among the well-known writers are Dr. Geo. Thurber, Orange Judd, Dr. B. D. Halstead, Prof. S. R. Thompson, M. C. Weld, J. M. Stahl, F. D. Coburn, D. M. Welday, Prof. A. J. Cook, W. D. Boynton, W. W. Meech, P. H. Jacobs, E. A. Long, M. E. Bamford, L. D. Snook, Mrs. G. Bush Jr.; Ethel Stone, Mrs. S. A. Elliott, and a long list of others. A remodelled House; Hints on hogg killing; Chinese farming in California; Prize poultry, and a prize sheep barn are a few of the very valuable articles presented. Mr. David W. Judd contains his Editorial Notes on many topics with engravings. Miss Carr's touching Christmas story will be read the second time by many, both old and young. All of the several departments are unusually full, and we only wonder that so much costly reading matter, and so many fine engravings, can be furnished for the pride ($1.50 per year) of this sterling journal of the Farm, Garden and Household. It should be found in every home.

The December number of the American Agriculturist contains about one hundred engravings, which is twenty-five per cent. more than that in any other illustrated periodical in this or any other country. These illustrations are engraved expressly for the paper by leading artists, covering a wide variety of rural subjects as well as farm inventions and contrivances. These engravings alone in any single issue of the paper are worth far more to every farmer and house keeper than the subscription price for five years. Notwithstanding the American Agriculturalist is fully worth four dollars a year, the subscription price will continue at $1.50 during 1984.

The Business Outlook.

It can no longer be denied that a period of commercial depression is upon us—nay, that it is even now at our very doors. The stock market has not been in so deplorable a condition since the autumn of 1880, and it is very doubtful if bottom has yet been reached. Rumors, more or less vague, are afloat with respect to the solvency of several local houses. The weather has been unfavorable, and the wholesale dry-goods business is almost at a stand still.

Some old heads, reputed to be wise, take a gloomy view of the situation. Others speak hopefully, while a few continue to deny that there is any depression at all. The last named we believe, are destined to a rude awakening before the advent of the spring.

But, according to the best opinion we are able to form, the outlook is by no means disheartening. That we shall have a dull winter is tolerably certain, though a good fall of snow would do wonders for us at the present time. Let us try to make the best, and not the worst, of the inevitable. The period of inflation is past, and the period of depression is sure to follow. But the inflation has not been very great, and there are few of the other discouraging circumstances which usually mark the commencement of hard times. The country is in every respect in far better codition than it was five years ago. The crops—with the single exception of the hay crop, have not been abundant but they have by no means been a total failure in any part of the country. In many districts the cereals have been up to the average. In a few they have been far below it. There has been some over importation, but not so much as is commonly supposed. The lumber trade has been, and continues to be fairly good.

So that there is no good reason for believing that the depression will be either very great, or of long duration. A hopeful front, and the exercise of due economy are the best remedies for the existing state of things. And they are remedies that, under similar circumstances, have never been known to fail.—Toronto Morning News.

BARN BLOWN OVER.—The storm last Wednesday night did more damage than was at first known of, the most serious loss in this neighborhood occurring in Glenelg. Mr. Henry Lawrence, had this summer erected a first class barn, yet although the building was strong, it was blown completely over making a complete wreck utterly destroying a new fanning mill, and numerous other articles. The grain being all exposed, a threshing machine was on hand the next day and threshed it out. We are really sorry for Lawrence, he is an industrious honest man, and is a real good fellow, too.—Durham Chronicle.

Glasgott.

From our own correspondent.

Owing to the superabundance of straw this season, in consequence of which a great quantity of grain had to be stacked. Many are making preparations to erect barns.

Should the winter prove favourable timbering will be gone into extensively in this section.

Those who have removed to Dakota advise their old neighbors who have comfortable homes in Ontario to stay there. There's no place like home.

Walter Fee, of Touchwood Hills, Manitoba, was married recently to Miss Annie Morrow of Glenelg, who left here last July for the above province. There appears to be good encouragement to "go West young ladies."

FOR THE FARMER.

Improving Farm Homes and Grounds.

The immediate surroundings of farmers homes generally are far from being as attractive in appearance as they easily can be made. Indeed the rural front yards are, as a rule, much less beautiful and interesting than those of people in the same general circumstances in towns and cities. In the latter, lawns are well cared for, and choice ornamental trees, shrubs, and flowers, are much oftener met with than about country homes. There is no valid reason for this. Such embellishments are not more easily acquired in the city, but just the reverse. The farmer has teams, implements and manures for putting the house grounds in the best condition for ornamental treatment; labor is quite as cheap as in town, while sodding costs far less in the country. Trees and plants are as cheap to the farmer as to any one, while in many places some of the best kinds for ornament can be had from the woods for the digging.

There may be points in which life on the farm lacks the attractions common to town life, but in charming home grounds the farmer is certainly to blame if the city dweller excels him. It is often wondered why country life has not charms sufficient to hold the boys to the farm, and that they grow up longing for the city. If more attention were given to making their home surroundings more cheerful and attractive for the sons and others of the family, there would be less heard of this trouble. And in all such work every proper effort is sure to be seconded by the wife; while nothing is more natural than for the children to be enthusiastic helpers in this work. Such improvements of course require some outlay, but this can hardly prove otherwise than a good investment. Every dollar judiciously spent in this way will soon be returned many fold in the increased valuation of any place, should it be desirable to sell, to say nothing of the greater happiness and love of home that will thus be inspired.

Now that the long evenings are to hand, this subject should receive due consideration. Plans may be drawn up for an improved arrangement of walks, drives, flower beds, shrubbery, borders, and other matters. Every detail of these can be decided upon, and entered upon a map, long before winter is over, so that when spring opens the work can go on intelligently and to the best advantage.

Poultry Raising as a Business.

There is just now much interest in poultry raising, and a disposition to take it up on a large scale. The following extract from one of our recent letters will give an idea of the many inquiries made of us: "Is poultry raising a profitable business, and would you advise a young man to invest one thousand dollars in it?"—This might be answered in brief: Poultry are profitable, and we would not advise a young man (nor an old one) to at once invest one thousand dollars in it. Farmers find the poultry yard the most profitable part of the farm, in proportion to the capital invested. Many reckon in this way: If fifty fowls are profitable, five hundred will be ten times as profitable. This is an instance in which figures do not tell the truth. As soon as the number of fowl is doubled, troubles are quadrupled. A range and houses which will keep fifty in perfect health, will be overcrowded with one hundred, and all the troubles due to a dense population will follow. While we believe that poultry keeping on a large scale may be made profitable, capital to purchase birds and build houses, is not the only thing needful. Those who undertake the business, must give their whole time and attention to it. One point is well settled—fowl can not be kept together in large numbers, and thrive. The whole matter requires careful study and experiment. The beginner should start in a small way, and increase as success seems to warrant it. The point to be determined at the outset, is: Shall eggs or dressed fowls be the object? Each requires a different management throughout, though the two may in a measure, be united. Starting with abundant capital, and no experience, will surely end in failure. The best works upon poultry management insist upon keeping fowl in small flocks; this is regarded essential to success.

Preparing for Spring in the Garden.

Wherever a crop is taken off, it will a great gain to manure and plow or spade the land, leaving it rough during the winter. All such work as making paths, laying drains, etc, is more advantageously done now than when the press of spring work is at hand. If new frames are needed, or straw mats, or crates for marketing produce, or garden labels are required; if implements are to be made, repaired or bought—whatever can be done in the present months—will save much valuable time in spring. Now, and all through the winter, add everything to the manure pile that will decompose and increase its bulk and value. Among the preparations for spring is the pricking out into cold frames, the cabbage, cauliflower, and lettuce plants from seeds. It is important to set the plants of cabbage and cauliflower down to the first leaf, so that the stem, the portion most readily injured by freezing, may be covered. The sashes should not be put over the plants until there is danger of severe freezing weather. Other frames should be made ready for very early lettuce. The soil is to be spaded and enriched and made ready for planting, and the frames then filled up with leaves. If there are shutters at hand to cover them, all the better. Earth is often wanted for hot beds, seeds-boxes, etc, at a time when the ground is still frozen. Lay in a good supply of fine, rich soil, under a shed, or where it can be had when needed.

Potato and Top Onions.

Many of our friends appear to confound these quite different varieties of the onion. Though varieties of the same plant, they are multiplied in a very different manner. The variety generally called, in this country, the "English Multiplier," propagates only by a subdivision of the bulb. If a large bulb of this variety is planted, it will produce a cluster of a dozen or more of small bulbs. If, next year, each of these bulbs be set out, it will grow and make a large onion, fit for use. So the alternation is kept up. Small bulbs are planted to produce large one, and large bulbs to grow small ones. The cultivation of this variety, while often carried on in private gardens, is found in the vicinity of Richmond, Va., to be profitable on a commercial scale, and this is the variety chiefly grown in that locality for Northern markets. The "Top Onion" is a very different variety. In this the flower stem, instead of producing a cluster of flowers, followed by seeds vessels, bears a cluster of small bulbs, each half an inch or less in diameter. When these bulbs are planted out, each grows and makes a fine, large onion. If this onion is kept through the winter and planted the next spring, it will throw up a stem crowned by a cluster of small bulbs, each of which, the next year, will produce a large onion, and in this manner the alteration will be kept up.

Cow's Milk for Colts.

A pleasant note from the Secretary of the Ayrshire Breeders' Association, says that Col. J. E. Russell tried to supplement the milk of the dam of certain of his colts with that of Jersey cows, but found that it did not agree with them generally. He found they thrived splendidly upon Ayrshire milk. One of the colts so reared by him is the famous Parole, whose astonishing performances do credit to both the theory and practice.

New corn is worth more to feed to cows than for any other stock. They will eat cob as well as grain, which is not the case with other stock. Ears of soft corn are fed with very little waste, as there is much more nutriment in green cobs than in those that have become hard and woody.

A day's work knocking to pieces the clods of cattle excrement on old pastures will make a great improvement for next season. If the sod is thin, harrowing it so as to still further fine the manure will cause the grass to thicken wonderfully, and will make the sod much heavier when the field comes under the plow.

A Missouri farmer recommends stacking fresh fodder corn with wheat or oat straw in alternate layers of a foot of the latter to three inches of the former. He says there is no danger of spoiling, as the juices of the corn are absorbed by the straw, and the latter is rendered so palatable that cattle eat it greedily without waste.

English farmers are finding an objection to deep plowing that it increases the growth of weeds. In this country deep plowing has the opposite effect, turning weed seeds under where many of them will not soon come to the surface. Another reason is that in most places deep plowing in injurious, turning up a soil in which neither weeds nor anything else will grow well. As a general rule, that which will make crops grow will increase weeds also, and these are only to be got rid of by thorough tillage. Heavy manuring, even when no weed seeds are carried out in the manure, will make a greatly increased growth of weeds.

Coal in the North-West.

A report will shortly be issued by Mr. George M. Dawson, the Assistan-Director of the Geological Survey, on the coal fields of the North West. Some of the advance sheets have already appeared, and these go to show that the report will demonstrate very clearly that the North-West possesses abundance of coal of excellent quality, and therefore that the fuel problem is practically solved.

According to Mr. Dawson's report, it would appear that the coal and lignites of the North-West are of the tertiary age, and not like those of the East, of the carboniferous system. The district which has been most explored, and with the most satisfactory results, is that in the proximity of the Bow and Belly Rivers, extending eastward from the base of the Rocky Mountains to the 111th meridian. Mr. Dawson says that the fuels in this district vary from lignites, but slightly superior in quality to those of the Souris region, to coals containing a very small percentage of water, forming a strong coke on heating, yielding abundance of highly luminous hydro-carbons, and precisely resembling highly bituminous coal, though of the cretacious age.

Estimates have been made of the quantity of coal underlying a square mile of territory in several localities. These estimates go to show that the quantities vary from 5,000,000 to 9,000,000 tons. These are enormous figures, and they should dissipate all nervous apprehension of a "coal famine" in Canada for many years to come. Mr. Dawson states that the coal-bearing rocks developed so extensively on the Bow and Belly rivers, and their tributaries, are known to extend far to the north and west, though up to the present time it has been impossible to examine them at more than a few points. On the North Saskatchewan several seams of liguite coal, resembling that ot the Souris River region, outcrop at Edmonton. The most important is about six feet in thickness, and has been worked to some extent for local purposes. Thirty miles above Edmonton a much more important coal seam occurs. It has a thickness of eighteen to twenty feet. It is of excellent quality, and much resembles the "Coal-Banks" coal from the Bow River. In other parts of the territory there are indications of large deposits, and thus the prospect of opening out the Canadian North-West is of the most encouraging nature. Canada may be congratulated upon its immense treasures, and its brilliant prospects.—The Scotsman.

Four Little Ones.

"Oh, ma!" exclaimed a little Austin girl, glancing at the steam-gage on a stationary engine, "it's 60 o'clock. I didn't know it ever got so late as that."

"How many parts of speech are there, Johnny?" "Well, in our house there ain't none, 'cause when mammy gets her speech started it never parts; it just reaches from sun to sun 'thout even a crack in it."

"Pa," said a little boy, "a horse is worth a good deal more, isn't it, after it is broke!" "Yes, my son. Why do you ask such a question?" "Because I broke the new rocking-horse you gave me this morning."

Little Trot who was taking an observation the other day while her mother was making some old-fashioned crullers. "'Pears to me," she exclaimed, "they'd go down easier if you didn't tangle 'em up in such awful knotes."

AN AWFUL CRIME!

By an Englishman in New Hampshire—He slays his entertainers—A woman's leap for life—What the trunk contained.

Thos. Salmon, an Englishman, aged 36, left his house at Laconia, N. H., recently, wheeling a trunk, which he took to the house of an acquaintance, Jas. Ruddy. He stopped there for the night, taking his trunk up stairs. Shortly after 4 in the morning the neighbors were awakened by a woman's screams proceeding from Mr. Ruddy's house. They found Mrs. Ruddy lying on the ground under the front window through which she had made a desperate leap. She was bleeding profusely and was unable to rise. On entering the house flames burst out from the doors and windows, but were soon extinguished. The officers found lying upon the kitchen floor the bodies of Ruddy and his infant child, both cut in a horrible manner and both covered with the contents of a feather bed which had been saturated with kerosene and set on fire. Both bodies were disfigured by the flames past recognition. In the bedroom was found the trunk mentioned and the lifeless body of Mrs. Ford, which was IDENTIFIED BY HER HUSBAND.

One of her limbs had been chopped off. The detached member and the remaining leg were bound to the woman's body with a clothes line. The bed clothes had been saturated with oil, piled on the body and an attempt made to set them on fire, which failed.

Mrs. Ruddy on being questioned said the crime was committed by Salmon with a hatchet.

Salmon was arrested on the road between Laconia and Plymouth. He denies all knowledge of the affair. The populace threaten to lynch him. Salmon is a cook by trade. He has a wife but does not live with her. It is alleged that he caused a separation between Ford and his wife and that he was a frequent visitor to Ruddy's house. When he reached the latter place with the trunk he called out Mrs. Ruddy and the two after which they went into the house. On Saturday morning Salmon took down a clothes line in the back yard of Ford's house, and it was noticed that his hands trembled violently. Mrs. Ford was between forty and fifty years of age, and was last seen in company with Salmon on Friday morning, going in the direction of the village. Ford says his wife had been in Salmon's company two or three nights. Salmon has a hair lip and is a repulsive looking person. There were several blood spots on his clothing. The cornor's jury found him guilty.

CONVERSED FOR FIFTEEN MINUTES,

Wanted a Will.

A colored man about 60 years of age, blind in one eye and walking with a cane, hobbled up stairs into the office of a Griswold street lawyer yesterday and announced that he desired to make his will.

"Got much property to leave?" asked the lawyer

"Well, sah, Ize persessed of a dog, a cook-stove, a wheelbarrow, an' two flat-irons dat my fust wife left me."

"And who are you going to leave them to?"

"My darter, Nancy, ober on Indiana street. Ize mar'ied agin, you know, an' I wants to put dat property whar' my present wife can't get it. She doan' git nuffin' belongin' to me if I can help it."

"It will cost you $5 to have a will drawn."

"Shoo! Can't cost dat!"

"Yes, it will."

"Den I reckon I'll administrate on my stuff afore I die. Would dat work?"

"Certainly."

"Den I'll run de dog off, lend de wheelbarrow, pocket de flat irons, an' stan' by to rush de cook-stove outer de house de fust time de ole woman goes to de grocery. Kin I git a warrant heah?"

"What for?"

"Fur assault an' battery. When de ole woman finds what Ize done she'll walk all ober me, an' I might as well save time by getting out de warrant now."

He was directed to the proper place, and he went away saying that it would perhaps be still better to have her arrested and sent up for ninety days in advance.—Detroit Free Press.

Stealing a Church.

A writer in the Atlantic Monthly Mr. Edward Everett Hele, we believe, once contributed a piece of fiction entitled "Stealing a Meeting House." Down in Ohio this is truth. An old Methodist church has stood on the land of J. C. Smith for many years. Recently Smith sold his real estate to Wells, the church not being included in the sale. He then disposed of the church to Israel Smith and the latter moved the structure one dark night when Wells was away from home to his own parish across the street. Wells was furious, claimed that the church was his property, and brought suit against Smith, charging him with theft.

The case was decided, and Smith was compelled to pay a fine of $100 and costs, besdes paying Wells for the church.

What She Was.

The other day a rather green looking young fellow—though he evidently lived in the city—went into a dry goods store and walked up to one of the lady clerks and the following conversation occurred:

"I want to get four yards of wide ribbon for a girl."

"All right, sir. What color do you want?"

"I don't know, I just want four yards of ribbon, that's all."

"Yes, but we ought to give her some color that will suit her. Is she a blonde or a brunette?"

"She's ain't neither; she's a hired girl."

Cleveland, Ohio.

The Daily Anzeiger says: "Chief Superintendent of Police, J. W. Schmitt, of this city who has been in the service a quarter of a century, endorses St. Jacobs Oil as a pain-banisher. It cured him of rheumatism."

Cutting a telegraph wire is not breaking the news gently.

Beware of that Cough! It may kill you; cure it at once with Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops, it never fails. Large Bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

Why Children Should Eat Honey.

Thousands and tens of thousands of children are dying all around us, who, because their ever developing nature demands sweetness, crave and eagerly demolish the adulterated "candies" and "syrups" of modern times. If these could be fed on honey instead, they would develope and grow up into healthy men and women.

Children would rather eat bread and honey than bread and butter; one pound of honey will reach as far as two pounds of butter, and has, beside, the advantage of being far more healthy and pleasant-tasted, and always remains good, while butter soon becomes rancid, and often produces cramp in the stomach, eructations, sourness, vomiting and diarrhea. Pure honey should always be freely used in every family. Honey eaten upon wheat bread is very beneficial to health.

The use of honey instead of sugar for almost every kind of cooking, is as pleasant for the palate as it is healty for the stomach. In preparing blackberry, raspberry, or strawberry shortcake it is infinitely superior.

It is a common expression that honey is a luxury, having nothing to do with the life-giving principal. This is an error—honey is food in one of its most concentrated forms. True, it does not add so much to the growth of muscles as does beefsteak, but it does impart other properties no less necessary to health and vigorous, physical and intellectual action. It gives warmth to the system, arouses nervous energy, and gives vigor to all the vital functions. To the laborer it gives strength—to the business man, mental force. Its effects are not like ordinary stimulants, such as spirits, etc., but it produces a healthy action, the result of which are pleasing and permanent—a sweet disposition and a bright intellect.

EPILEPSY (Fits) successfully treated. Pamphlet of particulars one stamp, address WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N.Y.

One thought of turkey makes the whole world grin.

BEAUTIFUL WOMEN
are made pallid and unattractive by functional irregularities, disorders and weaknesses that are perfectly cured by following the suggestions given in an illustrated treatise (with colored plates) sent for three letter postage stamps. Address WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

It appears to us that the dentist's game is always a draw.

Young and middle aged men suffering from nervous debility, premature old age, loss of memory, and kindred symptoms, should send three stamps for Part VII of pamphlets issued by World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N.Y.

A change for the better—winning where he lost before.

Young and middle-aged men suffering from nervous debility, premature old age, loss of memory, and kindred symptoms, should send three stamps for Part VII of pamphlets issued by World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N.Y.

Ben Butler is sixty-five years old in time, and 6,500 in experience.

The success with which the Triangle Dyes have met proves them the most remarkable Dyes of the past or present. They are attracting attention from all classes of society. 10c.

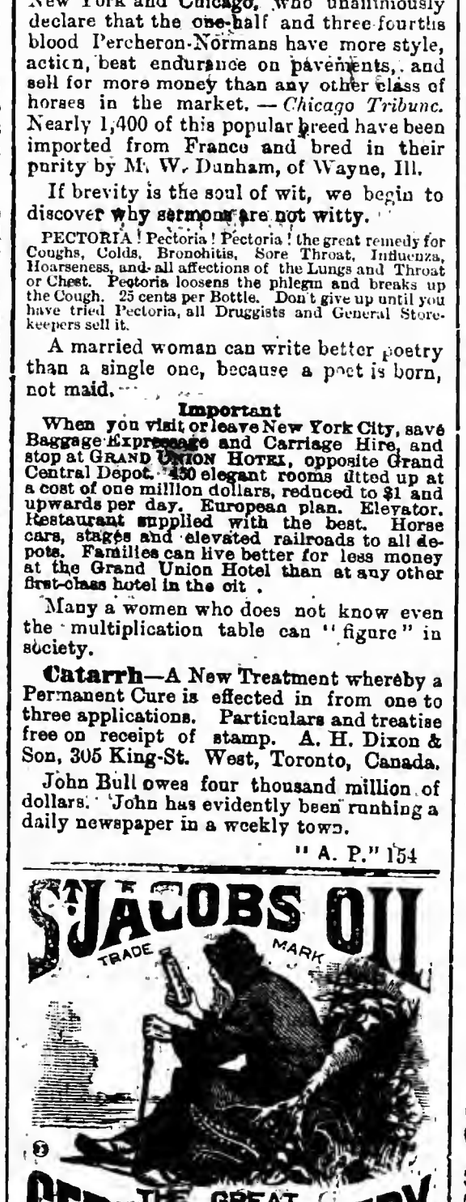
In every well regulated fish market the scales have the right of weigh.

40,000 HORSES are bought and sold annually by seventeen of the leading dealers of New York and Chicago, who unanimously declare that the one-half and three fourths blood Percheron-Normans have more style, action, best endurance on pavements, and sell for more money than any other class of horses in the market. — Chicago Tribune. Nearly 1,400 of this popular breed have been imported from France and bred in their purity by M. W. Dunham, of Wayne, Ill.

If brevity is the soul of wit, we begin to discover why sermons are not witty.

PECTORIA! Pectoria! Pectoria! the great remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, Hoarseness, and all affections of the Lungs and Throat or Chest. Pectoria loosens the phlegm and breaks up the Cough. 25 cents per Bottle. Don't give up until you have tried Pectoria, all Druggists and General Storekeepers sell it.

A married woman can write better poetry than a single one, because a poet is born, not maid.



Important
When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

Many a women who does not know even the multiplication table can "figure" in society.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-St. West, Toronto, Canada.

John Bull owes four thousand million of dollars. John has evidently been running a daily newspaper in a weekly town.

"A. P." 154

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

A miss is not as good as a mile, for a Miss has only two feet, while a mile has five thousand two hundred and eighty. Shoot the maxim maker.

Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops. The prescription of an old Canadian Practitioner. The best remedy for the Lungs, in large bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

The last sad rites—funeral processions.

DO NOT ALLOW YOUR CHILDREN TO grow up deformed or crippled, but call and examine our appliances for the treatment of Club Feet, and Diseases of the Spine, Hip, Knee and Ankle. Remember the world is progressing, and more can be done to-day than at any former period. We also manufacture Artificial Limbs, Trusses, and appliances for the relief and cure of all kinds of deformities. Will show at Toronto, Guelph and London Exhibitions. AUTHORS & COX, 91 Church street, Toronto.

THE LILY
is a perfect gem, equal to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most fastidious. Manufactured by
THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.
78 YORK STREET TORONTO.

F. E. DIXON & CO.
Manufacturers of Star Rivet
Leather Belting!
70 King Street, East, Toronto.
Large double Driving Belts a specialty. See for Price Lists and Discounts.

Dominion Line of Steamships.

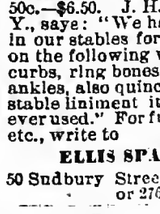
Running in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec every Saturday during the summer months, and from Portland every alternate Thursday during the winter months.

QUEBEC TO LIVERPOOL.
Dominion, Nov. 17 | Toronto, Nov. 24

PORTLAND TO LIVERPOOL.
*Sarnia, Dec. 6 | *Oregon, Dec. 20
Ontario, " 13 | Dominion, " 27

Rates of passage: Cabin, Quebec to Liverpool, $50, $60, $65, $80; return, $90, $108 $117, $144, according to steamer and berth. Intermediate, $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and staterooms in steamers marked thus: * are amidships, where but little motion is felt, and no cattle or sheep are carried on them. For further particulars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway Agent, or local agents of the Company, or to
DAVID TORRANCE & CO.,
General Agents, Montreal.

THE BEST



Horse Remedies

TRADE MARK. are those made by

THE ELLIS SPAVIN CURE CO.

Every owner of one or more horses can save a large amount of time and money by having on hand a good supply of Ellis's Horse Remedies, and to supply a general demand we would announce that we will send the following by express (on receipt of the money, or C.O.D. and return charges): $6.50 for $5; 1 box, 12 pounds Medicated Food, $1; 2 bottles Spavin Cure, $2; 2 boxes Large Condition Powders, $1; 2 boxes Worm Powders, $1; 1 box Heave Powder, 50c. 1 box Colic Powder, 50c.; 1 box Hoof Ointment, 50c.—$6.50. J. H. Whitson & Son, 21th St., N. Y., saye: "We have used Ellis's Spavin Cure in our stables for two years and have tried it on the following with perfect success: Splints, curbs, ring bones, bunches on the neck, swelled ankles, also quincy sore throat, and for general stable liniment it is the best article we have ever used." For further particulars, free books etc., write to

ELLIS SPAVIN CURE COMPANY.
50 Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.; or 276 Fourth Avenue, New York.

DR. HOFFMAN'S GERMAN BITTERS

50c. | A GENUINE GERMAN DYSPEPSIA CURE. | 50c.

No injurious mineral, no poison, no irritating acid.

Acts on a different principle from other Bitters.

Possesses tonic, aperient and Diuretic properties, and a principle that soothes the inflamed membranes, opens up the absorbing vessels of the stomach and liver, cures Dyspepsia, Catarrh of the Stomach, Liver Complaint, Constipation, &c.

Wm. Goldsmith, of Collingwood, Ont., suffered for years with the worst form of Dyspepsia; tried physicians and every remedy advertised without benefit. One bottle of Hoffman's German Bitters cured him.

Wholesale by Lyman Brothers, and Northrop & Lyman, Toronto.

NEWS SUMMARY.

Interesting Items of News from all Parts of the World.

CANADIAN.

The consumption of meat in Montreal is, weekly, about 1,300 head of cattle and 2,000 sheep.

Great destitution is reported to prevail among some of the Irish immigrants at Hamilton, as well as Toronto.

A serious fire took place recently at Rat Portage, destroying a considerable portion of the business part of the town.

The trial of O'Donnel for the murder of Carey began in Old Bailey, London, on the 1st inst. Great interest is manifested everywhere.

The revised assessment of property in the city of Toronto this year, places the aggregate value of assessed property there at $65,232,823.

Mr. John E. Rose, Q. C., a well known Toronto lawyer, has been appointed one of the High Court Judges, of the Common Pleas Division.

Rev Dean Baldwin was consecrated Church of England Bishop of Huron at Montreal on the 1st inst. Nearly every church seems pleased with his appointment.

Miss Emma Drake, of Grafton, was visiting some friends at Peterboro', and while making a call suddenly fell dead. Heart disease supposed to be the cause.

A very serious fire took place in Port Perry recently destroying a considerable portion of the business part of the town. The loss is estimated at $150,000.

It is stated that of the 206 pupils attending the Provincial Normal School, at Fredericton, New Brunswick, 178 are young women, and only 28 young men—over six to one.

Mrs. Allen Bossenberger residing near Berlin, Ont., was recently having some teeth extracted by a dentist of that town. She took chloroform and died under its influence.

It is reported that the Londonderry steel works, of Nova Scotia are in financial difficulties. It is the only company of the kind in Canada, and the works have been carried on for many years.

George Wilson, the murderer of the Detroit policeman was arrested in a farmer's barn not far from Windsor a couple of days after the murder. He said he was very drunk when the fatal shot was fired.

During a recent heavy rain in Port Hope several small speckled trout were rained down. The story looks somewhat "fishy," but it is well authenticated. Capt. Robbins of that town secured some of the fish and put them in a glass vase for inspection.

The steamer Eclipse was wrecked in a gale off Pine Tree Harbor, Lake Huron, a few days ago, and only one person is known to have survived of the whole number on board. She was on her way from Algoma to Sarnia.

The Standard Fire Insurance Company, of Hamilton, is to go into liquidation, but it is said that all valid claims will be paid. Mr. D. R. Chesholm was one of its promoters, and the Company was embarrassed because of his sudden departure.

The Globe recommends the election or appointment of two or three women to the School Board of Toronto next year. A great many do not seem to be aware that women are eligible to vote at school elections, and eligible as candidates for the School Board.

Mr. Cawderham, a wealthy laymen in the Methodist Church, has offered a site of eleven acres of land in Toronto, and $20,000 cash towards the establishment of a Methodist University. His desire is to have Victoria moved from Cobourg to Toronto.

The clerk of the municipality of London West, was recently summoned to appear before the County judge for having neglected to furnish the Clerk of the Peace with a certified copy of the voters list in the time required by law. The clerk at once supplied the list, but has the costs to pay.

Recently the pinch of hard times is being pretty generally felt. During the past few days several men have appeared before the Police Court, in Toronto, asking to be sent to the Central Prison or some other such public institution, giving it as their reason that they could not obtain work and could not live without.

The first cotton print works in Canada are now being established at Magog, Quebec, and they will be in operation in a few weeks. They are on an extensive scale. It is estimated that the annual output of printed goods will be worth a million and a quarter dollars, which will be equal to only about one fourth of what is now yearly imported in Canada.

The new steel steamers built in Scotland for the Canadian Pacific Railway, were taken apart in Montreal some weeks ago so as to be got up through the St. Lawrence and Welland Canals. They are now being put together again at Buffalo, and will then go on to Sarnia for the Lake Superior route. There are three of them, and they are said to be magnificent steamers.

A public breakfast was given in honor of Rev. Dr. Baldwin, the newly elected Bishop of Huron, at Montreal, on the eve of his departure for London, Ont. There was a large attendance representing the various denominasions in the city. Hon. Senator Ferrier (Methodist) presided, and among the speakers were Rev. Dr. Wilkes, (Presbyterian: John Dougall, (Congregational), and several other leading Christian workers.

An extensive canning factory is in successful operation at Picton, Ont. Recently a cargo was shipped to Rochester, of 123 tons canned plumes and gages, leaving 50 tons more on hand to be shipped to the same place. They have canned this year over 5,000 bushels of plums and gages, and 26,000 cans of strawberries, beside large quantities of apples, pears, tomatoes, green corn, peas and the like. Prince Edwad County is one of the best fruit counties in Canada.

The centenary celebration of the U. E. Loyalists of Canada, to be held in Toronto next June, is to be a Provincial affair, and a committee has been appointed to issue circulars to every part of the Province, asking for co-operation. Some claim that a demonstration of 20,000 descendants of the U. E.'s can be got up at that time. Dr. Canniff, of Toronto, is the chairman of the committee appointed in Toronto, and Mr. Egerton Ryerson secretary. They invite correspondence from all quarters.

According to returns received by the Department of Agriculture, the number of cattle shipped from Canadian ports up to the 1st November this year was 50,655, and sheep 100,113. Space has been engaged on steamers leaving Boston and Portland before the 1st of January next for 5,019 cattle, and 13,612 sheep, so that the total shipments of live stock from Canada in 1883 will probably reach 55,774 cattle and 113,625 sheep, against 35,738 cattle and 75,905 sheep in 1882.

An important meeting of the representatives of the various Methodist churches, now being united, was held in Toronto recently in regard to the consolidation of the Methodist Universities. It was agreed to ask for a new Act of Parliament for Victoria University, at Cobourg, Albert College, at Belleville, formerly the U. E. University, is to be continued for collegiate work. The hope is to unite all the Methodist colleges in the Dominion under one University at some time, but an immediate attempt will not be made in that direction.

It may not be generally known that the steeple of St. James' Cathedral, (Church of England), Toronto, is the highest in America. The tip of it stands 316 feet from the ground. The sphere of Trinity Church, New York is said to be the highest in the United States. It is 284 feet high. St. Pstrick's Cathedral, now being erected in New York, will have a steeple 330 feet high. Bunker Hill Monument, of Boston, is 221 feet, and the United States Capitol, Washington, 307 feet. The two next highest steeples in Canada appear to be the Montreal English Cathedral, 224 feet, and Notre dame Cathedral, of the same city, 220 feet.

UNITED STATES.

It is reported that about one half of the town of Cape Vincent, N. Y., nearly opposite Kingston, was destroyed by fire recently.

Sergt. Mason who was imprisoned for attempting to shoot Guitteau, while that murderer was a prisoner, has just been pardoned and released.

A colored man was recently admitted as a student at the National College of Pharmacy, in Washington, and immediately thirty-eight of the forty-six students withdrew from the school in consequence.

A Roman cardinal, will probably be sent to the United States next year to preside over the council to be held there. It is thought that this gave rise to the report that a Papal nuncio would be accredited to the United States Government.

Prof. Brooks, an astronomer of Phelps, N.Y., thinks the reason for the strange red appearance of the sky about sun-rise and sun set during the last week in November, was that the earth was probably passing through the tail of a great comet.

One of the most noted of the negro population of the United States, was Sojourner Truth, a noted lecturer and worker in general Christian work. She died at Battle Creek, Michigan, recently, at the great age of 108 years. She was much respected by all classes.

At the recent visit of President Arthur to New York it was thought the right thing to fire a salute in his honor, but those whose duty it was to do so neglected to procure the powder. At the last moment a quantity of British powder was borrowed of an English war ship in port. The New Yorkers have, therefore, smelt British gun powder again, and no harm came from it.

In unloading the steamer St. Paul at Detroit a few days ago two carboys of nitric acid were let drop into the hold and broken. The smoke and flames from the acid were so dense and pungent that all hands had to leave the hold at once, and one or two men came near losing their lives by inhaling the fumes. The vessel took fire and had to be scuttled and sunk to prevent its destruction.

Recently, at Portsmouth, Massachusetts, in making certain improvements on Coles' Hill, graves of the pilgrims who came over in the Mayflower and who were buried during the first winter have been discovered. One was opened which contained a skeleton of a middle-aged man. In another the skeleton of an elderly man was discovered. These are the only graves of the first settlers positively identified. Tablets are to be placed to mark the exact location.

A policeman, named Alonzo Bullard, was shot down and killed in the streets of Detroit last week by a desperado named Wilson, whom he was trying to arrest. Bullard was a native of Westminster, near London, Ont., but several years a resident of Detroit. Wilson was suspected of having stolen a barrel of oil and is reported a bad character. The murderer made his escape, to Canada, it is supposed. There is a reward of $1,000 offered for his arrest.

GREAT BRITAIN.

It is currently reported, that the Queen is anxious to have Lord Lorne appointed Governor of India, but that Mr. Gladstone is not so sangnine about the matter. There may be nothing in the report.

The Irish troubles continue as great as ever. Within a fortnight over thirty arrests were made in Dublin on charges to destroy property by explosives and connected with the Fenian brotherhood.

There was a great Orange demonstration in October in Ireland in which Lord Rossmore took a prominent part. For doing so his commission as a justice of the peace was cancelled by the Government, and explanations asked.

Mr. Gladstone, being a zealous churchman, often reads the lessons in the church service, at Hawarden, near his residence. His son is the rector. Many persons often go in order to hear the great Premier take part in the service.

Stanley, the African explorer, is returning to Europe. It is said that the Belgian African Association, by whom he has been employed, are dissatisfied with his administration of affairs, in their colony settlement, and have recalled him.

Nobody ever yet thought it necessary to urge a pawnbroker to take more interest in his business.

A STRANGE PET.

Domestication of a Civet—Its Conduct Toward the Dogs—Rare Intelligence.

Mrs. John Raser, of near New Centreville, Tredyffrin township, is the owner of a beautiful tame polecat that appears very much attached to her. The animal was caught by her son last spring, when it was still quite small, and cared for. Soon it commenced to grow very rapidly and showed a decidedly wicked temper when any one else than Mrs. Raser came near it, making an effort to bite all who attempted to touch it but her. She could stroke its back, take it in her lap, or do whatever she pleased with it, and in a short time it commenced to follow her around like a kitten. It was allowed to wander about the kitchen when she was about, and did so in as frolicsome a manner as a playful kitten of the domestic species as long as she was alone, but the moment anyone else appeared it would run and hide out of sight. Mrs. Raser is the owner of two English beadle hounds and one large Newfoundland dog. For the two former the little animal from its infancy always showed a decided hatred, and soon commenced to attack them, whenever they came near, always succeeding in clearing them out of the house in perfect terror, by reason of the severe bites that it was able to give them with its sharp teeth and frisky movements, whenever it caught them inside. They have now got so that they keep well out of his reach. Toward the large dog it has always showed a different disposition, however. Instead of attempting to bite, it made friends with him, and now it can be seen following him in a frolicsome manner, attempting to catch and play with his large, bushy tail whenever opportunity presents itself. "The other day," said Mrs. Raser to a reporter who visited her home, "the Newfoundland dog came in with its tail matted with burs that had become tangled in its hairs. As soon as he sat down Jumbo (meaning the polecat) noticed the burs and set to work to extract them, doing so as nicely as it could have been done with the most nimble fingers, and the dog let it go on with its work until they were all picked out."

The cat has now grown to its full size and still feels perfectly contented with its home. It has grown less shy of the other members of the family and of strangers, but still insists that none but Mrs. Raser shall touch it. It has made its nest in a closet, and whenever Mrs. Raser is not about it will seek this and go to sleep. It has learned to know the hours when the family takes its meals, and as regularly will put in an appearance to be fed at just such times. It will appear in the dining-room and sit up on its haunches like a begging dog at the side of Mrs. Raser until she serves it with its meal. If it chances to be shut out of the room it will come to the door and tap with one of its paws until it is heard and admitted. Its hair is unusually long and very glossy. Immediately over its eyes there is a spot of white hair extending squarely across its forehead and then, after ending abruptly on both sides, passes backward, growing narrower as it does so until almost a complete triangle is formed, but there the white divides into two lines about one inch in width each and six inches long, which curve gracefully off in opposite directions, terminating on each side of the body just back of the shoulders. The rest of the hair is glossy and perfectly black. Altogether, the animal is a very pretty one, and about the house it is perfectly cleanly in its habits. It is not the first animal of a wild disposition that Mrs. Raser has tamed in a similar manner, she having been equally as successful two or three years ago in domesticating a ground hog, which last spring chanced to wander out on the track of the Chester Valley railroad, near the house, and was killed by a passing train. To show that the polecat has become thoroughly domesticated, Mrs. Raser informed our reporter that a few nights ago it had been left out all night, and next morning was found curled up on the front door-step.—Westchester (Pa.) Village Record.

How to Prevent Divorce.

When the senior Jonathan Trumbull was governor of Connecticut, a gentleman called at his house, requesting to see his excellency. Accordingly, he was shown into his sanctum sanctorum, and the governor came forward to meet Squire W., saying, "Good morning, sir, I am glad to see you."

Squire W. returned the salutation, adding as he did so, "I have called upon a very unpleasant errand, sir, and want your advice. My wife and I do not live happily together, and I am thinking of getting a divorce. What would you advise, sir?"

The governor sat a few minutes in deep meditation, then, turning to Squire W. said:

"How did you treat Mrs. W. when you were courting her? and how did you feel toward her at the time of your marriage?"

Squire W. replied:

